4. (a) In harmony with nature and the world (b) Some students may say that anyone who accepts the risks Whitman does must be heroic; others may say that a real hero has other qualities that he does not mention.

5. The speaker enjoins his "son" to put on traveler's clothing and follow him, to hand over his burdens, to savor life, and to find his own answers. The speaker wants to share his excitement about society, its multitudes, and the boundless human spirit that can be found there.

6. (a) The grass is both the final resting place for mortal life and an affirmation of the renewal of life. (b) The book contains "leaves" (pages) that he associates with grass on literal and symbolic levels. Grass represents the essence of life and death.

7. Free verse allows Whitman to break standard forms, thereby capturing his enthusiasm, informality, and individuality.

8. Answers will vary.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 145–146.

You're the Critic

1. To support Traubel's view, students may choose a section from lines 28–46. Students may choose lines 78–80 to support Symonds's view.

2. Students should provide lines that support their points of view.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Element

1. C is the correct answer because, in the first lines of the poem, Whitman's voice actively engages readers and addresses them directly.
2. H is the correct answer because the energy and positivity of Whitman's voice help lend weight to his message.

Progress Check

Can students analyze voice?

If No → See Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, p. 171.

Reading Strategy

1. In line 26, the speaker says that the universe is eternal and boundless. Given this, one can interpret line 27 to mean that the speaker believes we go beyond death to something eternal.
2. Students should be encouraged to explore their own ideas about what lines 47–49 mean. Given that the speaker has said in the earlier lines that all life "goes onward," he may be saying that his life, and the diverse lives of the people of America, are all equal parts of a larger whole. He does not want to be set apart from that whole. He wants to breathe the air but leave plenty for others now and in the future, as life goes on.

Literary Element Voice

ACT Skills Practice

1. Whitman's voice in the opening lines of the poem is

   I. selfish.
   II. engaging.
   III. personal.

   A. I only
   B. II only
   C. II and III only
   D. I, II, and III

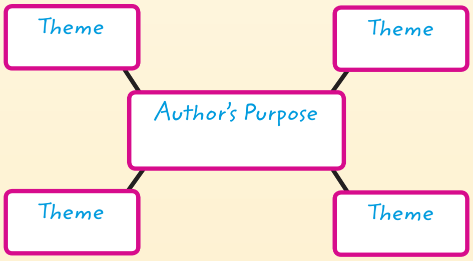
2. How does Whitman's voice affect the impact of his message?

   F. Its colloquialism conflicts with Whitman's individualism and confuses readers.
   G. Its self-absorption offends readers and lessens the effectiveness of Whitman's ideas.
   H. Its confidence and urgency underscore the significance of Whitman's view of life.
   J. Its poetic pretension detracts from the seriousness of Whitman's commitment.

Review: Author's Purpose

Once you understand the author's purpose, or intent in writing, you can better evaluate what you are reading and respond appropriately.

Partner Activity With a partner, identify and discuss the different themes, or messages, in Song of Myself. With your partner, create a web diagram. In the outer boxes, list the themes you discussed. Then, in the center, write down an overarching theme, or Whitman's main message in the poem.



Reading Strategy Draw Conclusions

Skillful readers are always drawing conclusions and, in doing so, understand much more than an author says directly. This process is similar to that used by a detective solving a mystery. You examine evidence that the author provides—for example, word choice or imagery—and then combine it with your own experiences to reach a conclusion. Since poets imply more than they state directly, drawing conclusions is an especially useful tool for interpreting poetry. When you come upon difficult lines or passages in a poem, examine the surrounding lines to see if they provide any clues to help you figure out the meaning.

1. How does line 26 of Song of Myself help you interpret line 27?
2. How do lines 26 and 27 help you draw conclusions about the meaning of lines 47–49?

Academic Vocabulary

In Song of Myself, Whitman glorifies man as an individual as well as a universal entity.

Individual is an academic word. In more casual conversation, someone might say that a person who distinguishes him- or herself from the crowd in dress and behavior is an individual.

Using context clues, try to figure out the meaning of individual in each sentence and explain the difference between the two meanings:

1. I painted a different type of rose on each individual plate.
2. My best friend's band's music is quite individual; it's unlike any I've heard before.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

Academic Vocabulary

1. Each separate plate is painted; in this sentence, individual means "distinct from the group."
2. The music has qualities different from all other music; in this sentence, individual means "distinguished by singular characteristics."

Review: Author's Purpose

Themes that students might list include exploring the meaning of self, celebrating the human spirit, embracing the common people, and exploring the relationship between humans and nature. Students may say that the author's purpose is to express the essence of America.

Respond Through Writing

Reflective Essay

Explore Theme Whitman's purpose in writing Song of Myself is to explore a range of themes that relate both to himself and to his country. If you were to write your own Song of Myself, what would your purpose and themes be? How do they compare with Whitman's? Explore these questions in a reflective essay.

Understand the Task A reflective essay explores the broader meaning and effect of specific details, observations, or experiences. The author's purpose refers to a writer's reason for creating a literary work; authors typically write to persuade, to entertain, or to explain.

Prewrite Review the author's purpose/theme diagram you filled out on page 428. Then create your own diagram using that one as a model. You might detail a significant experience, a question you often ask yourself, a strong belief, or an observation about the world that would be essential in your own epic poem. Each example should support one of your main themes, and all of your themes should contribute to your purpose. You can use your diagram as a blueprint for your essay.

Draft In your essay, explain the significance of the examples you have chosen from your life. What would your "song" say about how you view yourself and your place in the world? You might use phrases like this:

Doing ______________ has taught me the importance of ______________, and that my role in life is ______________.

As you write, make sure that your tone and word choice support your themes and purpose, and that you draw comparisons between your priorities and Whitman's.

Revise Use the checklist on page 310 to evaluate your reflective essay. As you reread and revise your essay, focus on your use of metaphor, repetition, and anecdote. These elements and other rhetorical devices will help emphasize your ideas and themes, and can help show readers what they can learn from your experience.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your paper, correcting any errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Review the Grammar Tip in the side column for information on the correct use of hyphens.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing a reflective essay.

Grammar: Using hyphens.

Grammar Tip

Hyphens

Hyphens are used with

- some compound words: so-called; ice-cold; fish-fry; self-knowledge; president-elect
- multiple words used as modifiers: ice-cream cone; two-and-a-half year old

Tip: Compound words can be written with hyphens, as a single word, or as separate words: ice-free, icemaker, and ice cream are all correct.

After You Read

Assess

Writing

Students' essays should include personal experiences that support the essay's themes. Students should also pursue a purpose throughout their esssays and employ suitable rhetorical devices that highlight their ideas.

Scoring Guide

Assess students' performance in the following categories using the scoring guide at the bottom of the page:

- Addresses all parts of the writing task.
- Explains themes and purpose of the "song" they would write.
- Supports their themes and purpose with examples from their lives or with their own observations of the world.
- Employs rhetoric devices that support their ideas and themes.
- Provides a variety of sentence types, uses precise and thoughtful language.
- Follows English language conventions.

Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Task addressed	fully	mostly	partially	barely
Themes	fully explained and developed	somewhat explained and developed	partially developed	incoherent and undeveloped
Support	relevant examples from life	somewhat relevant examples from life	few relevant examples from life	irrelevant examples
Rhetoric devices	well employed	employed	few employed	none
Language	varied, precise, thoughtful	varied, somewhat thoughtful	predictable, basic	not varied, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	some	many

Focus

Summary

This passage from Justin Kaplan's biography addresses the initial public reception of Leaves of Grass, as well as Whitman's strategies for promoting his own work.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 175–180.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Synthesize Information

Remind students of the differences between primary and secondary sources. Primary sources are first-hand accounts of events; secondary sources are written after events by people who did not witness them; secondary sources incorporate, or synthesize, ideas from primary sources. After students begin reading the selection, Ask: Is the selection a primary or secondary source? How do you know? (Secondary—the writer relies on primary sources such as letters and diary entries to tell about Whitman.)

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 8.4
DRP: 68
Lexile: 1390

from Walt Whitman: A Life

Justin Kaplan

National Book Award Winner

Learning Objectives

For pages 430–436

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Making connections across literature.

Reading: Analyzing informational text.

Set a Purpose for Reading

As you read, ask yourself, How did critics review Leaves of Grass when it first was published? How did Whitman attempt to publicize his book?

Build Background

Today Walt Whitman is celebrated as one of the most original poets of the nineteenth century. When Leaves of Grass was first published in 1855, however, it received mixed reviews and little fanfare. Undaunted, Whitman set out to convince the public that his work was a literary sensation. In the following selection, historian and biographer Justin Kaplan describes how Whitman promoted his work and launched his career.

Reading Strategy Synthesize Information

1 Synthesizing is combining ideas to create something new. To synthesize information from varied sources, follow these steps:

- interpret the information
- identify similarities and differences between ideas
- combine ideas to create new knowledge

As you read this selection, take notes about Walt Whitman. Then generate new ideas about this poet by relating your notes to the information you derived from other sources in this unit.

Under Brooklyn Bridge. Robert McIntosh.

"The beginning of a great career"

I

Do you take it I would astonish?
Does the daylight astonish? or the early red-start twittering through the woods?
Do I astonish more than they?

Reading these lines at his desk in Concord, in a complimentary copy sent him by an anonymous author, Emerson almost believed he had seen salvation and could depart in peace. "In raptures," as a visitor noted, Emerson pointed to a certain "oriental largeness of generalization" as evidence that an American Buddha, the long-awaited national poet, had spoken at last. "So extraordinary," he told a Boston friend, Samuel Gray Ward, "I must send it to you, & pray you to look it over." He wondered whether the author had not been "hurt by hard life & too animal experience," but still praised Leaves of Grass as "wonderful," "the American poem," "a nondescript monster," as he wrote to Carlyle,[1]

---

[1] Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) was a British historian and essayist.

Research Practice

Citing Evidence Point out that throughout the selection, the writer uses a variety of techniques to cite supporting evidence from primary sources. For example, he combines direct quotations with indirect statements when he discusses Ralph Waldo Emerson's reaction to Leaves of Grass. Some quotations are from conversations; others are from correspondence with people other than Whitman. The writer also quotes an entire letter Emerson wrote to Whitman. Tell students that in full biographies, writers use footnotes or endnotes to identify their sources. Have students practice using citations by writing a one-paragraph review of Leaves of Grass that cites at least two critics or reviewers quoted in the selection. Remind students to try different techniques—direct quotations, indirect quotations, and lengthy passages.

“which yet had terrible eyes and buffalo strength.” After some puzzlement over the identity and whereabouts of the new poet, Emerson composed a letter to Walter Whitman, Esq., in care of Fowler and Wells[2] in New York.

Concord Massachusetts 11 July 1855

Dear Sir,

I am not blind to the worth of the wonderful gift of “Leaves of Grass.” I find it the most extraordinary piece of wit & wisdom that America has yet contributed. I am very happy in reading it, as great power makes us happy. It meets the demand I am always making of what seemed the sterile & stingy Nature, as if too much handiwork or too much lymph[3] in the temperament were making our western wits fat & mean.

> I find it the most extraordinary piece of wit & wisdom that America has yet contributed. 3

I give you joy of your free & brave thought. I have great joy in it. I find incomparable things said incomparably well, as they must be. I find the courage of treatment, which so delights us, & which large perception only can inspire.

I greet you at the beginning of a great career, which yet must have had a long foreground somewhere, for such a start. I rubbed my eyes a little to see if this sunbeam were no illusion; but the solid sense of the book is a sober certainty. It has the best merits, namely, of fortifying & encouraging.

I did not know until I, last night, saw the book advertised in a newspaper, that I could trust the name as real & available for a Post-office. I wish to see my benefactor, & have felt much like striking my tasks, & visiting New York to pay you my respects.

R. W. Emerson

Mr. Walter Whitman.

This five-page salute, Whitman later said, was the charter of “an emperor”—“I supposed the letter was meant to be blazoned.” In the annals of literary partisanship and the laying-on of hands, Emerson's words are unmatched for their generosity and force, their shrewdness and simple justice. Another insurgent scripture, Walden, published the summer before, had drawn only qualified praise from Emerson. Now he proclaimed the greatness of Leaves of Grass to friends, casual visitors, and far-flung acquaintances. “Toward no other American, toward no contemporary excepting Carlyle, had Emerson used such strong expressions,” said Moncure Conway, the young Harvard Divinity School graduate who was to be Emerson's first legate[4] to the new poet. “Emerson had been for many years our literary banker; paper that he had inspected, coin that had been rung on his counter, would pass safely anywhere.” Stripped of its marketplace metaphors the same idea was echoed on the other side of the Atlantic by William Howitt, reviewer for the London Weekly Dispatch—“What Emerson has pronounced to be good must not be lightly treated.” Even the Criterion, a high-toned New York weekly that dismissed Whitman's book as “a mass of stupid filth,” had to acknowledge, apologetically, the quality of its credentials—“an unconsidered letter of introduction has oftentimes procured the admittance of a scurvy fellow into good society.” 2

Emerson's letter admitted Leaves of Grass to a meeting of Philadelphia abolitionists where Lucretia Mott, the Quaker preacher, heard it discussed and praised. “R. W. Emerson calls it ‘the book of the age,’” she wrote to her sister. “It is something Emersonian in style—a kind of unmeasured poetry in praise of America & telling what true poetry is.” She had no objection to the purchase of a copy for her seventeen-year-

---

[2] Fowler and Wells was the publishing firm that printed the second edition of Leaves of Grass.

[3] Lymph is a clear liquid that travels through the human lymphatic system, removing fat from the intestines.

[4] A legate is an official representative.

Literary Perspective

on Walt Whitman

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Interpret Author's Argument Point out to students that this paragraph contains the writer's main point. Ask: What point does the writer make about the impact of Emerson's opinion on Whitman's book? (Emerson's praise positively influenced other reviewers and critics—even those who did not like the book.) Ask students to identify details that support their assertion. (Students should cite quotations from reviewers and people who knew Emerson.)

Text Element 3

Displayed Quotations Draw students' attention to the text in the shaded box between the columns. Explain that this is a quotation from the selection. Ask: What is the effect and purpose of displaying quotations from text in this way? (They draw attention and give you insight into the text.)

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 181–182.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Help students get the gist of Emerson's letter by making lists of the words that suggest positive feelings (happy, power, free, brave, joy, sunbeam) and negative feelings (fat, mean, stingy, sober.) Have students look up unfamiliar words and assign them to each list. Ask students for an overall impression of Emerson's feelings based on their lists.

Advanced Ask students to interpret two metaphors. First, have students reread Emerson's letter and explain “this sunbeam.” (Emerson thinks Whitman's poem is as delightful as a sunbeam.) Then have them explain how Emerson is a “literary banker.” (Like a banker who inspects good and bad [counterfeit] bills, Emerson knows good poetry from bad.)

Teach

Big Idea 1

A Poetic Revolution

Ask: What phrases in the reviews by Charles Eliot Norton and Edward Everett Hale reveal these critics’ perceptions of Whitman’s “newness” or novelty? (“preposterous yet somehow fascinating”; “freshness, simplicity, and reality”)

Reading Strategy 2

Interpret Information

Ask: How does the writer interpret the change in attitude of both William Swayne and Samuel Wells toward Whitman’s work? (He believes that the men’s attitudes were affected by negative comments by Charles Dana.) Have students reread Dana’s comments. Ask: How would you interpret Dana’s comments? (Students should point out that Dana praises Whitman’s boldness and sense of beauty but criticizes his rough language.)

old granddaughter. The patrician[5] critic and scholar Charles Eliot Norton told his friend James Russell Lowell[6] that he had been alerted to the existence of this “literary curiosity” by the revered Emerson, who had apparently written a letter to the author “expressing the warmest admiration and encouragement.” In his unsigned review in the September Putnam’s Monthly Norton described Leaves of Grass as “preposterous yet somehow fascinating,” a surprisingly harmonious fusion of “Yankee transcendentalism and New York rowdyism” that at times exhibited, in the “rough and ragged thicket of its pages,” undeniable boldness and originality. Norton confessed that he had had to overcome his distaste for the book’s “disgusting” and “intolerable” coarseness. “One cannot leave it about for chance readers,” he told Lowell, “and would be 1 sorry to know that any woman had looked into it past the title-page. I have got a copy for you, for there are things in it you will admire.” (“No, no,” Lowell replied, “the kind of thing you describe won’t do.”) Another member of Emerson’s circle, the clergyman Edward Everett Hale, future author of The Man Without a Country, praised Whitman (in the January 1856 North American Review) for his “remarkable power,” his “freshness, simplicity, and reality,” and for living up to the claims made in the preface. Half a century later Hale was still congratulating himself for having written this review, the first that, in Whitman’s recollection, had done his book anything close to justice.

Norton confessed that he had had to overcome his distaste for the book’s “disgusting” and “intolerable” coarseness.

In the summer of 1855, when he returned from his vacation on eastern Long Island, he had been greeted by a review of a different sort, prominent but grudging and even mischievous, by Charles A. Dana of the Tribune, Horace Greeley’s[7] managing editor. A one-time member of the Brook Farm commune[8] who had lived on admiring terms with its founder, George Ripley, and with Margaret Fuller and Nathaniel Hawthorne, Dana had retrieved some remnants of idealism from the ruins of that experiment in plain living and high thinking. In the “nameless bard” of Leaves of Grass he recognized an oafish descendant of Emerson, Bronson Alcott[9], and other “prophets of the soul.” He too praised Whitman’s “bold, stirring thoughts,” “genuine intimacy with nature,” and “keen appreciation of beauty.” But he argued that “the essential spirit of poetry” had found “an uncouth and grotesque embodiment.” “His independence often becomes coarse and defiant. His language is too frequently reckless and indecent,” Dana said, sounding the cry that Whitman was to hear to the end of his days, “and will justly prevent his volume from free circulation in scrupulous circles.” Because of such objections William Swayne, the Fulton Street bookseller listed in the original announcements in the Tribune, had withdrawn Leaves of Grass from his stock and his name from Fowler and Wells’s advertisements. Even Life Illustrated, the firm’s own “Family Newspaper,” said the 2 book was “perfect nonsense,” “a series of utterances” that the public was advised to take or leave, “just as they prefer.” Soon Samuel Wells, more of a businessman and less of a crusader than his partner Orson Fowler, suggested that Whitman omit “certain objectionable passages” or look for another publisher.

---

[5] Here, patrician means “aristocratic.”

[6] James Russell Lowell (1819–1891) was a famed American Fireside poet.

[7] Horace Greeley (1811–1872) was an abolitionist and the founder of the New York Tribune.

[8] The Brook Farm commune was an experimental utopian community in West Roxbury, Massachusetts, from 1841 to 1847.

[9] Bronson Alcott (1799–1888) was a Transcendentalist, a radical educator, and the father of novelist Louisa May Alcott.

Writing Practice

Research Allusions Remind students that an allusion is an indirect reference to a well-known person, place, historical event, or literary work. Kaplan’s mention of Concord, Massachusetts—the home of Ralph Waldo Emerson, the leading writer of the generation preceding Whitman—carries with it the association of the town where the American Revolution began.

Tell students that context clarifies some allusions and that footnotes may explain others. Ask them to write a paragraph explaining the allusions in these phrases using information from the text and their own research and ideas:

- “an American Buddha had spoken at last”
- “this Ali Baba formula”

W W from life
one hot July forenoon 1854
Brooklyn N.Y.

At Mickle Street[10] Whitman made an almost casual thing of it when he explained how Emerson's letter, a private and privileged communication, came to be published in the New York Tribune without the writer's permission or foreknowledge. He said that when he was walking down the street in New York he happened to run into Dana, who had heard about the letter along the transcendental grapevine, was eager to print it in his newspaper, and wanted Whitman to release the text to him. Whitman refused, but a week or so later changed his mind, with some justification, as "a friend of Mr. Emerson" and therefore in a responsible position to decide what was legitimate and proper for everyone concerned. He printed the letter in the Tribune on October 10 and prefaced it with a brief paragraph that suggested a turning-point in the public fortunes of Leaves of Grass:

> We sometime since had occasion to call the attention of our readers to this original and striking collection of poems, by Mr. Whitman of Brooklyn. In so doing we could not avoid noticing certain faults which seemed to us to be prominent in the work. The following opinion, from a distinguished source, views the matter from a more positive and less critical standpoint.

3

At first cautious and reluctant, just as his phrenological chart[11] had said, Whitman could justifiably claim to have been, up to this point, the unoffending victim of Dana's good intentions and unreliable assurances.* But once the letter was released he fell on it like a hawk—"I too am not a bit tamed." The life of his sacred book was in the balance. He sent the Tribune clipping to Longfellow and other celebrities, arranged to have the letter printed in Life Illustrated, and eventually distributed it to editors and critics in the form of a small broadside he printed up. It was headed "Copy for the convenience of private reading only" and changed Emerson's formal "Mr. Walter Whitman" to "Walt Whitman."

The letter became part of the fabric of his plans as he prepared the second edition of his book during 1855 and 1856. "Make no puns / funny remarks / Double entendres / 'witty' remarks / ironies / Sarcasms," he instructed himself in his notebook. "Only that which / is simply earnest, / meant,—harmless / to any one's feelings / —unadorned / unvarnished / nothing to / excite a / laugh / silence / silence / silence / silence / laconic[12] / taciturn,"[13] He vows to "Avoid all the 'intellectual / subtleties,' and 'withering doubts' and 'blasted hopes' and

---

[10] Mickle Street in Camden, New Jersey, was the location of Whitman's house, which he purchased in 1884.

[11] A phrenological chart describes an individual's personality on the basis of the shape of his or her skull. Whitman believed in phrenology.

* The official version of the episode, laid out by Bucke in 1883 with Whitman's approval, even denied there had been any evidence "that the letter was meant to be private." Whitman became more circumspect about such matters. In 1871, after he received a flattering letter from Tennyson, he cautioned a newspaper friend, "I rely on your promise not to publish the letter, nor any thing equivalent to it." But he had no objection to printing the news that he had received such a letter. (Richard Maurice Bucke, M.D., Walt Whitman [Philadelphia, 1883], p. 139.)

[12] Laconic means "using few words."

[13] Taciturn means "quiet."

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Synthesize Information

Point out to students that the writer draws information from several sources in his discussion of Emerson's letter. Ask students to identify at least three sources. (clippings from the New York Tribune, Whitman's notebooks, a book by Richard Maurice Bucke) Ask: What assertion does the writer support with those sources? (Although Whitman once pretended that he did not think it appropriate to publish Emerson's private letter, he planned all along to use it as part of his publicity.)

APPROACHING Ask students to think about Whitman's reasons for publishing Emerson's letter. Point out that the writer says that "the life of [Whitman's] sacred book was in the balance." Ask students to interpret the writer's comment. (Whitman would do anything to get his book published and sold.)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP Emerging Remind students that signal words reveal the organization of a work. Have students work in pairs to identify words on this page that indicate sequence (when, at first, up to this point, eventually) and contrast (but) and to draw conclusions from them. Students may conclude that the author conveys Whitman's lack of consistency over time.

SMALL GROUP Established Students may benefit from creating a timeline that charts what happened to Emerson's letter. Have students work in pairs to skim the selection for dates and events. Tell students to draw a timeline and write down dates above the line and key events below the line.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Make Inferences Ask: From Whitman's parenthetical comments in his list of casual acquaintances, what can you infer about how he classified people? (He seems to have noted physical characteristics, such as height, clothing, country of origin, and headgear, as well as professions or trades.)

APPROACHING Ask: What conclusion can you draw about the people Whitman meets? (They are ordinary people—workers and tourists.)

Reading Strategy 2

Compare and Contrast Ask: What contemporary methods of promotion might you compare and contrast with Whitman's strategies? (Students might mention newspaper advertisements, book-jacket blurbs, and author tours featuring radio and television appearances.)

'unre-quited / loves,' and 'ennui'[14] and 'wretchedness' and the whole of the lurid and artistical and melo-dramatic / effects.—Preserve perfect calmness and sanity." He lists some of his casual acquaintances in New York—

Sam (with black eyes & cap)
Nick (black eyes 40th st—small)
Joe (Canadian-Montreal)
1 Bill Young (milkman & driver)
George Applegate (tallest)
English Johnny (49th st Jockey cap)
Sam (49th st round shoulders light clothes)

—and also sketches out, in the pride of creation and mastery, his "Sun-Down Poem" ("Crossing Brooklyn Ferry") of 1856:

> Poem of passage / the scenes on the river / as I cross the / Fulton ferry / Others will see the flow / of the river, also, / Others will see on both / sides the city of / New York and the city / of Brooklyn / a hundred years hence others / will see them . . . The continual and hurried crowd of / men and women crossing / The reflection of the sky / in the water—the blinding / dazzle in a track from / the most declined sun, / The lighters—the sailors / in their picturesque costumes / the nimbus[15] of light / around the shadow of my / head in the sunset

Further on, along with trial passages for another major new poem of 1856, "Song of the Broad-Axe," is an entry of a different sort. Enclosed within a large bracket, it occupies a page to itself:

> "I greet you at the beginning of a great career"
> R. W. Emerson

Whitman made several layouts of these words on binder's paper left over from the first edition before he had them stamped in gold on the spine of the second edition around August 1856. Torn out of context, gaudily displayed, this Ali Baba[16] formula appeared to be an endorsement even of 2 new poems Emerson could not possibly have seen. And further compounding what a Boston paper had called "the grossest violation of literary comity[17] and courtesy that ever passed under our notice," at the end of the book Whitman once again printed the entire letter along with a vaunting[18] essay in the form of a public thank-you:

> Brooklyn August 1856.
> Here are thirty-two poems, which I send you, dear Friend and Master, not having found how I could satisfy myself with sending any usual acknowledgement of your letter. The first edition, on which you mailed me that till now unanswered letter, was twelve poems—I printed a thousand copies, and they readily sold; these thirty-two Poems I stereotype, to print several thousand copies

---

[14] Ennui means "weariness."

[15] A nimbus is a cloud or an atmosphere.

[16] Ali Baba is a woodcutter in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments, or The Thousand and One Nights, a collection of Asian stories. He gains access to the cave of the Forty Thieves by saying the magic phrase "open sesame."

[17] Comity means "courteousness."

[18] Vaunting means "boasting."

Grammar Practice

Subject-Verb Agreement Remind students to pay particular attention to subject-verb agreement in sentences with inverted word order or with phrases intervening between subjects and verbs. Write the following on the board and have students rewrite the sentences, using the correct verb in each.

1. Further on, along with trial passages for another major new poem, (is/are) an entry of a different sort. (is)
2. At the end of the book (appear/appears) the entire letter. (appears)
3. Here (is/are) thirty-two poems, which I send to you, dear Friend and Master. (are) > of. I much enjoy making poems. Other work I have set for myself to do, to meet people and The States face to face, to confront them with an American rude tongue; but the work of my life is making poems. I keep on till I make a hundred, and then several hundred—perhaps a thousand. A few years, and the average annual call for my Poems is ten or twenty thousand—more, quite likely. Why should I hurry or compromise? . . . Master, I am a man of perfect faith.

Even the loyal and resourceful Bucke,[19] utterly flummoxed[20] for once, had to admit that Whitman's "they readily sold" was "a plain lie." According to Bucke's information, the first edition had "no sale" and the second "little or no sale." "If the reader goes to a bookstore," Hale had pointed out in his review, "he may expect to be told, at first, as we were, that there is no such book, and has not been." Whitman himself said he doubted "if even ten were sold" and that he ended up giving away almost all of his first edition to "friends and relatives"—"Oh, as a money matter, the book was a dreadful failure." It was a "failure" despite the vigorous deployment of his talents as an impresario[21] with one lifelong act to manage. The lessons of P. T. Barnum's American Museum, General Tom Thumb and the Swedish Nightingale had not been wasted on him.[22]

3 Whitman supplied friendly journals with the information that Leaves of Grass created "an extraordinary sensation in the literary world on

---

[19] Richard Maurice Bucke was a longtime friend and the first biographer of Whitman.

[20] Flummoxed means "confused."

[21] An impresario is a theatrical manager or producer.

[22] P. T. Barnum (1810–1891) was an American showman who helped popularize the three-ring circus. His American Museum in New York City displayed curiosities. Charles S. Stratton, named General Tom Thumb by Barnum, was a 25-inch-tall performer. Jenny Lind, a Swedish soprano, was promoted by Barnum as the Swedish Nightingale.

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Synthesize Information

Ask: How are the details that Whitman provides in his anonymous "reviews" consistent with characteristics of Leaves of Grass? (Students might mention such qualities as the speaker's brashness, his bold originality, and his enthusiastic endorsement of American democracy.)

ADVANCED Ask: What style elements are obviously the same in Whitman's poetry and his anonymous endorsements? (The poet's use of dashes and exclamation points, his inverted syntax, and the way he celebrates coarseness and ordinary people.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate Point out the phrase "one lifelong act." Remind students that act is a word with several meanings. Have them work in pairs to brainstorm for meanings they know before going to a dictionary. Have students identify the meaning of act as it is used on this page.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Using the sentences in the Skills Practice on page 434, review the proper verbs for singular and plural subjects.

1. The subject is singular: "an entry"; the third-person singular form of the verb "to be" is "is."
2. The subject is singular: "the entire letter"; the third-person singular form of the verb "to appear" is "appears."
3. The subject is plural: "thirty-two poems"; the third-person plural form of the verb "to be" is "are."

both sides of the Atlantic"—"the emphatic commendation of America's greatest critic has been ratified by the public." And it was Whitman who wrote three anonymous reviews of Leaves of Grass that appeared around the end of 1855. "An American bard at last!" he announced in the United States Review. "Politeness this man has none, and regulation he has none. A rude child of the people!—No imitation—No foreigner— 3 but a growth and idiom of America," he wrote in the Brooklyn Daily Times, and in support of these and similar claims he subjoined Lorenzo Fowler's[23] reading of the bard's skull and personality. In the American Phrenological Journal, a Fowler and Wells enterprise, he cited Tennyson's poetry with admiring tolerance but predicted his own, riding the wave of the future, might yet prove "the most glorious of triumphs, in the known history of literature."

Skillfully managed, Whitman's homemade appreciations made news in their own right. A friendly journalist, William Swinton, praised him in the New York Times for the "manly vigor" and "brawny health" of Leaves of Grass. "This man has brave stuff in him. He is truly astonishing." In the course of several thousand words of careful and sensitive discussion, Swinton reported that "proof slips of certain articles written about Leaves of Grass" had been delivered to the Times office together with a copy of the first edition bound in green and gold and the printed text of a letter in which Ralph Waldo Emerson complimented the author "on the benefaction conferred on society":

> On subsequently comparing the critiques from the United States Review and the Phrenological Journal with the Preface of Leaves of Grass we discovered unmistakable evidence that Mr. Walt Whitman, true to the character of a Kosmos, was not content with writing a book, but was also determined to review it, so Mr. Walt Whitman has concocted both those criticisms of his own work, treating it we need not say how favorably.

Sensation generated sensation, Whitman had learned. So did neglect, if it was conspicuous enough. Later he tended to favor a history in which Leaves of Grass, far from "an extraordinary sensation," had been greeted in total silence or with howls of derision.

---

[23] Lorenzo Fowler was a phrenologist and the founder of Fowler and Wells, a publishing house.

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Write a brief summary of the main ideas in this excerpt before you answer the following questions. For help on writing a summary, see page 79.

2. How did you react to Kaplan's perspective on Walt Whitman?

3. (a)How did Emerson respond to Whitman's Leaves of Grass? (b)Why do you think Emerson responded this way?

4. (a)What did Whitman do with the letter that Emerson had sent him? (b)What do Whitman's actions reveal about his motives?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Did Whitman do the right thing in writing his own reviews of Leaves of Grass? Explain.

6. Which of the early comments on Leaves of Grass do you think sheds the most light on Whitman's work?

7. (a)Why does Kaplan compare Whitman to the showman P. T. Barnum? (b)Is Kaplan's comparison fair or not? Support your answer.

Connect

8. How would you compare the speaker in Leaves of Grass with Whitman himself, as depicted in Kaplan's perspective?

Assess

1. Students' summaries should represent the main ideas of the selection in a short, concise manner. The summaries should not contain personal opinions.

2. Students may say that they are surprised that Whitman's poetry was initially scrutinized heavily by critics.

3. (a) Emerson responded enthusiastically. (b) Emerson valued originality and hoped that an original poetic voice would arise in the United States. In Whitman, Emerson believed he had found such a voice.

4. (a) Whitman allowed Charles A. Dana to publish the letter, placed a quotation from the letter on the spine of the 1856 edition of Leaves of Grass, reprinted the entire letter at the back of that edition, and included a thank-you letter to Emerson. (b) Whitman's motives were self-promotional, suggesting that a deep bond existed between Emerson and himself when that was not actually the case.

5. Some students may say that Whitman was dishonest in writing favorable reviews of his own work and then passing them off as the responses of objective critics. Other students may say that Whitman had to break the rules to ensure that the public would not dismiss his work.

6. Students may say that Lucretia Mott's comment that Whitman's work is "a kind of unmeasured poetry in praise of America" captures the essence of Leaves of Grass.

7. (a) Kaplan compares Whitman to Barnum to support his point that Whitman knew the importance of advertisement and self-promotion. (b) Students may say that the comparison is fair, since Whitman wrote favorable reviews of his own work and exploited Emerson's letter to enhance his literary reputation.

8. Students may say that the speaker in Leaves of Grass is unconventional, self-assured, and aggressive—qualities characteristic of Whitman himself in his efforts to publicize his own work.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 147–148.

Before You Read

Dickinson's Poetry

Meet Emily Dickinson

(1830–1886)

Virtually unknown during her lifetime, Emily Dickinson now stands as a giant of American literature. Her stark, concise poems speak in an instantly recognizable voice, reflecting a sense of style as individual as a fingerprint. In spare, chiseled verses, Dickinson upended convention, posing the great questions of life in the form of riddles for the reader.

> "I conclude that space and time are things of the body and have little or nothing to do with ourselves. My Country is Truth . . . I like Truth—it is a free Democracy."
>
> —Emily Dickinson

Formative Years Dickinson was born into a distinguished and prosperous family in Amherst, Massachusetts. Her father was a lawyer who served in Congress. Though stern, he was a kind man whose integrity deeply influenced Dickinson.

At Amherst Academy and Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, Dickinson was a serious student with a mischievous streak. Her intensely religious family pressured her to be an outspoken Christian. Despite her reverence for the Bible, she refused. She had strong religious feelings and equally strong doubts all her life, sharing her thoughts on the matter with only a few close friends.

In her late teens and twenties, Dickinson read authors considered by her parents to be shockingly secular: William Shakespeare, Ralph Waldo Emerson, George Eliot, and Charlotte and Emily Brontë. She also formed friendships with lawyers and ministers whose intelligence attracted her. In her late twenties or early thirties, Dickinson seems to have had a devastating emotional experience, related perhaps to a disappointment in love. She began to spend much time alone in her Amherst home. Dickinson seemed fully content with her solitary existence, telling a friend, "I find ecstasy in living—the mere sense of living is joy enough."

Greatness Achieved Dickinson seems to have dreamed of public acclaim, but she gave up these dreams when her friend Thomas Wentworth Higginson, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, urged her not to publish. While ceasing attempts to publish, Dickinson continued to write as she pleased. She preferred obscurity to compromise.

After Dickinson's death from kidney failure, her sister Lavinia published the poems, but in altered form. Dashes were eliminated, capitalizations were undone, and some words were completely changed. In 1955, scholar Thomas H. Johnson began to publish the poems as Dickinson had written them. Dickinson has come to be recognized for what she was: a great American nonconformist and poet of rare purity.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Emily Dickinson, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Literature Launches
Pre-reading Videos DVD

Selection Focus
Transparency 29

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 40

Or explain that although Dickinson rarely left her home, her poems touch on universal themes. Ask: How important is it for a writer to have much worldly experience? (Since much poetry is about the inner world of experience, worldly experience may be less important.)

Interactive Read and Write

Other options for teaching this selection can be found in

- Interactive Read and Write for English Learners, pp. 139–146
- Interactive Read and Write for Approaching-Level Learners, pp. 139–146
- Interactive Read and Write for On-Level Learners, pp. 139–146

Selection Skills

Dickinson's Poetry

Reading Skills

- Analyze Sound Devices (SE pp. 438, 440-442, 444, 446, 447, 453)
- Clarify Meaning (SE pp. 448, 449)
- Read Poetic Lines (TE p. 438)
- Paraphrase (TE p. 440)
- Respond to Poetry (TE p. 446)

Literary Elements

- Rhyme (SE pp. 438–453)
- Personification (SE pp. 448, 449, 453)

Vocabulary Skills

- Word Usage (SE p. 453)
- Academic Vocabulary (SE p. 453)
- Explore Latin Roots TE p. 448)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills

- Analyze Art (SE p. 443; TE pp. 445, 446, 450)

Writing Skills/Grammar

- Journal Entry (SE p. 441)
- Poem (SE p. 444)
- Essay (SE p. 447, 454)
- Paragraph (SE p. 449)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In “If you were coming …,” the speaker ponders the impermanence of human life. In “My life closed twice …,” the speaker meditates on parting, and in “The Soul selects …,” she focuses on choice. “Much Madness …” and “Success is counted sweetest” center on paradoxes. “I Heard a Fly buzz …” zeroes in on the moment of death; “The Bustle …” conjures up death’s effects on survivors. “Because I could not …” expresses the speaker’s realization that death has stopped for her. In “There’s a certain …,” the speaker evokes feelings of fear. “This is my letter …” asserts the speaker’s links to nature.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 184–229.

Vocabulary

Suffixes Point out that -al on the end of cathedral is not a suffix. It is, however, an adjective suffix on imperial. Challenge students to think of science or math words with this suffix. (medical, technological, biological, mathematical)

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

Dickinson’s poetry explores the complexity of the human soul in verses that are concise yet powerful. What does it feel like to experience loss and longing? What is success? What is wisdom? Discuss these questions with a partner.

Build Background

Much of Dickinson’s poetry features an unconventional use of grammar, punctuation, and form. Dashes may suddenly interrupt a thought or rhythm, or call attention to the words they enclose. Capitalized common nouns create emphasis. Dickinson’s choice of meter—that of Protestant hymns rather than iambic pentameter, the dominant meter of the day—echoes the rhythms of great hymn composers such as Isaac Watts.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea A Poetic Revolution

As you read, ask yourself, How does Dickinson experiment with rhyme, rhythm, and punctuation to create a new poetic style?

Literary Element Rhyme

A full rhyme is the repetition of the same stressed vowel sounds and any succeeding sounds in two or more words. For example, notation rhymes with vacation. Slant rhyme occurs when the rhyme of two words depends on sounds that are similar but not identical. For instance, Dickinson rhymes today with victory. As you read, ask yourself, How does Dickinson’s use of slant rhymes add tension and interest?

Reading Strategy Analyze Sound Devices

Sound devices are techniques that appeal to the ear. Poets use sound devices to create a sense of rhythm, emphasize particular sounds, or add to the musical quality of writing. Rhyme is one sound device. Others include alliteration (repeated consonant sounds at the beginnings of words), assonance (repeated vowel sounds), and consonance (repeated consonant sounds in the middle or at the ends of words). As you read, notice the rhythms and changes in emphasis that sound devices create.

Tip: Close Reading To analyze sound devices, first read closely for specific examples.

Learning Objectives

For pages 437–453

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing rhyme.
Analyzing personification.

Reading:
Analyzing sound devices.
Clarifying meaning.

Writing:
Writing a journal entry.
Writing a poem.
Writing a paragraph.

Vocabulary

heave (hēv) n. an upward motion, or an effort to raise; p. 445 With a heave, Lana lifted the huge box into her car.

interpose (in´ tər pōz´) v. to intrude, intervene, or to put oneself between; p. 445 Don’t interprose yourself in this argument.

cathedral (ke thē´ drəl) n. a church that is the official seat of a bishop; p. 450 We visited the lovely cathedral of Notre Dame.

imperial (im pēr´ ē əl) adj. of or relating to an empire or emperor; p. 450 In A.D. 200, imperial Rome stretched across several continents.

affliction (ə flik´ shən) n. great suffering, distress, or its cause; p. 450 The nation was reeling from the affliction of tuberculosis.

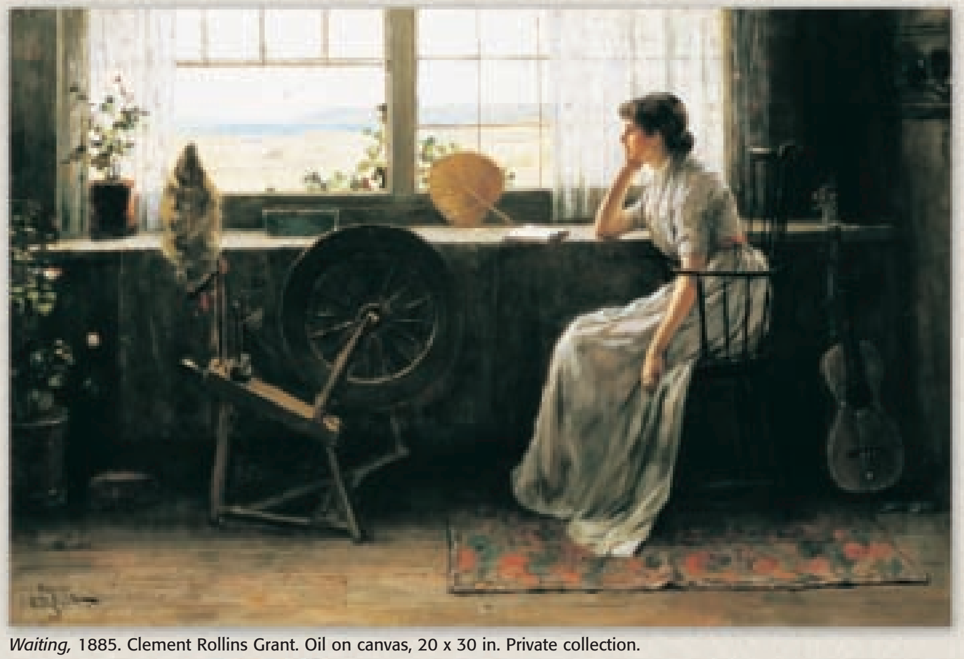
Reading Practice

Read Poetic Lines Tell students that when reading poetry, it is not necessary to stop at the end of every line. They should use punctuation and meaning as a guide for pauses. Suggest that they read the lines with the same intonation they would read sentences. Model the process with these lines from the poem, “If you were coming in the Fall”:

> I’d brush the Summer by
> With half a smile, and half a spurn,

Point out that there is no punctuation after by and therefore no reason to pause or stop there. The line should be read as if it were written as a sentence: I’d brush the Summer by with half a smile . . . . Reading Dickinson’s poems this way will help students comprehend their meaning.



Waiting, 1885. Clement Rollins Grant. Oil on canvas, 20 x 30 in. Private collection.

If you were coming in the Fall

Emily Dickinson

If you were coming in the Fall,
I'd brush the Summer by
With half a smile, and half a spurn,
As Housewives do, a Fly.

If I could see you in a year,
I'd wind the months in balls—
And put them each in separate Drawers,
For fear the numbers fuse—

If only Centuries, delayed,
I'd count them on my Hand,
Subtracting, till my fingers dropped
Into Van Dieman's Land.[1]

If certain, when this life was out—
That yours and mine, should be
I'd toss it yonder, like a Rind,
And take Eternity—

But, now, uncertain of the length
Of this, that is between,
It goads me, like the Goblin Bee—
That will not state—its sting. 2

---

[1] Van Dieman's Land is the former name for Tasmania, an island that is part of Australia.

1 Rhyme What is the rhyme scheme of this stanza?

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Students will benefit from a discussion of the poem's structure and repeated images. Point out to students that each stanza of the poem describes what the speaker would do if she knew how long she would have to wait to see "you." Ask students to identify words and images that appear in each stanza. (The first four stanzas begin with If, and each one mentions increasingly larger periods of time.)

Discuss with students how the final stanza is different and how it makes them feel. (It begins with But and does not identify a specific period of time. Students may feel uneasy or in suspense.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Rhyme Answer: The rhyme scheme of this stanza is abcb.

For additional literary element practice, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, p. 190.

Reading Strategy 2

Connect Ask students to recall a time when they waited for someone to call or visit. Ask: How does the description of waiting in this poem match your experiences? (Students may agree that waiting for a visit from a special person seems to last forever.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Tell students to notice words in the poem that are associated with periods of time and seasons. (Fall, Summer, year, month, Centuries, Eternity) Have them make a list of the words and explain the different connotations with each word.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Teach

Big Idea 1

A Poetic Revolution

Answer: The speaker experienced devastating losses or partings that prompted the feelings expressed in the poem.

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Sound Devices

Answer: In this poem, the Soul makes a definitive decision. She chooses one from "an ample nation," then closes "the Valves of her attention"—no longer focusing her attention on the outside world, the world of Society. The phrase "Choose One" emphasizes that the decision is irreversible. The final line, "Like Stone—," shows that the decision is complete.

Progress Check

Can students analyze sound devices?

If No → See Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, p. 191.

Writer's Technique ☆

Ambiguity Dickinson often uses words in her poetry that have more than one meaning and could be interpreted in more than one way. Society has several meanings that could apply to the poem: a group of people who share certain interests; an exclusive organization; the upper class; and the company of others. Point out the irony or contradiction here: "In seeking its own society, the Soul is turning away from others rather than joining them."

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, p. 192.

My life closed twice before its close

Emily Dickinson

My life closed twice before its close—
It yet remains to see
If Immortality unveil
A third event to me

So huge, so hopeless to conceive
As these that twice befell.
Parting is all we know of heaven,
And all we need of hell.

1 A Poetic Revolution Why did events not described in the poem prompt the speaker to express these feelings in lines 7 and 8?

The Soul selects her own Society

Emily Dickinson

The Soul selects her own Society— ☆
Then—shuts the Door—
To her divine Majority—
Present no more—

Unmoved—she notes the Chariots—pausing—
At her low Gate—
Unmoved—an Emperor be kneeling
Upon her Mat—

I've known her—from an ample nation—
Choose One—
Then—close the Valves of her attention—
Like Stone—

2 Analyze Sound Devices How does the length of lines 10 and 12 reinforce the meaning of the stanza?

Writing Practice

Paraphrase Remind students that a paraphrase is a restatement of a line in a poem, not an interpretation. Explain that paraphrasing helps a reader understand what a poet is saying and how the poet creates layers of meaning. Tell students to write a paraphrase of the poem "My life closed twice before its close." Have volunteers read their paraphrases, and have the class discuss how the paraphrases differ from the poem and what they reveal about the poem.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

If you were coming in the Fall

Respond and Interpret

1. (a)What periods of time does the speaker describe in each of the first four stanzas? (b)Describe the actions the speaker imagines taking in each of these stanzas.

Analyze and Evaluate

2. How effective is the simile in the last verse of the poem at conveying suspense? Explain.

My life closed twice before its close

Respond and Interpret

3. (a)How does the speaker define parting? (b)How, in your opinion, do partings affect the speaker?

Analyze and Evaluate

4. How do the dash and the capitalization of "Immortality" affect the meaning of the poem? Explain.

The Soul selects her own Society

Respond and Interpret

5. (a)In your own words, explain what the soul selects. (b)From how many does the soul choose just one? Tell what you think this suggests about the soul.

Analyze and Evaluate

6. The last verse includes a metaphor describing the soul closing "the Valves of her attention." In your opinion, is this verse a fitting end given the content of the previous stanzas? Explain why or why not.

Connect

7. Connect to the Author At Thomas Higginson's recommendation, Dickinson stopped trying to publish her work. Why might she have followed this advice? Does knowing she did affect how you view her poetry? Explain.

Literary Element Rhyme

Slant rhyme refers to words at the ends of lines of poetry that almost—but don't quite—rhyme, for example, "be" and "fly." Dickinson makes repeated use of slant rhymes in her poems. When you come across slant rhyme, you may notice that it heightens tension or the element of surprise.

1. Review "The Soul selects her own Society" and identify the example of slant rhyme in the second stanza.
2. In the last stanza, notice the contrast between the soft o sound of "One" and the longer, heavier o sound of "Stone." How does this final slant rhyme help reinforce the meaning of the poem?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

Reading Strategy Analyze Sound Devices

Sound devices create rhythm, highlight particular words and sounds, and add to the musical quality of poetry. The sound of a poem and the poem's meaning are closely linked, even inseparable.

1. Record examples of internal rhyme (rhyme occurring within a single line) and assonance (repeated vowel sounds) in the last stanza of "If you were coming in the Fall." How do these techniques contribute to the poem's meaning?
2. (a)What words does the use of alliteration draw attention to in "My life closed twice before its close"? (b)Why are these words emphasized?

Writing

Write a Journal Entry Write a journal entry in which you reflect on one of these poems and how it connects to your own life. Refer to specific lines to make your comparisons clear.

After You Read

Assess

1. (a) Fall, summer; a year; centuries; a lifetime. (b) The speaker imagines brushing the seasons away, tracking months, counting centuries on her fingers, and trading her life for eternity.
2. Students may compare waiting for a loved one to waiting for a "Goblin Bee" to "state its sting."
3. (a) The speaker says that "Parting is all we know of heaven / And all we need of hell."
   (b) Students may say that partings devastate the speaker.
4. Students may say that the dash emphasizes the abrupt close, or death of the speaker, and that the capitalization of "Immortality" transforms a passive state of being into an active character.
5. (a) The soul selects its own society, or company. (b) The soul selects just one from her "divine Majority." This may suggest that the soul is given many options.
6. Students may note the connection between the Valves of the final stanza and the Door of the first stanza and the Gate of the second stanza.
7. Some students may say Dickinson "preferred obscurity to compromise" (from page 437), and her artistic integrity should be admired.

Literary Element

1. The slant rhyme is created by the words gate and mat.
2. Students may say that the longer, heavier sound reinforces the heaviness of the stone, thus dramatizing the finality of the Soul's choice.

Reading Strategy

1. Internal rhyme: "me/Bee." Assonance: the long e in between, me, and Bee. The internal rhyme reinforces the connection between me, Bee, and between.
2. (a) Huge, hopeless, heaven, and hell. (b) Huge and hopeless suggest despair. Heaven and hell are themes of the poem.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 149–150.

Writing

Students should justify reflections and comparisons with references to specific lines in the poem.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Sound Devices

Answer: Consonance reinforces the speaker's point that, in society, assenting is equated with being sane, while demurring is equated with being dangerous.

ENGLISH LEARNERS For the benefit of English learners, read the poem aloud, stressing the sounds made by the letters s and d. Ask students what impression they get from your reading.

Writer's Technique ☆

Paradox A paradox is a statement that seems to contradict itself but nevertheless suggests an important truth. Dickinson often uses paradoxes in her poetry—for example, in the line "Much Madness is divinest Sense—." Ask students to explain the truth contained in this apparent contradiction. (Unusual thinking and actions, which might be construed as madness, often reflect a higher order of sense than is commonly recognized.)

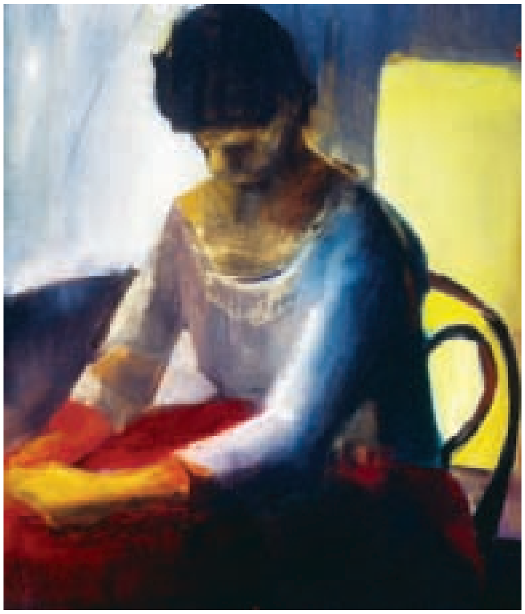
For activities related to this selection, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 200–202.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Much Madness is divinest Sense

Emily Dickinson



Woman Sitting in Darkness, Kari Van Tine.

Much Madness is divinest Sense— ☆
To a discerning Eye—
Much Sense—the starkest Madness—
'Tis the Majority
In this, as All, prevail—
Assent—and you are sane—
Demur[1]—you're straightway dangerous—
And handled with a Chain—

---

[1] Demur means "to hesitate" or "to protest."

Analyze Sound Devices What is the effect of the repeated consonant sounds in assent and sane*? In* demur and dangerous*?* 1

Grammar Practice

Elliptical Constructions Point out that Dickinson often uses elliptical constructions, in which words are left out and must be inferred by the reader. Model such a construction by reading lines 1–3. Students should realize that in line 3, the verb is is understood, so that the sentence is parallel to the statement in line 1. Have students supply the missing words in line 5 (that) and lines 6–7 (if you).

Success is counted sweetest

Emily Dickinson

Success is counted sweetest
By those who ne'er succeed. 2
To comprehend a nectar[1]
Requires sorest need.

Not one of all the purple Host[2]
Who took the Flag today
Can tell the definition
So clear of Victory

As he defeated—dying—
On whose forbidden ear
The distant strains of triumph
Burst agonized and clear!

---

[1] Nectar is a sweet liquid secreted by plants and used by bees in the making of honey. In Greek mythology, nectar is the drink of the gods that makes all who drink it immortal.

[2] Purple Host means "winning army."

3 A Poetic Revolution Why does the poet enclose the word dying in dashes in line 9?

Taps, c. 1907–1909. William Gilbert Gaul. Oil on canvas, 32¾ x 43 in. The Birmingham Museum of Art, AL.

View the Art In this painting the artist presents a poignant and ironic contrast between a fallen soldier and his faithfully waiting horse. How does the artist's vision of defeat compare with Dickinson's? ★

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate English learners may have trouble understanding the poem "Success is counted sweetest" because it contains difficult syntax and expresses its ideas indirectly. Point out that the first stanza expresses one complete thought; the second and third stanzas together complete another. Work with students to paraphrase orally each complete idea in the poem. Make sure students understand the subject and action of each thought. Afterwards, ask students why the poet may have used this indirect method to express her ideas.

Teach

Literary Element 2

Imagery The descriptive words and phrases used to re-create sensory experiences are called imagery. Ask students how the image of nectar in line 3 contributes to the meaning of the poem. (Nectar, a sweet drink of the gods, contributes to the idea of success and victory as separate from the world of the defeated. Although the defeated may understand success, they can never achieve it–just as humans are cut off from the world of the gods.)

Big Idea 3

A Poetic Revolution

Answer: Students may say that she wished to emphasize the agonizing quality of failure by emphasizing the word dying.

View the Art ★

Answer: The fallen soldier connects with the dying person mentioned in the third stanza. This image reinforces the poem's divergence from the romanticized view of war.

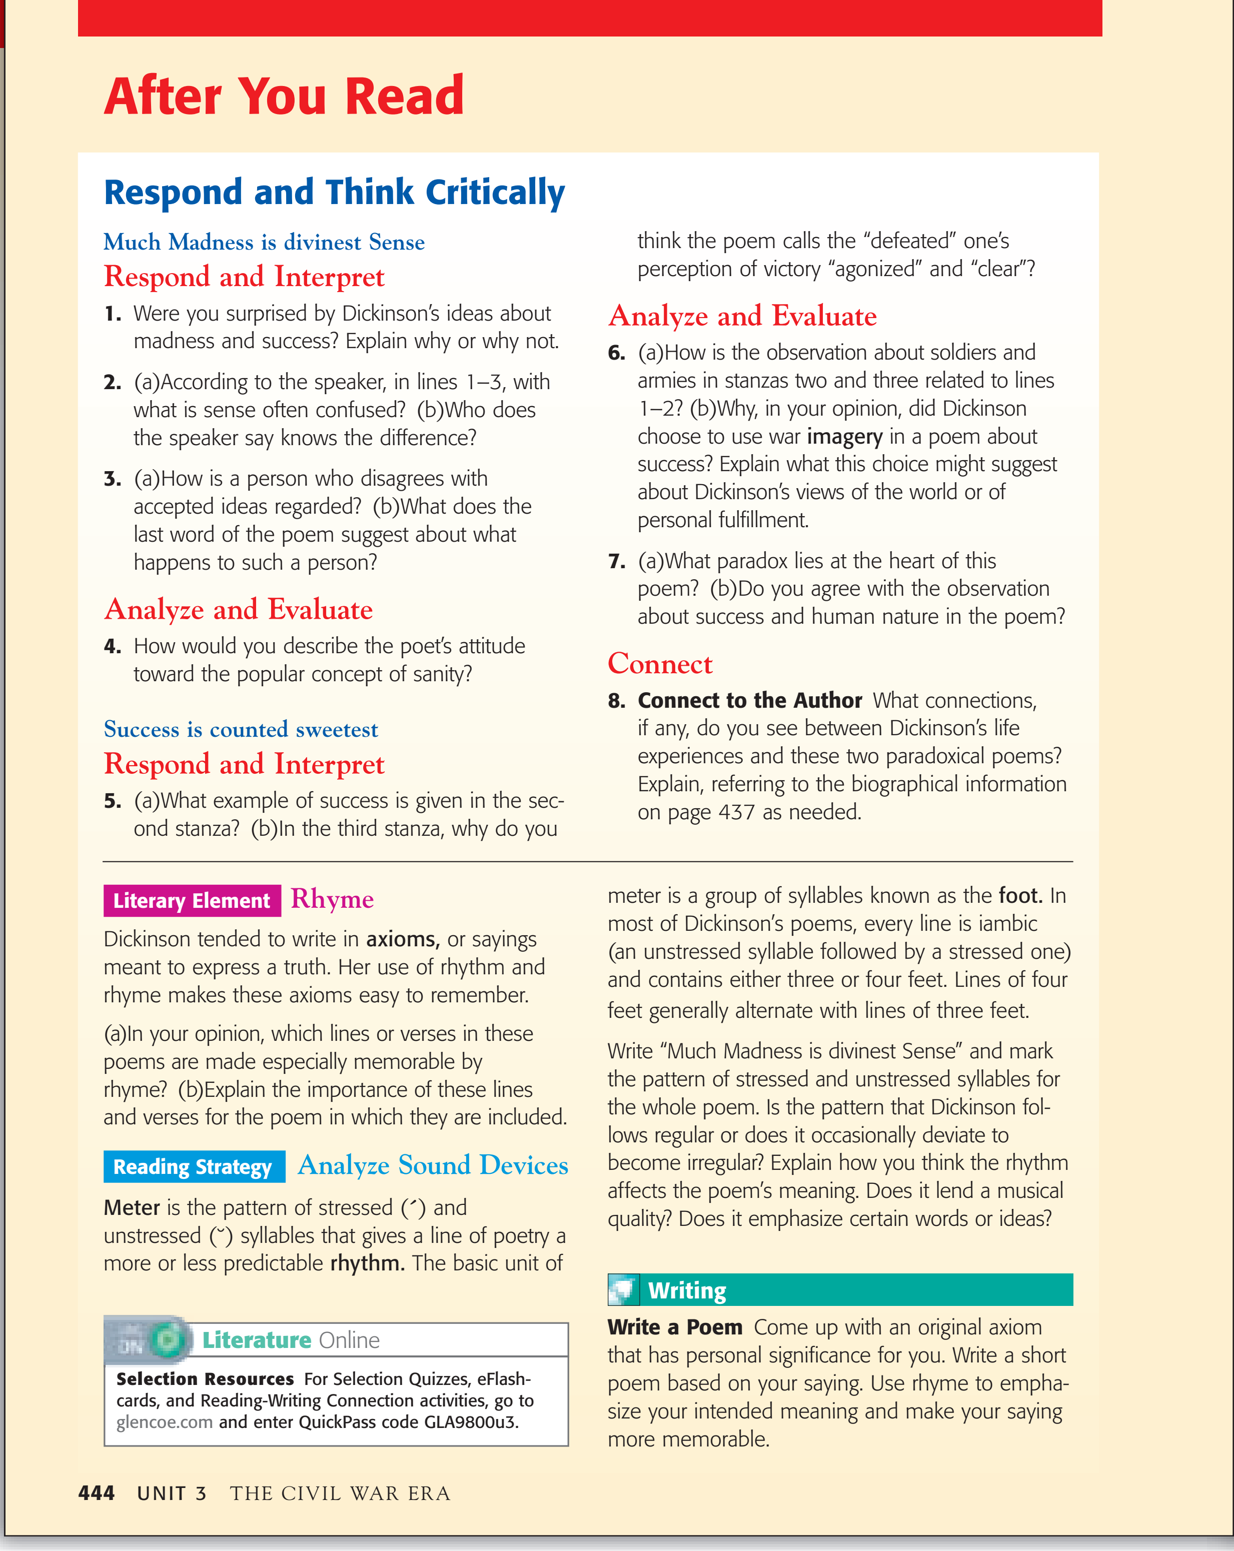
After You Read

Assess

1. Students may say they were surprised by the unexpected truths Dickinson reveals.
2. (a) Madness (b) A discerning person
3. (a) A person who disagrees with accepted ideas is chastised by the majority. (b) Chain suggests that such a person is persecuted.
4. Dickinson expresses disagreement with this concept.
5. (a) A conquering army (b) The defeated know how awful it feels not to have victory.
6. (a) Stanzas two and three illustrate the point made in lines 1–2. (b) Dickinson uses war imagery to suggest that the struggle to gain success and to avoid failure is inherently unfair.
7. (a) Only those who do not attain success can fully understand its meaning. (b) Students may think of examples from real life that support or contradict the poem.
8. Students may say that Dickinson may have believed that society considered her "mad" (as in "Much Madness is divinest Sense").

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 151–152.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Much Madness is divinest Sense

Respond and Interpret

1. Were you surprised by Dickinson's ideas about madness and success? Explain why or why not.
2. (a)According to the speaker, in lines 1–3, with what is sense often confused? (b)Who does the speaker say knows the difference?
3. (a)How is a person who disagrees with accepted ideas regarded? (b)What does the last word of the poem suggest about what happens to such a person?

Analyze and Evaluate

4. How would you describe the poet's attitude toward the popular concept of sanity?

Success is counted sweetest

Respond and Interpret

5. (a)What example of success is given in the second stanza? (b)In the third stanza, why do you think the poem calls the "defeated" one's perception of victory "agonized" and "clear"?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. (a)How is the observation about soldiers and armies in stanzas two and three related to lines 1–2? (b)Why, in your opinion, did Dickinson choose to use war imagery in a poem about success? Explain what this choice might suggest about Dickinson's views of the world or of personal fulfillment.
7. (a)What paradox lies at the heart of this poem? (b)Do you agree with the observation about success and human nature in the poem?

Connect

8. Connect to the Author What connections, if any, do you see between Dickinson's life experiences and these two paradoxical poems? Explain, referring to the biographical information on page 437 as needed.

Literary Element Rhyme

Dickinson tended to write in axioms, or sayings meant to express a truth. Her use of rhythm and rhyme makes these axioms easy to remember.

(a)In your opinion, which lines or verses in these poems are made especially memorable by rhyme? (b)Explain the importance of these lines and verses for the poem in which they are included.

Reading Strategy Analyze Sound Devices

Meter is the pattern of stressed (´) and unstressed (˘) syllables that gives a line of poetry a more or less predictable rhythm. The basic unit of meter is a group of syllables known as the foot. In most of Dickinson's poems, every line is iambic (an unstressed syllable followed by a stressed one) and contains either three or four feet. Lines of four feet generally alternate with lines of three feet.

Write "Much Madness is divinest Sense" and mark the pattern of stressed and unstressed syllables for the whole poem. Is the pattern that Dickinson follows regular or does it occasionally deviate to become irregular? Explain how you think the rhythm affects the poem's meaning. Does it lend a musical quality? Does it emphasize certain words or ideas?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

Writing

Write a Poem Come up with an original axiom that has personal significance for you. Write a short poem based on your saying. Use rhyme to emphasize your intended meaning and make your saying more memorable.

Literary Element

Students should provide support for their answers.

Reading Strategy

Mŭch mádnĕss ís dĭvínĕst Sénse—
Tŏ á dĭscérnĭng Eýe—
Mŭch Sénse—thĕ stárkĕst Mádnĕss—
'Tĭs thé Măjórĭtý
Ĭn thís, ăs Áll, prĕvaíl—
Ăssént—ănd yóu ăre sáne—
Dĕmúr—yóu're straíghtwăy dángĕroús—
Ănd hándlĕd wíth ă Chaín—

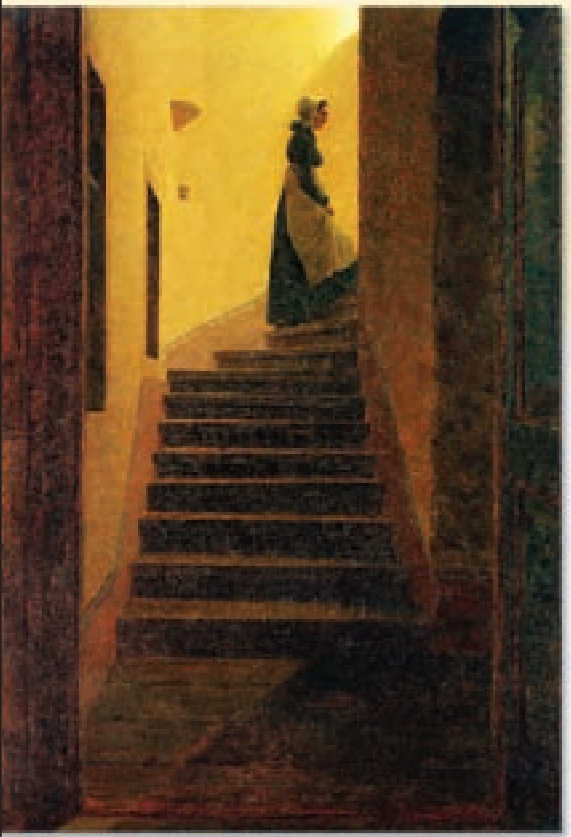
At the third line, Dickinson begins to diverge from her usual pattern of alternating lines of eight syllables and six syllables. The irregular rhythm creates drama, interest, and a sense of surprise.

Writing

Each axiom and poem should express a message that is personally significant to the student, and should incorporate rhyme to emphasize that meaning.

I heard a Fly buzz when I died

Emily Dickinson



Caroline Auf Der Treppe. Caroline on the Stairs, 1825. Caspar David Friedrich. Oil on canvas, 29 x 20.3 in. Private collection.

I heard a Fly buzz—when I died—
The Stillness in the Room
Was like the Stillness in the Air—
Between the Heaves of Storm—

The Eyes around—had wrung them dry—
And Breaths were gathering firm
For that last Onset—when the King
Be witnessed—in the Room—

I willed my Keepsakes—Signed away
What portion of me be Assignable—and then it was
There interposed a Fly—

With Blue—uncertain stumbling Buzz—
Between the light—and me—
And then the Windows failed—and then
I could not see to see—

Rhyme How is the rhyme scheme in the final stanza different from the rhyme scheme of earlier stanzas?

Vocabulary

heave (hēv) n. an upward motion, or an effort to raise interpose (in´ tər pōz´) v. to intrude, intervene, or to put oneself between

Teach

Literary Element 1

Irony Remind students that irony is the contrast between what is expected and what actually happens. Ask: What does the speaker expect to see at the end of life and what does he or she actually see? (The speaker expects to see God, "the King," but sees an ordinary fly instead.)

Literary Element 2

Rhyme Answer: In the first three stanzas, there are slant rhymes. In the final stanza, there is a true rhyme.

View the Art ★

Caspar David Friedrich (1774–1840) was a German Romantic painter. Romantic painters cast off the notion that human beings were the center of the universe and focused instead on nature's great power. Ask: How do Friedrich's painting and Dickinson's poetry express Romantic or revolutionary ideas? (The painting and the poems emphasize forces greater than human beings: light and darkness in the painting; death and time in the poems.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Ask English learners to find at least two words in the poem that suggest a sound or lack of sound. (buzz, stillness, breaths) Discuss the effect of the words on the poem. Ask how the poem would sound if different words had been used—such as drone, quiet, and breathing. (Students may suggest that Dickinson's words add soft sounds to a poem about death.)

Remind students that the word buzz has several meanings, but on this page it refers to the sound that an insect's wings make. Explain that buzz is an example of onomatopoeia—a word that imitates the sound it describes.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 210–212.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Compare and Contrast

Ask: How would you compare the view of death expressed in "The Bustle in a House" with that in "I heard a Fly buzz when I died"? (The view in "I heard a Fly buzz when I died" creates doubt about life beyond death; "The Bustle in a House" suggests that love is stored to use again for loved ones after death.)

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Sound Devices

Answer: In both stanzas, the first, second, and last lines have the same short length. Students may say that this helps emphasize the contrast between earthly life and eternity.

View the Art

Patrick William Adam (1854–1929) was born in Edinburgh, Scotland. He painted portraits, landscapes, and still lifes, but is best remembered for his interior scenes. Ask: How does the painting connect to the poem? (The painting suggests that domestic life may be framed by shadow. The poem also suggests that ordinary life is overshadowed by grief.)

The Bustle in a House

Emily Dickinson

The Bustle in a House
The Morning after Death
Is solemnest of industries
Enacted upon Earth—

The Sweeping up the Heart
And putting Love away
We shall not want to use again 1
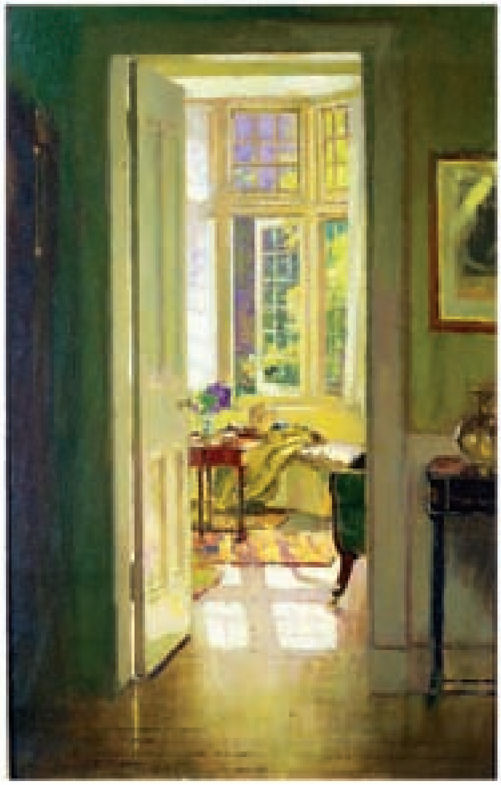
Until Eternity.



Interior, Morning. Patrick William Adam. Oldham Art Gallery, Lancashire, UK.

2 Analyze Sound Devices How does line length function in this poem?

Reading Practice

Respond to Poetry Tell students that their own responses to a poem or other work of literature are an important way to connect with the literature. Have students make a two-column chart in which to respond to Dickinson's poems. In the left column, they should copy words, phrases, or lines from the poem that are meaningful or appealing to them. In the right column, they should write their response to the quotation. Students may respond by interpreting the words, connecting them to their own lives, questioning them, or commenting on them.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

I heard a Fly buzz when I died

Respond and Interpret

1. Which images in these poems did you find especially striking? Why?
2. In the first stanza of "I heard a Fly buzz when I died," to what is the atmosphere in the room compared?
3. (a)In lines 5 and 6, what are the "Eyes" and "Breaths" doing? (b)What do they await? Explain.
4. Summarize the last two stanzas. Explain what impression of death you received from these lines.

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)Why do you think the speaker calls his or her belongings "Keepsakes"? (b)What other words or phrases in the poem seem to indicate an implied truth about life, death, or the human soul?
6. How does Dickinson's account of someone dying compare with other representations of death?

The Bustle in a House

Respond and Interpret

7. (a)What words does the speaker use that suggest everyday household chores? (b)To what type of chores is Dickinson really referring?
8. (a)According to the second stanza, when will we again "use" the love we put aside on the morning after death? (b)What might this suggest about Dickinson's religious faith? Explain.

Analyze and Evaluate

9. (a)What analogy does the speaker make in this poem? (b)What does this analogy suggest about human reactions and needs after a death?

Connect

10. Connect to Today In these two poems, Dickinson offers very different perspectives on death. In your opinion, which of the poems more accurately reflects how our society perceives death? Explain.

Literary Element Rhyme

The sounds and images of a poem work together to create meaning. The jarring effect of a slant rhyme can underscore a word's importance.

1. In "The Bustle in a House," which words does Dickinson draw attention to through slant rhyme?
2. The poem contrasts the mundane with the elevated and abstract. How does the use of slant rhyme reinforce this dual aspect of the poem?

Reading Strategy Analyze Sound Devices

Assonance is the repetition of similar vowel sounds, as in this example:

The Soul selects her own Society—

Consonance is the repetition of similar consonant sounds, typically within or at the ends of words.

Much Madness is divinest Sense—

Find examples of assonance and consonance in "The Bustle in a House." You may want to copy the poem and use different colored pens to underline examples. In your opinion, what does the poem gain from the use of consonance and assonance?

Writing

Write an Essay Dickinson's original poems were untitled, so they are usually referenced by their first lines. Write a title for each of these two poems based on your interpretations of their themes. In a brief essay, explain your choice.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. A tense anticipation
3. (a) The Eyes are being wiped dry after crying, and Breaths are trying to become steady. (b) The death of the speaker
4. The speaker wills away worldly possessions and then dies. Death is uncertain, mysterious, or mundane.
5. (a) Keepsakes suggests that belongings are fragile and, in the end, trivial. (b) The focus on the fly suggests that until the end, only material aspects can be perceived with clarity.
6. The account is unsentimental.
7. (a) Terms such as bustle, industries, sweeping, and putting away suggest household chores. (b) The chores that consume families after a death
8. (a) In eternity (b) Dickinson's belief in an afterlife
9. (a) Between cleaning up a house and experiencing grief (b) Humans need activity and order to recover from grief. Students should provide support for their evaluations.
10. The first reflects people who question the idea of an afterlife. The second reflects a belief in heaven and hell.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 153–154.

Literary Element

1. Death/Earth; away/Eternity
2. Death, unimaginable and final, is contrasted with Earth, which is familiar. "Putting Love away" is a way to cope with everyday loss, whereas Eternity is a grand concept.

Reading Strategy

Assonance: the long e sound in industries, Sweeping, and Eternity; Consonance: the n sound in Morning, industries, Enacted. These give unity to the poem and enhance its hymnlike qualities.

Writing

Each essay should include an original title related to one of the poem's themes and explain why that title is appropriate.

Teach

Big Idea 1

A Poetic Revolution Have students discuss whether Dickinson's view of death might have represented a new way of thinking about death in the mid-1800s. You may wish to review with students the views of other authors of the time.

Literary Element 2

Personification Answer: In the previous stanza, the speaker says, "We passed the Setting Sun." In the next line, He, the Sun, is passing the speaker and Death. Suddenly, the speaker has gone from acting to being acted upon.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask: What inanimate objects in the poem act like human beings? What do they do? (Death stops and waits, passes, and pauses. The dews quiver and feel cold.)

Language History ☆

Gossamer The word gossamer comes from Middle English. The word is really a combination of two ordinary words—goose and summer. The word refers to fabric or cobweb strands that are light, airy, and delicate—like the downy feathers that geese shed during late summertime and early autumn.

Before You Read

Literary Element Personification

Personification is a figure of speech in which an animal, an object, a force of nature, or an idea is given human characteristics. As you read, ask yourself, What are specific ways in which Death resembles a person?

Reading Strategy Clarify Meaning

To clarify meaning, go back and reread confusing sections of the poem more slowly. This will help you notice ideas you may have previously missed.

Because I could not stop for Death

Emily Dickinson

Because I could not stop for Death—
He kindly stopped for me—
The Carriage held but just Ourselves—
And Immortality.

We slowly drove—He knew no haste
And I had put away
My labor and my leisure too, 1
For His Civility[1]—

We passed the School, where Children strove
At Recess—in the Ring—
We passed the Fields of Gazing Grain—
We passed the Setting Sun—

Or rather—He passed Us—
The Dews drew quivering and chill—
For only Gossamer, my Gown— ☆
My Tippet—only Tulle[2]—

We paused before a House that seemed A Swelling of the Ground—
The Roof was scarcely visible—
The Cornice—in the Ground—

Since then—'tis Centuries—and yet
Feels shorter than the Day
I first surmised the Horses' Heads
Were toward Eternity—

---

[1] An old meaning of civility is "a community of citizens." Among the more modern meanings is "courtesy."

[2] Gossamer is a light gauzelike fabric. A tippet is a scarf for the neck and shoulders with loose ends that hang down in front. Tulle is fine netting used for scarves and veils.

Personification How does the personification of the sun (he) introduce a shift in the poem? 2

Vocabulary Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW

Explore Latin Roots Many English words have Latin roots. The root is usually combined with a prefix, a suffix, or both. The meaning of the English word is related to the meaning of its root. For example, the word immortality (line 4) contains the prefix im-, meaning "not" and the Latin root mort, meaning "death." Immortality thus means "the state of being deathless." Define each of the following words, using a dictionary if necessary, and discuss the Latin root for each one.

1. labor
2. civility
3. visible
4. centuries

Have students use this knowledge to define these words: civic, civilization, laboratory, collaborate, per cent, centigrade.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 220–222.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What were your first reactions upon reading this poem? Explain.
2. (a)According to lines 1–2, why does "Death" stop for the speaker? Explain what these lines suggest about human behavior. (b)According to lines 3–4, what does "Death's" carriage hold?
3. (a)What places and things does the speaker pass in the third stanza? (b)What might these places and things represent?
4. What is the "House" in the ground described in the fifth stanza? Explain how you know.
5. (a)According to the sixth stanza, how much time has passed since the day of "Death's" visit? (b)Why did that day seem so long to the speaker? Support your answer with details from the poem.

Analyze and Evaluate

6. Reread lines 9–16. (a)How does the poem shift at line 13? (b)What effect is created by this? Explain your answer.
7. (a)How would you describe the mood, or emotional quality and atmosphere, of this poem? (b)Which images or details help to create this mood? Explain.
8. One critic says that in this poem, the question of death is presented "without making any final statement about it. There is no solution to the problem . . . the idea of immortality is confronted with the fact of physical disintegration. We are not told what to think; we are told to look at the situation." Do you agree? Explain why or why not.

Connect

9. Connect to the Author Raised in a religious family, Dickinson experienced both intense faith and intense doubt throughout her life. In your opinion, where does this poem fit within that spectrum? Explain.

Literary Element Personification

Dickinson uses personification when she portrays death as a gentlemanly carriage driver with human characteristics.

1. What other object or idea is personified?
2. What is the effect of this personification? Explain.
3. Why do you think Dickinson chooses to portray death as she does? Use details from the poem to support your answer.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

Reading Strategy Clarify Meaning

When you clarify meaning, you reread difficult sections of a text to figure out the meaning.

1. What is the relationship between the "Horses" in the last stanza and "Death"? To clarify, reread the poem.
2. What other points in the poem were clarified for you by rereading? Explain.

Writing

Write a Paragraph Through personification, Dickinson gives form to death—something we can't see, but will all experience. Write a brief, descriptive paragraph in which you personify something that is unseen yet influential. You might choose an emotion, an idea, or a force of nature.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students should support their answers.
2. (a) Death stops for the speaker because the speaker could not stop for death. This suggests that humans are never fully prepared for death. (b) The speaker, Death, and Immortality
3. (a) Children, fields of grain, and the setting sun (b) Childhood, maturity, and old age
4. The House is a burial chamber. It is described as a "Swelling of the Ground," suggesting that something is buried inside.
5. (a) Centuries (b) Death is mysterious when it happens.
6. (a) At line 13, the poem diverges from the rhythm it had until that point. (b) This shift creates drama.
7. (a) Eerie (b) The image of Death as a driver, or the images of the carriage ride and cemetery
8. Students should support their answers with details.
9. Students may say she neither endorses nor refutes religion in this poem, and therefore is expressing her own uncertainty.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 155–156.

Writing

Students should use descriptive language to give human characteristics to a non-human form, such as an animal or object.

Literary Element

1. The grain is personified as gazing.
2. Students may say this heightens the discrepancy between the speaker, who is dying, and the world as it goes on without her.
3. Students may say that Dickinson wanted to suggest that Death is the kindly guide that takes us to Eternity.

Reading Strategy

1. The Horses are part of Death's carriage, headed toward Eternity.
2. Answers will vary. Students should support their answers.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Connect The speaker describes how an external condition of nature causes a certain emotional state. Have students identify weather conditions that affect their moods. Ask: What is the time of year, time of day, and the mood of the speaker? (It is winter and late afternoon, when the light is waning. The mood is painfully oppressive, hopeless, and despairing.)

Literary Element 2

Rhyme Answer: The slant rhymes are listens and Distance.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask English learners to think of words that they associate with the winter season. Point out connections between their answers and the poem.

View the Art ★

In A Woman Sewing in an Interior, Danish painter Vilhelm Hammershoi (1864–1916) captures the brilliant sunlight filtering through an otherwise dark room. Ask: What is the mood of the painting? (The mood is quiet and reflective, exuding a sense of stillness and concentration.)

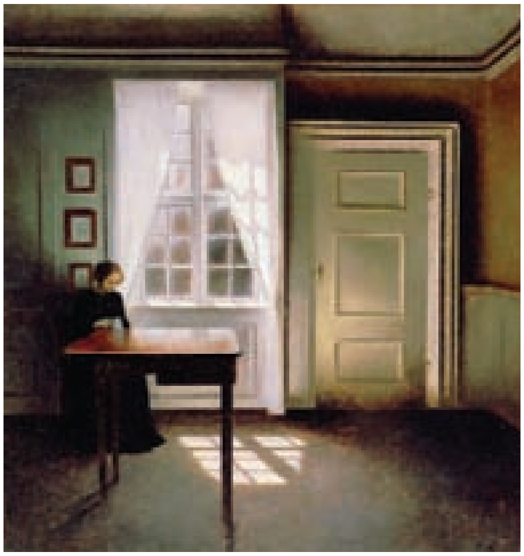
For activities related to this selection, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 230–234.

There's a certain Slant of light

Emily Dickinson



A Woman Sewing in an Interior, 1901. Vilhelm Hammershoi. Oil on canvas, 29 x 28 in. Detroit Institute of Arts. Founders Society Purchase, Robert H. Tannahill Foundation Fund.

★

There's a certain Slant of light,
Winter Afternoons—
That oppresses, like the Heft[1]
Of Cathedral Tunes—

Heavenly Hurt, it gives us—
We can find no scar,
But internal difference,
Where the Meanings, are—

None may teach it—Any—
'Tis the Seal[2] Despair—
An imperial affliction
Sent us of the Air—

When it comes, the Landscape listens—
Shadows—hold their breath—
When it goes, 'tis like the Distance
On the look of Death—

1

---

[1] Here, heft means "heaviness."

[2] Here, seal means "emblem."

Rhyme Where are the slant rhymes in the last stanza? 2

Vocabulary

cathedral	(kə thē′ drəl) n. a church that is the official seat of a bishop imperial	(im pēr′ ē əl) adj. of or relating to an empire or emperor affliction	(ə flik′ shən) n. great suffering, distress, or its cause

Grammar Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Use Dashes Dashes are a hallmark of Emily Dickinson's style. Point out that dashes indicate an abrupt break or change in thought or add emphasis. Have students write at least three original sentences in which they use dashes either for emphasis or to indicate an abrupt change. Have volunteers read their sentences aloud for the class and use their voice and facial expressions to convey the meanings of the dashes. Lead the class in a discussion of what dashes add to a written or spoken composition. (Students may suggest that the dashes add energy or a sense of suspense or mystery to the writing.)

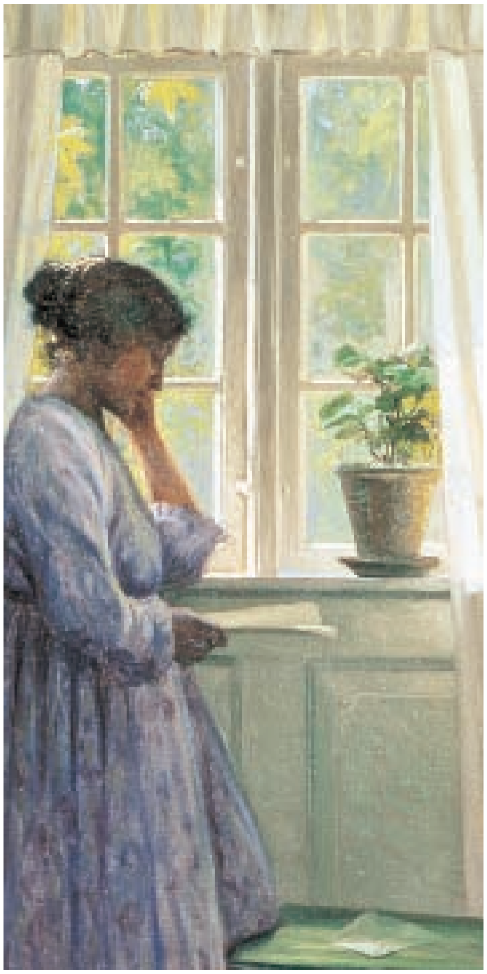
This is my letter to the World

Emily Dickinson

This is my letter to the World
That never wrote to Me—
The simple News that Nature told—
With tender Majesty

Her Message is committed[1]
To Hands I cannot see—
For love of Her—Sweet—countrymen—
Judge tenderly—of Me ☆



At The Window, 1870. Karl Harald Alfred Broge. Oil on canvas, 21 x 17¼ in. Private collection.

---

[1] Committed means "entrusted."

3 A Poetic Revolution Why does the poet capitalize majesty in line 4?

Teach

Big Idea 3

A Poetic Revolution

Answer: Students may say that the poet wishes to emphasize the power or omnipotence of nature. Students may also say that the poet wishes to create symmetry with the capitalized Me two lines before.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Have students list the capitalized words in the poem. Guide students to come up with a generalization about the capitalized words. (Most are nouns or pronouns—except for Sweet and Judge.)

Writer's Technique ☆

Dickinson's Style Explain to students that this poem has all the hallmarks readers expect to find in a Dickinson poem—regular rhythm, a mixture of regular and slant rhyme, four-line stanzas, and the use of nonstandard dashes and capitalization. Lead students in a discussion of what makes Dickinson's style and voice unique.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Nature in Poetry Remind students that nature has always been a favorite subject of poets in almost every culture. Some poets, like the English Romantics of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, celebrated nature's power and mystery. For others, nature inspires them to analyze or express their own emotions and experiences. Ask students to consider how nature is depicted in Dickinson's poems. Ask them to work with partners to identify images of nature and to come up with a generalization about what nature means to Dickinson as a poet. For example, is nature a powerful force or just an object she describes? Does nature inspire her or is it merely a convenient metaphor? Remind students to draw on other traditions of nature poetry they may have read. Ask volunteers from each pair to share their ideas orally with the class.

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary. Students should support their answers.
2. (a) Heavenly Hurt (b) It brings a feeling of oppression and heaviness.
3. (a) The speaker observes the slant of light in winter. (b) Winter might suggest that the slant of light comes at a moment of weakness or death.
4. The slant of light may represent death or the premonition of death. The last lines compare the waning light to the gap separating the living and the dead.
5. (a) Students may say that these words evoke depression, fear, or vulnerability. (b) Students should support their answers with examples.
6. (a) The letter may be Dickinson's poetry. (b) What nature has expressed, taught, or given to the speaker
7. (a) The speaker begs to be judged leniently. (b) Dickinson's poetry expresses what she has learned from nature.
8. For the speaker, life itself provides no easy answers.
9. Students should support their answers with examples.
10. Students may say that Dickinson wrote "There's a certain Slant of light" to express her own feelings of sadness. They may say that she wrote "This is my letter to the World" to articulate her respect for nature.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

There's a certain Slant of light

Respond and Interpret

1. What did you most like about these poems?
2. (a)What does the slant of light give us, according to the speaker? (b)Describe the mood, or feeling, that the slant of light brings.
3. (a)When does the speaker observe the slant of light? (b)Why is this significant? Explain.
4. What does the light seem to represent to the speaker? Explain how lines 15–16 reinforce this.

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)What feelings does Dickinson evoke with her descriptions of a "Heavenly Hurt" and "the Seal Despair"? (b)Does Dickinson bring out these feelings effectively?

This is my letter to the World

Respond and Interpret

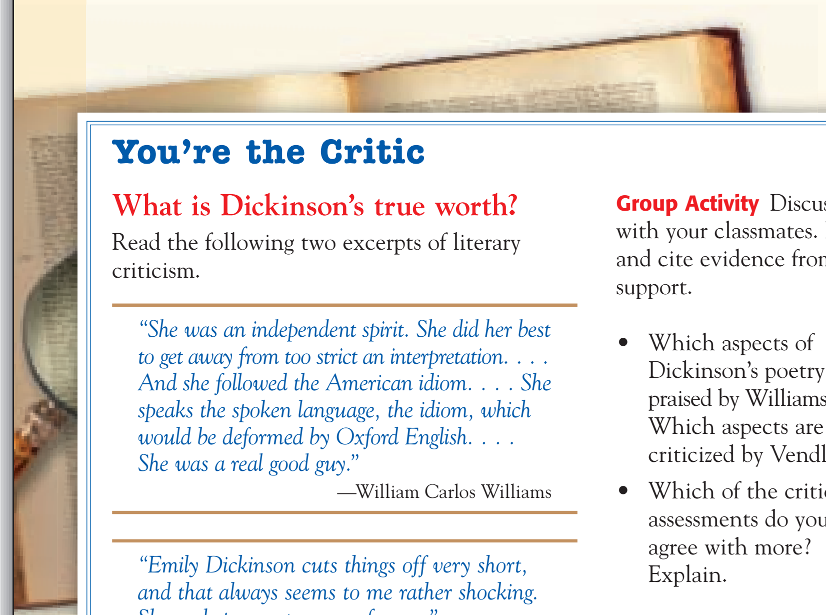
6. (a)What might "my letter" refer to? (b)What "News" does the letter contain?
7. (a)What plea does the speaker make in stanza 2? (b)Why does she make this plea?

Analyze and Evaluate

8. What does the fact that the world never wrote to her suggest about the speaker?

Connect

9. Big Idea A Poetic Revolution How would you summarize Dickinson's poetic innovations?
10. Connect to the Author What connections might these poems have to Dickinson's life?



You're the Critic

What is Dickinson's true worth?

Read the following two excerpts of literary criticism.

> "She was an independent spirit. She did her best to get away from too strict an interpretation. . . . And she followed the American idiom. . . . She speaks the spoken language, the idiom, which would be deformed by Oxford English. . . . She was a real good guy."
>
> —William Carlos Williams

> "Emily Dickinson cuts things off very short, and that always seems to me rather shocking. She ends poems too soon for me."
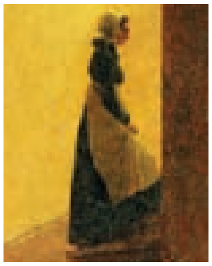
>
> —Helen Vendler

Group Activity Discuss the following questions with your classmates. Refer to the two quotes and cite evidence from Dickinson's poems for support.

- Which aspects of Dickinson's poetry are praised by Williams? Which aspects are criticized by Vendler?
- Which of the critical assessments do you agree with more? Explain.



Caroline Auf Der Treppe. Caroline on the Stairs, 1825 (detail). Caspar David Friedrich. Oil on canvas, 29 x 20.3 in. Private collection.

You're the Critic

- Williams praises Dickinson's American diction. Vendler criticizes Dickinson's brevity.
- Students should support their opinions.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 157–158.

Literary Element Rhyme

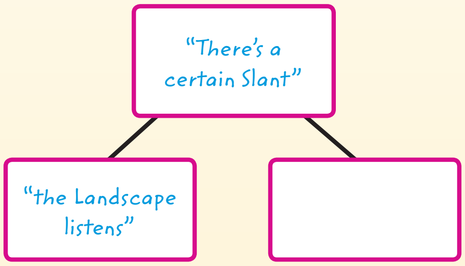
Through the skillful manipulation of rhyme, poets can achieve subtle emotional effects. Aware that readers have a tendency to expect perfect, or full, rhymes as they read, poets may decide to delay the expression of a full rhyme in order to create tension. When the full rhyme arrives later than expected, the overall effect may be to provide satisfaction and to emphasize a certain meaning.

1. How is the strategy described above illustrated in "This is my letter to the World"?
2. What effect does internal rhyme, or rhyme that occurs within a line of poetry, have on the poem?

Review: Personification

Personification is a figure of speech in which an animal, an object, a force of nature, or an idea is given human characteristics.

Partner Activity With a partner, examine "There's a certain Slant of light" and "This is my letter to the World." Working with your partner, create two web diagrams like the one below, and fill them in with examples of personification from each poem. Then discuss which examples you found most memorable or effective. Also discuss why Dickinson uses personification as she does.



Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

Reading Strategy Analyze Sound Devices

Alliteration refers to the repetition of similar consonant sounds at the beginnings of words. It is often used to emphasize certain words or ideas.

1. List three instances of alliteration in "There's a certain Slant of light." What is the effect of each on the sound and meaning of the poem?
2. What effect might Dickinson have intended to create with the repetition of the m sound in "This is my letter to the World"? Explain.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Word Usage Respond to these statements to help you explore the meanings of vocabulary words from the selections.

1. Explain a situation in which a heave might help you.
2. Describe an occurrence in your life when you have had to interpose yourself between people.
3. Name things you would find in a cathedral.
4. Identify a country or culture that has, at one point, had an imperial government.
5. Name a character from a book or movie who suffers from an affliction.

Academic Vocabulary

In Dickinson's poems, there is a sharp contrast between her world and the external world.

Contrast is an academic word. The poem "Much Madness is divinest Sense" depends on the usual contrast between "madness" and sense." To further explore the meaning of contrast, complete the sentence below.

In contrast to Whitman's expansive, outgoing, sociable poetic persona, that of Emily Dickinson could be described as

____________.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Element

1. The full rhyme arrives only at the end of each stanza; the first and third lines do not rhyme.
2. The internal rhyme of tenderly and me gives emphasis and character to the final line.

Review: Personification

"There's a certain Slant of light"
(1) "Slant of light, / Winter Afternoons— / That oppresses"
(2) "Shadows—hold their breath—"

"This is my letter to the World"
(1) "the World / That never wrote to Me—"
(2) "The simple News that Nature told—"

Reading Strategy

1. Examples include Heft and Heavenly Hurt; Landscape listens and look; and Despair, Distance, and Death. Students should provide support for their analysis.
2. Students may say she wished to emphasize Me by including other words that begin with m.

Vocabulary

1. Students may say having to lift furniture.
2. Students may provide a scenario wherein they had to come between friends to stop them from fighting.
3. Students may say stained glass, an altar, statues, pews, and tourists.
4. Students should name a country or culture that has practiced imperialism, such as the Roman Empire, China, England, or France.
5. Students should name a character who undergoes great physical or emotional distress. Examples include Ophelia in Hamlet or the narrator of "The Pit and the Pendulum."

Academic Vocabulary

Possible answers: introspective, shy, private, reserved.

After You Read

Assess

Respond Through Writing

Students' essays should analyze and evaluate Dickinson's nonstandard punctuation and spelling. Have students revise their drafts to strengthen the thesis and address the topic as needed.

Scoring Guide

Assess students' performance in the following categories using the scoring guide at the bottom of the page:

- Addresses all parts of the writing task.
- Provides a meaningful thesis, maintains focus and organization.
- Supports the thesis with details and examples.
- Provides a variety of sentence types; uses precise, descriptive language.
- Follows English language conventions.
- Makes a logical, convincing analysis.

Respond Through Writing

Expository Essay

Analyze Style Dickinson uses capitalization and dashes to achieve complex effects and add nuances to her poetry. In an expository essay, analyze and evaluate her nonstandard punctuation and spelling.

Understand the Task A nuance is subtle quality or variation. When you analyze a literary work, you methodically examine it by separating the selection into parts and studying the interrelations between those parts. To evaluate means to form opinions and make judgments about the effectiveness of certain parts of a literary work.

Prewrite Reread the poems both silently and out loud. Pay special attention to the effects created by the dashes and capitalizations and how they are connected with imagery and sound devices. Jot down some notes on these effects, and what you think Dickinson was trying to achieve, using a two-column chart like the one below. It has been started for you. You can use this chart to help you write your thesis and organize your essay.

Device	Effect
Em Dashes	Adds break in rhythm and shifts in thought
Slant Rhyme	Connects separate lines and the thoughts they contain

Draft In your thesis, explain Dickinson's use of nonstandard spelling and punctuation and its effects. In supporting paragraphs, include specific references to the text. Elaborate on each quotation you choose and show how it supports your thesis. Try using the sentence frame below to present your supporting details.

Dickinson's use of ______ expresses ______, ______, and ______.

Revise Reread your essay. Do you address how Dickinson's individual use of spelling and punctuation adds complexity to her writing? If not, make any necessary changes to your draft to address this point. Be sure your main points are emphasized and supported by evidence.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your paper, correcting any errors in grammar, spelling, and punctuation. Use the Grammar Tip in the side column for help with using dashes.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing an expository essay.

Grammar: Using dashes.

Grammar Tip

Dashes

Em dashes (—) can indicate an abrupt break or change in thought:

Dickinson's poetry is untraditional—but it explores universal themes.

Em dashes can be used to set off a parenthetical statement:

Dickinson's closest literary friend—and a person she trusted—encouraged her not to publish her work.

Em dashes can also be used to set off appositives:

Dickinson's gift to the world—her poetry—is highly regarded.

Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Task addressed	fully	mostly	partially	barely
Thesis	meaningful	provided	partial	weak
Support	thoughtful	provided	limited	weak
Language	varied, descriptive	varied, often descriptive	predictable, imprecise	repetitive, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	many	serious
Analysis is	convincing	mostly convincing	partially convincing	not convincing

Literary Perspective on Emily Dickinson

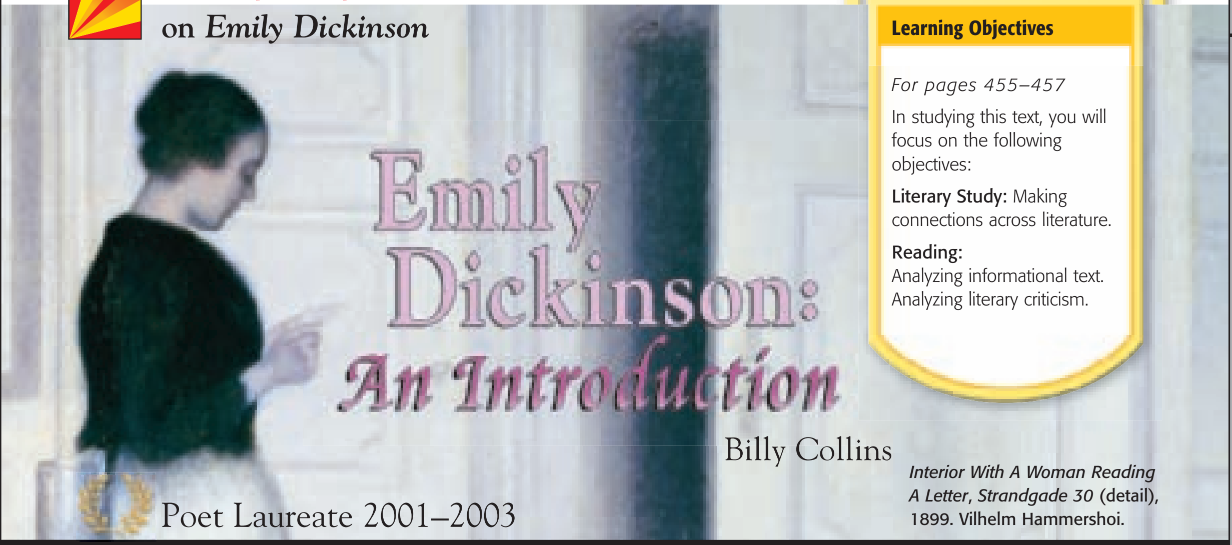
Emily Dickinson: An Introduction

Billy Collins

Poet Laureate 2001–2003



Interior With A Woman Reading A Letter, Strandgade 30 (detail), 1899. Vilhelm Hammershoi.

Learning Objectives

For pages 455–457

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Making connections across literature.

Reading:
Analyzing informational text.
Analyzing literary criticism.

Set a Purpose for Reading

As you read, ask yourself, How does the author of this selection interpret Emily Dickinson's life and poems?

Build Background

Known for his witty, accessible poetry, Billy Collins served as the nation's poet laureate from 2001 to 2003. In the following passage from his introduction to The Selected Poems of Emily Dickinson, Collins discusses the myth that surrounds Emily Dickinson's life, the enduring power of her work, and the tools that she used in crafting her poems.

Reading Strategy

Analyze Literary Criticism

Analyzing literary criticism involves recognizing the main ideas and supporting details in a piece of criticism in order to compare the critic's response to a piece of literature with your response. As you read, take notes on Collins's literary criticism. Use a two-column chart like the one below.

Critic's Response	My Response
zigzag logic in poems

Today Emily Dickinson is recognized not only as a major poet of the American nineteenth century but also as one of the most intriguing poets of any place or time, in both her art and her life. The outline of her biography is well known. She was born in Amherst, Massachusetts, in 1830 and, except for a few excursions to Philadelphia, Washington, and Boston, spent her entire life there, increasingly limiting her activities to her father's house. "I do not cross my Father's ground to any House or Town," she wrote, referring to a personal reclusiveness that was noticeable even to her contemporaries. In the front corner bedroom of that house on Main Street, Dickinson wrote over 1,700 poems, often on scraps of paper and on the backs of grocery lists, only a handful of which were published in her lifetime and then anonymously. She was known to give poems to friends and neighbors, often as an accompaniment to the cakes and cookies she baked, sometimes lowering them from an upstairs window in a basket. Her habit of binding groups of poems together into little booklets called fascicles might indicate she felt her poems were presentable, but most of her poems never went farther than her desk drawer where they were discovered by her sister after Dickinson's death in 1886 of kidney failure.

Focus

Summary

In this excerpt, the poet Billy Collins discusses some of the mysteries of Dickinson's "private existence," and some features of Dickinson's poetry—including common meter and "zigzag logic."

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 3 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 236–244.

Teach

Reading Strategy

Set a Purpose for Reading

Have students summarize their responses to the subject matter, themes, form, figurative language, imagery, and sound effects of Dickenson's poetry. Have students compare their responses with those of Billy Collins.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 10.6
DRP: 66
Lexile: 1360

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Review the purpose of literary criticism with students. Much literary criticism does more than analyze a work of literature. It may also introduce new ideas about a writer and his or her work and support those ideas by citing other critics. Explain that Collins cites several other critics' ideas about Dickinson's life and work. Some critics he uses to support his own ideas; other critics he refutes. Tell students to make a checklist with the following three items: Dickinson's poetry, Collins's ideas, and Other critics' ideas. Each time they read about Dickinson's poetry, an original idea expressed by Collins, or a citation of another critic's thoughts, students should put a checkmark next to the item on the list. After reading the selection, ask students to discuss how the writer balanced the three elements. Ask students how well Collins supported his ideas by citing other critics and Dickinson's poetry.

Teach

Reading Strategy

Analyze Literary Criticism

Have students reread the first complete paragraph on this page, beginning "It is fascinating to consider the case." Point out that Collins refers to several interpretations of Dickinson's life. Collins's survey of these interpretations seems reasonably objective. However, he concludes that the poet's separateness "took extreme forms." Ask: What details does he use to support this judgment? (Details include her exclusive preference for white clothing and her reluctance to write addresses on envelopes.)

APPROACHING Point out to students how the writer lets readers know when he is citing other people's ideas. Tell them to look for phrases such as "Some critics valorize . . ." and "Others make her out . . ." and "Still others believe . . . ." Ask: Does the writer agree with the ideas of the other critics? (He does not. He states his own idea at the end of the paragraph. He suggests that Dickinson's withdrawal from the world "took extreme form.")

In her lifetime, her poetry remained unknown, and although a few small editions of her poems were published in the 1890s, it was not until 1955 that a reliable scholarly edition appeared, transcribing the poems precisely from the original manuscripts and preserving all of Dickinson's typographical eccentricities. Convincingly or not, she called publication "the auction of the mind" and compared the public figure to a frog croaking to the admiring audience of a bog.

It is fascinating to consider the case of a person who led such a private existence and whose poems remained unrecognized for so long after her death, as if she had lain asleep only to be awakened by the kiss of the twentieth century. The quirky circumstances of her life have received as much if not more commentary than the poems themselves. Some critics valorize[1] her seclusion as a form of female self-sufficiency; others make her out to be a victim of her culture. Still others believe that her solitariness has been exaggerated. She did attend school, after all, and she maintained many intimate relationships by letter. Moreover, it was less eccentric in her day than in ours for one daughter—she had a brother who was a lawyer and a sister who married—to remain home to run the household and assist her parents. Further, all writers need privacy; all must close the door on the world to think and compose. But Dickinson's separateness—which has caused her to be labeled a homebody, a spinster, and a feminist icon among other things—took extreme forms. She was so shy that her sister Lavinia would be fitted for her clothes; she wore only white for many years ("Wear nothing commoner than snow"); and she rarely would address an envelope, afraid that her handwriting would be seen by the eyes of strangers. When asked of her companions, she replied in a letter to Thomas Wentworth Higginson[2], "Hills, sir, and the sundown, and a dog large as myself that my father bought me."

However tempting it is to search through the biographical evidence for a solution to the enigma[3] of Emily Dickinson's life, we must remember that no such curiosity would exist were it not for the poems themselves. Her style is so distinctive that anyone even slightly acquainted with her poems would recognize a poem on the page as an Emily Dickinson poem, if only for its shape. Here is a typical example:

> 'Tis little I could care for pearls
>   Who own the ample sea;
> Or brooches[4] when the Emperor
>   With rubies pelteth me;
>
> Or gold, who am the Prince of Mines;
>   Or diamonds, when I see
> A diadem[5] to fit a dome
>   Continual crowning me.

Such a short form leads to concision and quick-wittedness, her poems standing as dramatic examples of poetry's ability to compress wide meaning into small spaces. She was also fond of the riddle. The diadem that crowns her always is the sky. With the dome of earth overhead, the little poem wants to ask, who needs the grosser[6] riches of pearls, rubies, gold, or diamonds? The modest size of her poems (most are shorter than a sonnet) matches the modest space of house and garden in which she chose to live. The poems are also short because she does not waste time introducing the poem. She neither provides the details of a physical setting, as a conventional nature poem might do, nor does she explain the poem's occasion. The poems begin suddenly, often with a declaration ("Superiority to fate / Is difficult to learn") or a definition ("Hope is a subtle glutton"). Dickinson does not knock before entering, so the reader may feel swept up into the center of the poet's thought process without warning. To open a poem by saying "I felt a cleavage in my mind / As if my brain had split" is to thrust the reader into a psychic intimacy with the fractured speaker. Also, her poems tend to end abruptly and decisively, often

---

1. Valorize means to "attach value or worth to something."
2. Thomas Wentworth Higginson was a noted abolitionist, ordained minister, and editor for the Atlantic Monthly.
3. An enigma is something puzzling or mysterious.
4. A brooch is a piece of jewelry that is fastened by a pin.
5. Diadem means "crown."
6. Here, grosser mean "less fine."

Reading Practice

Connect the Main Idea Point out that Collins singles out brevity and conciseness as two of Dickinson's outstanding characteristics. Collins sums up this idea in a statement that is both figurative and concise: "Dickinson does not knock before entering."

Have students discuss what this statement means and how it captures the main idea of the paragraph. Then have students explain how this main idea connects to Collins's central thesis, or his purpose for writing the article.

with epigrammatic[7] authority ("The only secret people keep / Is Immortality").

Her tiny, untitled poems may fit her sensibility and provide the verbal equivalent of a home's safe enclosure—a room within a room—but the shortness of her lines is due to something else: her preference for common meter, the meter of ballads and Protestant hymns, and even of nursery rhymes. In common meter, a line of four beats is followed by a line of three beats.

> Amazing grace, how sweet the sound
> That saved a wretch like me.

Or, more speedily,

> Old King Cole was a merry old soul
> And a merry old soul was he.

Or, with Dickinson,

> A thought went up my Mind to-day
> That I have had before, . . .

Rhythmically, the three-beat line sounds like an answer to the four-beat line, and it also provides a one-beat pause at the end, a space to breathe. Dickinson used other kinds of cadences, but common meter is the usual gait[8] of her poetry. Almost every Dickinson poem can be sung—like it or not—to the tune of "The Yellow Rose of Texas," a song in common meter. But unlike that song, her poems also include a counter-rhythm she created by interrupting the regular beat with dashes—her obsessive type of punctuation—and by her sudden jumps of thought. Instead of a steady run of meaning, the Dickinson poem hops from one figure to another in a kind of zigzag logic that requires not just our concentration but our own agility in making imaginative and grammatical leaps. Even her obituary in the Springfield Republican noted that she was "quick as the electric spark in her intuitions."

---

[7] Epigrammatic means "in the manner of a pithy, wise saying."

[8] Here, gait means "rhythm."

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Write a brief summary of the main ideas in this excerpt before you answer the following questions. For help on writing a summary, see page 79.
2. How did you respond to Emily Dickinson's seclusion?
3. (a)To what does Dickinson compare the public figure? (b)How would you explain her disdain for public opinion?
4. Collins asserts that the meter of Dickinson's poems creates "the verbal equivalent of a home's safe enclosure." Why else do you think Dickinson may have used this meter?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. What does Collins suggest about the "commentary" related to Dickinson's seclusion?
6. Collins states that in her poetry Dickinson "compress[es] wide meaning into small spaces" and that Dickinson's poems require an agile reader who can make "imaginative and grammatical leaps"? Do you agree with his statement?

Connect

7. Big Idea A Poetic Revolution In what ways do you think Dickinson's poetic innovations are related to her separation from the world?

Teach

View the Photograph ★

The Homestead was built in 1813 and was likely the first brick house in Amherst, Massachusetts. The house was a center for Amherst society and even hosted some of Amherst College's receptions. As an adult, Emily Dickinson confined herself to the Homestead and the grounds; after the late 1860s, she never left the property. Today, both this house and the house built next door for her brother and sister-in-law have been preserved as the Emily Dickinson Museum.

Ask: How does the author characterize Dickinson's desire to seclude herself in her home? Does he think she is being revolutionary? (He suggests that all writers need privacy and seclusion. He suggests that she went to an extreme, which is not the same thing as being revolutionary.)

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 159–160.

Assess

1. Students' summaries should represent the main ideas and should not contain personal opinions.
2. Students may express surprise at the extent to which Dickinson cloistered herself.
3. (a) Dickinson compares the public figure to a frog croaking in a bog. (b) Students may say that the primary reason is that society can inhibit individuality. Other may argue that she preferred seclusion because she was shy.
4. Students may argue that she chose this meter because of her familiarity with it. Others may say she chose it for its musical qualities.
5. Collins suggests that the commentary is dependent on, and of secondary importance to, the poems.
6. Students should realize that poetic compression often requires unique grammatical phrasing and a zigzag logic.
7. Students may say that Dickinson's separation provided the isolation necessary for her to create a unique poetic style.

Focus

Bellringer Options

Have students look back through the pages of this unit for images that depict life during the Civil War. Ask: When you look at the images, what questions come to mind? What resources do you think would help you find answers to those questions? Have students consider what they would like to learn about the Civil War as they learn how to write a research report.

Summary

In this workshop, students will write and present research reports. They will follow the stages of the writing process, including prewriting, drafting, revising, and editing. In addition, two mini-lessons, on paragraph coherence and correct quotation use, are provided.

Learning Objectives

For pages 458–467

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objective:

Writing: Writing a historical research paper using the writing process.

Writing Process

At any stage of the writing process you may think of new ideas. Feel free to return to earlier stages as you write.

- Prewrite
- Draft
- Revise
- Focus Lesson: Coherent Paragraphs
- Edit & Proofread
- Focus Lesson: Quotations
- Present

Writing Workshop

Research Report

Literature Connection Chesnut's diary is an example of a primary source, or a source that provides a firsthand account of events.

> "Prayers from the women and imprecations from the men, and then a shell would light up the scene. Tonight, they say, the forces are to attempt to land."
>
> —Mary Chesnut, from "Mary Chesnut's Civil War"

A secondary source is a source created after an event and is often based upon primary sources. In a research report, a writer presents facts and ideas gathered from various primary and secondary sources about a specific topic or issue.

Checklist: Features of Research Reports

Goals	Strategies
To present a strong, focused thesis	☑ Use multiple sources to draw a central conclusion about your topic and state it in your introduction
To develop and elaborate on main ideas that support the thesis	☑ Quote, paraphrase, and summarize information from a variety of primary and secondary sources ☑ Assess and comment on the relative value of your sources
To employ an effective, logical order	☑ Maintain a focus on your thesis ☑ Supply transitions to create clear relationships between main ideas ☑ Support main ideas with substantial, specific, and relevant examples
To create precision and interest	☑ Use precise language and a variety of sentence structures
To use sources honestly and correctly	☑ Attribute all sources ☑ Use standardized citations correctly

Workshop Resources

Print Materials

- Unit 3 Teaching Resources pp. 246–252
- Writing Kit
- Success in Writing: Research and Reports

Technology

- Literature Online: Writing Resources and Grammar Resources, www.glencoe.com
- Online Essay Grader, www.glencoe.com
- Student Presentation Builder on StudentWorks Plus CD-ROM
- Media Workshop DVD
- Online Student Edition

Assignment: Write a Research Report

Write a research report of at least 1,500 words in which you synthesize information from a variety of sources, draw conclusions, and discuss related insights. As you write, keep your audience and purpose in mind.

Audience: classmates and teacher

Purpose: to investigate a topic and report your conclusions

Prewrite

Schedule the Assignment Create a time frame for completing each stage of your writing process.

Investigate and Narrow a Topic Find a subject area and topic that interest you. Then narrow or expand your topic as needed.

- Ask Questions Think of a research report as a well-documented response to a significant question. List several research questions. As you learn more, refine your research questions and focus on a central idea.
- Focus Your Topic Use your questions to determine the scope of your topic. The topic should not be so broad that you will be writing in generalities nor so narrow that you cannot find adequate sources.

Compare the topics in the chart below to see the differences between topics that are too broad, too narrow, and appropriately limited.

Too Broad	Appropriately Limited	Too Narrow
Civil War photography	Civil War photography of Mathew Brady	Mathew Brady's photographs of the battles of Bull Run
Women during the Civil War	Women soldiers during the Civil War	Women soldiers of the 95th Illinois Infantry Regiment

Gather Evidence After you narrow your topic, try to answer your research questions. Pay attention to your topic's context and background.

- Find Reliable Sources Evaluate your sources to make sure that they are not outdated, biased, or based on faulty data. Personal Web sites may promote personal agendas and not facts. Books published by well-known publishers or universities are generally reliable.
- Consider Different Perspectives Keep in mind that people can have different perspectives on events. Consider perspectives that are often overlooked in the study of your topic.

Real-World Connection

You will use research and documentation skills in a variety of workplace documents, including statistical and annual reports. For now, you can publish your findings by presenting an oral report about them.

The Right Tone

Consider the purpose of your paper and how best to address your audience. Use a formal and objective tone to show that your research is serious and unbiased. Avoid slang and contractions. Use the third-person point of view.

Writing Workshop

Research Report

Teach

Big Idea

A Nation Divided Talk with students about issues and events that divided the nation during the Civil War era. Explain that people had many different views about those issues, just as people differ on issues today. Say: The literary materials created in the Civil War era typically reflect the strong sectional viewpoints of their writers.

Writing Process

Prewriting Have students work in groups to generate questions and develop their ideas. Tell them to review the Unit Three selections and look for issues of interest.

Cultural History ☆

Mathew Brady Mathew Brady (c. 1823–1896) opened his photography studio in 1844. In less than ten years, Brady's eyesight deteriorated so badly that, after 1851, he hired other photographers to take most of his pictures. Still, Brady's commitment to recording the events of the Civil War has made him one of America's best-known photographers. Brady's photographs were among the first ever to record a war as it raged. Have students imagine the impact his photographs had on viewers who had never seen war up close before.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Less proficient readers may gain a basic understanding of a particular event or issue from reference materials in the young-adult section of the library. Once they have identified a research question, they can start using more sophisticated sources for their research.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Remind students that perspective has multiple meanings. Clarify that here it means "point of view." Illustrate point of view by having volunteers stand in different places around the room and describe the room from their viewpoint. Each description of the room should be slightly different. Explain that in writing a research report, students will read different perspectives or viewpoints on the same event.

Focus

Writing Skills

Take Notes Suggest that students use colored note cards or highlighter pens to group notes for various subtopics. They might also use colored sticky notes to mark pages in reference sources.

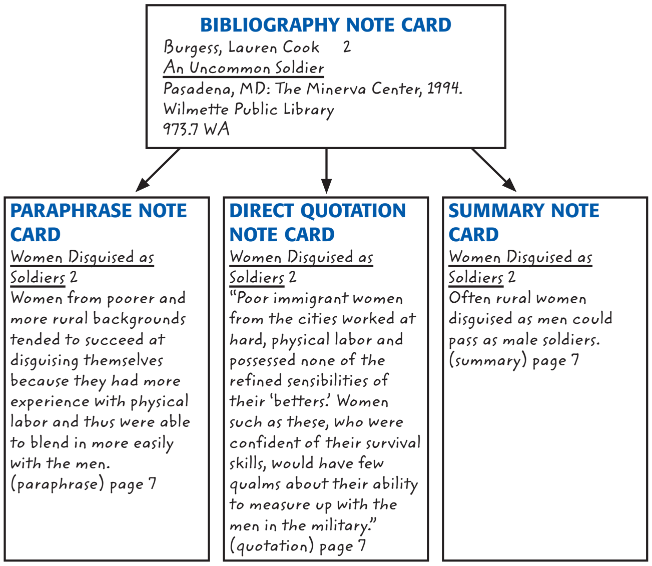
Make a Plan Review possible ways to organize main ideas, such as chronological, comparison-contrast, and cause-and-effect orders. Point out that different organizational plans fit different topics. Students should look at their central research question, decide what organizational plan the question suggests, and then plan their paper accordingly.

Language History ☆

Plagiarism Tell students that this term comes from the Latin word plagiarius, which means "kidnapper" or "plunderer." It is used today to mean "literary thievery."

Take Notes As you read through various sources, note important ideas, facts, and quotations. Record this information on note cards, in a notebook, or in separate computer files. Make sure to keep your information organized. For each source, record full publishing information (see the guidelines on pages R33–R39) and assign it a number or the author's last name. Then use this number or name as you label any notes taken from the source. This will save time and help you compile your Works Cited page(s) later. As you find information you want to include, decide how to best incorporate it into your paper.

- Quote Record direct quotations exactly as they appear, including punctuation. Use quotations sparingly.
- Paraphrase Restate someone else's original idea in your own words, giving credit to the author whose idea it is.
- Summarize Condense information to its key points and details.



BIBLIOGRAPHY NOTE CARD

Burgess, Lauren Cook 2
An Uncommon Soldier
Pasadena, MD: The Minerva Center, 1994.
Wilmette Public Library
973.7 WA

PARAPHRASE NOTE CARD

Women Disguised as Soldiers 2
Women from poorer and more rural backgrounds tended to succeed at disguising themselves because they had more experience with physical labor and thus were able to blend in more easily with the men.
(paraphrase) page 7

DIRECT QUOTATION NOTE CARD

Women Disguised as Soldiers 2
"Poor immigrant women from the cities worked at hard, physical labor and possessed none of the refined sensibilities of their 'betters.' Women such as these, who were confident of their survival skills, would have few qualms about their ability to measure up with the men in the military."
(quotation) page 7

SUMMARY NOTE CARD

Women Disguised as Soldiers 2
Often rural women disguised as men could pass as male soldiers.
(summary) page 7

Avoid Plagiarism

Plagiarism is using another writer's words or ideas without giving proper credit. Be careful not to plagiarize unintentionally. For example, paraphrasing another writer's words too closely is plagiarism—even if you cite the source. Avoid this by fully rewriting information in your own words as well as citing the source.

Give Due Credit

Cite sources within your paper as close to the end of the borrowed information as possible, usually before a period or comma. The first citation consists of the author's last name and the page number(s) within parentheses: (Burgess 7). Give full bibliographic information on the Works Cited page at the end of the paper.

Analyze Information Once you have gathered a number of primary and secondary sources, look for patterns and similarities as well as contradictions. Organize your information around main ideas. Remember that a successful research report synthesizes ideas and presents new conclusions rather than simply stringing quotations together.

Make a Plan Once you are familiar with several expert perspectives on your topic, write a thesis statement. Use your notes to help you make an outline. Include only information that is relevant to your thesis. Choose an effective way to order the main ideas and keep related ideas together.

Writing Practice

Thesis Statement Tell students that a thesis is a central idea that guides a research report. Since every element of a report must support its thesis statement, it is important to keep the thesis statement in mind throughout the research process. Have students write their proposed thesis statements on note cards and tape the cards to their research binders. Then work with students to develop a research strategy—a preliminary list of paper, online, and real-life sources they might consult for information on their topics. Remind students to revise their statements and strategies as they research.

Draft

Make Connections Start writing by following your outline and note cards. If you find it easier, write the body paragraphs before you write the introduction. Consider how each point in your outline relates to other points and to your thesis statement. Remember to explain those relationships to your reader.

Analyze a Workshop Model

Here is a final draft of a historical research report. Read the research report and pay close attention to the comments in the margin. They point out features that you might want to include in your own paper. Answer the questions in the margin, and use the answers to guide you as you write your own draft.

On the Front Lines: Women Soldiers in the Civil War

Often disguised as men, women who fought on the front lines in the Civil War defied feminine stereotypes and nineteenth-century expectations. Unfortunately, these stereotypes labeled women who fought or attempted to fight in the Civil War as scandalous and criminal, yet their reasons for fighting were often not much different from those of male soldiers. Despite discrimination, women fought in the Civil War out of patriotism, love, and a desire for independence, adventure, and better status and pay.

Women had been fighting in wars and battles long before the Civil War. Joan of Arc's fifteenth-century battles may be the most famous, but other women warriors fought throughout history. Matilda of Tuscany fought for Pope Gregory VII in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, and Lakshmi Bai led the Bengal army against the British in India just before the American Civil War (Hall xi–xii). American women also took part in earlier wars. For example, Pennsylvanian Margaret Cochran Corbin joined the Continental army with her husband in 1776, and Mary Hays took over her husband's duties as gunner when he was injured in 1778

Thesis Statement

State your topic and your perspective on it in the thesis statement. What information do you expect to see in this paper?

Main Ideas

Develop main ideas and organize them effectively to support your thesis successfully. Why does the writer begin the paper with this main idea?

Writing Workshop

Research Report

Teach

Writing Process

Draft Show students an inverted triangle to illustrate a possible organization for an introductory paragraph. Students may start with general information about their topic, such as a striking quotation, and then narrow down to the thesis statement. This plan places the thesis statement last in the paragraph, so it leads immediately into the first body paragraph.

Writing Skills

Main Proposition/Thesis Statement Answer: I expect to see the reasons why women fought in the Civil War and to learn that their reasons were often not very different from those of male soldiers. Remind students to return periodically to this sentence and consider how each part of the paper supports the thesis statement.

Logical Structure

Answer: This main idea gives historical background on the topic. Placing this paragraph at the beginning helps the writer establish an effective chronological order.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Have students work in groups to read the Workshop Model for comprehension. Students should take turns reading aloud paragraphs. After each paragraph, they should restate orally facts they learned.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Show different methods for taking notes, such as outlines, diagrams, and flowcharts. Have students link methods of notetaking to a source's structure. For example, have them use a Venn diagram or comparison chart to organize information from a comparative article.

Teach

Writing Skills

Paraphrase Offer students the following rule for quotations: "If you cannot express a thought more clearly or vividly than the source, quote from it." Otherwise it is better to paraphrase. Remind students not to string together many quotations. Answer: The source material might not tell the facts as succinctly as the writer's paraphrase does.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Remind students to be certain that they understand exactly what the words in a quotation mean before including them in their writing.

Direct Quotations
Answer: In this paragraph, the details show some of the obstacles that women had to overcome to serve in the military.

Supporting Details Tell students to vary supporting details, such as reasons, statistics, and factual descriptions. Answer: The main idea is that women were legitimately involved in the Civil War; the details specify the ways in which women were involved.

Transitions
Answer: It clearly marks a turning point from the historical background to the paper's main argument.

Paraphrase
Paraphrase information rather than quote from an unremarkable passage. Do not use quotation marks. Why might the writer avoid a direct quotation here?

Direct Quotations
Use direct quotations to retain the author's exact wording and to highlight particularly striking or meaningful phrases. What effect do these direct quotations have?

Supporting Details
Support your main ideas with relevant details. How do these details support the main idea of the paragraph?

Transitions
Shift gears by using transitional phrases or sentences that explain your thought process. Is this transition effective?

(Leonard 102–104). Therefore, by the opening salvos of the Civil War, women had been fighting in armies for centuries.

The Civil War, however, was different. Neither the Union army nor the Confederate army allowed women to enlist (Blanton, Part 1, 2). Most newspaper stories of the time about women found in the armies were neutral or positive, but some suggest that the women were considered to be "of very bad character, indeed" (Burgess 6). When sisters Mary and Mollie Bell were discovered in 1864, they were accused of being prostitutes, arrested, and described as "manifestly crazy" (Burgess 6). Despite the restrictions and the threat of personal attacks, many women still enlisted. According to Mary Livermore, a women's rights activist of the time, there were about four hundred female soldiers during the Civil War (Hattaway 135). The more modern estimate is that between four hundred and six hundred women campaigned during the Civil War (Wagner 445).

Although enlistment was technically forbidden, there were many other legitimate ways for women to involve themselves in the war and support the army. Many Union women were considered vivandières or cantinières, women who assisted the troops by providing water and aid and carrying messages between commanders and soldiers (Varhola 120). Other women—more than three thousand in the Northern states—served as nurses and helped ill or injured soldiers. These nurses had to endure low pay and abysmal working conditions. Southern women also supported the troops by working as nurses, although they faced criticism for attending to "ruffians" (Ward 149). Still, women did not allow their roles as nurses to inhibit their involvement in combat.

However, for some women, working as a nurse or helping as a vivandière did not satisfy their motivations, so they turned toward disguise. In the Victorian age, gender was closely linked to exterior characteristics, such as clothing and hair. For example, if a person was seen wearing pants, "most people of the period would naturally have assumed that the person was a man" (Burgess 3).

Writing Practice

Document Sources Review that a direct quotation needs to be credited. Other information that should be credited includes:

- another writer's opinion
- a generalization that someone else has analyzed
- statistics that are not common knowledge

Remind students to prepare a Works Cited page as they research. Then, when they need to credit a source, they can easily find and copy the information they need.

Such attitudes made it easy for women to disguise themselves as men. In addition, women cut their hair, wore fake mustaches, and, to create the illusion of muscles, padded their uniforms. Those who did not sport false facial hair found it easy to blend in among the boys and young men who were also fighting in the war. Women also created male pseudonyms—and army officials never asked for official identification (Blanton, Part 1, 2–3). Women from poorer and more rural backgrounds tended to succeed at disguise because they had more experience with physical labor and thus were able to blend in more easily with the men (Burgess 7). Yet some of the women, despite their best attempts at disguise, were discovered. Most were found out when they visited a hospital after becoming sick or wounded (Commager 241). For example, one woman was discovered only when she fainted after an injury (Hall 158). Many—both successfully and unsuccessfully—tried to reenlist in different regiments after their discovery.

There were many reasons for women to get involved in the Civil War, either in legitimate ways or by sneaking their way into battle, and many of these reasons did not differ from the motivations for men. Elizabeth D. Leonard, a prominent scholar, explains that, as with their male counterparts, "the traditional explanation has centered on pure, unadulterated patriotism" (227). The Civil War was a philosophical conflict as well as a military one. Many abolitionists were women. They identified with the fight for equality. For many women in the North, this was the first time that they had ever felt such intense loyalty to their country.

In addition, as Frank Moore noted in 1866, some women went to war because they could not bear separation from loved ones, while others went out of "a pure love of romance and adventure" (17). For instance, when her husband became a private, Bridget Divers joined the First Michigan Cavalry as a nurse. Her efforts extended into direct combat. She was known for helping move wounded men off the battlefield, rallying soldiers to retreat, and even occasionally fighting with the troops (Faust 221). Leonard explains:

Exposition

Interest

Create interest through precise language and a variety of sentence structures, as well as through substantial, specific, and relevant examples. Which word choices and examples are especially apt here?

Sources

Attribute your sources. How does the writer also comment on the relative value of this source?

Transitions

Show relationships between main ideas. Where else do you find an effective use of transitional words and phrases?

Secondary Sources

Use a combination of primary and secondary sources. Why might the writer have chosen to use a secondary source?

Teach

Writing Skills

Interest
Answer: The phrase "sport false facial hair" has a playful quality, which points to the slightly humorous lengths to which women would go in order to serve.

Sources Say: Look at the Works Cited list on page 465.
Answer: The Works Cited list indicates that Leonard has written a 1999 book on the subject.

Transitions
Answer: On page 464, the first full paragraph's opening sentence effectively transitions from the more philosophical reasons for going to war to a pratical reason: money.

Sources Say: Look again at the Works Cited list on page 465.
Answer: The sources for this section are Moore, an 1866 book that probably included quotes from primary sources; Faust, whose information comes from primary sources—newspapers of the time; and Leonard, a secondary source.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Suggest that English learners limit their research to answering one question using only a few sources. Also, limit the number of pages and citations in the report. Work directly with students to find reliable sources at an appropriate reading level.

Advanced Explain that the phrase "heat of battle" is an idiom that means the highest degree of intensity in a situation or action. Think of how "heat" or the highest degree of intensity may evoke an image of weapons constantly firing during the "battle." Tell students that they should avoid using any idioms in research papers unless they have looked up the idiom's meaning and understand how it should be used.

Writing Workshop

Research Report

Focus

Writing Skills

Long Quotations Say: Limit block quotations to one a page, and use one only when the entire passage supports the text. Answer: The quotation presents an expert's explanation of Divers's importance.

Coherent Paragraphs Answer: The author summarizes the points made in the earlier paragraph by using the words "patriotism, love, and adventure." Then, by saying these were not the only reasons, the author opens the possibility that there is yet another reason: the practical need to earn money.

Draw Conclusions Tell students that it is their job as writers to draw conclusions. Readers should not have to wonder what conclusion to draw. Answer: They synthesize source information, draw conclusions about the quotation's meaning, and link the quotation to the paper's thesis.

Restate Thesis Answer: Restating the thesis enables the reader to reconsider the main point after reading all the supporting evidence.

Adding Insight Answer: The writer extends the conclusion beyond its historical context and examines current situations. The reader then thinks about how the past and present differ or have similarities.

Long Quotations

For quotations four lines or longer, start a new line and indent the entire quotation ten spaces. Do not use quotation marks. What is the effect of the long quotation used here?

> Bridget Divers became widely known for her valiant efforts on behalf of the wounded, for her courage under fire in battle, and . . . for her willingness to position herself in such a way as to generate among the men in the ranks the greatest enthusiasm that they could muster for the fight (123).

Interestingly, in the heat of battle it did not matter to the other combatants that Bridget Divers was a woman. She still had the ability to inspire and help her fellow Americans.

Coherent Paragraphs

Use transitions and repeat key words and phrases to help make your paragraphs coherent. How does the author connect this paragraph to the one before it?

Patriotism, love, and adventure were not the only reasons women became soldiers, however, and historians have only recently addressed the more practical motivations. Another major reason that women—and men—joined the army was for the money. As Leonard asserts, a woman's service in the Civil War, "however patriotic in its essential motivation, however exciting in comparison with what most mid-century American women could expect from their normal daily lives, was compensated by wages" (230). A military salary was particularly attractive to women, who typically earned far less than men. Higher wages offered women independence that would have been otherwise unheard of in the 1860s. Implicitly, then, women were fighting to complete the promise of equality put forth during the American Revolution.

Draw Conclusions

Synthesize the information from your sources and draw your own conclusions about what it means. How do the sentences after the long quotation strengthen the writer's point?

Restate Thesis

In your conclusion, restate your thesis and summarize your main points. Why would the writer want to restate the thesis at the end of the paper?

The women who fought in the Civil War, often in disguise, exhibited courage and persistence and had to overcome substantial obstacles as a result of their gender. Their reasons for fighting included love and adventure but also more practical reasons. Today, U.S. women soldiers serve bravely alongside men in the armed forces. However, official rules still bar women from positions that involve direct combat. Although nearly 150 years have passed since the Civil War, women still face discrimination; yet female soldiers of today share many qualities—integrity, bravery, and determination—with those who fought in the Civil War. In essence, one of the lessons we can learn from the Civil War is that there are few differences in motivation and abilities between men and women in battle.

Adding Insight

In your conclusion, draw inferences and add relevant insight. What does the writer leave the reader to think about?

Reading Practice

Draw Conclusions Explain that drawing a conclusion involves using facts and general knowledge of human behavior to make an inference.

As students read different perspectives on the same historical event, they will draw their own conclusions about what happened. Remind them to share those conclusions with their readers. After students write a first draft, ask them to write a brief statement about the conclusions they drew from their research and what they want readers to understand from reading their reports.

Works Cited

Blanton, DeAnne. "Women Soldiers of the Civil War." Prologue Magazine 25.1 Spring 1993 <http://www.archives.gov/publications/prologue/1993/spring/women-in-the-civil-war-1.html>.

Burgess, Lauren Cook, ed. An Uncommon Soldier: The Civil War Letters of Sarah Rosetta Wakeman, alias Private Lyons Wakeman, 153rd Regiment, New York State Volunteers. Pasadena, MD: The Minerva Center, 1994.

Commager, Henry Steele, ed. The Civil War Archive: The History of the Civil War in Documents. New York: Black Dog & Leventhal, 2000.

Faust, Patricia L., ed. "Divers, Bridget." Historical Times Illustrated Encyclopedia of the Civil War. New York: Harper & Row, 1986.

Hall, Richard. Patriots in Disguise: Women Warriors of the Civil War. New York: Paragon, 1993.

Hattaway, Herman. Shades of Blue and Gray: An Introductory Military History of the Civil War. Columbia, MO: Missouri, 1997.

Leonard, Elizabeth D. All the Daring of the Soldier: Women of the Civil War Armies. New York: Norton, 1999.

Moore, Frank. Women of the War: Their Heroism and Self-Sacrifice. 1866. Reprint. Alexander, NC: Blue/Gray, 1997.

Varhola, Michael J. Everyday Life During the Civil War. Cincinnati: Writer's Digest, 1999.

Wagner, Margaret E., Gary W. Gallagher, and Paul Finkelman, eds. Civil War Desk Reference. New York: Grand Central, 2002.

Ward, Geoffrey C. The Civil War: An Illustrated History. New York: Knopf, 1990.

Exposition

Reliable Sources

Internet sources may be less reliable than published sources. What indicates that this source should be reliable?

Primary Sources

Use primary sources to give original accounts of events, but check that they are reliable. How can you tell whether a primary source is reliable?

Encyclopedia Sources

Use encyclopedias and similar reference materials for general background and research. When would you use an encyclopedia as a source? When would you not?

Variety of Sources

Use a variety of sources from all perspectives in your research. How would you assess the relative value of this source?

Writing Workshop

Research Report

Teach

Writing Skills

Reliable Sources

Answer: It is a U.S. government site. Talk with students about why some online sources may be less reliable. (They are not necessarily written by experts and are often not fact-checked.) Say: Use a print source to verify Internet sources other than encyclopedias or government sites.

Primary Sources

Answer: Consider the purpose, tone, and perspective of the source and its acceptance by secondary sources on the topic.

Encyclopedia Sources

Answer: I would use encyclopedias and similar sources for general background information, and other sources for more specific, detailed information.

Variety of Sources

Answer: This outdated source is valuable because it gives the perspective of a different era and can be used to show how opinions may have changed. It can provide a glimpse into what people knew and thought in an earlier time.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Explain that electronic sources often contain formal citations. Students should copy these citations onto note cards. Point out that there are different citation format styles. Tell students which style to use, and provide guidance in following the format.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Annotated Bibliography Tell students that a Works Cited page or bibliography is a valuable research tool for readers who want to know more. Have advanced students create an annotated bibliography, complete with comments that assess the usefulness of each source.

Focus

Writing Process

Revise When students exchange papers, they may benefit from their partner's expertise or insight into a topic. You might post all students' topics and pair students with strong backgrounds in each other's topics.

Writing Process

Make Paragraphs Coherent
Walk students through the revisions of the incoherent paragraph. Explain how each revision affects the paragraph. Point out that each detail in the revised paragraph ties to the idea that money was a strong motivator for women to join the army.

Writer's Technique ☆

Revision If students are using word-processing programs, they might use a Track Changes feature as they revise. This allows them to see both old and new versions simultaneously.

Traits of Strong Writing

Include these traits of strong writing to express your ideas effectively.

Ideas
Organization
Voice
Word Choice
Sentence Fluency
Conventions
Presentation

For more information on using the traits of strong writing, see pages R30–R32.

Word Choice

This academic vocabulary word appears in the student model:

despite (di spīt′) prep. in spite of; even though; Despite discrimination, women fought in the Civil War. Using academic vocabulary may help strengthen your writing. Try to use one or two academic vocabulary words in your historical investigation report. See the complete list on pages R88–R90.

Revise

Peer Review After drafting, exchange papers with a partner. Use the checklist below to evaluate and strengthen each other's writing.

Checklist

☑ Do you begin with a strong, focused thesis statement?
☑ Do you use a variety of sources and assess, comment on, and correctly attribute them?
☑ Do you support main ideas with substantial, relevant examples?
☑ Do you present ideas in a logical order and use transitions?
☑ Do you quote, paraphrase, summarize, and cite sources correctly?
☑ Do you explain varying perspectives?
☑ Do you create interest through sentence variation and effective word choice?

Focus Lesson

Make Paragraphs Coherent

To make your writing coherent, choose an organizational scheme, eliminate unrelated information, and use transitional expressions.

Draft: Incoherent paragraph

Sarah Rosetta Wakeman disguised herself and joined the army to help her family pay off debts (Burgess 18). As a child, Wakeman hunted squirrels. A military salary was particularly attractive to women, who typically earned far less than men.

Revision: Revise and reorganize the paragraph to make it coherent.

Another major reason that women—and men—joined the army was for the money.[1] Sarah Rosetta Wakeman, for example,[2] disguised herself and joined the army to help her family pay off debts (Burgess 18). ~~As a child, Wakeman hunted squirrels.~~[3] A military salary was particularly attractive to women, who typically earned far less than men. Higher wages offered women independence that would have been otherwise unheard of in the 1860s.[4]

1: Begin with a topic sentence
2: Give an example
3: Eliminate unrelated information
4: Analyze details

Writing Practice

Sentence Variety Sentence variety adds interest and appeal to writing. Review the different types of sentences (simple, compound, complex, and compound-complex) students can use. Then discuss how to vary sentence structure. For example, writers can add subordinate clauses to the end of sentences. They can also use parentheses or dashes to include asides. Challenge students to rewrite at least three of the sentences in their drafts, changing the type of sentence. Then ask them how the revisions affected their writing.

Edit and Proofread

Get It Right Proofread the draft for errors in grammar, mechanics, and spelling. Refer to the Language Handbook, pages R42–R61, as a guide.

Focus Lesson

Use Quotations Correctly

Check to make sure that your quotations are cited correctly. Analyze the quotation in your own words so that its significance is clear.

Problem: Too many direct quotations break up the flow of the paper.

"Although most accounts were neutral or complementary, some newspaper reports about women discovered in the ranks implied that they were of very bad character, indeed" (Burgess 6).

Solution A: Quote indirectly, using your own words.

Most newspaper stories of the time about women in the armies were neutral or positive, but some suggested that the women were "of very bad character, indeed" (Burgess 6).

Solution B: Quote a sentence but introduce it in your own words.

Historian Lauren Cook Burgess notes, "Although most accounts were neutral or complementary, some newspaper reports about women discovered in the ranks implied that they were of very bad character, indeed" (6).

Solution C: Omit words or sentences and use ellipses. Place brackets around any words you insert in place of omitted words or sentences. Be careful not to change the meaning of the quotation.

As historian Lauren Cook Burgess notes, "some newspaper reports about [disguised] women . . . implied that they were of very bad character, indeed" (6).

Present

Prepare Your Historical Research Paper Before you turn in your final paper, make sure that it is formatted correctly and that you are handing in a clean copy, including the Works Cited page. Check the indentation of long quotations. Ask your teacher about any additional presentation guidelines.

Peer Review Tips

A classmate may ask you to read his or her research report. Take your time and jot down notes as you read so you can give constructive feedback. Use the following questions to get started:

- Can you identify a variety of primary and secondary, as well as reliable sources?
- Where do you find a thoughtful examination of varying perspectives?

Word-Processing Tip

Put your sources on a separate page called "Works Cited." Begin each entry at the left margin and indent all turn lines five spaces. Double-space the list; do not add extra lines of space between entries or between the centered title of the page and the first entry.

Writer's Portfolio

Place a clean copy of your research report in your portfolio to review later.

Literature Online

Writing and Research For editing and publishing tools, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

Teach

Writing Process

Edit and Proofread Suggest that students proofread their work several times, first focusing on errors in structure and reasoning, then focusing on grammar, and finally focusing on spelling and punctuation.

Writing Skills

Use Quotations Correctly

When quoting a single source several times in a paragraph, a writer may include only one citation, at the end of the paragraph, as long as no other sources are quoted in that paragraph.

APPROACHING Remind students that it is perfectly acceptable for them to paraphrase or summarize information in their own words, as long as they give credit to the source of the idea. Remind students that long quotations should be used sparingly; otherwise, the quotations overshadow students' own ideas and writing style.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Remind students that visual aids can deepen a reader's comprehension of ideas. Suggest that students add visuals, such as photographs, charts, graphs, or illustrations, to their reports. Provide specific guidelines for the use of the visuals. For example, tell students that the visuals should appear near the text that they support. Students should also include credit lines for the visuals. Review with students how to prepare and place such credits in the document.

Multimedia Presentation

Focus

Summary

In this workshop, students will learn techniques for planning, developing, rehearsing, and delivering a multimedia presentation of their historical investigation reports.

Teach

Speaking Skills

Plan Your Presentation Depending on the time available for creating the presentation, you may decide to have students work in pairs or small groups. Some students may have multimedia resources available to them at home and may be willing to make these available to other students. Ask for volunteers to research the availability of various types of both low- and high-tech equipment at school. Students may need help initiating conversations with the people in the school who can help them set up a multimedia presentation.

For help with creating presentations, see Student Presentation Builder on StudentWorks Plus.

Learning Objectives

For pages 468–471

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objective:

Speaking and Listening: Delivering multimedia presentations.

Workshop Model

In this workshop, note the examples used from a multimedia presentation titled "Women Soldiers in the Civil War." You might try out some of the techniques shown in the multimedia presentation that you create.

Real-World Connection

Computer slide and other multimedia presentations are commonly presented in offices, conference rooms, and auditoriums to inform and persuade.

Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop

Multimedia Presentation

Literature Connection If modern media had been available to Walt Whitman and he had done Leaves of Grass as a multimedia presentation, what images and sounds do you think he might have chosen to go with his grand poem? In this workshop, you will create a modern multimedia presentation of your historical investigation report.

Assignment Plan and deliver a multimedia presentation of your historical investigation report. As you develop your presentation, keep your audience and purpose in mind.

Audience: classmates and teacher

Purpose: to inform and describe; to engage

Plan Your Presentation

Multimedia is the merging of text, sound, and images (art, photos, video clips, animation, and print) into a single presentation, such as a narrated slide or transparency presentation, a Web site, or a webcast.

Study the chart on the next page. Consider the type of presentation that appeals to you, and find out whether you might be able to do it at your school. If you want to do a low-tech presentation using an overhead projector, chances are good that one is available at your school. Nevertheless, you may have to get permission to use a projector, or you may need to reserve it for a certain day. Some schools may also offer access to digital or video cameras, as well as audio equipment.

For a high-tech presentation, start by asking about available computer hardware. Look carefully at the computer memory too. Then check with your school media or IT (information technology) person to find out which, if any, photo, graphics, or animation programs, or other authorship programs specific to multimedia, might be available to you. Also inquire about how much learning or training you will need to use them, and factor that information into your choice. Finally, ask a librarian or other specialist to point you in the direction of available databases or free, downloadable software for audio and video clips.

Listening and Viewing Practice

Choose Media Suggest that students think about the topic of their historical report and ask themselves what types of images they would like to see or sounds they would like to hear if they could be transported back to the time described in the report. Have them make a list of these images and sounds. Then have students think about the best way to convey a sense of "being there" to the students who will be listening to their presentation. They should ask themselves what role music might play; whether their topic needs illustrations, maps, or photos; and so on.

Ways to Create a Multimedia Presentation

Equipment		Application
Low-tech	Camera, slide or overhead projector, and tape recorder	Use 35-mm slides or overhead transparencies for the visuals—images or text, or images with text
↓	Computer with speakers, monitor, and microphone	Use presentation software to create a slide show.
High-tech	Computer with speakers, monitor, a microphone plus a digital camera, video camera, and scanner	Use a hypertext program to combine text, graphics, and sounds to create "cards" with hyperlinks that make different sequences possible.

Choose Your Media

Once you have selected a type of presentation, examine your historical investigation report for ways in which to incorporate a variety of sounds and images. One way to do this is by returning to your outline and highlighting or annotating main ideas and details, as this model shows.

Color Code: 🟦 = image 🟨 = sound

I. Introduction
Dramatic reading—introductory paragraph
Sounds—marching music, military drums or fife and drums, bugle
A. Thesis
B. Background Information: early female soldiers
Photos/Drawings—Joan of Arc, Lakshmi Bai, Margaret Cochran Corbin
II. Some women supported the army
Images—Confederate and Union flags, or other emblems of Civil War
A. Nurses
B. "Vivandieres"
Photos/Drawings—Women as nurses, water carriers, messengers
III. Some women disguised themselves as soldiers and fought for various reasons
A. Patriotism
Sounds—a few bars of "The Star Spangled Banner"
B. Could not be separated from loved ones
Dramatic Reading—Quote from Leonard about Bridget Divers
C. Adventure
D. Money
Dramatic Reading—words of Sarah Rosetta Wakeman

Select Appropriate Media

Keep in mind the standards of reliability and validity you used as you selected sources for your historical investigation report. Apply similar criteria to your media. Think carefully about the authorship and purpose of any site or source from which you draw. Also, determine whether editing and oversight occurred before the item was published or released.

Edit the Media

Your text, images, and sounds must support a single controlling idea, which is your thesis. Choose only those portions of the media that explain, support, or enhance the presentation of your thesis. Remember that the sounds and images will not communicate everything by themselves and must be linked by careful, meaningful narration.

Teach

Speaking Skills

Ways to Create a Multimedia Presentation Tell students to plan how they will use each type of media during their presentation. They may want to show a photograph when speaking of a historical figure or trace the course of a battle on a map. They can also pass out visual materials as they speak. Their goal is to use visual material to illustrate what they say.

APPROACHING Remind students that some visuals may be text-based, such as bulleted lists or important quotations. Text-based visuals will help listeners and viewers focus and take notes.

Choose Your Media Suggest that students make a clean copy of their outline or report, then highlight in one or two colors appropriate places to add media. Students might also identify interesting information to illustrate by:

- reviewing the note cards or other notes they used for writing
- asking a friend or family member to read the report and identify areas of high interest

APPROACHING If students included visual aids in their written reports, they might use them as the starting point for their multimedia presentations. The presentation should make logical and clear connections to the visual aids.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Help English learners review their reports for sections that they might emphasize in their multimedia presentations. Bulleted lists may be particularly useful, so encourage students either to turn some of their paragraphs into bulleted lists, or to use their outlines to make bulleted lists. These lists can serve as their notes for the presentation, which may be highly visual and aural. Have students work in pairs to practice reading aloud the verbal part of their presentation.

Teach

Speaking Skills

Develop Your Presentation Remind students that what they do not include in their presentation is as important as what they include. Give students a time limit for their presentations so that they can work within boundaries. Tell them that news segments on radio shows are often only a minute long, because it is possible to pack a lot of information into a short period of time.

Avoid Plagiarism

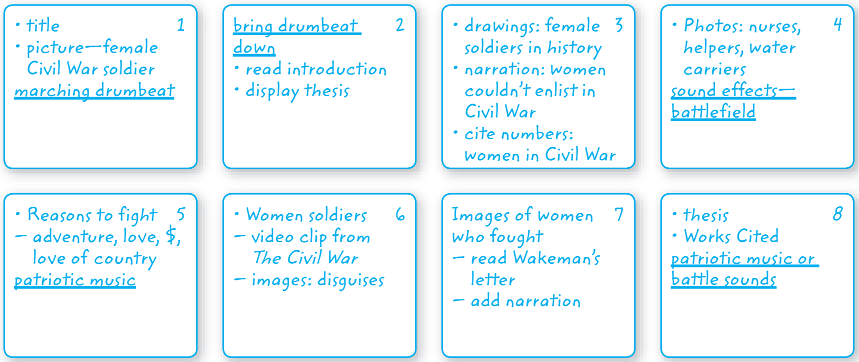
Credit all your sources for images, sound, and video, as well as the original sources, in a complete, correctly formatted Works Cited slide at the end of your presentation. (See pages R33–39 for standardized citation styles.)

Develop Your Presentation

- Evaluate and edit appropriate images and sounds. Incorporate only high-quality, reliable information. Be selective about the amount of each sound clip, video clip, or other media you use.
- Recall your purpose. Your primary goal is to deliver an accurate, clear presentation that informs your audience. Because the basis of your information is your research, be sure to scan in or otherwise incorporate some of the historical records that you used to write your report. Consider displaying title pages or examples of variable information on your topic. Your listeners can focus on this information as you explain possible reasons for the similarities and differences—of fact, perspective, reliability, and validity—that you found among your sources. You may be able to use a scanner to create images of these sources; otherwise, you can photocopy them and enlarge or reduce them as needed.
- Stay focused on the audience and occasion. Develop a clear narrative that will complement and link your images, as well as support your thesis. State the thesis at or near the beginning of your presentation, and recall it in the middle and at the end. Remember that your audience is hearing this information for the first time, so provide necessary background information and explanation. Throughout your presentation, use persuasive, narrative, and descriptive elements to create interest as well as to inform.

Organize Your Presentation

Put your ideas in order by making a storyboard that shows text, images, and sounds for each slide, card, or transparency you will use. Begin with a title slide that identifies your presentation and its creator. Add slides with text and visuals. Include sound elements where appropriate. End with a Works Cited list that includes all your research sources, as well as all your visual and sound sources.



• title 1
• picture—female Civil War soldier marching drumbeat
bring drumbeat down 2
• read introduction
• display thesis
• drawings: female soldiers in history 3
• narration: women couldn't enlist in Civil War
• cite numbers: women in Civil War
• Photos: nurses, helpers, water carriers 4 sound effects—battlefield
• Reasons to fight 5
— adventure, love, $, love of country patriotic music
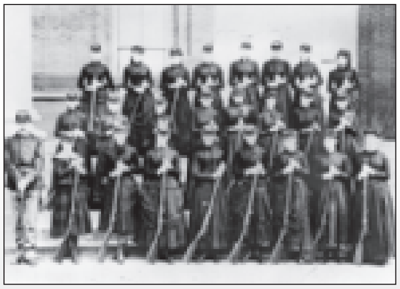
• Women soldiers 6
— video clip from The Civil War
— images: disguises
Images of women who fought 7
— read Wakeman's letter
— add narration
• thesis 8
• Works Cited
patriotic music or battle sounds

Writing Practice

Organize Your Presentation Tell students that a storyboard can be thought of as a way to break their presentation into chunks. Each chunk should consist of one central visual or sound that a listener can absorb in a short period of time. The storyboard is a form of outline that lists all the elements that the listener will see or hear at one time. It is helpful to make the storyboard in such a way that scenes can be rearranged to find the best order.



Female volunteers in the Civil War.

Civil War vivandière. Vivandières followed a regiment, acting as nurses.

Rehearse and Deliver Your Presentation

Successfully delivering a multimedia presentation depends a great deal on timing. All the elements have to appear in the right order and at precisely the right moment. Getting this timing down will probably require several rounds of practice. When you are satisfied that you have combined all the elements smoothly and effectively, deliver the presentation to a small audience of classmates, family members, or friends. Ask them where you need to adjust your pace, your volume, or the size or quality of your images. Also ask them for feedback on anything that wasn't clear in your narration or on any images or sounds that did not make sense to them.

As you rehearse and deliver your presentation, keep the presentation techniques below in mind. When you are an audience member, keep the listening and viewing techniques in mind.

Techniques for a Multimedia Presentation

Presentation Techniques	Listening and Viewing Techniques
☑ Pace Allow the audience enough time to view and hear each piece of your exhibit.	☑ Body Language Encourage the presenter by using your body language to show respect.
☑ Volume Keep both your words and music loud enough so that your entire audience can hear them.	☑ Facial Expression and Movement Show that you are listening and understanding. Provide cues such as an occasional nod.
☑ Eye Contact Look at your images as you direct audience attention to them.	☑ Focus Keep your eyes on the presenter or on the images.

Evaluation Checklist

- ☑ How well does the presentation meet the purpose of informing?
- ☑ How well does the presentation engage the audience?
- ☑ Is the thesis clear at all times?
- ☑ Do the text, images, and sounds clearly support the thesis and main ideas?
- ☑ Do any of the text elements, sounds, or images need editing?
- ☑ Does the presentation flow smoothly from beginning to end?

Teach

Speaking Skills

Rehearse and Deliver Your Presentation Remind students that they can rehearse in front of a mirror until they feel ready to rehearse in front of other people. Explain that the technology they have chosen to use should be tested in the place where they will give the presentation if at all possible. Students will then know whether they need to gather extension cords, power strips, batteries, or bulbs before the actual presentation.

Listening Skills

Pay Attention Tell students that closely watching a speaker or the screen on which the presentation is shown is a good way for them to increase their listening comprehension. If they cannot hear the speaker or see visual aids, they should let the speaker know promptly.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Tell students that rehearsal time is when they can improve their fluency and pronunciation. Tell students to enlist the help of a trusted friend or family member and work with a tape recorder. Students should record a practice presentation and then listen to the tape with their friend or family member. They should identify places in the presentation where difficult words cause the speaker to stumble or misspeak. Students should practice those sections several times until their speaking is fluent and clear.

Focus

Summary

The purpose of the Independent Reading is to encourage students to read literature from or about the time period that they have learned about in this unit.

Teach

Literary History ☆

Louisa May Alcott Like the sisters in Little Women, Alcott and her sisters grew up in Massachusetts. Their father was Bronson Alcott, a noted intellectual. Some of the great thinkers and writers of the time were friends of the Alcott family. The character of Jo March is patterned after Louisa, who helped support her financially struggling family with her writing.

Independent Reading

The Civil War Era

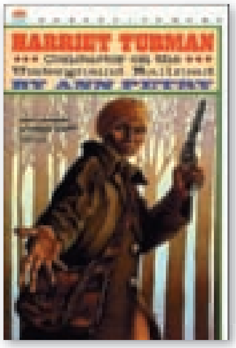
THE CIVIL WAR'S BRUTALITY SHOCKED THE NATION. IN ITS WAKE, WRITERS LOST interest in Romantic depictions of exotic or idealized situations. They turned instead to Realism, writing that portrayed everyday situations and people, as well as the imperfections of life.

Many of the great Realist novels analyze economic conditions and conflicts between people from different social classes. Conflicts are presented in an accurate and plausible way. Realist writers frequently focused on middle- and working-class settings and characters, often with the intent to spur reform.

Little Women

by Louisa May Alcott ☆

This tale of four sisters growing up in Concord, Massachusetts, during the Civil War era has become one of the best-loved American novels about the transition from adolescence to adulthood. Each sister in the March family has a distinctive personality. Meg, the oldest, is the most refined. Jo, fiery and independent, wants to be a writer. Beth is shy and musical. Amy, the youngest and most sensible, is the most beautiful. Alcott modeled the sisters, their levelheaded mother, and their idealistic father on her own family.



Harriet Tubman

by Ann Petry

Harriet Tubman, herself an escaped slave, was a "conductor" on the Underground Railroad—the network of travel routes, safe havens, and good Samaritans that helped numerous runaway slaves find their way safely to free states. While Tubman's ways were not always gentle, they were effective. In this biography of Tubman, Petry, herself an African American woman, explores the life of this real-life heroine of the Civil War era.

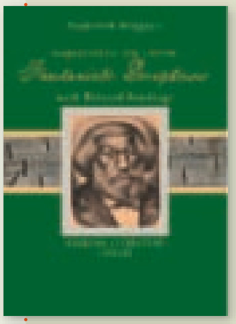
Study and Research Practice

Gathering Information Review with students some ways to obtain more information about the authors and books listed here:

- Do an Internet search, with the author or book title as the keyword.
- Use print biographical reference sources.
- Consult literary encyclopedias, such as The Readers' Encyclopedia.

Have partners or groups research several of the books discussed on these pages, take notes on the information, and report their findings to the class.

GLENCOE LITERATURE LIBRARY



Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass

by Frederick Douglass

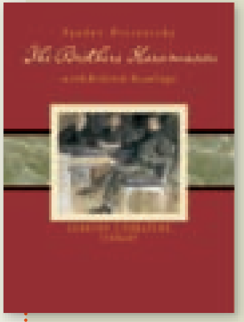
The acclaimed autobiography of Frederick Douglass, a formerly enslaved man who escaped to freedom and became a renowned orator and abolitionist

Great Expectations

by Charles Dickens

The orphaned Pip falls in love with the wealthy Estella and struggles to attain status in nineteenth-century England. ☆

Great Expectations



The Brothers Karamazov

by Fyodor Dostoevsky

The tragic and dramatic story of the murdered Fyodor Karamazov and his culpable sons

CRITICS' CORNER

"In the execution of her very difficult task, Mrs. Stowe has displayed rare descriptive powers, a familiar acquaintance with slavery under its best and worst phases, uncommon moral and philosophical acumen, great facility of thought and expression, feelings and emotions of the strongest character. . . . [W]e confess to the frequent moistening of our eyes, and the making of our heart grow liquid as water, and the trembling of every nerve within us, in the perusal of the incidents and scenes so vividly depicted in her pages."

—Liberator Review, March 26, 1852

Uncle Tom's Cabin

by Harriet Beecher Stowe

Uncle Tom's Cabin

When Arthur Shelby decides to sell Uncle Tom and Harry, Harry's mother, Eliza, runs away with Harry, making her way to the free state of Ohio. Tom is put on a riverboat to be sold farther south. Stowe's depiction of slaves' suffering made Uncle Tom's Cabin highly influential in stirring abolitionist sentiment.

Write a Review

Read one of the books listed on these two pages and write a review of it for your classmates. Explain why you think they might enjoy the book or how they might overcome difficulties in reading it. If possible, present your review orally.

Teach

Literary History ☆

Novels of the World

Point out that neither Great Expectations nor The Brothers Karamazov was written by an American. Dickens's book, however, explores issues of status in society that can be related to the struggle to define the status of African Americans during the Civil War era. Dostoevsky's book has had a powerful influence on modern American literature.

Review

Evaluate students' reviews by considering the following:

- clearly stated summary
- effective evaluation
- attention to grammar and spelling conventions

Glencoe Literature Library

Glencoe Literature Library offers an extensive collection of hardcover books that help you encourage your students to read independently. Choose among the more than 120 full-length literary works—novels, novellas, plays, and nonfiction. Each book includes related readings from a broad range of genres. Go to www.glencoe.com for more information.

For access to all study guides for the Glencoe Literature Library, see the literature Library Teacher Resources CD-ROM.

To create customized reading lists from a database of more than 30,000 titles, use BookLink K-12 CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Allow students to read these books in their first languages before discussing them in English. If students prefer, they might listen to audio recordings of the works in English. Students might also watch film versions of some of the works to increase their comprehension.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Tell students that these works are challenging. Encourage them to access online or print study guides, such as those in the Glencoe Literature Library. Guided-reading questions, graphic organizers, and background information can help them.

Assessment

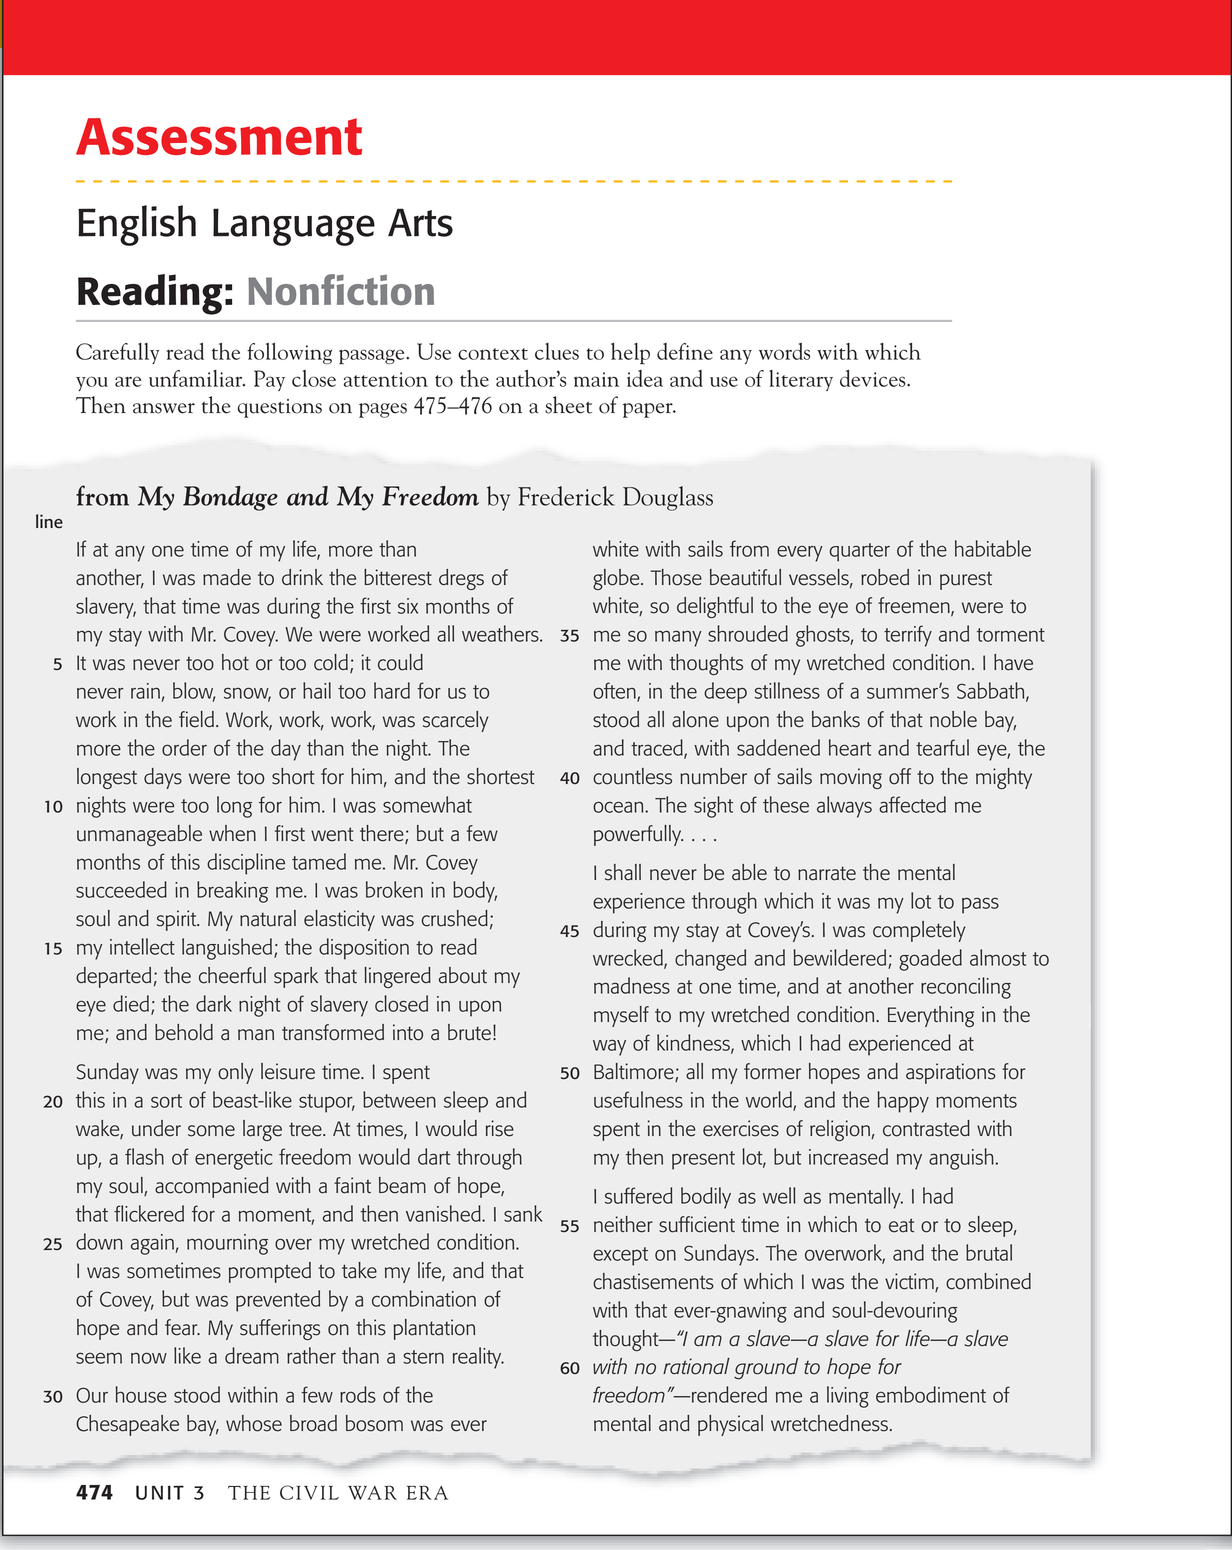
Focus

Bellringer

Say: You will take many tests in your life, from standardized exams to those for getting a driver's license or job certification. Many strategies apply to a range of test-taking situations. Have students discuss test-taking strategies that have worked for them in the past.

Teach

Assessment Tell students that this practice assessment will provide reinforcement in general test-taking strategies and will test the skills and vocabulary taught in this unit. Students will first be asked to read a nonfiction selection and answer comprehension, context clues, and inference questions. Then they will be asked to complete ten paragraph-improvement questions and to respond to a short reflective-essay question.



Assessment

English Language Arts

Reading: Nonfiction

Carefully read the following passage. Use context clues to help define any words with which you are unfamiliar. Pay close attention to the author's main idea and use of literary devices. Then answer the questions on pages 475–476 on a sheet of paper.

from My Bondage and My Freedom by Frederick Douglass

If at any one time of my life, more than another, I was made to drink the bitterest dregs of slavery, that time was during the first six months of my stay with Mr. Covey. We were worked all weathers. It was never too hot or too cold; it could never rain, blow, snow, or hail too hard for us to work in the field. Work, work, work, was scarcely more the order of the day than the night. The longest days were too short for him, and the shortest nights were too long for him. I was somewhat unmanageable when I first went there; but a few months of this discipline tamed me. Mr. Covey succeeded in breaking me. I was broken in body, soul and spirit. My natural elasticity was crushed; my intellect languished; the disposition to read departed; the cheerful spark that lingered about my eye died; the dark night of slavery closed in upon me; and behold a man transformed into a brute!

Sunday was my only leisure time. I spent this in a sort of beast-like stupor, between sleep and wake, under some large tree. At times, I would rise up, a flash of energetic freedom would dart through my soul, accompanied with a faint beam of hope, that flickered for a moment, and then vanished. I sank down again, mourning over my wretched condition. I was sometimes prompted to take my life, and that of Covey, but was prevented by a combination of hope and fear. My sufferings on this plantation seem now like a dream rather than a stern reality.

Our house stood within a few rods of the Chesapeake bay, whose broad bosom was ever white with sails from every quarter of the habitable globe. Those beautiful vessels, robed in purest white, so delightful to the eye of freemen, were to me so many shrouded ghosts, to terrify and torment me with thoughts of my wretched condition. I have often, in the deep stillness of a summer's Sabbath, stood all alone upon the banks of that noble bay, and traced, with saddened heart and tearful eye, the countless number of sails moving off to the mighty ocean. The sight of these always affected me powerfully. . . .

I shall never be able to narrate the mental experience through which it was my lot to pass during my stay at Covey's. I was completely wrecked, changed and bewildered; goaded almost to madness at one time, and at another reconciling myself to my wretched condition. Everything in the way of kindness, which I had experienced at Baltimore; all my former hopes and aspirations for usefulness in the world, and the happy moments spent in the exercises of religion, contrasted with my then present lot, but increased my anguish.

I suffered bodily as well as mentally. I had neither sufficient time in which to eat or to sleep, except on Sundays. The overwork, and the brutal chastisements of which I was the victim, combined with that ever-gnawing and soul-devouring thought—"I am a slave—a slave for life—a slave with no rational ground to hope for freedom"—rendered me a living embodiment of mental and physical wretchedness.

Set a Purpose Tell students that in a test situation, their reading purpose must be to answer the test questions. Tell them that previewing the questions before reading the passage will help them read effectively and efficiently. Have students read through the questions on pages 475–476 and note the kinds of information they require, such as the words to be defined. Students can then read the passage with their notes as a guide.

1. What does Douglass say the "longest days" were to Mr. Covey?
   A. like Sunday
   B. like nights
   C. too long
   D. too short

2. From the context, what can you infer that the word discipline in line 12 means?
   A. specialty
   B. suffering
   C. transformation
   D. training

3. According to Douglass, what caused his transformation "into a brute"?
   A. Mr. Covey's success at breaking him
   B. the death of the spark in his eye
   C. the crushing of his elasticity
   D. the departure of his inclination to read

4. How did Douglass spend his Sundays?
   A. at work
   B. in a stupor
   C. reading
   D. exercising his religious beliefs

5. What literary device is Douglass using when he writes that his sufferings were "like a dream"?
   A. allusion
   B. personification
   C. simile
   D. irony

6. What literary device is Douglass using when he writes that the Chesapeake Bay has a "broad bosom"?
   A. allusion
   B. personification
   C. simile
   D. irony

Literature Online

Assessment For additional test practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u3.

7. What can you infer about the source of Douglass's feelings concerning the ships in Chesapeake Bay?
   A. The ships reminded him of the freedom that he did not have.
   B. To Douglass, the ships represented Mr. Covey's cruelty.
   C. The ships carried enslaved people and so reminded Douglass of his own condition.
   D. Because the ships were ghostlike, they terrified Douglass.

8. From the context, what can you infer that the word present in line 53 means?
   A. exhibited
   B. previous
   C. granted
   D. current

9. What effect did Douglass's memories of Baltimore have on him?
   A. They drove him to the brink of madness.
   B. They increased his anguish.
   C. They gave him hope.
   D. They made him exercise his religion.

10. From the context, what does the word ground in line 60 mean?
    A. land
    B. position
    C. floor
    D. reason

11. In this passage how does Douglass reveal the personality of Mr. Covey?
    A. through direct characterization
    B. through indirect characterization
    C. through metaphor
    D. through symbols

12. What is the overall tone of this passage?
    A. authoritative
    B. ironic
    C. despairing
    D. sarcastic

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate States are required to offer English language learners access to standardized tests. Options for services vary from state to state and population to population. For Spanish speakers, many states offer translated tests. For speakers of other languages, states may offer individual translators or other services. Provide students with information on how to access tests in your state, as provided by the state department of education.

Assessment

Assess

1. D is the correct answer because in line 9, Douglass states that "the longest days were too short." DOK 2
2. D is the correct answer because discipline in this context means "control gained by forced obedience." DOK 1
3. A is the correct answer because the other options are effects, not causes. DOK 1
4. B is the correct answer because in line 20, Douglass says he spent Sundays "in a sort of beast-like stupor." DOK 1
5. C is the correct answer because Douglass's use of the word like identifies the comparison as a simile. DOK 2
6. B is the correct answer because Douglass attributes a human characteristic to a place. DOK 2
7. A is the correct answer because the ships remind him that free men, unlike slaves, are able to travel and come and go as they please. DOK 4
8. D is the correct answer because current here means "occurring at the same time." DOK 1
9. B is the correct answer because Douglass states that his positive memories of Baltimore "increased [his] anguish" in his present condition. DOK 1
10. D is the correct answer because ground in this context means "a basis for belief." DOK 1
11. A is the correct answer because Douglass reveals Covey's personality by stating his thoughts and actions. DOK 2
12. C is the correct answer because the tone expresses hopelessness. DOK 4

Assess

13. D is the correct answer because Douglass's purpose is to inform the reader about the experience of slavery. DOK 4

14. A is the correct answer because Douglass uses the first-person pronouns I, me, and my. DOK 2

15. D is the correct answer because options A, B, and C are too narrow to cover the entire autobiography. DOK 2

To create custom assessments online, go to Progress Reporter Online Assessment.

To create custom assessments using software, use ExamView Assessment suite.

13. Which of the following best describes the author's purpose in this passage?
    A. to entertain
    B. to persuade
    C. to solve a problem
    D. to explain

14. From what point of view is this passage written?
    A. first person
    B. second person
    C. third-person omniscient
    D. third-person limited

15. According to this passage, which of the following best describes the main idea of My Bondage and My Freedom?
    A. Slavery was common in Baltimore.
    B. Mr. Covey, for a time, broke Frederick Douglass.
    C. Mr. Covey was an evil man.
    D. Slavery is an evil institution that must be resisted.

Point of View Post the four answer choices from question 14. Help students define them:

- first person—the narrator is a character in the story, describing events from his or her own point of view and using the pronoun I.
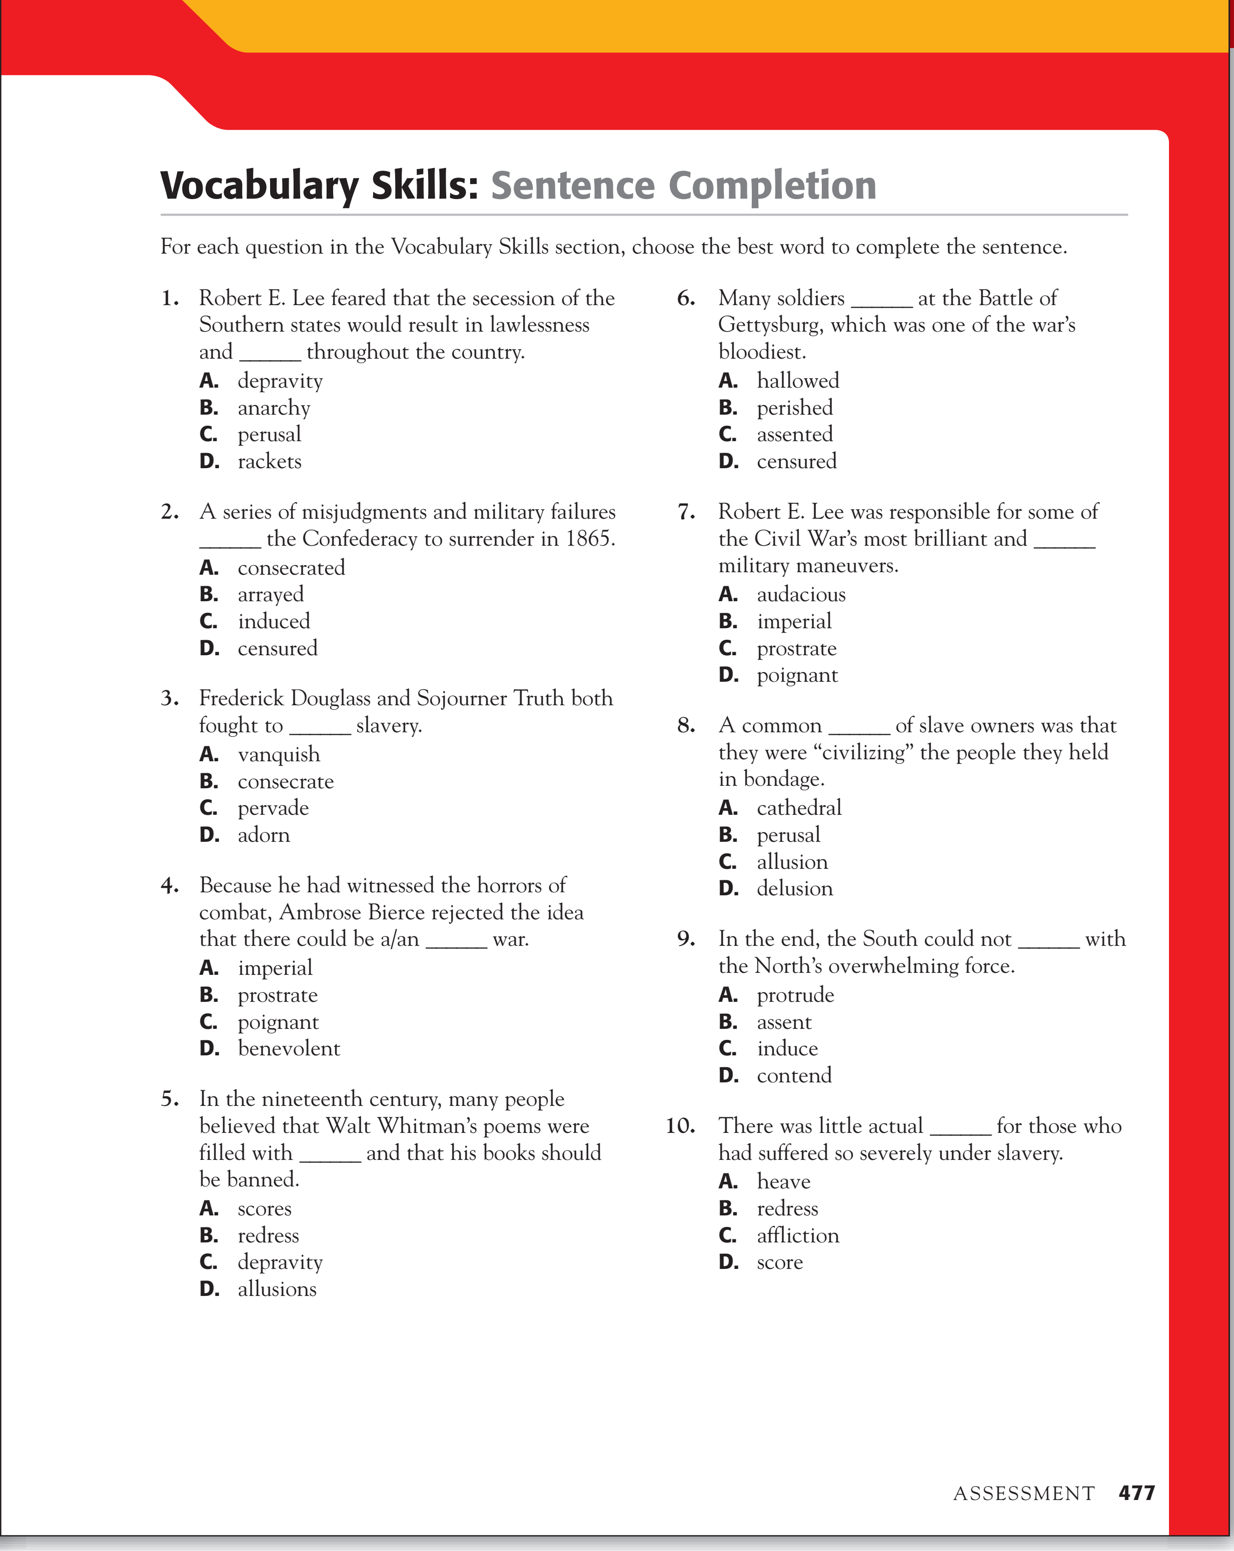
- second person—this is not typically used in literary writing.
- third-person omniscient—the narrator knows all and describes the feelings, actions, and words of all characters.
- third-person limited—the narrator focuses on the thoughts, feelings, and actions of one character.



Vocabulary Skills: Sentence Completion

For each question in the Vocabulary Skills section, choose the best word to complete the sentence.

1. Robert E. Lee feared that the secession of the Southern states would result in lawlessness and ______ throughout the country.
   A. depravity
   B. anarchy
   C. perusal
   D. rackets

2. A series of misjudgments and military failures ______ the Confederacy to surrender in 1865.
   A. consecrated
   B. arrayed
   C. induced
   D. censured

3. Frederick Douglass and Sojourner Truth both fought to ______ slavery.
   A. vanquish
   B. consecrate
   C. pervade
   D. adorn

4. Because he had witnessed the horrors of combat, Ambrose Bierce rejected the idea that there could be a/an ______ war.
   A. imperial
   B. prostrate
   C. poignant
   D. benevolent

5. In the nineteenth century, many people believed that Walt Whitman's poems were filled with ______ and that his books should be banned.
   A. scores
   B. redress
   C. depravity
   D. allusions

6. Many soldiers ______ at the Battle of Gettysburg, which was one of the war's bloodiest.
   A. hallowed
   B. perished
   C. assented
   D. censured

7. Robert E. Lee was responsible for some of the Civil War's most brilliant and ______ military maneuvers.
   A. audacious
   B. imperial
   C. prostrate
   D. poignant

8. A common ______ of slave owners was that they were "civilizing" the people they held in bondage.
   A. cathedral
   B. perusal
   C. allusion
   D. delusion

9. In the end, the South could not ______ with the North's overwhelming force.
   A. protrude
   B. assent
   C. induce
   D. contend

10. There was little actual ______ for those who had suffered so severely under slavery.
   A. heave
   B. redress
   C. affliction
   D. score

Assess

Vocabulary

1. B is the correct answer because anarchy best pairs with lawlessness. DOK 1
2. C is the correct answer because the failures influenced the decision to surrender.
3. A is the correct answer because they both fought to end slavery. DOK 1
4. D is the correct answer because horrors suggests that combat is not kind. DOK 1
5. C is the correct answer because a book might be banned if people believe it is morally corrupt. DOK 1
6. B is the correct answer because the word bloodiest suggests that many died. DOK 1
7. A is the correct answer because Lee was a bold leader. DOK 1
8. D is the correct answer because the context suggests that slave owners' beliefs were wrong. DOK 1
9. D is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1
10. B is the correct answer because it there was no compensation for their suffering. DOK 1

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Tell students to use context clues and etymology to narrow down words' meanings. Students should begin by reading a sentence and thinking of a simple word that could complete its meaning. Next students should compare that word with the options listed. If any are similar in meaning, they should be seriously considered. Students can also look at word roots for clues to meaning. For example, the word anarchy contains the root arch, meaning "chief" or "ruler." This links anarchy to the context clue lawlessness because both relate to order in society.

Assess

1. C is the correct answer because it is the only option that corrects the lack of subject-verb agreement between period and were. DOK 1
2. C is the correct answer because it is the only option that corrects the lack of subject-verb agreement between consequences and was. DOK 1
3. B is the correct answer because the subject war lacks a predicate. DOK 2

Grammar and Writing Skills:
Paragraph Improvement

Read carefully through the following passage from the first draft of a student's research essay. Pay close attention to the writer's use of subordinate clauses, quotation marks, and commas. Then answer the questions below.

> (1) The period of the Civil War and Reconstruction were an important time in American history. (2) No other event has had so many long-term effects on American politics, the arts in America, and the development of equipment and techniques of war.
>
> (3) The consequences of the war for American law and politics was profound. (4) The war directly responsible for the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth constitutional amendments, which freed enslaved people and guaranteed them citizenship and the right to vote. (5) The conflict changed how people thought about their culture. (6) Furthermore, the outcome of the war essentially swept away the old political squabbles that had gripped the nation for so long. (7) Regionalism would no longer be the central source of national conflict.
>
> (8) The Civil War helped launch photography as a vital tool for relaying newsworthy images, it established photography as a new form of art. (9) Literature too was changed by the war. (10) The massive loss of life was partly responsible for romanticism's end and the rise of both realism and naturalism. (11) As Walt Whitman said, a great literature will . . . arise out of that era.
>
> (12) Often called the "first modern war" the Civil War was the first to use equipment that became common during the 1900s. (13) This was the first war in which the telegraph, the machine, and shell gun, surveillance balloons, the submarine, ironclad ships, and land mines were extensively used.

1. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 1?
   A. The period of the Civil War and Reconstruction were an important times in American history.
   B. The period of the Civil War and Reconstruction was important times in American history.
   C. The period of the Civil War and Reconstruction was an important time in American history.
   D. The period of the Civil War and Reconstruction were important times in American history.

2. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 3?
   A. The consequences of the war was profound.
   B. The war's consequences for American law and politics was profound.
   C. The consequences of the war for American law and politics were profound.
   D. The consequences for American law and politics was profound.

3. Which of the following errors appears in sentence 4?
   A. run-on sentence
   B. fragment
   C. misplaced modifier
   D. incorrect parallelism

Subject-Verb Agreement
Explain that correcting subject-verb agreement problems is a common test item. Often sentences with compound subjects or collective nouns are used. Review these general rules:

- Use a plural verb when and links the parts of a compound subject.
- Match the verb to the closest noun when or or nor links the parts of a compound subject.
- Choose a singular verb if a collective noun (family, group, staff) describes a single unit and a plural verb when it describes a collection of separate units.

4. Which sentence is not related to the main idea of paragraph 2?
   A. 3
   B. 4
   C. 5
   D. 6

5. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 8?
   A. The Civil War helped launch photography as a vital tool for relaying newsworthy images, and it established photography as a new form of art.
   B. The Civil War helped launch photography.
   C. The Civil War launched photography as a vital tool for relaying newsworthy images, it established photography as a new form of art.
   D. The Civil War helped launch photography as a new form of art.

6. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 11?
   A. As Walt Whitman said, a great literature will arise out of that era.
   B. A great literature will . . . arise out of that era.
   C. "As Walt Whitman said, a great literature will . . . arise out of that era."
   D. As Walt Whitman said, "A great literature will . . . arise out of that era."

7. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 12?
   A. The "first modern war," the Civil War, used modern equipment.
   B. Often called the "first modern war," the Civil War was the first to use equipment that became common during the 1900s.
   C. Often called the "first modern war." The Civil War was the first to use equipment that became common during the 1900s.
   D. Often called the first modern war the Civil War was the first to use equipment that became common during the 1900s.

8. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 13?
   A. This was the first war in which the telegraph, the machine and shell gun, surveillance balloons, the submarine, ironclad ships, and land mines were extensively used.
   B. This was the first war in which the telegraph, the machine, and shell gun, surveillance balloons, and the submarine, and ironclad ships, and land mines were extensively used.
   C. This was the first war in which the telegraph and the machine were extensively used.
   D. This was the first war in which the telegraph was extensively used.

9. What is most notably missing from this essay?
   A. a concluding paragraph
   B. an opening paragraph
   C. evidence
   D. a visual aid

10. Which of the following titles would best suit this essay?
    A. "America at War"
    B. "Nineteenth-Century Combat"
    C. "American Innovation"
    D. "The Effects of the Civil War"

Writing: Essay

By the time students enter high school, they have learned how many events in history have influenced our world today. Think about the issue of slavery in the United States. Write an essay in which you consider how the issue of slavery divided the United States and how it eventually changed our country.

Assess

4. C is the correct answer because the other options are related to the main idea of the paragraph—the effects of the war on politics. Sentence 5 is about culture. DOK 4

5. A is the correct answer because no other option corrects the comma splice while preserving the original meaning. DOK 1

6. D is the correct answer because it is the only option that supplies the correct use of quotation marks. DOK 1

7. B is the correct answer because it adds a comma after the introductory participial phrase. DOK 1

8. B is the correct answer because it corrects the faulty parallelism while preserving the original meaning. DOK 1

9. A is the correct answer because the essay ends abruptly without a concluding paragraph that sums up the main points. DOK 4

10. D is the correct answer because it reflects the thesis statement of the essay regarding the "long-term effects" of the Civil War. DOK 2

Essay

Evaluate essays for:

- clearly stated main ideas supported by good reasons and details
- effective voice, word choice, and sentence variety
- effective presentation with attention to grammar and spelling conventions

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Stress the importance of answering the essay prompt. Point out the words divided and changed, and explain that this item asks for a cause-effect discussion. Essays should define the cause (slavery) and the effects (division, change). Urge students to use cause-effect transition words.

UNIT FOUR

Skills Scope and Sequence

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 1: Regionalism and Local Color

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Unit Introduction pp. 480–494	Regionalism and Realism SE pp. 481, 486–491 Dialect TE p. 488 Imagery TE p. 491 Naturalism SE p. 492
Short Story The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County, by Mark Twain 10.2/59/1410 pp. 496–503	Dialect SE p. 497
Memoir from Two Views of the River, by Mark Twain 7.7/63/1130 pp. 504–507	Analogy SE p. 504 Tone (review) SE p. 506
Informational Text TIME: Life Along the Mississippi, by Nancy Gibbs 7.1/62/1120 pp. 508–513	Text Structure TE p. 508 Persuasion TE p. 510
Poems Lucinda Matlock and Fiddler Jones, by Edgar Lee Masters pp. 514–518	Dramatic Monologue SE p. 515
Short Story A Wagner Matinee, by Willa Cather 10.5/63/1410 pp. 519–529	Point of View SE p. 520 Voice (review) SE p. 528
Grammar Workshop p. 530
Speech I Will Fight No More Forever, by Chief Joseph 3.0/41/380 pp. 531–534	Tone SE p. 532

PART 2: Realism and Naturalism

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Literary Periods The Two Faces of Urban America pp. 536–537	Stream of Consciousness TE p. 536
Short Story April Showers, by Edith Wharton 5.8/60/1020 pp. 538–548	Flashback SE p. 539 Characterization TE p. 546 Theme (review) SE p. 547
Vocabulary Workshop p. 549

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Analyze Graphic Information TE p. 482 Draw Conclusions TE p. 484 Summarize TE p. 486 Compare and Contrast SE p. 493	Word Meanings TE p. 486	Apply Figurative Language TE p. 492	Analyze Art TE p. 481 Create a Graph TE p. 484
Analyze Comic Devices SE p. 497 Classify TE p. 498 Analyze Author's Purpose TE p. 502	Word Origins SE p. 503	Write a Story SE p. 503	Analyze a Photograph TE p. 501
Compare and Contrast Language SE p. 504	Academic Vocabulary SE p. 507	Create a Travel Brochure SE p. 507	Analyze Art TE p. 504
Preview SE p. 508 Clarify Meaning SE p. 508	Compound Words TE p. 512	Write a Summary SE p. 513	Analyze a Photograph TE p. 511
Draw Conclusions About Characters SE p. 515	Word Usage SE p. 518	Take Notes TE p. 516 Write a Poem SE p. 518	Analyze Art TE p. 516
Identify Sequence SE p. 520 Analyze Flashback TE p. 521 Make Inferences TE p. 522 Analyze Comparisons TE p. 526	Analogies SE p. 528 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 528	Analyze Imagery TE p. 522 Write a Reflective Essay SE p. 529 Absolute Phrases SE p. 529	Analyze Art TE p. 521 Analyze Music TE p. 524
		Appositives SE p. 530
Evaluate Style SE p. 532 Predict TE p. 532	Academic Vocabulary SE p. 534	Write a Journal Entry SE p. 534	Analyze Art TE p. 533

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
			Analyze Art TE p. 537
Make and Verify Predictions SE p. 539 Preview TE p. 540	Synonyms TE p. 539 Word Choice TE p. 543 Denotation and Connotation SE p. 548 Context Clues SE p. 548	Summarize TE p. 542 Write a Narrative SE p. 548	Analyze a Photograph TE p. 544
	Thesaurus Usage SE p. 549

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 2: Realism and Naturalism (continued)

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Comparing Literature The Story of an Hour (short story) by Kate Chopin 7.3/57/970 The Darling (short story), by Anton Chekhov 7.3/57/1100 Richness (poem), by Gabriela Mistral pp. 550–567	Social Context SE p. 550 Conflict SE p. 552 Characterization TE p. 558 Literary Allusion TE p. 559 Repetition TE p. 560 Theme TE p. 566
Poems Douglass and We Wear the Mask, by Paul Laurence Dunbar pp. 568–572	Rhyme Scheme SE p. 569 Sonnet TE p. 570
Poems Richard Cory and Miniver Cheevy, by Edwin Arlington Robinson pp. 573–577	Irony SE p. 574
Short Story The Open Boat, by Stephen Crane 7.6/60/980 pp. 578–600	Author's Purpose SE p. 579 Figurative Language TE p. 581 Foreshadowing TE p. 585 Suspense TE p. 586 Dialogue TE p. 588 Climax TE p. 595 Conflict (review) SE p. 599
Short Story To Build a Fire, by Jack London 6.1/59/970 pp. 601–616	Setting SE p. 602 Simile TE p. 609 Suspense (review) SE p. 615
Geographical Perspective from Arctic Dreams: Imagination and Desire in a Northern Landscape, by Barry Lopez 8.0/60/1130 pp. 617–623
Writing Workshop pp. 624–633
Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop pp. 634–635
Independent Reading pp. 636–637
Assessment pp. 638–633

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Compare and Contrast SE p. 550 Apply Background Knowledge SE p. 552 Analyze Author's Viewpoint TE p. 558 Predict TE p. 562	Word Usage SE p. 556 Context Clues TE p. 563	Write a Journal Entry TE p. 552 Write an Interior Monologue SE p. 556 Subordinate Clauses TE p. 558 Write a Short-Response Essay SE p. 567	Analyze Art TE p. 553 Oral Interpretation TE p. 566 Discussion SE p. 567
Clarify Meaning SE p. 569	Denotation and Connotation SE p. 572	Write a Letter SE p. 572	Analyze Art TE p. 570
Make Inferences About Characters SE p. 574	Word Origins TE p. 574 Denotation and Connotation SE p. 577	Write a Poem SE p. 577	Analyze Art TE p. 575
Summarize SE p. 579	Adjectives and Adverbs TE p. 584 Context Clues SE p. 599 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 599	Evaluate a Story SE p. 588 Write an Essay TE p. 594 Write a News Story TE p. 596 Write a Story Review SE p. 600 Semicolons SE p. 600	Analyze Art TE p. 583 Interview TE p. 592
Analyze Cause-and-Effect Relationships SE p. 602 Analyze Setting TE p. 602 Analyze Sequence TE p. 604 Analyze Character TE p. 606	Adjectives TE p. 606 Word Origins SE p. 616 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 616	Write a Narrative Account TE p. 612 Write a Descriptive Essay SE p. 616	Analyze a Photograph TE p. 607
Analyze Setting SE p. 617 Compare and Contrast TE p. 622		Write a Paper TE p. 620	Use Visual Aids TE p. 618
		Prewrite SE p. 628 Draft SE p. 629 Revise SE p. 632 Write a Response to Literature SE p. 633 Subject-Verb Agreement SE p. 633
			Oral Response to Literature SE p. 634
Analyze Plot TE p. 636		Keep a Journal SE p. 637
	Context Clues TE p. 638	Write an Essay SE p. 643

UNIT FOUR

Focus

Bellringer Options

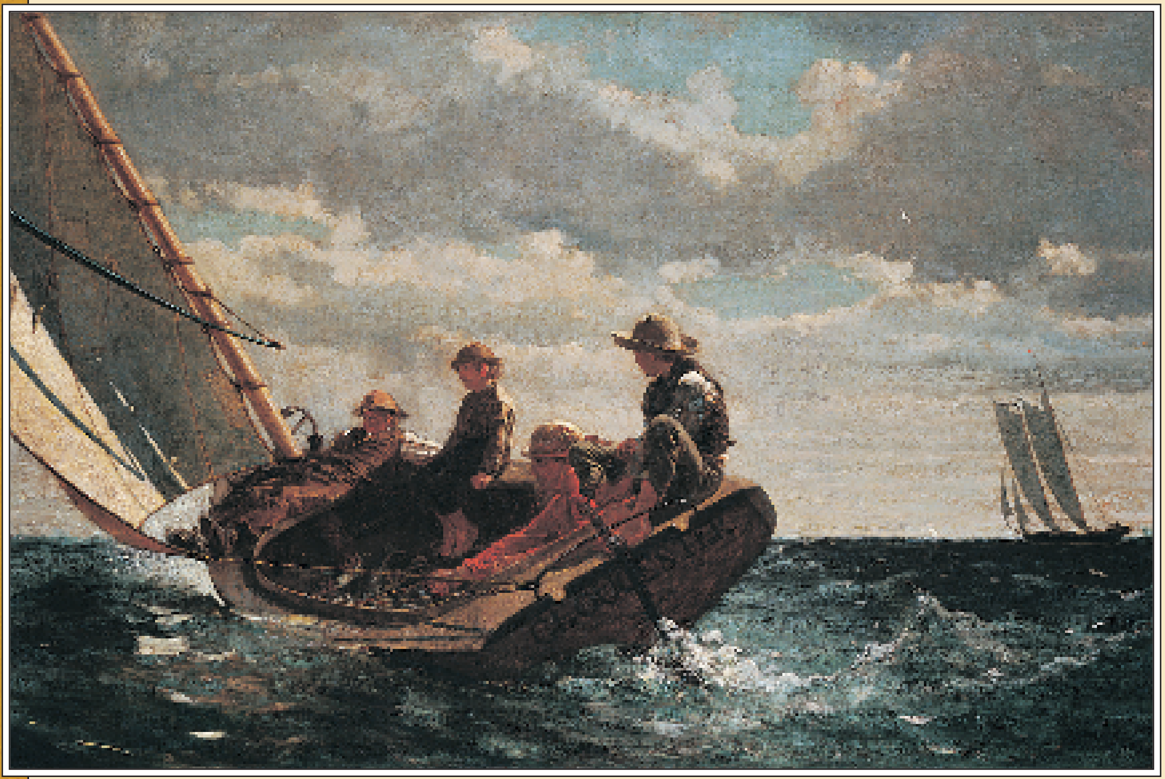
Literature Launcher
Pre-Reading Video: Unit 4

Daily Language Practice Transparency 41

Or Say: Describe how realists differ from romantics. (Students may say that realists see life as it really is but romantics see life as they wish or imagine it could be.) The literary term Realism refers to a movement away from romantic ideals toward an examination of real people and real life.

For school-to-home activities, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 5–11.

For students who would profit from independent novel study, see Novel Companion pp. 163–206.



Breezing Up (A Fair Wind), 1873–1876. Winslow Homer. Oil on canvas, 24⅛ x 38⅛ in. National Gallery of Art, Washington, DC. Gift of the W. L. and May T. Mellon Foundation.

View the Art Winslow Homer completed this painting as the country was celebrating its centennial. In this scene, what does Homer suggest about life in America one hundred years after independence? Do you find his depiction believable? Explain. ★

Unit Introduction Skills

Regionalism and Realism

Reading Skills
- Analyze Graphic Information (SE pp. 483, 485; TE p. 482)
- Generalize (SE p. 489)
- Cause and Effect (SE p. 491)
- Compare and Contrast (SE p. 493)
- Make Inferences (TE p. 482)
- Draw Conclusions (TE p. 484)
- Use Maps (TE p. 485)
- Summarize (TE p. 486)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 480; TE pp. 485, 486, 489, 493)
- Visual Literacy (SE p. 494)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Create a Graph (TE p. 484)
- Figurative Language (TE p. 492)

Literary Elements
- Dialect (TE p. 488)
- Cultural Characteristics (TE p. 489)
- Imagery (TE p. 491)
- Relate to the Text (TE p. 493)

UNIT FOUR

Regionalism and Realism

1880–1910

Looking Ahead

The United States changed rapidly after the Civil War. American writers reacted to these changes by turning away from Romanticism toward Realism, a literary movement whose writers depicted life as they saw it, not as they imagined it to be. A literary movement that was akin to Realism was Regionalism, sometimes known as the local color movement, whose writers portrayed the distinctive traits of particular areas of the United States. A later, more extreme movement was Naturalism, whose writers sought to describe with scientific objectivity the effects of environment and heredity on character.

Keep the following questions in mind as you read:

⟹ How was the United States changing between 1880 and 1910?

⟹ What are the basic characteristics of Realism, Regionalism, and Naturalism?

⟹ How do you think the historical and cultural trends of this period continue to affect the United States today?

UNIT FOUR

Focus

Summary

This introduction describes the historical, social, and cultural forces that led to three literary movements: Regionalism, Realism, and Naturalism. After the Civil War the United States underwent great changes: expansion westward, the growth of population and industry in the East, and the struggles of diverse groups for social and economic rights. Essays about each literary movement tell how national and world events influenced writers of the time.

View the Art ★

Answer: Winslow suggests that life is easygoing and that there is plenty of leisure time. Some students may say that his depiction, based on the relaxed appearance of the people on the boat, is believable; however, others may say that it is not believable because of the struggle to catch wind on the sail.

Winslow Homer (1836–1910) began his career as an illustrator for magazines. In 1873 Homer visited Gloucester, Massachusetts, a fishing port, where he began to create watercolors. In 1876 he reworked one of the Gloucester watercolors, Breezing Up, into the oil painting shown here. Homer's interest in the sea intensified and became the primary focus of his work.

For diagnostic and end-of-unit assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 25–32, 337–338.

Unit Resources

Print Materials

- Unit 4 Teaching Resources, pp. 1–214
- Interactive Read and Write (On Level, Approaching, EL), pp. 147–178
- Novel Companion, pp. 163–206
- Bellringer Option Transparencies: Selection Focus 34–43; Daily Language Practice 41–54
- Assessment Resources, Selection Assessment, pp. 161–186

Technology

- TeacherWorks Plus CD
- StudentWorks Plus CD
- Literature Launchers: Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Unit 4
- Literature Online
- Visual Vocabulary CD-ROM
- Listening Library CD-ROM
- ExamView CD-ROM
- Skill Level Up! CD-ROM

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Graphic Information Much of the literature written between 1880 and 1910 relates to what was happening politically and culturally at that time.

Ask: Using prior knowledge and any clues in the titles, look for relationships between United States and world events and literature in the following areas:

- African Americans
- Women
- Expansion, inventions, and technology
- People and nature

(Students familiar with Up from Slavery or The Souls of Black Folk should connect those works to African Americans; students may use title clues to predict that The Call of the Wild connects to people and nature.)

Reading Strategy 2

Make Inferences Ask students to infer which two events on the World Events timeline appear to be most closely related. (The 1904 and 1905 entries: the Russo-Japanese war led to the Russian strikes and protests of 1905.)

Timeline 1880–1910

AMERICAN LITERATURE 1

1880 1890

1881
Henry James's The Portrait of a Lady is published

1884
Helen Hunt Jackson's Ramona is published

1884
Mark Twain's The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn is published

1885
W. D. Howells's The Rise of Silas Lapham is published

1886
Sarah Orne Jewett's "A White Heron" is published

1896
Paul Laurence Dunbar's Lyrics of a Lowly Life is published

1898
Stephen Crane's "The Open Boat" is published

1899
Kate Chopin's The Awakening is published

1899
Charles Waddell Chesnutt's The Conjure Woman is published

Queen Liliuokalani ▲

UNITED STATES EVENTS

1880 1890

1881
Clara Barton founds American Association of the Red Cross

1881
Booker T. Washington founds Tuskegee Institute

1884
George Eastman designs roll film for cameras

1885
William Le Baron Jenney builds the first skyscraper in Chicago

1886
President Grover Cleveland dedicates the Statue of Liberty in New York

1890 Wounded Knee Massacre takes place

1891
James A. Naismith invents basketball

1892
Immigration center opens on Ellis Island

1893
Americans overthrow Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii

1896
Plessy v. Ferguson case is tried

1896
Klondike gold rush begins

1898
Spanish-American War is fought

WORLD EVENTS

1880 1890

1883
Krakatoa volcano erupts; ensuing tsunami kills over 36,000 people

1883
Standard time divides Earth into 24 time zones

1885
Indian National Congress is founded 1890

German chancellor Otto von Bismarck resigns, due to conflicts with Kaiser Wilhelm II

1895
Lumière Brothers introduce motion pictures

1896
First modern Olympic Games are held in Athens

1896
Famine that will kill millions of people begins in India

1898
Marie and Pierre Curie discover radium

Literature Online

Literature and Reading To explore the Interactive Timeline, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Reading Practice

Analyze Graphic Information Explain to students that the information on the three timelines shown on these pages could be subsumed into a single timeline. Ask student pairs to put all events shown for the 1880s in order on a single timeline. Discuss the pros and cons of presenting the same information on a single timeline or on parallel timelines.

THE JUNGLE
UPTON SINCLAIR

1900

1900
L. Frank Baum's The Wonderful Wizard of Oz is published

1900
Theodore Dreiser's Sister Carrie is published

1900
Zitkala-Sa's (Gertrude Bonnin) Impressions of an Indian Childhood is published ▶

1901
Frank Norris's The Octopus is published ☆

1901
Booker T. Washington's Up from Slavery is published

1903
W. E. B. Du Bois's The Souls of Black Folk is published

1903
Jack London's The Call of the Wild is published

1904
Henry James's The Golden Bowl is published

1906 ▲
Upton Sinclair's The Jungle is published

1909
Gertrude Stein's Three Lives is published

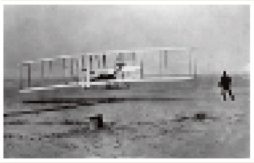
1900

1900
Hawaii becomes a territory of the United States

1901
President McKinley is assassinated; Theodore Roosevelt becomes president

1903
Wright Brothers make first airplane flight ▶

1903
The Great Train Robbery, first narrative film, is shown



1904
The United States begins construction of the Panama Canal

1906
San Francisco earthquake takes place

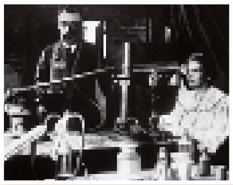
1908
Ford Motor Company produces the Model T Ford

1908
Electric washing machine is invented

1909
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is founded

1910
Angel Island facility for Asian immigrants is opened

1900



Pierre and Marie Curie

1900
Boxer Rebellion against European influence begins in China

1904
Russo-Japanese War begins

1905
Strikes and mass protests begin reform in Russia 2

1906
Finland is first European country to grant woman suffrage

1908
Oil is discovered in the Middle East

1910
Mexican Revolution begins

Reading Check

Analyze Graphic Information Which events on the timeline continue to shape the daily life of people in the United States today?

UNIT FOUR

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: Almost all of the events continue to shape the daily lives of people today in some way, but perhaps those with the greatest impact involve airplane flight, automobile production, movies, washing machines, the NAACP, women's suffrage, the Panama Canal, and oil in the Middle East. Students should provide support for their choices.

Cultural History ☆

Railroads and Growth

The Octopus concerns the power of railroads. The railroads wielded immense power in the U.S. economy of the late 1800s. They carried settlers west. They also facilitated the rapid growth of population and industry. For example, between 1880 and 1910, the population of California nearly tripled.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Make sure that students understand the significance of events on the timeline. For example, the Tuskegee Institute was a school for African Americans; the Plessy v. Ferguson case affirmed the constitutionality of racial segregation; and The Weavers, a German play, dramatized the true story of an 1844 weavers' revolt. Have students research and share one event with the class.

Emerging Tell students that reading and analyzing a timeline can help them understand history. Point out entries on the timeline that are related to demographic changes in the United States. In 1892, an immigration center opened on Ellis Island; in 1896, the Klondike gold rush began; and in 1910, the Angel Island facility for Asian immigrants opened. Ask: What changes were occurring in the U.S. population during this time period? (People emigrated from other countries to the United States, and some Americans moved westward across North America looking for land and gold.)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Draw Conclusions Have students trace the rise of immigration to the United States from central and eastern Europe on the graph.

Ask: How would you use the graph to research some of the reasons for the rise of immigration? (To find the countries people came from and to research the conditions in those countries that led people to leave)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Remind students that immigration refers to the movement into a country (prefix in-, meaning "into"), whereas emigration (prefix ex-, meaning "out") refers to movement out of a country.

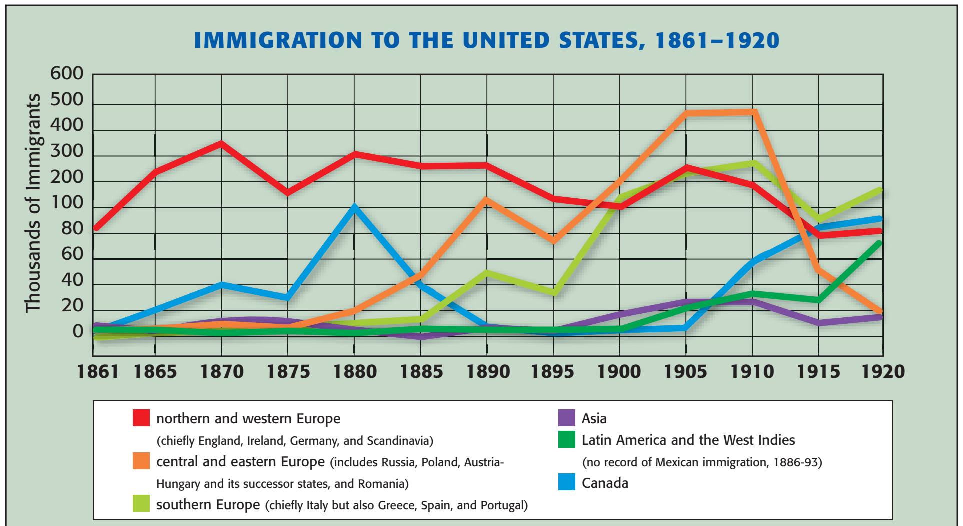
Literary History ☆

Children's Literature

Largely because of the growing concern for education, the number of books being written and printed for children skyrocketed during the late 1800s. At first most books were designed to provide moral instruction. Books intended for pleasure and entertainment appeared later.

By the Numbers

1



IMMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES, 1861–1920

Source: Historical Statistics of the United States: Colonial Times to 1970 (1975).

Railroad Time

Before the 1880s, each community set its clocks by the sun's position at high noon. Local time interfered with train scheduling and even threatened passenger safety: when two trains traveled on the same track, collisions could result from scheduling errors. In 1883, to make rail service safer and more reliable, the American Railway Association divided the country into four time zones, each with its own standard time. The federal government ratified the change in 1918.

STEEL PRODUCTION, 1865–1900

Source: Historical Statistics of the United States: Colonial Times to 1970.

EDUCATION ☆

The number of public schools multiplied after the Civil War.

- In 1870 around 6,500,000 children attended school.
- By 1900 the number of children attending school had risen to over 17,300,000.

LIFE AND DEATH

- In 1900 the average life expectancy for an American was 47.3 years. Today it is more than 77 years.

INEQUALITY OF WAGES

In the late 1890s, women were paid much less than men for the same type of work and the same hours. In the woolen industry, for example, male spinners made $7.50 per week in 1890; by 1900 this wage had risen to $9.50. By contrast, female spinners made only $5.50 a week in 1890; by 1900 this wage had only risen to $6.00.

Writing Practice

Create a Graph Tell students that creating a graph from written information helps them gain a visual picture of the written word. Read the section "Inequality of Wages" aloud. Then have students use the information to create a line graph, modeled after the "Immigration to the United States" graph, or a double-bar graph. Have students write a paragraph about the conclusions that can be drawn from their graphs.

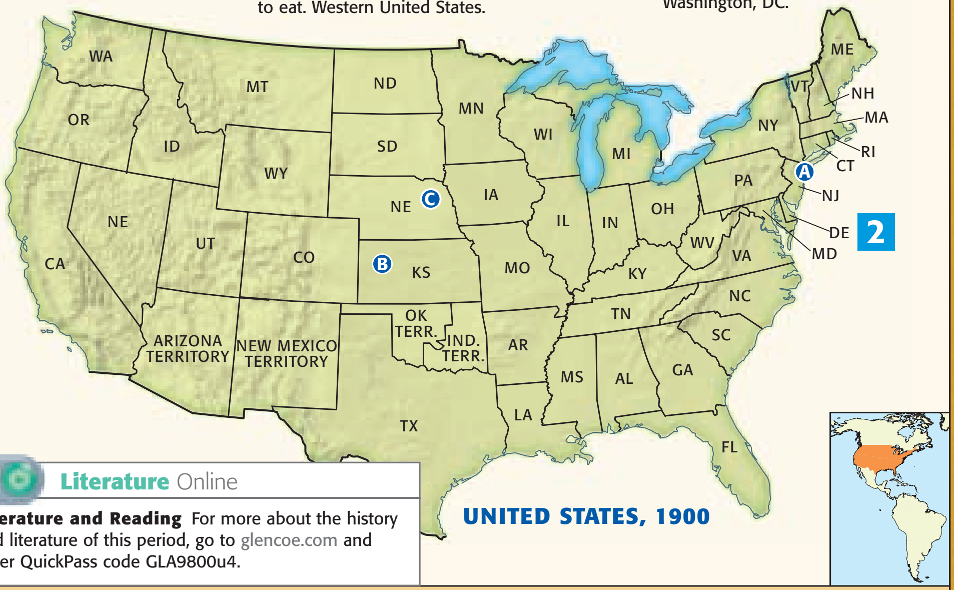
Being There

Between the Civil War and World War I, the growth of mining, ranching, and farming brought settlement to the West. At the same time, populations of cities in the East swelled as immigrants poured into the United States and job seekers from rural areas sought employment in industry.

A Immigrants in line leaving Ellis Island, waiting for ferry to New York. ca. 1900. Undated photograph.

B A group of cowboys sit on the grass beside their horses and a chuck wagon to eat. Western United States.

C Ranch located in Nebraska, 1887. Photograph. Library of Congress, Washington, DC.



UNITED STATES, 1900

Literature Online

Literature and Reading For more about the history and literature of this period, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Reading Check

Analyze Graphic Information

1. Between what years did immigration from central and eastern Europe reach its peak?
2. In 1900, roughly how many times greater was school attendance than it had been in 1870?
3. What change did the western and eastern parts of the U.S. have in common during this time?

Teach

Reading Check

Answers:

1. Immigration to the United States from central and eastern Europe reached its peak between 1905 and 1910.
2. Roughly three times greater
3. Population growth

Reading Strategy 2

Use Maps Ask: How is this map of the United States in 1900 different from a map of the United States today? (Arizona and New Mexico are not yet states; what is now Oklahoma then consisted of the Oklahoma Territory and the Indian Territory; Alaska and Hawaii are not included.)

View the Photograph

A. Between 1892 and 1954, Ellis Island, a U.S. immigration station, processed over 12 million immigrants.

B. Cowboys often spent their days herding large numbers of cattle over long distances. A typical meal on the trail consisted of bread, meat, beans, and coffee.

C. Due to a lack of other building materials on the prairie, many Nebraska settlers built houses out of sod blocks cut from the ground. These houses generally had dirt floors and thick walls.

Ask: Why might these photos be more appropriate for illustrating realistic rather than romantic writing? (These photos show real people living or working in difficult circumstances and under harsh conditions.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Write the terms rural and urban on the board. Have students find these words in a dictionary and have a few students read their definitions aloud. Ask: Which word describes an environment like New York City? (urban) Name a rural location.

Intermediate Point out that the words immigrant and immigration come from the same root. An immigrant leaves one country to live in another country permanently. Immigration is the act of coming to a new country to live.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Summarize Have students read the first paragraph of the section titled "Westward Expansion."

Ask: What are the main ideas and the main supporting details in this passage? (Many Americans were hesitant to move to the Great Plains. Then railroads, the Homestead Act, and improvements in farming inspired many to move west. Pioneer life on the Great Plains was demanding.)

Write a class summary. Then have students continue reading and summarizing pages 486–487 on their own.

View the Art ★

Fanny Palmer created this illustration in 1868. It shows a railroad train passing through a frontier settlement as it continues on to the West.

Ask: How do you think this image represents America's expansion westward? (Students may note that the railroad is bringing settlers and goods to the frontier.)

Learning Objectives

For pages 486–494

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing literary periods.
Evaluating historical influences.
Connecting to the literature.

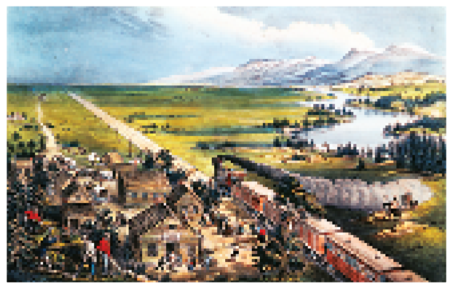
Regionalism and Realism

1880–1910

Historical, Social, and Cultural Forces

Westward Expansion

1 For a time during the early nineteenth century, American settlement paused at the edge of the Great Plains. Settlers felt challenged by these vast, treeless grasslands, which had little rainfall, a fierce climate, and soil that was very fertile but difficult to plow. But beginning in the 1860s, improvements in farming equipment, the expansion of the railroads, and the Homestead Act, which enabled settlers to claim public land, made more Americans willing to move to the Great Plains. However, these prairie farmers—or "sodbusters"—still faced constant toil, drought, extreme temperatures, blizzards, tornadoes, grass fires, locusts, and a social and cultural isolation that broke many homesteaders' spirits.



Across the Continent, Westward the Course of Empire Takes Its Way. Color lithograph. Museum of the City of New York. ★

The West's rich deposits of gold, silver, and copper served the needs of growing industries in the East. The lure of these precious metals brought the first wave of settlers that populated what would become the mountain states of the West.

Westward expansion was a disaster for the Native Americans of the region. Each new group of settlers further encroached on Native Americans' traditional ways of life. The Native Americans of the Great Plains had long depended on the herds of buffalo for food, clothing, and shelter. By the 1880s, the destruction of these herds by white hunters had doomed this way of life. After the Civil War, the policy of the U.S. government was to move Native Americans onto reservations, which were large tracts of land set aside for them. Resistance by some Native Americans led to armed clashes with U.S. troops.

The Gilded Age

As the Great Plains and the West were being settled, cities in the East and Midwest were also growing. New inventions, such as the electric light and the telephone, improved economic efficiency and created new jobs. Thousands of Americans moved to cities in search of work, and millions of immigrants arrived, many of them from southern and eastern Europe. By the early 1900s, Americans had transformed the United States into the world's leading industrial nation. However, this rapid growth had a social cost.

Vocabulary Practice

Word Meanings Have students use the dictionary and context clues to figure out the meaning of the word gilded in the phrase "the Gilded Age." (Something that is gilded is covered with a thin layer of gold or something that looks like gold. Gilded can mean "superficial" or "deceptive." Historians called this period "the Gilded Age" because beneath the glittering surface of prosperity there were people who lived in crowded, dirty, and unsafe tenements in overpopulated cities.)

Beneath the glittering surface of prosperity, corruption in business and politics became so widespread that historians often refer to this period as the Gilded Age, a reference to Mark Twain's scathing social satire of the same name, which described the greed and corruption of the time. The gap between rich and poor Americans widened greatly, and a few so-called robber barons became enormously wealthy as a result of the labors of their employees. Cities were overpopulated, and the poor were forced to live in tenement houses that were crowded, dirty, and unsafe.

Reformers and writers tried to improve working and housing conditions. Jane Addams founded Hull House, a settlement house to serve immigrants and poor working people in Chicago. Hull House offered hot lunches for factory workers and classes in English for foreign-language speakers. Some journalists—later called muckrakers—exposed the social problems brought on by industrialization and urbanization. Ida Tarbell analyzed the way in which the Standard Oil Company had come to control 95 percent of the country's oil-refining capacity. In his novel The Jungle, Upton Sinclair shocked and sickened readers with a graphic account of the filthy and unsafe conditions in Chicago's stockyards and meatpacking plants.

Women's Rights

After the Civil War, reformers such as Susan B. Anthony realized that women would remain powerless until they could own property and vote. With Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Anthony formed the National Woman Suffrage Association in 1869. Although the federal government balked at giving women the right to vote and own property, individual states in the West were more progressive. When Wyoming joined the union in 1890, it became the first state to give women the right to vote. By 1914, women could vote in fifteen states. It was not until 1920 that the Nineteenth Amendment guaranteed voting rights for all American women.

Regionalism, Realism, Naturalism

2 Writers known as Regionalists or local color writers created vivid portrayals of their own regions. Another movement, Realism, attempted to portray people as they actually were. As novelist and critic William Dean Howells observed, "Realism is nothing more and nothing less than the truthful treatment of material." Naturalist writers were influenced by the theories of scientists such as Charles Darwin.

PREVIEW Big Ideas

Regionalism, Realism, and Naturalism ☆

1 Regionalism

Following the Civil War, some American writers concentrated on the unique characteristics, or local color, of a particular region of the country. They attempted to portray the landscape, speech, customs, and other cultural details of their chosen region.

See pages 488–489

2 Realism

Writers of this period turned away from Romanticism and attempted to create the appearance of ordinary life. Known as Realists, these writers aimed not to transcend reality but to render the truth of everyday experience as they saw, heard, and felt it.

See pages 490–491

3 Naturalism

Naturalism, a more extreme movement, grew out of Realism. Naturalist writers, influenced by scientists such as Charles Darwin, believed that human beings are shaped by heredity and environment and dominated by economic, social, or natural forces.

See pages 492–493

Teach

Big Idea 2

Regionalism Some writers of this time period were most interested in a particular region of the country. They fed Americans' curiosity about other parts of the country. For example, Mark Twain conveys the social attitudes and behavior of people along the Mississippi River in the pre-Civil War era.

Ask: Why might today's readers be less interested in Regionalist writers than readers in the late 1800s were? (We have fewer regional differences today. We watch the same movies and news programs, buy the same products, and can travel quickly and easily from one place to another.)

Literary History ☆

Realism and Naturalism

These literary movements are sometimes confused for each other. Both portray nature and human lives as faithfully as possible. The realist, however, believes that people can choose a direction in life and make choices that shape it. The naturalist, on the other hand, believes that human life is determined by heredity and environment—that individuals are trapped in predestined lives that they cannot change.

Advanced Learners/Pre-AP

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Research Challenge advanced students to investigate the scientific progress of the period. Have students work as a group to identify significant American scientists and scientific breakthroughs between 1880 and 1910. Students can return to the timeline on pages 482–483 for ideas. Have each student learn about one topic and its impact on the society, the culture, and the literature of the time. Have students as a group present their findings to the class.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Dialect Tell students that many regionalist writers, including Mark Twain, used dialect to make their characters more authentic.

Ask: How would you define dialect? (a variation of language spoken by a particular group, often within a particular region and time)

Ask: What are some examples of dialect that you have encountered? (Students may mention a Southern dialect, a New England dialect, and others.)

Literary History ☆

Twain's Inspirations

Samuel Langhorne Clemens (1835–1910), whose pseudonym was Mark Twain, grew up in the Mississippi River town of Hannibal, Missouri, during the age of the steamboat. The Mississippi provides the setting for some of his major works, including The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (1855). His pen name derives from a term used by riverboat men to measure depth. "Mark twain" means the water is two fathoms deep—just deep enough for navigation.

Big Idea 1

Regionalism

1 Influenced by such factors as public education and mass media, culture in the United States today is probably more uniform than at any other time in our history. In the past, cultural differences among people from various parts of the United States were more marked. After the Civil War, a new group of American writers, known as Regionalists or local colorists, emphasized local cultures. Not all of these Regionalist writers were born and educated in the East, as most previous American writers had been. Many came from the South, Midwest, or West. Under the influence of the new emphasis on Realism in art and literature, they did not present the unusual characters and exotic settings familiar in Romanticist writing. Instead, local colorists depicted the ordinary people and everyday places around them.

In their writing, the local colorists emphasized setting, and their characters tended to be typical of a particular region, which was clear from their speech and beliefs. Often the narrator was an outsider who observed a world filled with unfamiliar or outdated characteristics and customs. This outsider frequently revealed the tension between the new and old, the modern and the old-fashioned. The mood of local color writing was sometimes nostalgic, serving as a reminder of a time before mass production and noisy urban life. At other times, the mood was more somber, presenting a criticism of habits and ideas considered long outmoded.

☆ Mark Twain's Mississippi River

Born in a small Missouri town on the Mississippi River, Mark Twain (see pages 496–507) vividly evoked the world of that river in a series of works, including his masterpiece The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn. In this novel, an orphaned boy and a runaway slave flee down the Mississippi in a raft. Through their innocent eyes, Twain presented a piercing view of American society in the pre-Civil War era and revealed the injustices of slavery and the culture that enforced it. He also employed a lively sense of humor and a fine ear for American dialect. His editor and friend William Dean Howells was the first to realize that Twain was more than a humorist or local colorist. In The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, Twain had transformed our literature by writing a true American novel, in which the setting, subject matter, characters, and style were unmistakably American. Howells claimed Twain to be an American genius, hailing him as "incomparable, the Lincoln of our literature."

Bret Harte's Far West

Bret Harte told stories of the rude, lawless life of the California gold-mining country while describing places few people had ever seen. One of his earliest stories, "The Luck of Roaring Camp," made Harte famous. Readers in both the United States and Britain enthusiastically read about the gamblers, thieves, and social misfits that populate his work. Harte distinguished himself from other writers of the West by his ironic tone. His unsavory characters frequently undergo an unexpected reformation, which provides the narrator with an opportunity to make wry comments on their sudden changes of heart.

Willa Cather's Great Plains

When she was nine years old, Willa Cather's family left Virginia and moved to the open prairie of Nebraska—a move that would change her life dramatically. Cather's writing (see pages 520–530) reflects her memories of prairie life, and many of her early works focus on the harshness and isolation of pioneers' lives. In her novel O Pioneers! she depicted immigrant farmers in Nebraska, whose tough yet sensitive natures and determination made their survival possible. In other works, such as My Ántonia, she celebrated the pioneer lifestyle for its freedom and simplicity.

Study Skills Practice

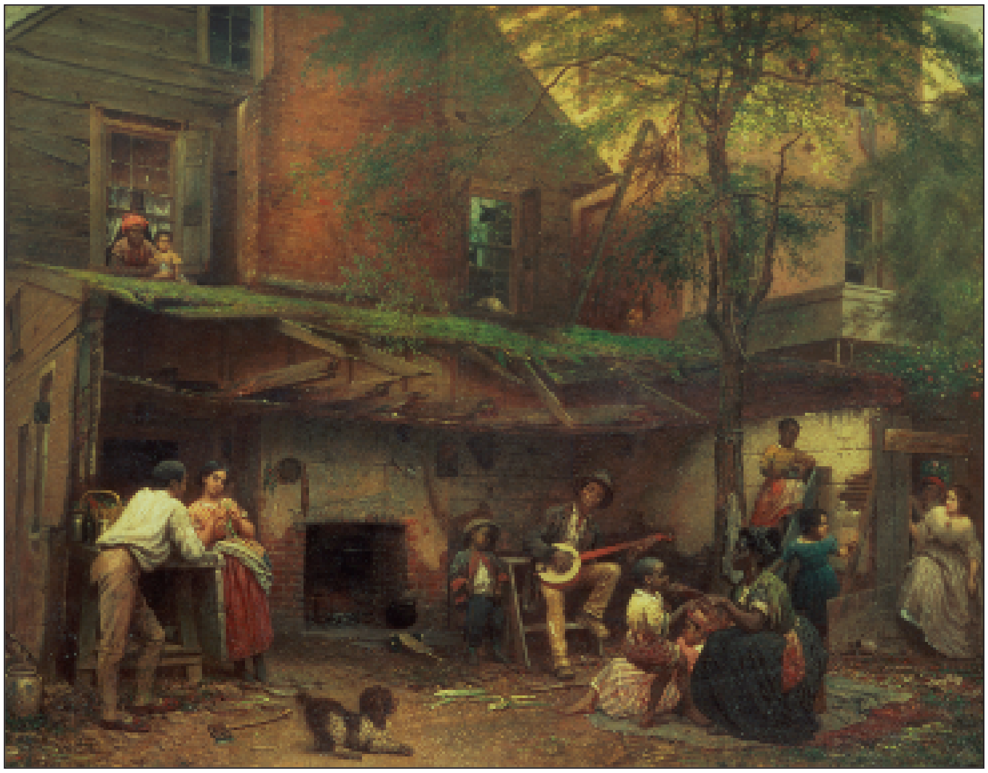
Text Organizers Have students list the headings on this page, then write each section's main idea.

Regionalism
Writers influenced by this literary movement depicted ordinary people and everyday places in certain areas.

Mark Twain's Mississippi River
Many of Twain's works focused on life along the Mississippi River.

Bret Harte's Far West
Harte wrote about life in gold-mining country.

Willa Cather's Great Plains
Cather's writing about pioneers reflects her memories of prairie life.



Old Kentucky Home Life in the South, 1859. J. Eastman Johnson. Oil on canvas. Brooklyn Museum of Art, NY. ★

from O Pioneers! by Willa Cather 2

For the first three years after John Bergson's death, the affairs of his family prospered. Then came the hard times that brought every one on the Divide to the brink of despair; three years of drought and failure, the last struggle of a wild soil against the encroaching plowshare. The first of these fruitless summers the Bergson boys bore courageously. The failure of the corn crop made labor cheap. Lou and Oscar hired two men and put in bigger crops than ever before. They lost everything they spent. The whole country was discouraged. Farmers who were already in debt had to give up their land. A few foreclosures demoralized the county. The settlers sat about on the wooden sidewalks in the little town and told each other that the country was never meant for men to live in; the thing to do was to get back to Iowa, to Illinois, to any place that had been proved habitable. The Bergson boys, certainly, would have been happier with their uncle Otto, in the bakery shop in Chicago. Like most of their neighbors, they were meant to follow in paths already marked out for them, not to break trails in a new country. A steady job, a few holidays, nothing to think about, and they would have been very happy. It was no fault of theirs that they had been dragged into the wilderness when they were little boys. A pioneer should have imagination, should be able to enjoy the idea of things more than the things themselves.

Reading Check

Generalize How would you describe the overall goals of the local color movement?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: Students might suggest that the overall goal of the local color movement was to accurately reflect life in a particular region. To do this, writers used dialect; described the details of everyday life and of the physical environment; and told about the customs, dress, and beliefs of the people.

Literary Element 2

Cultural Characteristics

Have students read the excerpt from O Pioneers!

Ask: What unique characteristics of pioneer culture are revealed in the excerpt? (The pioneers faced hard circumstances in nature, including drought, "wild soil," and failed crops. They faced emotional hardships and longed for an easier life back East.)

View the Art ★

A native of Maine, J. Eastman Johnson earned fame as a painter of sentimental subjects. His father operated a hotel, which gave the artist exposure to a variety of people. Ask: How does the artist's representation of his subjects compare with Cather's portrayal of the Bergson boys? (Johnson paints country life as relaxed and carefree, but Cather suggests that pioneer life is very difficult for the Bergson boys.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Choose several difficult words from the Cather excerpt: prospered, encroaching, habitable. Have each student choose two words to locate in a dictionary and define for the class.

Intermediate Before students read the essay on Regionalism, ask them to predict the meaning of unfamiliar words. For example, Ask: What does the word humor mean? (something funny) Then what is a humorist? (a person who specializes in humor). Have students consult a dictionary for the meaning of these words.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Realism Say: Before the Civil War, most fiction and poetry depicted imaginary people and situations.

Ask: Why do you think Realism replaced Romanticism after the Civil War? (The reality of how hard and cruel life can be—especially during a war—may have caused writers to no longer want to portray life with Romantic ideals.)

Cultural History ☆

Moving Away from Romanticism The horrors of the Civil War and the impersonal nature of the country's growing industrial base made Romantic literature less attractive. Novels like The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn brought in a new note of Realism, and later works like The Red Badge of Courage revealed characters in the grip of emotional and economic forces beyond their control.

Big Idea 2

Realism

The emergence of American Realism in the second half of the 1800s was in part a reaction to the Romanticism of the previous era. Romanticism's glorification of the imagination became unappealing to Realists, who wanted to explore the motivations, behaviors, and actions of real people. Some of the most important writers of the time were considered Realists, including fiction writers Henry James, O. Henry, and William Dean Howells.

The Birth of Realism

Before Realism appeared in America, it was already flourishing in Europe. French novelist Honoré de Balzac is commonly considered the father of Realism. His masterpiece The Human Comedy is a massive collection of ninety novels and novellas that detail the panorama of French society. Balzac did not limit the scope of his masterpiece to one class of people or cultural environment. Instead he invented a complex and textured fictional world based on all levels of society.

Advanced by such authors as Gustave Flaubert, Leo Tolstoy, George Eliot, and Charles Dickens, Realism soon became the most prominent literary movement in Europe. These novelists examined the psychology of human behavior and created characters who struggle with problems that nineteenth-century readers would have recognized in their own lives or in the lives of their contemporaries.

The rise of Realism in the United States can be traced to disillusionment following the Civil War. For many, the war had destroyed the Romantic view of humanity. Like Mathew Brady in his famous photographs of the Civil War dead or Jacob Riis in his portraits of New York slum children, the Realists wanted to present life as it actually was—often cruel and never embellished. Photography enabled artists to capture and convey, with stark objectivity, the world as it appeared through the camera's lens. Many Realist writers aspired to adapt this kind of photographic realism to their literary works.

Kate Chopin and Women

During her lifetime, Kate Chopin was widely criticized for her realistic portrayal of women. She was the first American woman to write frankly about the suppressed passion and discontentment of women who were confined to the traditional roles of wives and mothers. She believed that the role of an artist was to rebel. As a character in her novel The Awakening observes, an artist must have "a soul that dares and defies." Chopin wrote of women "awakening" to their confined state and challenging the social values and patriarchal rules that defined and limited them. Chopin is sometimes considered to be a Regionalist writer, because in some of her stories she depicted the customs of Creoles and Cajuns in Louisiana, using their language and describing their lifestyles. She made their world real and confirmed their humanity by refusing to judge their lives or their struggles.

Paul Laurence Dunbar and African Americans

Paul Laurence Dunbar was one of the earliest African American poets to gain widespread recognition. William Dean Howells's favorable review of Dunbar's book Majors and Minors in Harper's Weekly helped to establish Dunbar as an international literary figure. While Dunbar wrote the bulk of his verse in the lofty poetic diction of his day, he is best known for his use of rural African American dialect. Dunbar's dialect poems depict the post-war lives of African Americans and reflect their frustrated aspirations in an era of white dominance. Throughout his life, Dunbar tried to strike a balance between the conventions of the European literary tradition and those of African American folk culture.

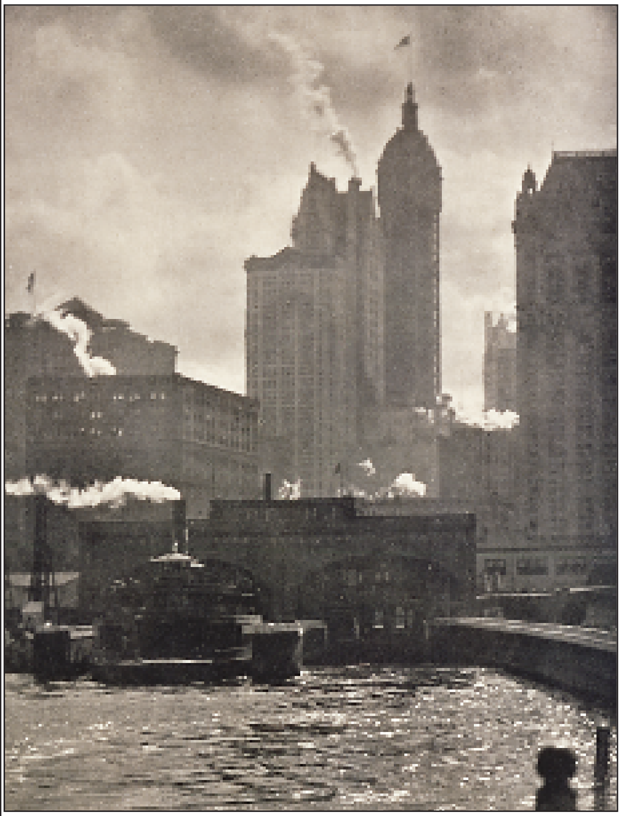
Study Skills Practice

Organize Information Remind students that taking notes will help them remember important information for tests. Students can organize their notes as an outline or as a summary. Notes should contain main ideas and supporting details.

For example, for the first paragraph on this page, students could take these notes:

I. Realism was in part a reaction to Romanticism.
  A. Romanticism glorified the imagination.
  B. Realists portrayed real people.
  C. Important Realist writers
    1. Henry James
    2. O. Henry
    3. William Dean Howells

Have students take notes as they read the remainder of this essay.



The City of Ambition, 1910. Alfred Stieglitz. Photogravure, 13$\frac{3}{8}$ x 10$\frac{1}{4}$ in. Réunion des Musées Nationaux, France. ★

Edith Wharton and the Upper Classes

The characters in Edith Wharton's fiction, like Wharton herself, inhabited the upper crust of New York society. Crafted with penetrating psychological insight, her stories and novels depict the desires, prejudices, and foibles of her privileged and affluent characters. In two of her most famous novels, The Age of Innocence and The House of Mirth, Wharton presents a culture that devalues the individual in favor of class divisions, social status, and the pursuit and enjoyment of wealth. Her best fiction satirizes the hypocrisy of the American aristocracy of which she was a member.

from The Awakening by Kate Chopin 2

It was then past midnight. The cottages were all dark. A single faint light gleamed out from the hallway of the house. There was no sound abroad except the hooting of an old owl in the top of a water-oak, and the everlasting voice of the sea, that was not uplifted at that soft hour. It broke like a mournful lullaby upon the night.

The tears came so fast to Mrs. Pontellier's eyes that the damp sleeve of her peignoir no longer served to dry them. She was holding the back of her chair with one hand; her loose sleeve had slipped almost to the shoulder of her uplifted arm. Turning, she thrust her face, steaming and wet, into the bend of her arm, and she went on crying there, not caring any longer to dry her face, her eyes, her arms. She could not have told why she was crying. Such experiences as the foregoing were not uncommon in her married life. They seemed never before to have weighed much against the abundance of her husband's kindness and a uniform devotion which had come to be tacit and self-understood.

An indescribable oppression, which seemed to generate in some unfamiliar part of her consciousness, filled her whole being with a vague anguish. It was like a shadow, like a mist passing across her soul's summer day. It was strange and unfamiliar; it was a mood. She did not sit there inwardly upbraiding her husband, lamenting at Fate, which had directed her footsteps to the path which they had taken. She was just having a good cry all to herself. The mosquitoes made merry over her, biting her firm, round arms and nipping at her bare insteps.

Reading Check

Analyze Cause and Effect What cultural shifts and historical events contributed to the rise of American Realism?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: European writers who were already writing realistic fiction influenced American writers. Because of the Civil War, many Americans lost faith in Romantic ideals.

Literary Element 2

Imagery Ask: In the excerpt from The Awakening, what emotions do you feel and which images cause you to feel this way? (sadness, conveyed by the sounds of the owl and the sea; loneliness, due to the hour of the night, the darkness, and the single light).

ENGLISH LEARNERS Help students break some of the longer words into their roots and affixes: ev-erlasting, foregoing, self-under-stood, indescribable, oppression, upbraiding.

View the Art ★

Photographer Alfred Stieglitz (1864–1946) documented the rapid changes in New York City as new construction materials and technologies led to the creation of buildings that seemed to scrape the sky. Stieglitz was the first American photographer whose work was considered a serious art form.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Students may better understand the realism in Chopin's excerpt if they create a mental image of the scene. Have them reread each paragraph aloud and discuss how the image develops. Make sure they note that Mrs. Pontellier is alone and barefoot in her bathrobe, crying into the crook of her arm. The mosquitoes seem to be taking advantage of her vulnerability and adding discomfort to her sadness. Ask: What is realistic about the picture the author makes? (It describes how someone might really look and feel. The description of the mosquitoes biting the woman's skin is a realistic detail.)

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism Explain to students that Naturalism is a literary movement characterized by a belief that people have little control over their own lives. Naturalist writers focus on the powerful economic, social, and environmental forces that shape the lives of individuals.

Ask: How do Naturalist and Realist writers differ? (Naturalists and Realists both wrote about ordinary people and everyday life, but Naturalists also focused on the pointless fights of individuals against "a brutal society or an indifferent universe.")

Cultural History ☆

Psychology One factor that influenced the novels of this period was the development of psychology. William James, Carl Jung, and Sigmund Freud all investigated whether people's lives were determined by biological and environmental factors or whether people could act out of free will. Among themselves, these men agreed on little, but together they made people more aware of the human mind and its mysterious workings.

Big Idea 3
Naturalism

What do you think contributes most to shaping a person's life? Is it the biological factor of heredity? Is it the social and economic factor of environment? Or is it the result of other factors, such as an individual's own will? Realistic writers, for the most part, did not concern themselves with these philosophical questions. Toward the end of the 1800s, however, a group of writers known as Naturalists, who were strongly influenced by Charles Darwin's scientific theory of evolution by natural selection, adopted the view that people had little control over their own lives. They 1 believed that human destiny was shaped by powerful forces, including heredity, social and economic pressures, and the natural environment. Like the Realists, Naturalists wrote about ordinary people, but often focused on the working class and the poor, depicting the futile battles of individuals against a brutal society or an indifferent universe. ☆

Edwin Arlington Robinson and Fate

Edwin Arlington Robinson said he felt "doomed, or elected, or sentenced for life, to the writing of poetry." His most famous poems are set in fictional Tilbury Town, which was modeled on his childhood hometown of Gardiner, Maine. The characters in his poems, like Robinson himself, are often loners or misfits. They live in communities where people feel pressure to conform and where creativity is misunderstood or simply ignored. Robinson's poems focus almost exclusively on an individual or on individual relationships. His tone is a blend of irony and compassion toward his characters, many of whose lives end in personal failure and despair.

Jack London and Nature

From the age of nine, Jack London helped to support his family through hard physical labor. His early experiences made him sympathetic toward the working class and convinced him that capitalist society was brutal and repressive. London was also drawn to social Darwinism, a movement that attempted to apply Darwin's biological theories to human behavior. These ideas are important in several of London's works, including his most popular novels, The Call of the Wild and The Sea-Wolf. London spent time in the Alaskan wilderness and the South Seas, and many of his stories demonstrate the power of nature over civilization.

> A man said to the universe:
> "Sir, I exist!"
> "However," replied the universe,
> "The fact has not created in me
> A sense of obligation."
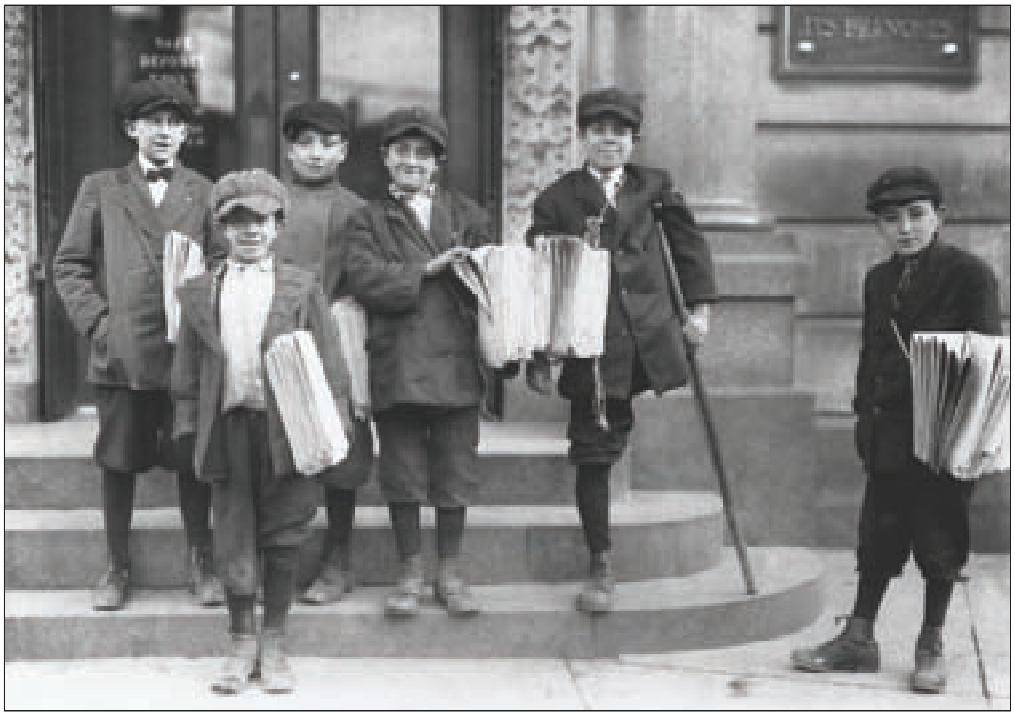
>
> —Stephen Crane

Stephen Crane and War

Though the Civil War had ended six years before Crane was born, he used it as the subject of his best-known book, The Red Badge of Courage. Later short stories express Crane's belief in the necessity of courage, honesty, and poise in the face of an indifferent universe. In "The Blue Hotel," Crane described humans as so many lice clinging "to a whirling, fire-smote, ice-locked, disease-stricken, space-lost bulb." The pathos of human helplessness in the face of brute fact closes the story "An Episode of War" as a young officer reacts to the loss of his arm: "'Oh, well,' he said, standing shamefaced amid these tears. 'I don't suppose it matters so much as all that.'" In The Red Badge of Courage, Crane presents his hero, a young recruit named Henry Fleming, who responds to his first experience of a new, violent environment—battle.

Writing Practice

Use Figurative Language After students have read the excerpt by Stephen Crane, have them identify some of the similes and metaphors Crane uses to convey his character's actions and emotions. These include references to a carpenter, hot stones, a pestered animal, a driven beast, battle phantoms, and a smothered baby. Discuss how these comparisons enhance the meaning of the passage. Instruct students to write their own one-page narratives about a real or imagined person facing a difficult situation. Have them use similes and metaphors to describe the person's state of mind. Have students read their narratives aloud to the class.



Newspaper boys, one missing a leg, stand on the steps of a bank near a busy trolley junction in Jersey City, NJ. 1912. Lewis Wickes Hine. ★

from The Red Badge of Courage by Stephen Crane 2

He was at a task. He was like a carpenter who has made many boxes, making still another box, only there was furious haste in his movements. He, in his thoughts, was careering off in other places, even as the carpenter who as he works whistles and thinks of his friend or his enemy, his home or a saloon. And these jolted dreams were never perfect to him afterward, but remained a mass of blurred shapes.

Presently he began to feel the effects of the war atmosphere—a blistering sweat, a sensation that his eyeballs were about to crack like hot stones. A burning roar filled his ears.

Following this came a red rage. He developed the acute exasperation of a pestered animal, a well-meaning cow worried by dogs. He had a mad feeling against his rifle, which could only be used against one life at a time. He wished to rush forward and strangle with his fingers. He craved a power that would enable him to make a world-sweeping gesture and brush all back. His impotency appeared to him, and made his rage into that of a driven beast.

Buried in the smoke of many rifles his anger was directed not so much against the men whom he knew were rushing toward him as against the swirling battle phantoms which were choking him, stuffing their smoke robes down his parched throat.

Reading Check

Compare and Contrast How did the attitude of the Naturalists toward the place of humanity in the universe differ from that of the Transcendentalists?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: Naturalists denied the existence of the supernatural and saw human beings as alone in the universe. They thought that forces outside a person's control shaped life. Transcendentalists believed people could shape their lives through intuition, self-reliance, and inspiration. They also believed in the supernatural.

Literary Element 2

Relate to the Text Have students read the excerpt from The Red Badge of Courage.

Ask: Has there ever been a time in your life when you felt overwhelming emotions? How did it feel? (Students may say that they felt paralyzed—they couldn't walk or speak.)

View the Photograph ★

Lewis Wickes Hine (1874–1940) was the National Child Labor Committee photographer for ten years.

Ask: How might the Committee use this photograph? (It may be part of a collection showing children's working conditions.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Help students understand metaphors used by the author in the essay on Naturalism. Explain that metaphors cannot be interpreted literally, but are used to help describe or explain something. Have students read the first sentence in the Robinson section aloud. Then explain that in reality he was not elected or sentenced to write poetry as a criminal would be sentenced to time in prison. Instead, he is saying that fate has given him no choice. He feels an overwhelming need to write. Continue by examining the quotes by London and Crane and elicit the meaning of different words and phrases from students. For example, Ask: What is the meaning of London's phrase heaven's artillery? (thunder). Ask: Why does London refer to the ocean tides and the weather as tricks? (He portrays nature as a powerful magician.) Ask: What does Crane mean by the universe's response to the man? (He thinks humans are insignificant to nature.)

Assess

Legacy of the Period

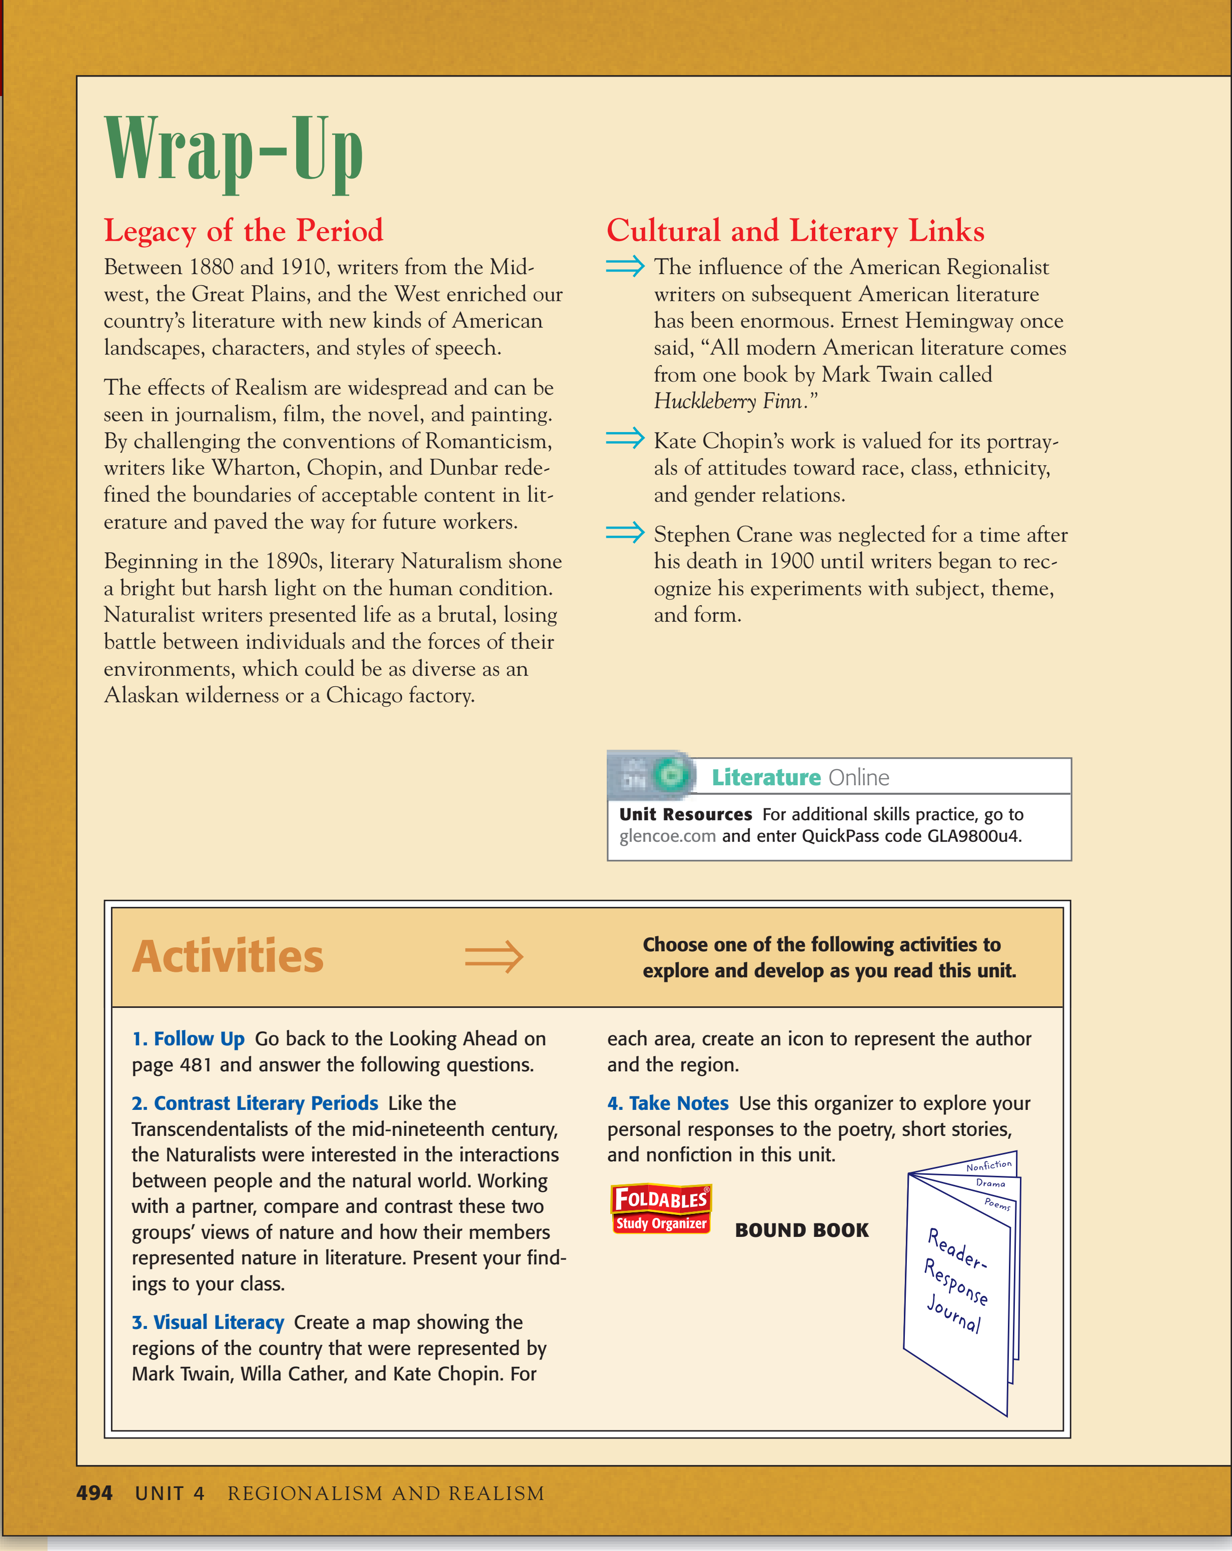
Ask: Why did New England writers no longer dominate American literature? (Responses will vary but may include westward expansion and immigration.)

Cultural and Literary Links

Students should look for ways that these three literary movements have influenced today's writers.

FOLDABLES® Study Organizer

Have students make and label the Three-Pocket Foldable. Then have them write notes about each Big Idea on note cards to insert in the pockets of their Foldables.



Wrap-Up

Legacy of the Period

Between 1880 and 1910, writers from the Midwest, the Great Plains, and the West enriched our country's literature with new kinds of American landscapes, characters, and styles of speech.

The effects of Realism are widespread and can be seen in journalism, film, the novel, and painting. By challenging the conventions of Romanticism, writers like Wharton, Chopin, and Dunbar redefined the boundaries of acceptable content in literature and paved the way for future workers.

Beginning in the 1890s, literary Naturalism shone a bright but harsh light on the human condition. Naturalist writers presented life as a brutal, losing battle between individuals and the forces of their environments, which could be as diverse as an Alaskan wilderness or a Chicago factory.

Cultural and Literary Links

⇒ The influence of the American Regionalist writers on subsequent American literature has been enormous. Ernest Hemingway once said, "All modern American literature comes from one book by Mark Twain called Huckleberry Finn."

⇒ Kate Chopin's work is valued for its portrayals of attitudes toward race, class, ethnicity, and gender relations.

⇒ Stephen Crane was neglected for a time after his death in 1900 until writers began to recognize his experiments with subject, theme, and form.

Literature Online

Unit Resources For additional skills practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Activities

Choose one of the following activities to explore and develop as you read this unit.

1. Follow Up Go back to the Looking Ahead on page 481 and answer the following questions.

2. Contrast Literary Periods Like the Transcendentalists of the mid-nineteenth century, the Naturalists were interested in the interactions between people and the natural world. Working with a partner, compare and contrast these two groups' views of nature and how their members represented nature in literature. Present your findings to your class.

3. Visual Literacy Create a map showing the regions of the country that were represented by Mark Twain, Willa Cather, and Kate Chopin. For each area, create an icon to represent the author and the region.

4. Take Notes Use this organizer to explore your personal responses to the poetry, short stories, and nonfiction in this unit.

FOLDABLES® Study Organizer BOUND BOOK

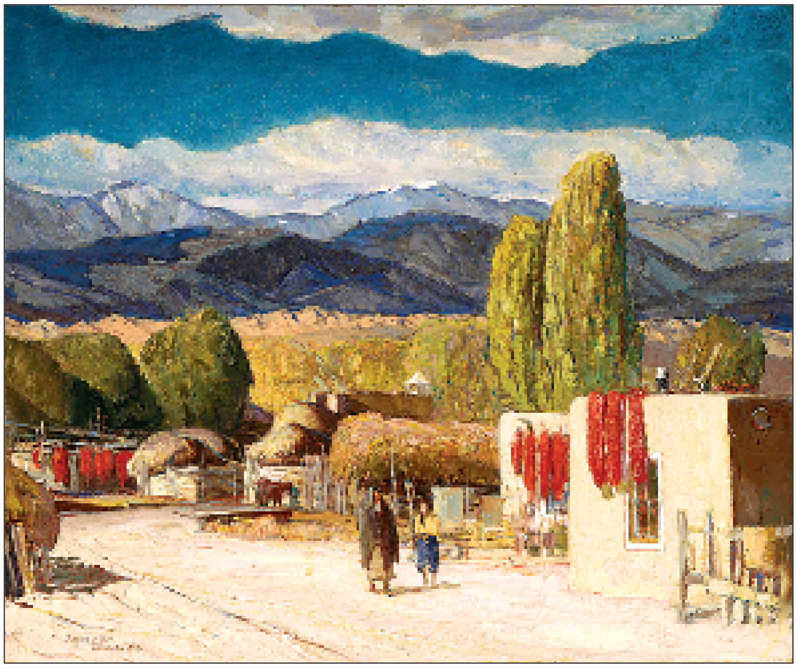
Activities

1. Following Up Have students choose a question to keep in mind as they read.
2. Contrasting Literary Periods Have students look back at some of the Transcendentalist writers in Unit 2. Have them keep a list of points of comparison between the Unit 2 writers and the Naturalists in Unit 4.
3. Visual Literacy Students' works should focus on just one section of the country and its main authors.
4. Take Notes Have students make the graphic organizer before they begin to read the selections.

PART 1

Regionalism and Local Color



Red Pepper Time, c. 1930. Oscar Edmund Berninghaus. Oil on canvas, 25 x $30^{1}/_{16}$ in. Gift of Arvin Gottlieb. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC.

View the Art Oscar Edmund Berninghaus came to love the West—especially Taos, New Mexico—when the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad sent him to capture the scenery along the railroad's western route. What aspects of this painting capture the flavor of the region? What can you infer about life in this part of the country? ★

> "Elsewhere the sky is the roof of the world;
> but here the earth is the floor of the sky."
>
> —Willa Cather, Death Comes for the Archbishop

UNIT FOUR

PART 1

Analyze and Extend

Reading Strategy

Interpret Meaning Direct students to read the Willa Cather quotation. Say: Explain Cather's meaning in your own words. (Cather says that in the West, the sky is greater than in other places and that people feel exposed rather than covered.)

View the Art ★

Answer: The people in the painting seem small and insignificant, whereas the sky seems vast and expansive. Life was greatly affected by nature and the environment.

Oscar Berninghaus (1874–1952) is known for his landscapes, especially those depicting the American Southwest.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Some students may be unfamiliar with the history of American settlement. In 1804 President Jefferson appointed Meriweather Lewis and William Clark to lead an exploration of the unclaimed land in the West. Later, in 1848, Mexico surrendered its claim to all the territories north of its current border. This entitled the United States to take possession of this land and enabled pioneers to move westward and settle in these territories. Other events, such as the California Gold Rush in 1849, encouraged settlers to move to the West. Point out that many settlers came from crowded cities or wooded land. Ask: Why might the sky seem more like a roof in one place than in another? (Possible answers: Crowds of people, buildings, and trees could give a person the feeling of being covered with a roof. In a place without close surroundings, the sky might seem open, endless.)

For additional support for English Learners, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 19.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Literature Launchers:
Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Selection Launcher

Selection Focus
Transparencies 30, 32

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 43

Or give students an example of exaggeration and overstatement. For example, Say: The raccoon was the size of a St. Bernard! Discuss how exaggerating the size of the raccoon is more humorous than simply stating that the animal was big. Invite students to provide additional examples, encouraging them to outdo each other with exaggeration. Have students consider, as they read, how exaggeration can create humor.

Before You Read

The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County

Meet Mark Twain
(1835–1910)

“When I was born I was a member of a firm of twins,” Twain told an audience in 1901. “And one of them disappeared.” Although not actually a twin, Twain did have two sides. Born Samuel Langhorne Clemens, he took as his pen name a term used by riverboat pilots in navigation: Mark Twain.

Missouri Boyhood Samuel Clemens spent his early life in Missouri, chiefly in Hannibal on the west bank of the Mississippi River. Life there was full of adventure, but the death of Clemens's father when the boy was just eleven forced him to curtail his childhood escapades and his schooling in order to work as a printer's apprentice. At twenty-one, Clemens fulfilled his lifelong dream of becoming a riverboat pilot on the Mississippi. As he declared, “a pilot was the only unfettered and entirely independent being that lived on the earth.”

> “My books are water; those of the great geniuses are wine. Everybody drinks water.”
>
> —Mark Twain

Travels When the Civil War closed the Mississippi to commercial traffic, Clemens headed for Nevada in hopes of striking it rich. He eventually settled in San Francisco, where he met author Bret Harte, lectured, and worked as a journalist. During this time, Twain wrote the story that brought him his first taste of fame: “The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County.” In 1867, as a traveling correspondent for the Alta California, Twain set out for Europe and the Middle East. This journey provided the material for The Innocents Abroad; or, The New Pilgrim's Progress (1869), which poked fun at inexperienced American travelers and quickly became a best seller.

Literary Success In 1870 Twain married Olivia Langdon, a wealthy easterner. They settled in Hartford, Connecticut, where Twain met William Dean Howells, the most influential literary critic of the day. In Howells's Atlantic Monthly, Twain recounted his experiences as a riverboat pilot in a series called “Old Times on the Mississippi,” which he embellished and published eight years later as Life on the Mississippi (1883). The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (1876) established Twain as a master of fiction, and its sequel, The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (1884), cemented Twain's place as one of the greatest novelists the United States has ever produced. His use of realism and detail influenced many later writers of American fiction, including Ernest Hemingway, who stated that “all modern American literature comes from one book by Mark Twain called Huckleberry Finn.”

Plagued by financial misfortunes and the deaths of loved ones, Twain's later years found him frequently embittered. In some of his later works, Twain brooded over the dark side of human nature. Today, however, he is remembered for capturing the brash, optimistic spirit and youthful vitality of his fellow Americans.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Mark Twain, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Selection Skills

The Celebrated Jumping Frog...

Literary Elements
- Dialect (SE pp. 497, 499, 502, 503)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 501)

Reading Skills
- Analyze Comic Devices (SE pp. 497, 500–503; TE p. 498)
- Classify (TE p. 498)
- Dialect (TE p. 500)
- Infer (TE p. 502)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Origins (SE p. 503)
- Visual Vocabulary (SE pp. 499–500)
- Use Adjectives (TE p. 497)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a Story (SE p. 503)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

Which of your friends or family members is the best storyteller? What makes this person's stories effective? Discuss these questions with a partner.

Build Background

In 1848 James W. Marshall discovered rich deposits of gold at Sutter's Mill, near Coloma. This discovery led to the California gold rush, during which many adventurous people thronged to California to prospect for gold, hoping to "strike it rich." In the remote mining camps and frontier towns, life was hard and entertainment was scarce. For fun, people invented tall tales—stories filled with humorous exaggerations.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Regionalism

As you read, ask yourself, What techniques does Twain use to give you the flavor of the Old West during the Gold Rush?

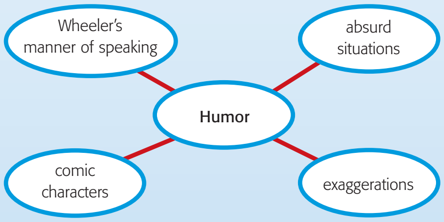
Literary Element Dialect

Dialect is a variation of a language spoken by a particular group, often within a specific region and time. Dialects may differ from the standard form of a language in vocabulary, pronunciation, or grammatical form. As you read, ask yourself, What are some examples of dialect in this story? What effect does Twain's use of dialect achieve?

Reading Strategy Analyze Comic Devices

In addition to dialect, Twain uses several other devices to create humor, including absurd situations, comic characters, and exaggerations.

Tip: Take Notes Use a web diagram to help you record details about each comic device listed.



Learning Objectives

For pages 496–503

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing dialect.

Reading: Analyzing comic devices.

Writing: Writing a story.

Vocabulary

garrulous (gar´ ə ləs) adj. talkative; p. 498 Our garrulous neighbor went on with his story, never pausing for breath.

conjecture (kən jek´ chər) v. to form an opinion without definite evidence; to guess; p. 498 Not really sure, I conjectured that she meant more than she said.

dilapidated (di lap´ ə dā´ tid) adj. fallen into ruin or decay; shabby; p. 498 Pigeons flew through the holes in the dilapidated roof.

interminable (in tur´ mi nə bəl) adj. seemingly endless; p. 499 The dull speech lasted only fifteen minutes, but seemed interminable.

enterprising (en´ tər prī´ zing) adj. showing energy and initiative, especially in beginning new projects; p. 502 The enterprising class planned to raise money in a new way—by having a silent auction.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Explain that Twain uses dialect to give his characters personality, but that such use of the language would be considered incorrect when writing or speaking formally. Point out that Mr. Wheeler is telling a story and that his sentences seem to go on and on, as if he is thinking aloud. His dialect would have been very common among the people of Angel's Camp but sounds very distinctive to a modern reader. Have students read the first sentence of Mr. Wheeler's story and identify deviations from standard or common English usage. (He uses "feller" in place of fellow and "curiosest" rather than most curious or strange.) Have students suggest synonyms for any other nonstandard words they encounter as they read.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Simon Wheeler tells the narrator the colorful story of Jim Smiley, who loved to gamble so much that he would take any side in a bet. Smiley is eventually outwitted by a stranger who agrees to bet on a frog-jumping competition. As Smiley leaves in search of a frog to compete against his own frog, Dan'l Webster, the stranger fills Dan'l's stomach with small metal pellets. The stranger wins the bet because Dan'l becomes so heavy he cannot jump.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 20–25.

Vocabulary

Apply Meaning Have students think of people, places, or activities that can be described using one of the vocabulary words. Volunteers should suggest their ideas while other students guess the matching vocabulary word. For example: "A haunted house" might be described as "dilapidated." "A wait in a doctor's office" could be called "interminable."

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 28.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Regionalism Say: Keep these questions in mind as you read: How do the setting details suggest a specific local community? (Details paint a vivid picture of a western mining camp.) How are Twain's characters unique to their local place? (They speak in dialect and use unique local words such as straddle-bug.)

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Comic Devices Have students examine the prediction about Simon Wheeler. Ask: How does Twain use exaggeration to create humor here? (He suggests that Wheeler will bore the narrator "nearly to death.")

Big Idea 3

Regionalism Answer: It would be stark and unsophisticated—perhaps even dangerous.

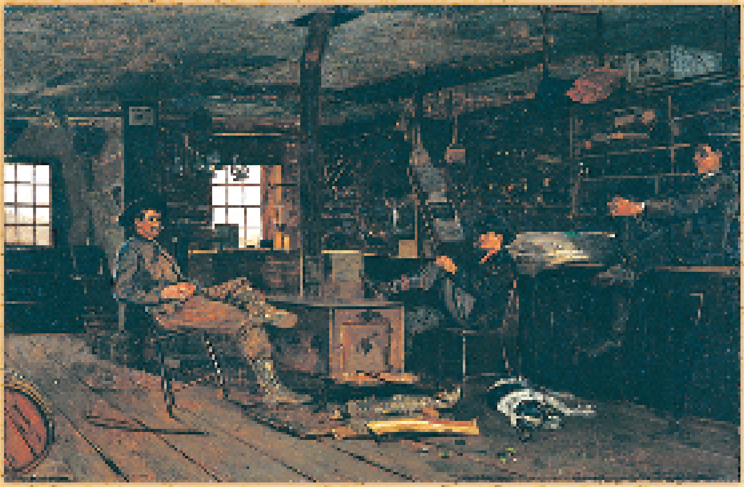
Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 10.2
DRP: 59
Lexile: 1410



The Country Store, 1872. Winslow Homer. Oil on board, 11½ x 18 in.

The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County

Mark Twain

In compliance with the request of a friend of mine, who wrote me from the East, I called on good-natured, garrulous old Simon Wheeler, and inquired after my friend's friend, Leonidas W. Smiley, as requested to do, and I hereunto append[1] the result. 1 I have a lurking suspicion that Leonidas W. Smiley is a myth; that my friend never knew such a personage; and that he only conjectured that, if I asked old Wheeler about him, it would remind him of his infamous Jim Smiley, and he would go to 2 work and bore me nearly to death with some infernal[2] reminiscence of him as long and tedious as it should be useless to me. If that was the design, it certainly succeeded.

I found Simon Wheeler dozing comfortably by the bar-room stove of the old dilapidated tavern in the ancient mining camp of Angel's,[3] and I noticed that he was fat and bald-headed, and had an expression of winning gentleness and simplicity upon his tranquil countenance.[4] He roused up and gave me good-day. I told him a friend of mine had commissioned me to make some inquiries about a cherished companion of his boyhood named Leonidas W. Smiley—Rev. Leonidas W. Smiley—a young minister of the Gospel, who he had heard was at one time a resident of Angel's Camp. I added that, if Mr. Wheeler could tell me any thing about this Rev. Leonidas W. Smiley, I would feel under many obligations to him.

Simon Wheeler backed me into a corner and blockaded me there with his chair, and then sat me down and reeled off the monotonous narrative which follows this paragraph. He never smiled, he never frowned, he never changed his voice from the gentle-flowing key to which he

---

[1] Append means "to add as a supplement" or "to attach."
[2] Infernal means "awful" or "thoroughly unpleasant."
[3] Angel's refers to Angel's Camp.
[4] A tranquil countenance is a calm face.

Vocabulary

garrulous (gar´ ə ləs) adj. talkative conjecture (kən jek´ chər) v. to form an opinion without definite evidence; to guess dilapidated (di lap´ə dā´tid) adj. fallen into ruin or decay; shabby

Regionalism What sort of atmosphere would you expect to find in a mining camp? 3

Reading Practice

Classify Good writers create well-rounded characters by describing their actions, appearances, and personalities. Ask students to read the second and third paragraphs of this story, looking for descriptions of Simon Wheeler. Have students classify the descriptions in a chart like the one below.

After students have completed the chart, Ask: Through whose eyes does the reader see Wheeler's character? (through the eyes of the narrator) Ask: Does the description of Wheeler seem positive or negative? Explain. (Students may say that the description is negative because it makes Wheeler appear lazy and simple.)

Action	Appearance	Personality

tuned the initial sentence, he never betrayed the slightest suspicion of enthusiasm; but all through the interminable narrative there ran a vein of impressive earnestness and sincerity, which showed me plainly that, so far from his imagining that there was any thing ridiculous or funny about his story, he regarded it as a really important matter, and admired its two heroes as men of transcendent[5] genius in finesse.[6]

To me, the spectacle of a man drifting serenely along through such a queer yarn without ever smiling, was exquisitely absurd. As I said before, I asked him to tell me what he knew of Rev. Leonidas W. Smiley, and he replied as follows. I let him go on in his own way, and never interrupted him once:

Visual Vocabulary
A flume is a trough or chute, often inclined, that carries water.

☆ There was a feller here once by the name of Jim Smiley, in the winter of '49—or may be it was the spring of '50—I don't recollect exactly, somehow, though what makes me think it was one or the other is because I remember the big flume wasn't finished when he first came to the camp; but any way, he was the curiosest man about always betting on any thing that turned up you ever see, if he could get any body to bet on the other side; and if he couldn't he'd change sides. Any way that suited the other man would suit him—any way just so's he got a bet, he was satisfied. But still he was lucky, uncommon lucky; he most always come out winner. He was always ready and laying for a chance; there couldn't be no solitry thing mentioned but that feller'd offer to bet on it, and take any side you please, as I was just telling you. If there was a horse race, you'd find him flush,[7] or you'd find him busted at the end of it; if there was a dog-fight, he'd bet on it; if there was a cat-fight, he'd bet on it; if there was a chicken-fight, he'd bet on it; why, if there was two birds setting on a fence, he would bet you which one would fly first; or if there was a camp-meeting,[8] he would be there reg'lar, to bet on Parson Walker, which he judged to be the best exhorter[9] about here, and so he was, too, and a good man. If he even seen a straddle-bug[10] start to go anywheres, he would bet you how long it would take him to get wherever he was going to, and if you took him up, he would foller that straddle-bug to Mexico but what he would find out where he was bound for and how long he was on the road. Lots of the boys here has seen that Smiley, and can tell you about him. Why, it never made no difference to him—he would bet on any thing—the dangdest feller. Parson Walker's wife laid very sick once, for a good while, and it seemed as if they warn't going to save her; but one morning he come in, and Smiley asked how she was, and he said she was considerable better—thank the Lord for his inf'nit mercy—and coming on so smart that, with the blessing of Prov'dence,[11] she'd get well yet; and Smiley, before he thought, says, "Well, I'll risk two-and-a-half[12] that she don't, any way."

Thish-yer[13] Smiley had a mare—the boys called her the fifteen-minute nag, but that was only in fun, you know, because, of course, she was faster than that—and he used to win money

---

5. Transcendent means "surpassing others" or "superior."
6. Finesse is the smooth or artful handling of a situation.
7. Here, flush means "having a large amount of money" or "rich."
8. A camp-meeting is an outdoor religious gathering, sometimes held in a tent.
9. An exhorter is someone who urges by giving strong advice or warnings; here, a preacher.
10. A straddle-bug is a long-legged beetle.
11. Prov'dence (Providence) is God.
12. Risk two-and-a-half means "risk, or bet, $2.50."
13. Thish-yer is dialect for "this here."

4 Dialect How would you characterize Wheeler's use of language?

Vocabulary

interminable (in tur´mi nə bəl) adj. seemingly endless

Regionalism How does Twain evoke the region in this passage? 5

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Write on the board: "I don't recollect," "couldn't be," and "he'd bet." Explain that the underlined words are contractions created by joining words and using apostrophes in place of omitted letters. Write the expanded version of each contraction and show the changes made (don't comes from do not, and so on.) Have students find other examples in the text, and then discuss how Twain uses

Teach

Literary Element 4

Dialect Answer: Wheeler's language is characterized by contractions, regionalisms, and nonstandard usage.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask students to point out some of Wheeler's contractions and explain what the apostrophe stands for. (so's for so as; feller'd for fellow would; reg'lar for regular)

Big Idea 5

Regionalism Answer: Students might mention that the straddle-bug is a species found in the West or that Smiley's curious behavior is a product of the West.

Writer's Technique ☆

Frame Story A frame story is a story that frames, or surrounds, another story. In a frame story, a writer may set up a situation that allows the narrator to comment on the internal story.

Interactive Read and Write

Other options for teaching this selection can be found in

- Interactive Read and Write for EL Students pp. 147–158
- Interactive Read and Write for Approaching-Level Students, pp. 147–158
- Interactive Read and Write for On-Level Students, pp. 147–158

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Ask: Do you think this story rings true? Why do you think Wheeler tells it? How does the story's style add to its humor? (Students may say that this story is a tall tale told simply to amuse or entertain the stranger. The exaggeration in a tall tale creates the humor.)

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Comic Devices
Answer: It is an exaggeration; it is very unlikely that a dog with no hind legs could win a fight or that a dog would die of a broken heart after losing a fight.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 27.

Political History ☆

President Jackson

Andrew Jackson was president of the United States in the 1830s. He was known for his toughness, his military experience, and the time he had spent on the frontier. Ask: How does Twain evoke the character of Calaveras County by naming the dog Andrew Jackson? (Students may say that the county is tough, like Jackson.)

---

on that horse, for all she was so slow and always had the asthma, or the distemper, or the consumption,[14] or something of that kind. They used to give her two or three hundred yards start, and then pass her under way; but always at the fag-end[15] of the race she'd get excited and desperate-like, and come cavorting[16] and straddling up, and scattering her legs around limber, sometimes in the air, and sometimes out to one side amongst the fences, and kicking up m-o-r-e dust, and raising m-o-r-e racket with her coughing and sneezing and blowing her nose—and always fetch up at the stand[17] just about a neck ahead, as near as you could cipher it down.[18]

Visual Vocabulary
The fo'castle, or forecastle (fōk′ səl), of a steamboat is a raised deck at the front of the boat.

1 And he had a little small bull pup, that to look at him you'd think he wan't worth a cent, but to set around and look ornery, and lay for a chance to steal something. But as soon as money was up on him, he was a different dog; his underjaw'd begin to stick out like the fo'castle of a steamboat, and his teeth would uncover, and shine savage like the furnaces. And a dog might tackle him, and bully-rag[19] him, and bite him, and throw him over his shoulder two or three times, and Andrew Jackson—which was the name of the pup—Andrew Jackson would never let on but what he was satisfied, and hadn't expected nothing else—and the bets being doubled and doubled on the other side all the time, till the money was all up; and then all of a sudden he would grab that other dog jest by the j'int of his hind leg and freeze to it—not chaw, you understand, but only jest grip and hang on till they throwed up the sponge,[20] if it was a year. Smiley always come out winner on that pup, till he harnessed[21] a dog once that didn't have no hind legs, because they'd been sawed off by a circular saw, and when the thing had gone along far enough, and the money was all up, and he come to make a snatch for his pet holt,[22] he saw in a minute how he'd been imposed on, and how the other dog had him in the door,[23] so to speak, and he 'peared surprised, and then he looked sorter discouraged-like, and didn't try no more to win the fight, and so he got shucked out[24] bad. He give Smiley a look, as much as to say his heart was broke, and it was his fault, for putting up a dog that hadn't no hind legs for him to take holt of, which was his main dependence in a fight, and then he limped off a piece and laid down and died. It was a good pup, was that Andrew Jackson, and would have made a name for hisself if he'd lived, for the stuff was in him, and he had genius—I know it, because he hadn't had no opportunities to speak of, and it don't stand to reason that a dog could make such a fight as he could under them circumstances, if he hadn't no talent. It always makes me feel sorry when I think of that last fight of his'n, and the way it turned out.

Well, thish-yer Smiley had rat-tarriers,[25] and chicken cocks,[26] and tom-cats, and all them kind of things, till you couldn't rest, and you couldn't fetch nothing for him to bet on but he'd match you. He ketched a frog one day, and took him home, and said he cal'klated[27] to edercate him; and so he never done nothing for three months but set in his back yard and

---

14. Consumption is another name for tuberculosis.
15. The fag-end is the last part.
16. Cavorting means "running and jumping around playfully."
17. Fetch up at the stand means "arrive at the grandstand," which was placed at the finish line.
18. Cipher it down means "calculate it."
19. Bully-rag means "to intimidate" or "to abuse."
20. Throwed up the sponge means "gave up the contest."
21. Here, harnessed means "set up a fight with."
22. A pet holt is a favorite hold.
23. Had him in the door means "had him at a disadvantage or in a tight place."
24. Shucked out means "beaten" or "defeated."
25. Rat-tarriers are dogs (terriers) once used for catching rats.
26. Chicken cocks are adult male chickens (roosters) that are trained to fight.
27. Cal'klated is dialect for calculated, meaning "planned."

Analyze Comic Devices What makes this situation humorous? 2

Reading Practice

Dialect When reading stories containing dialect, students may want to read the text aloud. Suggest that they identify the colloquialisms and other elements of dialect in the text before they read. Refer them to the footnotes for help in understanding particular words and phrases.

Urge students to use Twain's unusual spellings as a guide for pronouncing the dialect. Point out that reading aloud will give them a sense of the rhythm of the speech and thus help them better appreciate Twain's story.

View the Art
This photograph was taken in a mining camp in Alaska in 1901. What aspects of mining camp life are captured in the photograph? ★ learn[28] that frog to jump. And you bet you he did learn him, too. He'd give him a little punch behind, and the next minute you'd see that frog whirling in the air like a doughnut—see him turn one summerset, or may be a couple, if he got a good start, and come down flat-footed and all right, like a cat. He got him up so in the matter of catching flies, and kept him in practice so constant, that he'd nail a fly every time as far as he could see him. Smiley said all a frog wanted was education, and he could do most any thing—and I believe him. Why, I've seen him set Dan'l Webster[29] down here on this floor—Dan'l Webster was the name of the frog—and sing out, "Flies, Dan'l, flies!" and quicker'n you could wink, he'd spring straight up, and snake a fly off'n the counter there, and flop down on the floor again as solid as a gob of mud, and fall to scratching the side of his head with his hind foot as indifferent as if he hadn't no idea he'd been doin' any more'n any frog might do. You never see a frog so modest and straightfor'ard as he was, for all he was so gifted. And when it come to fair and square jumping on a dead level, he could get over more ground at one straddle[30] than any animal of his breed you ever see. Jumping on a dead level was his strong suit, you understand; and when it come to that, Smiley would ante up[31] money on him as long as he had a red.[32] Smiley was monstrous proud of his frog, and well he might be, for fellers that had traveled and been everywheres, all said he laid over any frog that ever they see.

Well, Smiley kept the beast in a little lattice box, and he used to fetch him down town sometimes and lay for a bet. One day a feller—a stranger in the camp, he was—come across him with his box, and says:

"What might it be that you've got in the box?"

And Smiley says, sorter indifferent like, "It might be a parrot, or it might be a canary, may be, but it an't—it's only just a frog."

And the feller took it, and looked at it careful, and turned it round this way and that, and says, "H'm—so 'tis. Well, what's he good for?"

"Well," Smiley says, easy and careless, "He's good enough for one thing, I should judge—he can outjump any frog in Calaveras county."

The feller took the box again, and took another long, particular look, and give it back to Smiley, and says, very deliberate, "Well, I

---

[28] Here, learn means "teach."

[29] Dan'l Webster refers to Daniel Webster (1782–1852), a famous orator who served as a U.S. senator and a U.S. secretary of state.

[30] Here, straddle means "to jump."

[31] Ante up means "to put into the pool" or "to bet."

[32] A red refers to a red cent, meaning "any money at all."

3 Analyze Comic Devices How does Twain create humor in this passage?

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Analyze Comic Devices

Answer: Wheeler personifies the frog, endowing it with human modesty along with extraordinary talent.

ADVANCED Say: Mark Twain also wrote social commentary. By personifying the frog, he may be inviting readers to find a comment on people. What kind of people might Twain be criticizing with this description of the frog? (Students may say that Twain is making fun of braggarts and possibly politicians, who are not known for being modest.)

View the Photograph ★

Answer: Students might cite the bleakness of the background, the simple clothes of the men, or the proud, resilient look in the faces and posture of the men.

In this photograph, the miners hold pans that were used to separate gold from the dirt and gravel in which it was found.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Point out colloquialisms such as thish-yer, j'int, and an't. Twain used these informal words and phrases to reproduce the local dialect. His spellings suggest how the colloquialisms should be pronounced. Help students practice pronouncing and understanding them by having them read the full sentence that includes the colloquialism aloud. Then have them replace the colloquialisms with standard English words.

Established Help students see the humor in the story. Read a short section, such as the description of Dan'l's jump and how he acts after jumping. Say: Describe the images you see when you hear this passage. What is most ridiculous about them? (The images of a frog jumping, landing, scratching its head, expressing indifference, or looking like a "gob of mud" are humorous.)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Comic Devices

Answer: By filling Dan'l Webster with quail shot, the stranger will make the frog too heavy to jump.

Literary Element 2

Dialect Answer: Well, this Smiley had a yellow one-eyed cow that had no tail, only a short stump like a banana, and ______

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 28.

Progress Check

Can students analyze dialect?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 26.

don't see no p'ints[33] about that frog that's any better'n any other frog."

"May be you don't," Smiley says, "May be you understand frogs, and may be you don't understand 'em; may be you've had experience, and may be you an't only a amature, as it were. Anyways, I've got my opinion, and I'll risk forty dollars that he can outjump any frog in Calaveras county."

And the feller studied a minute, and then says, kinder sad like, "Well, I'm only a stranger here, and I an't got no frog; but if I had a frog, I'd bet you."

And then Smiley says, "That's all right—that's all right—if you'll hold my box a minute, I'll go and get you a frog." And so the feller took the box, and put up his forty dollars along with Smiley's, and set down to wait.

So he set there a good while thinking and thinking to hisself, and then he got the frog out and prized his mouth open and took a teaspoon and filled him full of quail shot[34]—filled him pretty near up to his chin—and set him on the floor. Smiley he went to the swamp and slopped around in the mud for a long time, and finally he ketched a frog, and fetched him in, and give him to this feller, and says:

"Now, if you're ready, set him alongside of Dan'l, with his fore-paws just even with Dan'l, and I'll give the word." Then he says, "One—two—three—jump!" and him and the feller touched up the frogs from behind, and the new frog hopped off, but Dan'l give a heave, and hysted up his shoulders—so—like a Frenchman, but it wan't no use—he couldn't budge; he was planted as solid as an anvil, and he couldn't no more stir than if he was anchored out. Smiley was a good deal surprised, and he was disgusted too, but he didn't have no idea what the matter was, of course.

The feller took the money and started away; and when he was going out at the door, he sorter jerked his thumb over his shoulders—this way—at Dan'l, and says again, very deliberate, "Well, I don't see no p'ints about that frog that's any better'n any other frog."

Smiley he stood scratching his head and looking down at Dan'l a long time, and at last he says, "I do wonder what in the nation that frog throw'd off for—I wonder if there an't something the matter with him—he 'pears to look mighty baggy, somehow." And he ketched Dan'l by the nap of the neck, and lifted him up and says, "Why, blame my cats, if he don't weigh five pound!" and turned him upside down, and he belched out a double handful of shot. And then he see how it was, and he was the maddest man—he set the frog down and took out after that feller, but he never ketched him. And—

[Here Simon Wheeler heard his name called from the front yard, and got up to see what was wanted.] And turning to me as he moved away, he said: "Just set where you are, stranger, and rest easy—I an't going to be gone a second."

But, by your leave, I did not think that a continuation of the history of the enterprising vagabond Jim Smiley would be likely to afford[35] me much information concerning the Rev. Leonidas W. Smiley, and so I started away.

At the door I met the sociable Wheeler returning, and he buttonholed[36] me and recommenced:

"Well, thish-yer Smiley had a yaller one-eyed cow that didn't have no tail, only jest a short stump like a bannanner, and——"

"Oh! hang Smiley and his afflicted cow!" I muttered, good-naturedly, and bidding the old gentleman good-day, I departed.

---

[33] P'ints is dialect for points, meaning "qualities" or "characteristics."

[34] Quail shot is ammunition made up of small lead pellets.

[35] Afford means "to give" or "to provide."

[36] Buttonholed means "detained in conversation."

1 Analyze Comic Devices How might the stranger's action bring about an absurd situation?

Dialect How would you express Wheeler's statement in Standard English? 2

Vocabulary

enterprising (en´ tər prī´ zing) adj. showing energy and initiative, especially in beginning new projects

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Author's Purpose Explain to students that some people interpret Twain's humor as criticism of particular people or groups of people. Ask: Who do you think is the target in this story and why? (People from the Wes, from Smiley's overconfident attitude and people from the East from the narrator's arrogance.) Say: Compare the lives of the narrator and Smiley. (The narrator is from the East and has probably never worked in a mining town. Smiley leads a rougher life and has probably worked in the mines.) Ask: What might Twain be suggesting about some Easterners' opinions of Westerners? (Twain may be suggesting that Easterners consider Westerners uncultured and of a lower status.)

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What questions would you like to ask Simon Wheeler?
2. (a)How does the narrator come to meet Simon Wheeler and to hear his story? (b)What can you infer about the narrator's attitude toward Wheeler?
3. (a)Why does Wheeler call Smiley "the curiosest man"? (b)What conclusions can you draw about Smiley's character, based on the tale Wheeler tells?
4. (a)What does Smiley entice the stranger to do? (b)What event or events determine the outcome of the encounter with the stranger? Explain your answer.

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Why do you think Wheeler tells his listener about the mare and bull pup first, before focusing on the frog?
6. Who is the main character in this story? Explain.
7. (a)In this selection, one story serves as a frame for another story. Which story is the frame? (b)Why might Twain have chosen this structure?

Connect

8. Big Idea Regionalism How does Twain capture the flavor of the Old West in this story?
9. Connect to Today Think of some humorous stories, movies, or television shows you know. How does Twain's brand of humor compare with theirs?

Literary Element Dialect

Twain uses dialect to evoke the region and the people he is writing about, as in this example: "He ketched a frog one day, and took him home, and said he cal'klated to edercate him. . . ."

1. What words in the example above does Wheeler pronounce differently from Standard English?
2. What is the difference between Wheeler's language and the narrator's? What does this difference suggest about them?

Reading Strategy Analyze Comic Devices

Mark Twain first achieved fame as a western humorist, and his humor is irresistible. He once wrote, "The humorous story may be spun out to great length and may wander around as much as it pleases, and arrive nowhere in particular."

1. Does this story fit Twain's description of a comic story?
2. What elements of humor in this story do you find most effective?

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Word Origins Studying the etymology, or origins, of a word can help you understand its meaning. Create a chart with the headings Word, Definition, Etymology. Fill it in with information on the vocabulary words from the selection. Use a dictionary for help.

garrulous
interminable conjecture enterprising dilapidated

Writing

Write a Story In a few paragraphs, finish Wheeler's story about the "yaller one-eyed cow," making sure to reflect Twain's use of regional dialect and humor. Refer to your web diagram from page 497 to review how Twain creates humor.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

After You Read

Assess

1. Possible answers: Did Smiley really exist? What happened to Smiley's one-eyed cow?
2. (a) The narrator's friend tells him to call on Wheeler to ask after Leonidas W. Smiley. (b) Wheeler is boring, ignorant.
3. (a) Smiley will take either side of a bet. (b) He is obsessed with gambling and is insensitive.
4. (a) Enter a frog-jumping contest (b) The stranger weights the frog.
5. Wheeler wants to establish Smiley's gambling obsession and his use of animals and tricks.
6. Simon Wheeler, the one who tells funny stories about Smiley
7. (a) The narrator's story about meeting Wheeler (b) He can comment on the story and contrast both speakers' language.
8. In his depiction of Wheeler, a westerner who loves to talk
9. Students may mention the use of exaggeration in current films and characters whose dialect may seem out of place.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 161–162.

Literary Element

1. ketched ("caught"), cal'klated ("calculated"), and edercate ("educate")
2. Wheeler speaks a regional dialect and the narrator Standard English with a large vocabulary. The narrator is more educated.

Reading Strategy

1. Yes, because Wheeler's tale has no real purpose. It recounts a number of incidents in a meandering way and ends only because the narrator leaves.
2. Answers might include specific examples of exaggeration and parts of the characterization of Smiley.

Vocabulary

The etymology of the vocabulary follows: garrulous: Latin garrire means "to chatter"; interminable: Latin interminabilis means "not (in-) relating to or making boundaries (-terminalis)"; conjecture: Latin conjectura means "guess"; enterprising: Middle English enterpris means "to undertake"; dilapidated: Latin dīlapidāre means "to demolish or destroy."

Writing

Students should imitate Wheeler's dialect and create an exaggerated event involving Smiley's gambling and ability to cooperate with animals.

Focus

Summary

As a riverboat pilot, Mark Twain came to know the Mississippi River intimately. He began to view the river as a road to navigate, not as the romantic natural phenomenon he had seen before.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 33–44.

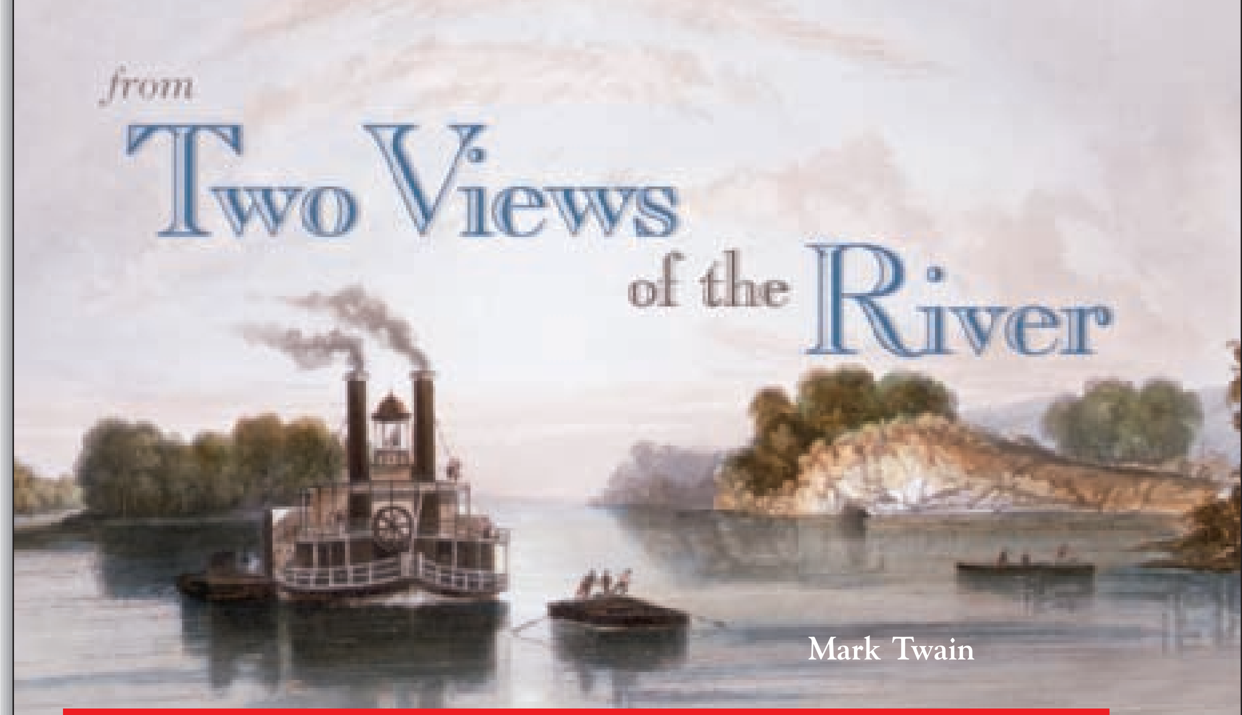
Teach

View the Art ★

Steamboats were invented in the late 1700s and came into regular use in the early 1800s on rivers that included the Mississippi. Ask: How does this picture show both the river's romantic aspects and its practical uses? (Students may say that the picture shows boats using the river for transportation and that the shadows give it a mystical appearance.)

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 7.7
DRP: 63
Lexile: 1130



from

Two Views of the River

Mark Twain

Before You Read

Literary Element Analogy

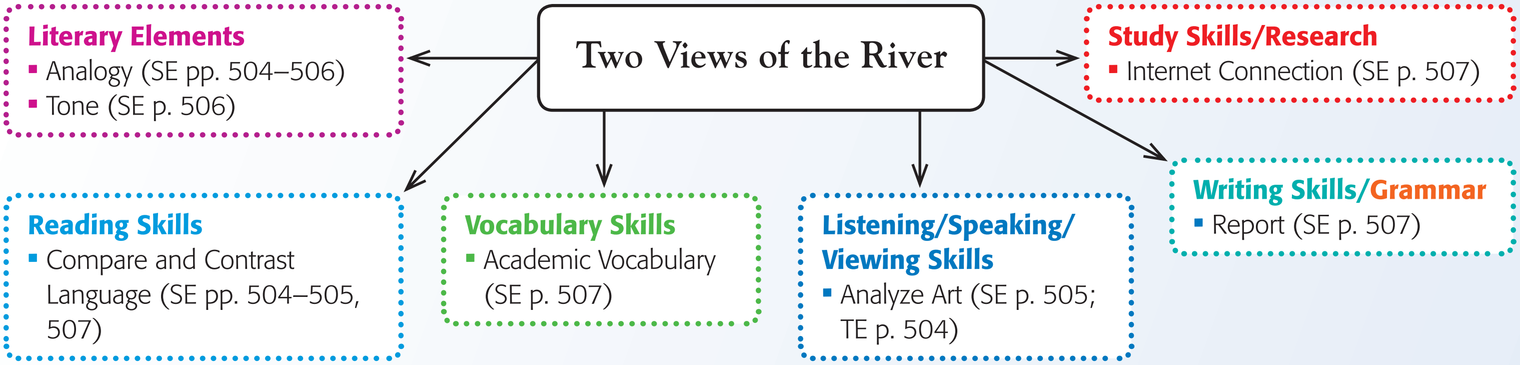
Writers use analogies to make experiences more vivid for the reader or to explain unfamiliar things by comparing them to familiar things. As you read, ask yourself, What analogy does Twain use in this memoir about his experiences as a riverboat pilot? What feelings does this comparison evoke?

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Language

Twain's first two sentences in this part of Life on the Mississippi suggest a contrast: ". . . I had made a valuable acquisition. But I had lost something, too." As you read, ask, What diction, or choice of words, does Twain use to develop this contrast?

1 Now when I had mastered the language of this water and had come to know every trifling feature that bordered the great river as familiarly as I knew the letters of the alphabet, I had made a valuable acquisition. But I had lost something, too. I had lost something which could never be restored to me while I lived. All the grace, the beauty, the poetry had gone out of the majestic river! I still keep in mind a certain wonderful sunset which I witnessed when steamboating was new to me. A broad expanse of the river was turned to blood; in the middle distance the red hue brightened into gold, through which a solitary log came floating, black and conspicuous; in one place a long, slanting mark lay sparkling upon the water; in another the surface was broken by boiling, tumbling rings, that were as many-tinted as an opal; where the ruddy flush was faintest, was a smooth spot that was covered with graceful circles and radiating lines, ever so delicately traced; the shore on our left was densely wooded, and the somber shadow that fell from this forest was broken in one place by a long, ruffled trail that shone like silver; and high

Selection Skills



Two Views of the River

Literary Elements
- Analogy (SE pp. 504–506)
- Tone (SE p. 506)

Study Skills/Research
- Internet Connection (SE p. 507)

Reading Skills
- Compare and Contrast Language (SE pp. 504–505, 507)

Vocabulary Skills
- Academic Vocabulary (SE p. 507)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 505; TE p. 504)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Report (SE p. 507)

above the forest wall a clean-stemmed dead tree waved a single leafy bough that glowed like a flame in the unobstructed splendor that was flowing from the sun. There were graceful curves, reflected images, woody heights, soft distances; and over the whole scene, far and near, the dissolving lights drifted steadily, enriching it, every passing moment, with new marvels of coloring.

I stood like one bewitched.[1] I drank it in, in a speechless rapture. The world was new to me, and I had never seen anything like this at home. But as I have said, a day came when I began to cease from noting the glories and the charms which the moon and the sun and the twilight wrought[2] upon the river's face; another day came when I ceased altogether to note them. Then, if that sunset scene had been repeated, I should have looked upon it without rapture, and should have commented upon it, inwardly, after this fashion: This sun means that we are going to have wind tomorrow; that floating log means that the river is rising, small thanks to it; that slanting mark on the water refers to a bluff reef which is going to kill somebody's steamboat one of these nights, if it keeps on stretching out like that; those tumbling "boils" show a dissolving bar and a changing channel there; the lines and circles in the slick water over yonder are a warning that that troublesome place is shoaling up[3] dangerously; that silver streak in the shadow of the forest is the "break" from a new snag, and he has located himself in the very best place he could have found to fish for steamboats; that tall dead tree, with a single living branch, is not going to last long, and then how is a body ever going to get through this blind place at night without the friendly old landmark?

No, the romance and the beauty were all gone from the river. All the value any feature of it had for me now was the amount of usefulness it could furnish toward compassing the safe piloting of a steamboat. Since those days, I have pitied doctors from my heart. What does the lovely flush in a beauty's cheek mean to a doctor but a "break" that ripples above some deadly disease? Are not all her visible charms sown thick with what are to him the signs and symbols of hidden decay? Does he ever see her beauty at all, or doesn't he simply view her professionally, and comment upon her unwholesome condition all to himself? And doesn't he sometimes wonder whether he has gained most or lost most by learning his trade? ∾

Mark Twain on Ship Deck, March 15, 1901.

View the Art This photo shows Twain in a reflective mood on a voyage. How do you think he might have been feeling when the photo was taken? What might he have been doing? ★

---

[1] Bewitched means "captivated" or "entranced."

[2] Wrought means "created."

[3] To shoal up means "to become shallow."

2 Compare and Contrast Language How has Twain's perspective of the tree changed?

Analogy What do doctors and riverboat pilots have in common? 3

Teach

Big Idea 1

Regionalism Say: Keep this question in mind as you read: How does Twain capture the world of the Mississippi River in this excerpt? (Students may notice his vivid details.)

Reading Strategy 2

Compare and Contrast Language Answer: Twain no longer perceives the tree as something beautiful. It has become only a useful landmark for navigation.

Literary Element 3

Analogy Answer: Their training and experience blind them to beauty.

View the Photograph ★

Answer: He may have been reflecting on his life, travels, and literary success, or thinking about his next literary endeavor.

Advanced Learners/Pre-AP

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Identify the Theme Remind students that the theme is the central idea or message. Rather than state themes directly, authors may imply them through elements such as diction, images, and structure. Ask: What message do you think Twain may be trying to express in this essay? (Students may say that knowledge and experience result in both losses and gains.) Say: Identify details in the passage that support the theme. Include examples of word choice and imagery. (Students may say that once Twain mastered the river, he had "made a valuable acquisition"; however, he notes that "I had lost something which could never be restored to me while I lived." He suggests that he gained practical knowledge of the river but lost appreciation for its beauty.)

Point out the similarities in the structures of the first and second paragraphs. Discuss the effect of connecting a long string of images with semicolons to describe the river in both paragraphs. Ask: Why does Twain use a similar structure but very different diction and images? (Students may say that Twain wants to show that he has changed but that the river has not.)

After You Read

Assess

1. Twain was perceptive, sensitive to beauty, realistic, and introspective.
2. (a) The "language" includes the details that make the river seem beautiful but also signal danger. (b) As with a foreign language, it takes skill to "read" the river correctly.
3. (a) Twain refers to the glorious impression the river makes on an observer, as when a sunset turns it blood-red and gold. (b) As a riverboat pilot, Twain must look out for anything that will imperil his journey. The river's beautiful features could signal disaster.
4. (a) Technical terms include bluff reef, bar, channel, and shoaling up. (b) He includes these terms to show that he views the river as a trained professional. The terms add credibility to his memoir.
5. Students should support their views with evidence and note that Twain lost his rapture but gained valuable knowledge.
6. Twain's main purpose was to examine a defining moment in his own life and to convey that learning a skill entails both gain and loss.
7. Possible answer: No, he makes the job sound difficult and dangerous.
8. Navigating the Mississippi River takes skill, experience, and an eye for the traps that lie beneath its beauty.
9. As a riverboat pilot, Twain visited many towns and met different people. Twain tried to capture the dialect and setting of what he heard and saw so that his readers and audiences could share in his travels and experiences.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What are your impressions of Mark Twain's personality?
2. (a)What is "the language of this water" that Twain masters? (b)Why does he suggest that learning how to navigate the river is like mastering a foreign language?
3. (a)What does Twain mean by "the romance and the beauty" of the river? (b)Why does he lose the ability to see these special qualities forever?
4. (a)What terms does Twain use that would be familiar mainly to riverboat pilots or people living along the river? (b)Why does Twain include these terms in this memoir?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Do you think that Twain gained more or lost more by learning the trade of a riverboat pilot?
6. What do you think was Twain's main purpose for writing this memoir?
7. Does Twain make the job of riverboat pilot sound appealing?

Connect

8. Big Idea Regionalism What did you learn about the challenges of life on the Mississippi?
9. Connect to the Author How did Twain's travels and experiences as a riverboat pilot affect his writing?

Literary Element Analogy

SAT Skills Practice

1. By concluding this section with an analogy, Twain
   - (A) appeals to the widest possible audience
   - (B) confesses that he suffers from a grave illness
   - (C) ennobles the profession of riverboat pilot
   - (D) expresses regret at not becoming a doctor
   - (E) emphasizes his deep sense of loss
2. Which of the following would have been the best substitute for the profession of doctor in Twain's analogy?
   - (A) farmer due to the need to anticipate problems in nature
   - (B) musician due to the long training and practice required
   - (C) train engineer due to the exposure to different landscapes
   - (D) stagecoach driver due to the transportation of goods and people
   - (E) factory worker due to the repetitive labor involved

Review: Tone

As you learned in Unit One, tone is the attitude that a writer expresses toward his or her subject matter. Tone is conveyed through elements such as word choice, punctuation, sentence structure, and figures of speech. A writer's tone may convey a variety of attitudes, such as sympathy, objectivity, or humor.

Partner Activity Meet with a classmate and discuss the tone of Twain's memoir. Fill in a chart like the one below with elements from the story that convey tone. Based on these elements, list the tone of the memoir at the top.

Tone:

word choice	sentence structure	figures of speech

Literary Element

1. E is the correct answer because the analogy with a familiar profession helps readers understand the loss he feels.
2. A is the correct answer because the analogy is meant to express Twain's sadness at not seeing the beauty in nature after being trained to look for problems.

Review: Tone

Twain's tone is resigned and a little sad.

Progress Check

Can students analyze analogies?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 39.

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Language

In this section of Life on the Mississippi, Twain describes how his perspective of the river shifted from the poetic to the practical as he learned the trade of a riverboat pilot.

1. What words in the first paragraph capture "the romance and the beauty" of the river?
2. What words in the second paragraph convey a practical view of the river?

Academic Vocabulary

Mark Twain captures the character of a region in his writings about life along the Mississippi River.

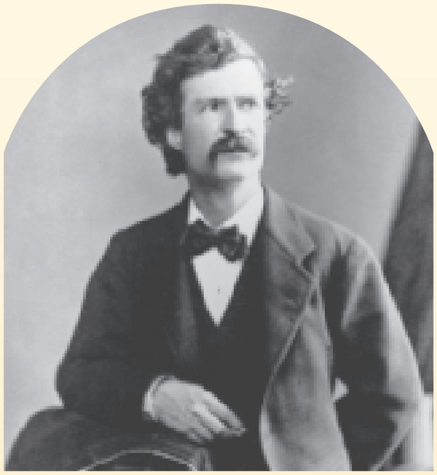
Region is an academic word. More familiar words that are similar in meaning are area, territory, and province. To further explore the meaning of this word, answer the questions below.

1. What traits of the people of the Mississippi River region does Mark Twain depict in his writings?
2. How do the environmental aspects of a region define the character of its inhabitants?

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.



Research and Report

Internet Connection

Assignment People still travel the Mississippi River by boat, just as in Twain's time. Use the Internet to research a short stretch of the river. Then use the computer to design a travel brochure describing a boat trip in that area. Include the distance traveled, cardinal (north, south, east, and west) and ordinal (northeast, southeast, northwest, and southwest) directions of travel, landmarks, and a map or photos.

Get Ideas Focus on choosing a manageable section of the river. For example, you might research the region known as the "Mississippi Delta" (the section between the cities of Memphis and Vicksburg, known especially for its connection to music). Once you have determined your focus, give your brochure an appropriate title.

EXAMPLE:

Visit the Mississippi Delta
Home of the Blues

Then, using search terms related to your particular focus, do your Internet research.

Research Strategies As you gather your information, carefully evaluate it for objectivity and reliability. For example, Web sites operated by the National Park Service or state tourism boards would be reliable sources of information. Keep a list of your sources.

Report Once you have gathered your information, use the computer to create your travel brochure. Make an effective use of typefaces and graphics.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

After You Read

Assess

Reading Strategy

1. grace, beauty, poetry, majestic, and sparkling
2. kill, warning, troublesome, dangerously, and blind place

Progress Check

Can students compare and contrast language?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 40.

Academic Vocabulary

1. Twain captures the community of mining camp workers and their pastime of telling tales.
2. The environment defines the types of industry that exist there. People in the Old West and the Mississippi region mined in camps and transported goods along the river, defining their belief in hard work and camaraderie.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 163–164.

Research and Report

Use these criteria when evaluating students' travel brochures:

- Did the student focus on a manageable and identifiable portion of the Mississippi?
- Did the student identify a key feature or characteristic of the region to promote?
- Did the student use reliable and appropriate Internet sources?
- Did the student effectively use the computer in laying out the brochure?
- Did the student use descriptive language to entice visitors?

For grammar practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 42.

TIME

Focus

Summary

The article begins with the writer's noting how difficult it is to see the Mississippi River from the ground. As she explores the river and its communities more closely, she discovers its unique personality and her poignant desire to preserve a rich history. While she discovers terrible poverty in towns abandoned by industry, she also finds economic development through tourism and historic recreation.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 45–53.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Clarify Meaning Review the two Preview questions with students, making sure that they understand each one. Then point out strategies for building meaning, such as using subheads to identify main ideas, defining unfamiliar words to clarify sentence meanings, and examining visuals and their captions to gain understanding. Have students create a graphic organizer where they can list questions and answers.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 7.1
DRP: 62
Lexile: 1120

Learning Objectives

For pages 508–513

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Reading:
Clarifying meaning.
Analyzing informational text.
Using text features.

Set a Purpose for Reading

As you read, ask, How have communities along the Mississippi changed since Mark Twain's time?

Preview the Article

1. What have you already learned about life on the Mississippi from reading Twain's work?
2. Read the article's section headings. What clues do these provide about the content?

Reading Strategy Clarify Meaning

When you clarify the meaning of a text, you reread individual sections or paragraphs for deeper understanding. As your read, create a chart like the one started below.

1

Questions	Answers
What does this section mean?
How does this relate to the main idea?

TIME

Life Along the Mississippi

By NANCY GIBBS

UNLESS YOU ARE DRIVING ACROSS IT OR FLYING OVER it or floating down it, it is hard to see the actual Mississippi. Anyone who had anything to do with the river discovered long ago that this huge continental drainpipe was too powerful to leave alone. So the great engineers designed the levees and locks and dams that reduced the number of ships that sank and towns that vanished. But their work also hid the river behind its walls and left the rest to the imagination.

Aside from Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn, the imagination may be the best guide for exploring the Mississippi River. Otherwise you need both a boat and a car, maybe a canoe and a bicycle too, for the skinny inlets and alleys along the way, and a lot of time and patience. We could at best splash in it a little, to see what it felt like and what we might learn—and unlearn—by stopping along the way. It was worth remembering Huck Finn's lesson: The river is the sanctuary; the shore is where you get into trouble.

In a country where travelers lament that every town looks the same—Where's Taco Bell? Where's Home Depot?—it's easy to assume that no region is really distinct anymore. We're all online now, and even in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, a local observes, the kids don't say "y'all" anymore. They say, "you guys," just like on TV.

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Text Structure Have students read the title and the first subhead of the article. Ask: What do you think the main focus of this article will be? (Students may say that the main focus will be people living near the Mississippi.) Point out that text made to stand out in some way, such as the sentence printed across the picture on page 509, also gives the reader clues to the main ideas in an article. Have students read the sentence. Ask: What issue or problem is this article likely to analyze? (Students should note that the article will explain some of the economic issues that trouble the people living on the Mississippi.)

Let us take you on a trip down America's great river, where we explore the troubles and triumphs of people trying to catch up with the new economy.

Diana Walker

Heading South

2 So we were surprised, everywhere we went. The more you explore the communities along the river, and the farther south you travel down into the Mississippi Delta, more than one thing becomes clear: This is still a land unto itself, defined by its colorful, bloody past. It is a land apart from the region that cradles the early stretches of the river itself, the Midwestern states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa. While these states have reinvented themselves three times in a half century, moving from agriculture to industry to high technology, many communities in the Mississippi Delta have wrestled with the explosion of progress and prosperity.

☆ The South is where the country's two wars were fought: the Civil War and, a century later, the battle for civil rights. "Of course the war is not over," says our 87-year-old guide in Vicksburg, Mississippi. Now there is a quieter conflict raging, not on the broad political stage but in the particulars of individual lives. Along the river, people hear about the new economy, but they don't have a ticket to get there. Information superhighway? Progress

Diana Walker (4)

TIME

Teach

Big Idea 2

Regionalism Remind students that Mark Twain grew up in a town on the Mississippi River. "Life Along the Mississippi" shows that many of the characteristics Twain wrote about are still to be found in the Mississippi River region. There is still a strong sense of community and a divide between white people and African Americans. Ask students to suggest ways that the region probably has changed since Twain's time.

Cultural History ☆

Two Wars The Civil War lasted from 1861 to 1865 and caused terrible devastation in the American South. A key issue was the institution of slavery, which was entrenched in the Southern economy and opposed by most Northerners. Conflict between white Americans and African Americans continued with the Civil Rights Movement of the 1950s and 1960s. A key component of this movement was the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which outlawed discrimination on the basis of race.

Approaching Level

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Established Have students read the first section of the article, stopping at the first subhead. Make sure that students are aware of the article's connection to the theme of Regionalism. Ask: What details suggest that the country no longer has distinct regions? (Students may say that many businesses are the same across the country or that young people are less likely to use regional expressions now.)

Have students make and support a prediction about whether Gibbs's article will explain what makes the towns along the Mississippi distinctive. (Students may point out that the text across the photo on the second page of the article suggests that the southern Mississippi region has distinctive troubles and triumphs.)

Reading Strategy 1

Clarify Meaning Have students reread the text under the subhead "A Terrible Beauty." Ask: How has the farming industry changed since Mark Twain's lifetime? (Fewer people are needed to farm the land.) Upon what do local economies now depend? (Towns rely on factories for jobs.) What is the main idea of this section? (The main idea is that parts of the Mississippi River region are very poor.)

Cultural History ☆

Mississippi Like its regional neighbor Arkansas, Mississippi has struggled economically. The state's economic growth has not kept up with that of the rest of the nation, and it appears near the bottom of many economic and social indexes.

In 2005 Hurricane Katrina devastated several communities in Mississippi—particularly on the Biloxi-Gulfport coastline, where 90 percent of the buildings were destroyed.

here is a back road, winding, scenic, and personal, but slow by the standards of a country that hurries into the future.

Even progress on race comes in the most intimate gestures: Last December, as Elnora Littleton in Rosedale, Mississippi, tells it, she became the first African American woman in those parts ever to preach at a white man's funeral. In this part of the country, she says, it is a milestone worth noting. "I made history," she says.

A Terrible Beauty

In the South, the river is the color of café au lait (coffee with milk). Down toward the mouth of the Mississippi, the land was formed of sedimentary deposits from farther upriver, including the rich topsoil blown from the hills of Wyoming into the Missouri and acres of Kansas prairie swallowed by flooding and swept downstream. Mark Twain's characters claimed that a man who drank the water could grow corn in his stomach. You know all this, and yet you are unprepared for the Delta, otherworldly and flat, the best place to grow cotton on this earth. It was once a hellish jungle, cleared by the backbreaking labor of enslaved persons and sharecroppers. It's like a wet western Kansas—beautiful, flat, and fertile.

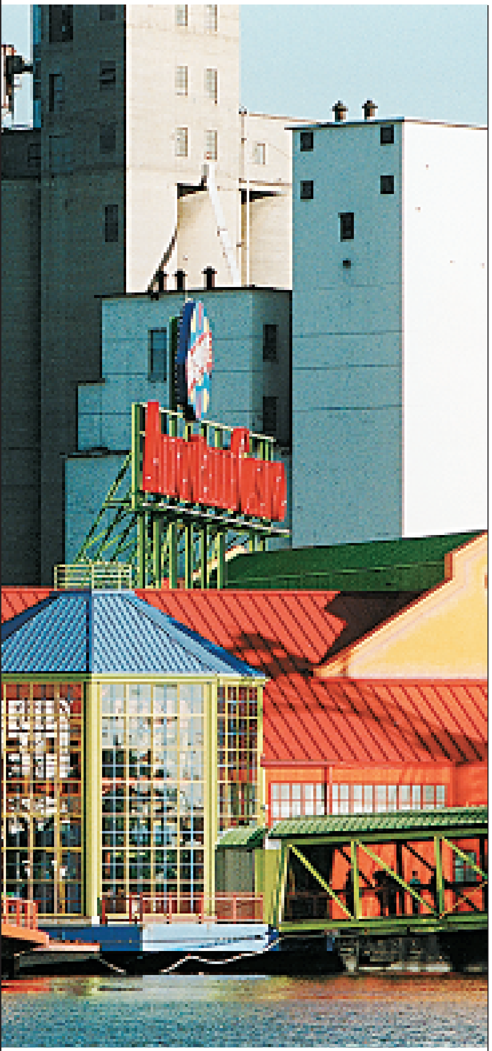
Riverfront architecture in the Mississippi River town of Alton, Illinois, reflects the river's colorful past.

The difference, of course, is that when faced with the shrinking labor needs of modern farming, the good people of western Kansas simply moved away in search of better lives elsewhere. While this happened in the Delta as well, a large number of people chose to stay in one of the poorest regions in the U.S. The average family of four here has an income of $16,538, slightly more than half the national average. In Mississippi County, Arkansas, 35% of kids live in poverty, and 40% of adults don't have a high school diploma.

If the new economy has not yet flowed downstream, there are lots of people who will tell you no one is even looking for it here. Whether or not a town stays afloat has a lot to do with whether the local factory is still open—the fate of the town rests in the hands of Continental Concrete, Sparta Printing, the Mississippi Lime Co., Tower Rock Quarry, Ralston

Writing Practice

Cause and Effect Have students examine the causes and effects of the changes occurring in towns along the Mississippi River. Ask, According to the author, what has caused the deterioration of these towns? (Factory closures, discrimination) What are the effects of the declining economies in the towns? (Although there are no jobs, many people have not moved away creating high levels of poverty.) Have students write a three- to five-paragraph essay explaining the causes that have led to the current situation in towns along the Mississippi and how the people of these towns have been affected. Have them analyze the connections between the causes and effects, using support from the article.



Purina, and Pillsbury. When one of these leaves, and the farms start to fail, an entire town can shrivel and die. Laid-off workers lose their livelihood. Retired workers lose their health insurance. 1

Town and Out?

We were left asking the same question all these towns face as the ground shifts beneath their feet: What's it going to be? Change? Or die? Is there maybe another choice? The towns individually try to reinvent themselves, and the region as a whole tries to reinvent itself. As you move farther south, many towns don't have the roads or infrastructure to recruit some big new car plant or distribution center. The idea of luring a nice little software company is years away.

Suppose you have lost your brickyard, and the tugs no longer stop at your town, and the interstate has drawn the megastores, and even the schools and churches move away, and the young people leave, and Main Street is on life support. The Chamber of Commerce gets together and daydreams: What would it take to bring life back to this town? Or do we just roll up the streets and move on?

For many towns, the answer is to attract tourists. They say, if we can't find some big new employer to bring the new economy to town, how about reverting to the old economy—the very old one? In this polished and pasteurized vision, Main Street becomes a theme park of 19th-century life, with women wearing petticoats and shops selling candlesticks and lemon drops. Kimmswick, Missouri, was almost dead after the lumberyard and the brickyard closed—until 7-Up heiress Luci Anna Ross began buying up collapsing buildings and renting them out as gift shops and bed-and-breakfasts. Now there is the Kimmswick Korner gift shop and lots of places to buy apple butter or have your horse reshod. The annual Apple Butter Festival gets 40,000 people. More than 100,000 come to Hannibal, Missouri, for Tom Sawyer Days on the Fourth of July weekend. Disney even sent a representative to Hannibal to learn how to re-create Tom Sawyer for its theme parks. Having developed everyplace else, Americans are homesteading the past.

Inventing History/Prettifying the Past

But because this re-creation of the past is for tourists, it's an airbrushed souvenir postcard. You see only the good side of a town's history—or a distorted version of that history. In Nauvoo, Illinois, the Mormons celebrate their 19th-century village life as they rebuild the town and its temple as a pilgrimage spot. Glossed over are the bloody religious battles that led to their being pillaged and expelled in the first place. The hotel owner in Kimmswick says the town's latest scheme is reenactments of the Civil War battle there. Was there ever really a Battle of Kimmswick? He concedes that it was, in his words, "just a skirmish that involved three Confederate soldiers hiding in a cave." Whatever.

2 This sort of thing is what social critics denounce as the strip-mining of history to market a version of the past that has a special appeal. This is not re-creating the past, they say, so much as distorting it. Back when life in these towns was real, it wasn't always quaint—yet quaint is what sells now. Create a time that feels sweet and simple, and you don't have to smell the horses or die of cholera.

Cairo's "Main" Dilemma

If you want to visit the most unusual theme park in America, try the

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Clarify Meaning Explain that this article is written in a conversational style and contains colloquial usages such as "Whatever." To clarify meaning, students must complete this incomplete thought in their minds.

Ask: What does the writer mean by "Whatever"? (Students may say that she thinks the town's attempt to reinvent its history is wrong.)

Ask: Is the author's opinion well supported? Explain. (Students' opinions will vary but should be supported by details from the text.)

View the Photograph ★

The Mississippi Delta is a blend of old and new. Modern cities have grown, experiencing significant population growth from within the region and from other regions. Still, the region values its history and its traditions, such as the riverboat.

English Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Intermediate Point out the subhead "Town and Out?" in the article. Explain that it is a play on words and refers to the expression down and out, which means "poor and in need of help." Continue to point out figures of speech encountered in the text, making sure students understand that these phrases are not meant to be taken literally. For example, "the ground shifts beneath their feet" (the future is threatened); "Main Street is on life support" (the town's life is in danger); "roll up the streets" (leave); and "polished and pasteurized" (anything unpleasant removed).

TIME

Teach

Reading Strategy

Clarify Meaning Point out that the final sentences of an article often focus on the most important ideas. Students can clarify meaning by reading the final sentences and connecting them to the text they have already read.

View the Photograph

Many forms of American music originated in the South, including the blues, which many see as the parent of jazz and rock. The blues can be traced to songs and shouts that enslaved Africans used in the fields and to the "down-home" songs of the Mississippi Delta.

IN FORT MADISON, IOWA, a town that has found a way to revive downtown, residents gather for a band concert.

Main Street in Cairo, Illinois. It is a water slide of desolation, one abandoned building after another, with 90% of the storefronts dark and boarded over.

If Cairo is a ghost town, it was the fight for justice that killed it. "It used to be called Little Chicago," says Deputy Mayor Judson Childs, walking a couple of visitors to the town center, where civil rights battles flared in the 1960s. African Americans boycotted stores that discriminated; whites retaliated with violence; federal authorities intervened. But most whites chose to shut down their stores and leave Cairo rather than integrate. Over time the streets of Cairo became empty. Now if you want gas, you have to get it before 8 at night. To shop or go to a movie means driving 30 or 40 miles into Kentucky or Missouri. A woman in her late 20s sadly remarks, "This town is trapped in the past."

Maybe it's natural to try to market Cairo. Just turn the 1872 customhouse into a museum, get a big grant to repave the center of town with cobblestones and fake streetcar lines, peddle the old glory days of the big river town, and hope no one asks how it died. There is lots of history here, all fascinating but not pretty. So some residents aren't sure that the buses will ever come rolling in or the hotels ever reopen. "You ask the average person on the street what Cairo needs," says Mayor James Wilson, "and they'll say a McDonald's and a Wal-Mart."

Vocabulary Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Compound Words Remind students that a compound word is made up of two or more smaller words. Compounds can be categorized as open, such as ice cream; closed, such as headache; and hyphenated, such as well-known. Readers can infer their meanings from the words that make up the compound. Ask students to find examples of compound words throughout this selection, to categorize them, and to infer their meanings. (Examples include theme park [open]; downstream [closed]; and laid-off [hyphenated].)

Home of the Blues

The future of Clarksdale, Mississippi, is also tied to its past. This Delta town is trying to find its way by reengineering its cash crop, the blues. There is the newly reopened Delta Blues Museum, which honors such hometown heroes as Charley Patton, Son House, Robert Johnson, Muddy Waters, and John Lee Hooker. The history of the music is the story of the people who invented it and the suffering that created it. Without African American workers to clear the thickly wooded Delta plain and sharecroppers to pick the cotton, there would have been no plantation economy; without African Americans to sing the work songs and field chants and play diddley bows and mail-order guitars, there would be no Delta blues. Without the blues, there would be no rock 'n' roll to conquer the world and help sell all those burgers and jeans. The poorest, most oppressed people in America created its richest cultural legacy, and that, of course, yields all kinds of lessons for anyone willing to listen closely.

"Are you going to find anything good to write about?" people ask again and again. They are aware of how things must look to a bunch of outsiders. The natives know that much of what is great and sweet and honorable in these places never makes headlines. The Cairo deputy fire chief will tell you how many people appear in an instant when a windstorm sweeps through town and smashes a block of homes. Anyplace you have good friends is a place worth staying. Here and elsewhere, there are big groups of people—ministers and teachers and store owners and bureaucrats—who are prepared to give all their time and muscle to putting things right, making a place better. To the outsider, it would seem so much easier just to pick up and move on. Trying to stay, and to change, is an act of faith.

–Updated 2005,
from TIME, July 10, 2000

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Write a brief summary of the main ideas in this article before you answer the following questions. For help on writing a summary, see page 79.
2. How did this article make you feel about the situation that many of the small towns along the Mississippi face?
3. (a)What is the "new economy" the author refers to? (b)Why are the communities along the Mississippi not yet a part of this?
4. (a)What kinds of businesses have found success in many of the small towns along the Mississippi River? (b)Why might the towns want to "prettify" their past?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)Return to the graphic organizer you created to clarify meaning. What ideas does the author express in the subsection "Home of the Blues"? (b)Why does the author claim that the past is connected to the future of the Mississippi Delta?
6. (a)How would you describe Gibbs's tone, or attitude toward her subject, in this article? Support your response with details from the text. (b)How might this tone contribute to an overall bias, or inclination toward a certain opinion?

Connect

7. Compare and contrast Mark Twain's and Nancy Gibbs's portrayals of the Mississippi Delta region. What are their similarities and differences?

TIME

Assess

1. Students should refer to article subheadings to help them organize and write summaries.
2. Answers will vary.
3. (a) A high-tech, global economy (b) Area towns are far from interstate highways and are damaged by local industry failures.
4. (a) Tourist-oriented businesses (b) Tourism thrives when towns focus on their "quaint" history.
5. (a) She describes how a blues museum has increased tourism in Clarksdale, Mississippi. She also notes African American contributions to the local economy and culture. (b) Small towns promote their past in order to gain economic prosperity.
6. (a) Frank, skeptical, and sometimes disdainful, as evidenced by expressions such as "Americans are homesteading the past" (b) Gibbs seems biased against some economic development.
7. Twain lived by the Mississippi; Gibbs is an outside observer.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 165–166.

English Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Intermediate Identify some of the figurative and idiomatic expressions in the section called "Home of the Blues" and help English learners decode them. Write the following expressions on the board:

- future . . . is tied to its past
- its cash crop, the blues
- plantation economy
- play diddley bows and mail-order guitars
- no rock 'n' roll to conquer the world and help sell all those burgers and jeans
- never makes headlines
- an act of faith

Help students by having them volunteer the literal meanings of these expressions and by then discussing with them how the literal meaning has migrated into a figurative meaning. Explain, for example, that a word such as tie can be used not only to mean "to fasten with string," but also to mean "to bind together in a relationship." A diddley bow is a homemade stringed instrument. Have students consult a dictionary for the meanings of any unfamiliar words.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 32

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 44

Or describe a basic and familiar philosophy of living, such as "Live and let live" or "Live every day to the fullest."

Ask: What are some philosophies of living that you have heard? Have students consider, as they read, how the philosophies expressed in these poems are similar to and different from philosophies they know.

Before You Read

Lucinda Matlock and Fiddler Jones

Meet Edgar Lee Masters
(1868–1950)

Edgar Lee Masters's Spoon River Anthology took early twentieth-century readers by surprise. Published in 1915, the anthology is a collection of free-verse first-person monologues spoken by the people of a small Midwestern town, who are now "sleeping on the hill." Masters called the poems epitaphs.

The realism and irony expressed in Spoon River Anthology were at odds with the romantic and sentimental poetry popular at the time. Though some critics questioned this new type of poetry, the book sold thousands of copies, is still in print, and has even been adapted for the stage. After the anthology's publication, Ezra Pound wrote of Masters, "At last! America has discovered a poet."

> "It is all very well, but for > myself I know
> I stirred certain vibrations in
> Spoon River
> Which are my true epitaph, > more lasting than stone."
>
> —Edgar Lee Masters
> "Percival Sharp"

From Small Town to Supreme Court Masters grew up in the small Illinois towns of Petersburg and Lewistown. As a boy, he spent time at his grandfather's farm, where he fished, rode horses, and read Charles Dickens and Ralph Waldo Emerson. After he graduated from high school, he worked as an apprentice for a local printer and attended Knox College for one year.

Although Masters wanted to be a writer, his father pushed him toward a career in law. Masters eventually took up both pursuits and established his first law office in Chicago in 1893. He married Helen M. Jenkins in 1898, and they had three children. Masters was a successful attorney and argued some cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Literary Success Masters's first book, A Book of Verses, was published in 1898, and he published a number of other poetry books, a collection of essays, and several plays over the next sixteen years. Through his writing, he became friends with Carl Sandburg and Harriet Monroe, the editor of Poetry magazine. Masters later separated from his family and moved to New York City. He married Elaine Coyne, a teacher, in 1926.

Spoon River Anthology was well received both critically and commercially. Masters was later awarded the Poetry Society of America Award, the Mark Twain silver medal, and the Shelley Memorial Award. By the end of his life, Masters had published more than fifty volumes, including poetry collections, plays, novels and biographies. Spoon River, however, remained his only literary success.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Edgar Lee Masters, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Selection Skills

Lucinda Matlock and Fiddler Jones

Literary Elements
- Dramatic Monologue (SE pp. 515, 516, 518; TE p. 517)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a Poem (SE p. 518)

Reading Skills
- Draw Conclusions About Character (SE pp. 515, 517, 518)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Usage (SE pp. 515, 518)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

If you had to sum up your life so far, what experiences would you focus on? What did those experiences mean to you? Discuss these questions with a partner or small group.

Build Background

When Masters read the epigrams from the Greek Anthology—an ancient collection of poems—he was struck by their brevity, wit, and irony. He decided to write a similar collection of free-verse epitaphs in the form of monologues. The result was Spoon River Anthology. Masters's characters were inspired by people he knew. Many of the monologues in Spoon River Anthology are related, so a complex history of numerous families unfolds.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Regionalism

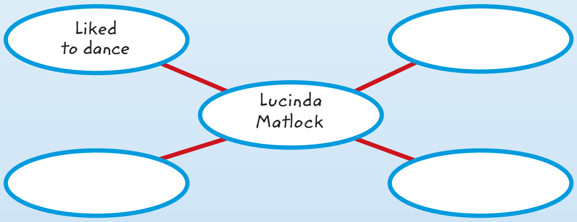
As you read, ask yourself, What do these two poems reveal about the customs and lifestyle of the people in Masters's fictional Midwestern town?

Literary Element Dramatic Monologue

Each of these poems is a dramatic monologue, a form of dramatic poetry in which the speaker addresses a silent listener. The speaker in these poems is not Masters but a character he created. As you read the poems, ask yourself, What philosophy of life does each character express?

Reading Strategy Draw Conclusions About Character

When you draw a conclusion, you use various pieces of information to make a general statement about people, places, events, and ideas. As you read the poems, look for specific details about each speaker. These details can be the basis for a general statement about each speaker's character. You can use a chart like the one below to keep track of these details.



Learning Objectives

For pages 514–518

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing dramatic monologue.

Reading: Drawing conclusions about characters.

Writing: Writing a poem.

Vocabulary

repose (ri pōz´) n. relaxation; tranquility; eternal rest; p. 516 Unafraid of death, the woman welcomed the idea of repose.

degenerate (di jen´ ər it) adj. having declined in condition or character; deteriorated; p. 516 Despite spending time in jail, the thief continued to live a degenerate lifestyle.

ruinous (ro͞o´ i nəs) adj. causing ruin; destructive; p. 517 The extreme weather in Alaska can have a ruinous effect on highways there.

Tip: Word Usage When you encounter a new word, it might help you to answer a specific question about the word. Example: How would someone look who is in a state of repose*?* Someone in a state of repose would appear relaxed and calm.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In "Lucinda Matlock," the speaker recounts her long, full family life, ending with her death at age 96. She observes that today's youngsters complain too much and fail to live fully.

In "Fiddler Jones," the speaker recalls his life as one in which music was always more important than getting other work done. He has no regrets about his life.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 54-59.

Vocabulary

Vocabulary Practice Help students better understand the new vocabulary words. Ask: Which vocabulary word best completes this sentence: He does not wish to be disturbed while in ________. (repose) Then have students state their own fill-in-the-blank sentences for classmates to complete. Work with students to discuss how each vocabulary word is used.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 62.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Remind students that the poems they are about to read are written in free verse. Explain that free verse has no fixed meter, rhyme, line length, or stanza arrangement but is still poetry rather than prose by virtue of its rhythm and the pacing of words and ideas. Have English learners take turns reading all or parts of the poems aloud.

Ask: How did reading these poems differ from reading poems with rhymes? Why might free verse be particularly suited to a dramatic monologue, in which a speech is delivered to a silent listener? (Students may say that free verse sounds like natural speech.)

Teach

Big Idea 1

Regionalism Say: How does Masters's description of Lucinda Matlock convey the character of Spoon River? (Lucinda Matlock is an unpretentious rural woman who speaks plainly and works hard. These characteristics might also describe Spoon River.)

APPROACHING Reread the poem and look for examples of how Lucinda speaks without elaborate descriptions, how she works hard without complaint, and how humble she seems.

Literary Element 2

Dramatic Monologue
Answer: One needs a positive attitude and a strong spirit to enjoy life.

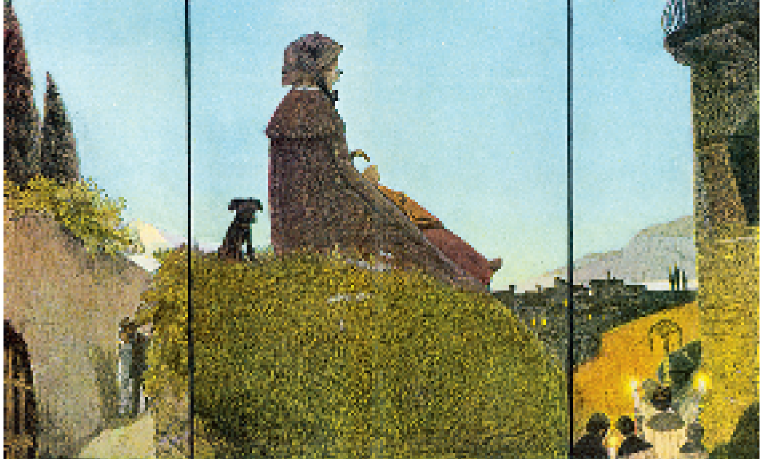
View the Art ★

A triptych (from the Greek words for three and fold) is a work of art presented in three panels. Typically the center panel is the largest and is connected to the outer panels by hinges. Many triptychs were created for religious buildings during the Renaissance.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.



Contemplating Life, 1903.
Richard Pfeiffer.

Lucinda Matlock

Edgar Lee Masters

I went to the dances at Chandlerville,
And played snap-out[1] at Winchester.
One time we changed partners,
Driving home in the moonlight of middle June,
And then I found Davis.
We were married and lived together for seventy years,
Enjoying, working, raising the twelve children,
Eight of whom we lost
Ere I had reached the age of sixty.
I spun, I wove, I kept the house, I nursed the sick,
I made the garden, and for holiday
Rambled over the fields where sang the larks,
And by Spoon River gathering many a shell,
And many a flower and medicinal weed—
Shouting to the wooded hills, singing to the green valleys.
At ninety-six I had lived enough, that is all,
And passed to a sweet repose.
What is this I hear of sorrow and weariness,
Anger, discontent and drooping hopes?
Degenerate sons and daughters,
Life is too strong for you—
It takes life to love Life. 1

---

[1] Snap-out (also known as crack-the-whip) is a game in which players link hands in a line and then run or skate so as to shake off those at the end of the line.

Dramatic Monologue What does this line tell you about the speaker's philosophy of life? 2

Vocabulary

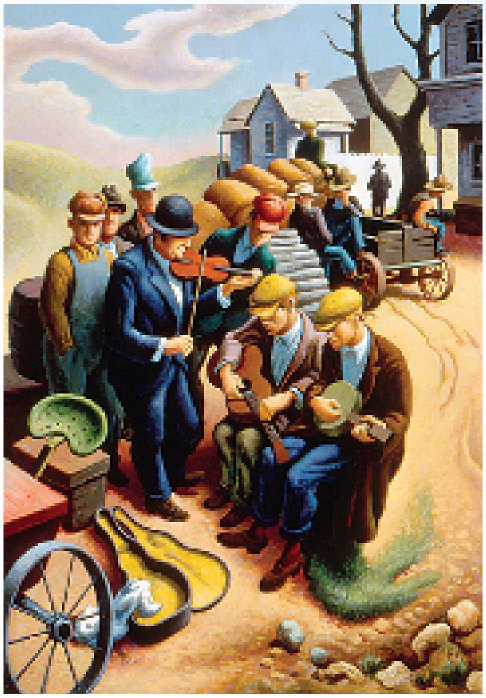
repose (ri pōz´) n. relaxation; tranquility; eternal rest degenerate (di jen´ ər it) adj. having declined in condition or character; deteriorated

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Take Notes Remind students that customs are the traditional social practices in a society and that lifestyle is the way an individual lives. As students read the two poems, have them write down what each narrator does for leisure and what each does for work. Ask students to write down phrases that reveal each narrator's attitude toward life. Have students refer to the notes when drawing conclusions about the customs and lifestyles of the people in Masters's fictional Midwestern town.

Fiddler Jones

Edgar Lee Masters



Pop and the Boys, 1963. Thomas Hart Benton. Oil on canvas, 67.7 x 47.7 cm. Fundación Colección Thyssen-Bornemisza, Madrid, Spain. ★

The earth keeps some vibration going
There in your heart, and that is you.
And if the people find you can fiddle,
Why, fiddle you must, for all your life.
What do you see, a harvest of clover?
Or a meadow to walk through to the river?
The wind's in the corn; you rub your hands
For beeves[1] hereafter ready for market;
Or else you hear the rustle of skirts
Like the girls when dancing at Little Grove.
To Cooney Potter a pillar of dust
Or whirling leaves meant ruinous drouth;[2]
They looked to me like Red-Head Sammy
Stepping it off, to "Toor-a-Loor."[3]
How could I till my forty acres
Not to speak of getting more,
With a medley of horns, bassoons and piccolos
Stirred in my brain by crows and robins
And the creak of a wind-mill—only these?
And I never started to plow in my life
That some one did not stop in the road
And take me away to a dance or picnic.
I ended up with forty acres;
I ended up with a broken fiddle—
And a broken laugh, and a thousand memories,
And not a single regret.

---

[1] Beeves is the plural form of beef; here, it refers to beef cattle.

[2] A drouth (also drought) is a long period of dry weather.

[3] Toor-a-Loor refers to a phrase in an Irish folk song.

Draw Conclusions About Character What do these details suggest about the speaker's character?

Vocabulary

ruinous (ro͞o´ i nəs) adj. causing ruin; destructive

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Draw Conclusions About Characters Answer: These details suggest that the character is an exuberant, gregarious person who took advantage of opportunities to have fun in life. They also suggest that he may have been irresponsible.

View the Art ★

Thomas Hart Benton (1889–1975) lived in Missouri and is known for his paintings of the region. Many of his works feature laborers and everyday people at their daily work.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 63.

Progress Check

Can students draw conclusions about character?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 61.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Tell students that the speaker in each of these two poems is not the author but the title character. The thoughts and feelings expressed in the poems are those of the characters, and the words they use help convey their attitudes toward life. Have students reread lines 11–15 of "Lucinda Matlock." Point out words such as holiday, sang, flower, shouting, and singing. Explain that the words Lucinda Matlock uses help express how she feels about the life she has led. Ask students how they think she feels. (Students may say that she thinks she has led a good life.)

Established Have students reread lines 16 and 17 in "Lucinda Matlock." Ask: What words show that Lucinda Matlock accepts death without fear? ("I had lived enough, that is all," "sweet repose")

After You Read

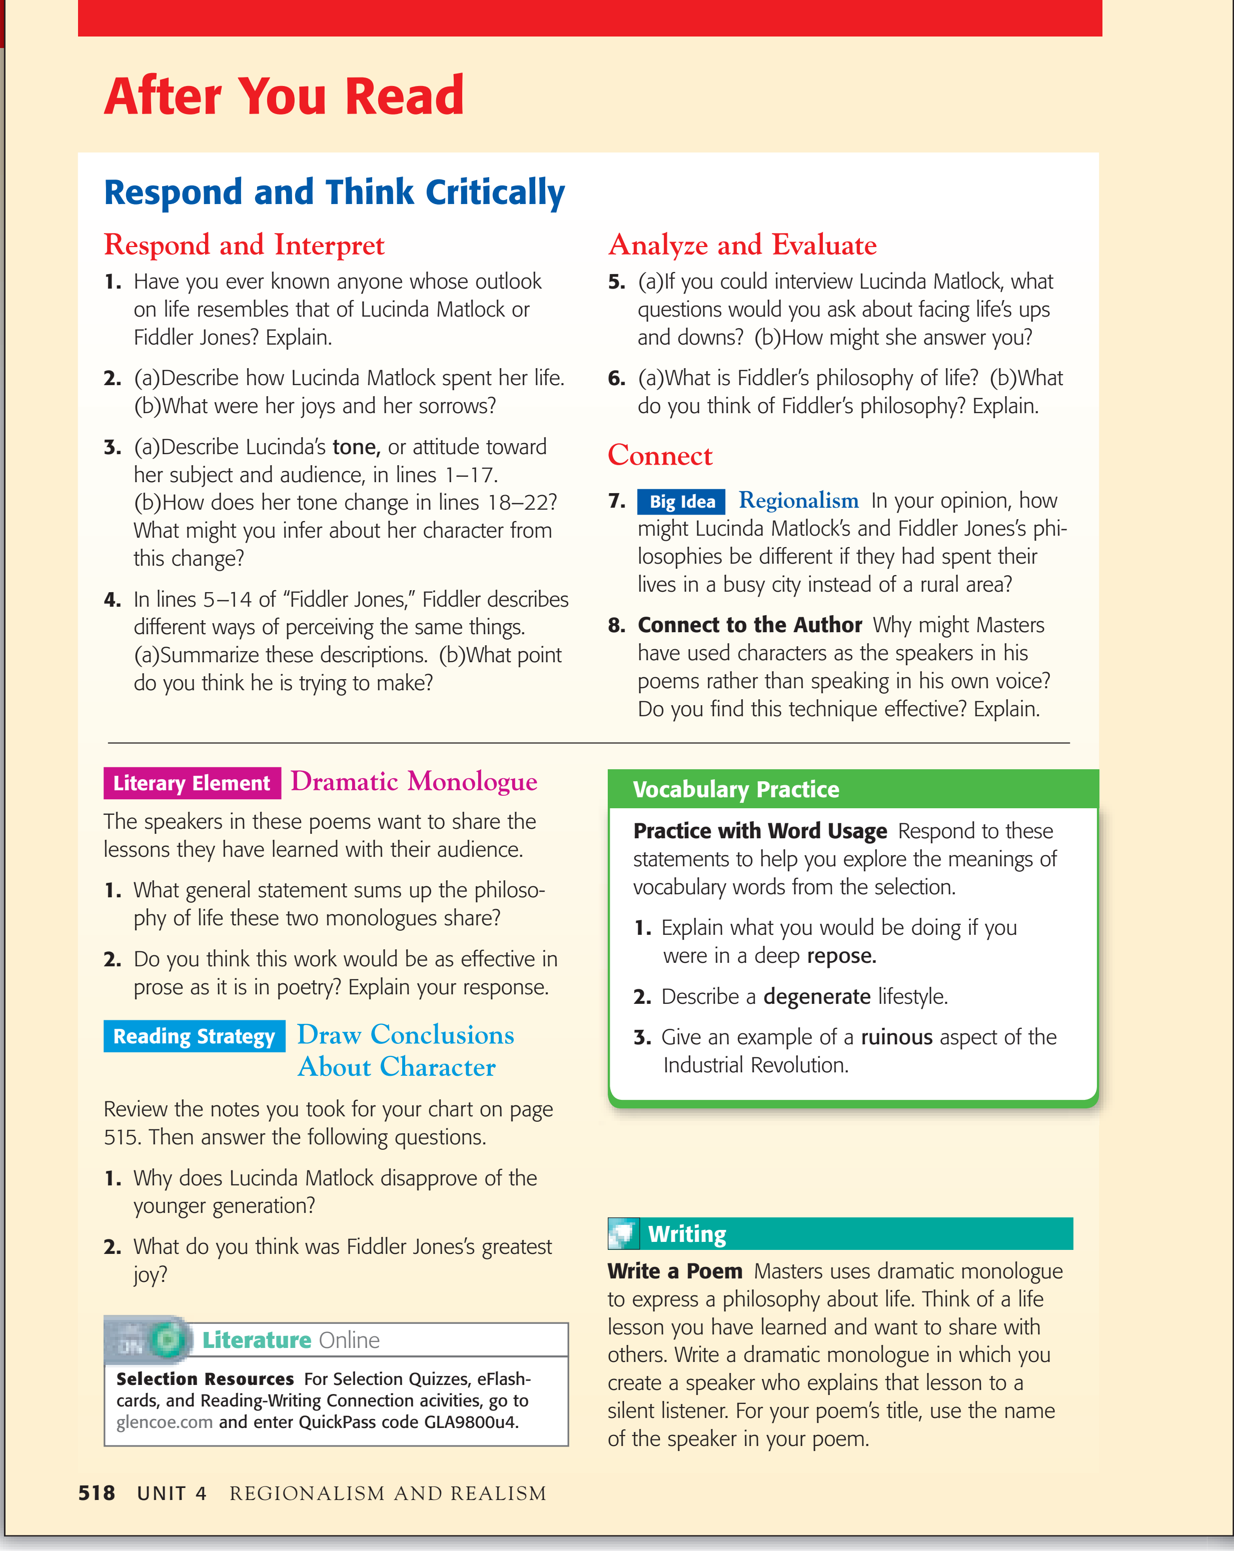
Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) She spent her life caring for her family. (b) Joys: family and nature; sorrows: losing children
3. (a) Contented and matter-of-fact (b) Serious and reprimanding—she disapproves of complainers.
4. (a) Some people see "a harvest of clover" but others "a meadow to walk through." Cooney Potter saw drought where Fiddler Jones saw dancing. (b) People's attitudes affect their perceptions.
5. (a) What is the key to your happiness? Did you ever feel that your life has been too hard? (b) "Keep life simple"; "enjoy the good and don't dwell on the bad."
6. (a) Be positive and enjoy life, even if your choices do not make you rich. (b) Possible answer: His philosophy is wise but might not work for those who must support others.
7. Possible answers: The characters would have had less peaceful lives in a city; philosophy, not place, defined these characters.
8. Masters could show a variety of perspectives in the small town by using many characters.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 167–168.

Writing

Students should create a distinct speaker and address a specific life lesson in the poem each writes.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Have you ever known anyone whose outlook on life resembles that of Lucinda Matlock or Fiddler Jones? Explain.
2. (a)Describe how Lucinda Matlock spent her life. (b)What were her joys and her sorrows?
3. (a)Describe Lucinda's tone, or attitude toward her subject and audience, in lines 1–17. (b)How does her tone change in lines 18–22? What might you infer about her character from this change?
4. In lines 5–14 of "Fiddler Jones," Fiddler describes different ways of perceiving the same things. (a)Summarize these descriptions. (b)What point do you think he is trying to make?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)If you could interview Lucinda Matlock, what questions would you ask about facing life's ups and downs? (b)How might she answer you?
6. (a)What is Fiddler's philosophy of life? (b)What do you think of Fiddler's philosophy? Explain.

Connect

7. Big Idea Regionalism In your opinion, how might Lucinda Matlock's and Fiddler Jones's philosophies be different if they had spent their lives in a busy city instead of a rural area?
8. Connect to the Author Why might Masters have used characters as the speakers in his poems rather than speaking in his own voice? Do you find this technique effective? Explain.

Literary Element Dramatic Monologue

The speakers in these poems want to share the lessons they have learned with their audience.

1. What general statement sums up the philosophy of life these two monologues share?
2. Do you think this work would be as effective in prose as it is in poetry? Explain your response.

Reading Strategy Draw Conclusions About Character

Review the notes you took for your chart on page 515. Then answer the following questions.

1. Why does Lucinda Matlock disapprove of the younger generation?
2. What do you think was Fiddler Jones's greatest joy?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection acivities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Word Usage Respond to these statements to help you explore the meanings of vocabulary words from the selection.

1. Explain what you would be doing if you were in a deep repose.
2. Describe a degenerate lifestyle.
3. Give an example of a ruinous aspect of the Industrial Revolution.

Writing

Write a Poem Masters uses dramatic monologue to express a philosophy about life. Think of a life lesson you have learned and want to share with others. Write a dramatic monologue in which you create a speaker who explains that lesson to a silent listener. For your poem's title, use the name of the speaker in your poem.

Literary Element

1. Life is precious, and a positive attitude will improve its quality.
2. Answers will vary.

Reading Strategy

1. They do not appreciate being alive.
2. He enjoyed fiddling for people.

Vocabulary

1. Students should say that they would be relaxing or resting soundly.
2. Students may describe a lifestyle that demonstrates poor self-care or criminal activity.
3. Students may identify pollution or the negative effects of assembly-line labor on workers.

Before You Read

A Wagner Matinée

Meet Willa Cather

(1873–1947)

Readers best remember Willa Cather for her portrayal of the pioneer life and landscape. During the mid-twentieth century, the connection between Cather's writing and the prairie that inspired her began to undermine her literary status. Critics labeled her a regional writer, criticizing her for "escapism" and for romanticizing the past. Nonetheless, Cather's books have never gone out of print, and there has been a renewed interest in her work over the past few decades. She is now recognized as a writer who explored the complexities of American life and showed how the tendency to link one's life to the past adds meaning—though not always happiness—to life in the present.

> "So the country and I had it out together and by the end of the first autumn the shaggy grass country had gripped me with a passion that I have never been able to shake. It has been the happiness and curse of my life."
>
> —Willa Cather

The Vast Frontier Cather's family moved from the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia to rural Red Cloud, Nebraska, when she was nine. She remarked that she felt "a kind of erasure of personality" as she first encountered the Nebraskan prairie, a feeling that would later permeate the characters in her fiction. In Red Cloud, Cather gained insight into pioneer life and the intricate histories of her European immigrant neighbors. She learned French, German, Latin, and Greek, participated in plays, and attended local opera performances. In high school, she gained a reputation as both a remarkable student and a nonconformist. She enrolled at the University of Nebraska in 1891 and supported herself by writing literary reviews that won statewide recognition.

Returning East After graduating in 1895, Cather moved to Pittsburgh to begin editing for Home Monthly. She published her first book of poetry, April Twilights, in 1903 and one of stories, The Troll Garden, which includes "A Wagner Matinée," in 1905. The head of the progressive magazine McClure's was so impressed by the latter that he offered Cather a job in New York City. She became managing editor by 1908 but felt unfulfilled because her position left little time to work on her own writing. In 1911, at the urging of her friend and mentor Sarah Orne Jewett, Cather left journalism to write fiction exclusively.

Cather's memories of the vast prairie and the endurance of its people inspired O Pioneers! (1913), Song of the Lark (1915), and My Ántonia (1918). In her earlier stories, Cather focused on the desolation of pioneer life. In later works, however, she celebrated the prairie landscape and the powerful dreams and illusions of those who attempted to cultivate it. Cather is recognized for her complex treatment of human emotion, her understanding of darker American themes, and her carefully crafted writing style.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Willa Cather, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Literature Launchers:
Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Selection Launcher

Selection Focus
Transparency 33

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 46

Or play clips of music from different genres or different time periods Ask: What places, emotions, or sensations do you feel when you listen to this music?

As they read, students should keep in mind the power of music to evoke memories and emotions.

Interactive Read and Write

Other options for teaching this selection can be found in

- Interactive Read and Write for EL Students, pp. 159–170
- Interactive Read and Write for Approaching-Level Students, pp. 159–170
- Interactive Read and Write for On-Level Students, pp. 159–170

Selections Skill

A Wagner Matinée

Literary Elements
- Point of View (SE pp. 520, 522, 525, 526, 528)
- Voice (SE p. 528)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Reflective Essay (SE p. 529)
- Absolute Phrases (SE p. 529)
- Imagery (TE p. 523)

Reading Skills
- Identify Sequence (SE pp. 520, 521, 524)
- Identify and Analyze Flashback (TE p. 521)
- Make Inferences (TE pp. 522)

Vocabulary Skills
- Analogies (SE p. 528)
- Adverbs (TE p. 520)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 523; TE p. 521)
- Analyze Music (TE p. 525)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

A young man named Clark takes his visiting aunt, Georgiana, to a concert. Georgiana is a music teacher who has not been to Boston or heard a concert since she married and moved to a remote Nebraska farm many years ago. She has arrived in Boston exhausted and still focused on the country life she has temporarily left behind. As the music fills the theater, however, she becomes entranced and is greatly saddened when the performance ends.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 65–70.

Vocabulary

Use Adverbs Remind students that adverbs usually modify verbs by telling how, when, where, or to what extent. Adverbs can also modify adjectives, other adverbs, and groups of words. Give pairs of students five minutes to complete the following sentences in as many ways as possible: Doggedly describes how . . . and Obliquely describes how . . . (Possible answers: serious athletes train; books on the shelf lean.) Have each group read a couple of their sentences aloud while classmates decide whether the sentences were completed correctly.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 73.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

How does it feel to return to a place you have not been in a long time? Write a short journal entry to explore this question. Refer to specific situations from your life if possible.

Build Background

The title "A Wagner Matinée" refers to the German opera composer Wilhelm Richard Wagner (1813–1883). Willa Cather based this story on her Aunt Franc's and Uncle George's experience of moving to Nebraska after the passage of the Homestead Act in 1862.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Regionalism

As you read, ask, What role does each character's choice of where to live play in this story? What opportunities are opened or closed to each character as a result of that choice?

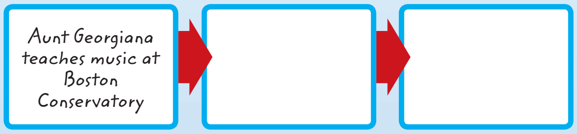
Literary Element Point of View

Point of view refers to the relationship of the narrator to the story. In first-person point of view, the story is told by one of the characters, referred to as "I," and the reader sees everything through that character's eyes. In third-person limited point of view, the narrator reveals the thoughts and feelings of only one character, referred to as "he" or "she." In an omniscient point of view, the narrator knows everything about the characters and events. As you read, ask yourself, How does point of view influence my understanding of the story?

Reading Strategy Identify Sequence

Identifying sequence means determining the order of ideas or events. Main events are often told in chronological order, but authors sometimes reveal important events and details through flashbacks.

Tip: Chart Story Sequence Make a diagram like the one shown to organize the events of the story into chronological order.



Learning Objectives

For pages 520–529

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing point of view.

Reading: Identifying sequence.

Vocabulary

legacy (leg´ ə sē) n. an inheritance; p. 521 Paul's generous grandfather left him a legacy when he died.

reproach (ri prōch´) n. an expression of disapproval; a reprimand; p. 522 Kim missed curfew and suffered her mother's reproach.

doggedly (dô´ gid lē) adv. in a stubbornly persistent manner; obstinately; p. 522 The salesman doggedly pursued customers, even when they rebuffed him.

trepidation (trep´ ə dā´ shən) n. nervous anticipation; anxiety; p. 523 Dana could not shake her feeling of trepidation about the next day's exam.

obliquely (ō blēk´ lē) adv. in a slanting or sloping direction; p. 525 Her hair hung obliquely across her face, hiding her left eye.

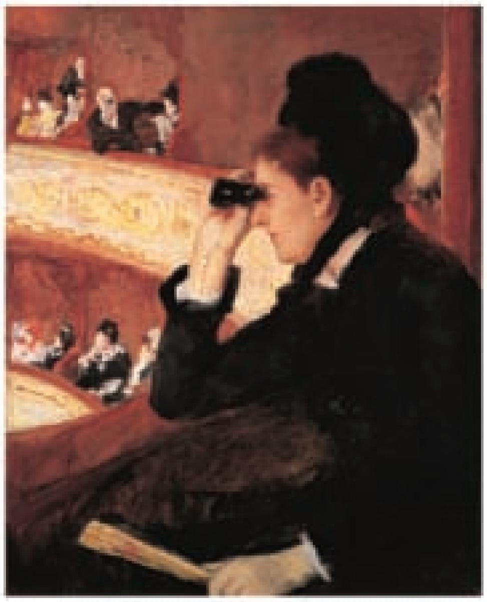
Reading Practice

Identify and Analyze Flashback
Sometimes a writer uses a flashback to present events that occurred earlier than the main story. Cather includes flashbacks of the narrator's experiences in his aunt's home. Rather than describe the memories, the narrator presents himself as that young boy. This technique helps readers experience the memories with Clark and understand his perception of them. Have students record details that reveal Clark's attitude toward farm life. (Students may say that words such as scourged, chilblains, cracked and sore suggest that farm life was torturous for Clark.) Have students note other flashbacks and the attitude or message that each conveys.

A Wagner Matinée

Willa Cather



In the Loge, 1879. Mary Cassatt. Oil on canvas, 32 x 36 in. The Hayden Collection. Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. ★

1 I received one morning a letter, written in pale ink on glassy, blue-lined note-paper, and bearing the postmark of a little Nebraska village. This communication, worn and rubbed, looking as if it has been carried for some days in a coat pocket that was none too clean, was from my uncle Howard, and informed me that his wife had been left a small legacy by a bachelor relative, and that it would be necessary for her to go to Boston to attend to the settling of the estate. He requested me to meet her at the station and render[1] her whatever services might be necessary. On examining the date indicated as that of her arrival, I found it to be no later than tomorrow. He had characteristically delayed writing until, had I been away from home for a day, I must have missed my aunt altogether.

The name of my Aunt Georgiana opened before me a gulf of recollection so wide and deep that, as the letter dropped from my hand, I felt suddenly a stranger to all the present conditions of my existence, wholly ill at ease and out of place amid the familiar surroundings of my study. I became, in short, the gangling farmer-boy my aunt had known, scourged[2] with chilblains[3] and bashfulness, my hands cracked and sore from the corn husking. I sat again before her parlour organ, fumbling the scales with my stiff, red fingers, while she, beside me, made canvas mittens for the huskers.

The next morning, after preparing my landlady for a visitor, I set out for the station. When the train arrived I had some difficulty in finding my aunt. She was the last of the passengers to alight, and it was not until I got her into the carriage that she seemed really to recognize me. She had come all the way in a day coach; her linen duster[4] had become black with soot and

---

[1] Render means "to make available" or "to provide."

[2] Scourged means "afflicted."

[3] Chilblains are red, swollen sores on the skin caused by exposure to the cold.

[4] A duster is a long, lightweight coat worn to protect one's clothing from dust.

Vocabulary

legacy (leg′ ə sē) n. an inheritance

Identify Sequence How does the narration shift after Clark sees Aunt Georgiana's name in the letter? 2

Teach

Big Idea 1

Regionalism Say: Keep these questions in mind as you read: Why does Cather contrast Georgiana's Nebraska home with the Boston opera house? (The contrast highlights the importance of setting in Georgiana's life.) Ask: How are Georgiana's emotions affected by her surroundings? (Being in the opera house brings back fond memories.)

Reading Strategy 2

Identify Sequence Answer: Clark's memories of his childhood are sparked when he sees Georgiana's name.

View the Art ★

Mary Cassatt (1844–1926) grew up in Pennsylvania and is best known for her compositions depicting mothers and children. This painting has an alternative title: At the Opera.

Ask: How does the painting help you understand the story's title? (It suggests that the matinée will be of a play or musical performance.)

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 10.5
DRP: 63
Lexile: 1410

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate To help English learners better understand the story, preteach the following vocabulary phrases: "none too clean" (not very clean); "ill at ease" (awkward, uneasy, uncomfortable in a situation); "in short" (to summarize a situation); "the upshot of this" (the conclusion to a situation) "at the mercy of" (under the power of [someone or something].) To reinforce comprehension, ask students questions, using the vocabulary phrases. For example, Ask: When might a person call something "none too clean"? When might a person feel "ill at ease"? Have students answer your questions, using the new vocabulary phrases and complete sentences.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Make Inferences Discuss Clark's description of his aunt's marriage. Ask: From his description of it here, what can you infer about Clark's opinion of his aunt's marriage? (Students may say that his reference to "infatuation" implies that he does not think his aunt should have married the young and impetuous Howard Carpenter.)

Literary Element 2

Point of View Answer: The story is told from Clark's perspective, a first-person point of view, so the exact meaning and intention of Georgiana's words are ambiguous.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Point out that Georgiana uses the word "it" and does not specify what was taken away from her. The pronoun it may stand for anything from music to Georgiana's old life in Boston.

her black bonnet grey with dust during the journey. When we arrived at my boarding-house the landlady put her to bed at once and I did not see her again until the next morning.

Whatever shock Mrs. Springer experienced at my aunt's appearance, she considerately concealed. As for myself, I saw my aunt's battered figure with that feeling of awe and respect with which we behold explorers who have left their ears and fingers north of Franz-Joseph-Land,[5] or their health somewhere along the Upper Congo.[6] My Aunt Georgiana had been a music teacher at the Boston Conservatory, somewhere back in the latter sixties. One summer, while visiting in the little village among the Green Mountains[7] where her ancestors had dwelt for generations, she had kindled the callow[8] fancy of my uncle, Howard Carpenter, then an idle, shiftless boy of twenty-one. When she returned to her duties in Boston, Howard followed her, and the upshot of this infatuation was that she 1 eloped with him, eluding the reproaches of her family and the criticism of her friends by going with him to the Nebraska frontier. Carpenter, who, of course, had no money, took up a homestead in Red Willow County, fifty miles from the railroad. There they had measured off their land themselves, driving across the prairie in a wagon, to the wheel of which they had tied a red cotton handkerchief, and counting its revolutions. They built a dug-out in the red hillside, one of those cave dwellings whose inmates so often reverted to primitive conditions. Their water they got from the lagoons where the buffalo drank, and their slender stock of provisions was always at the mercy of bands of roving Indians. For thirty years my aunt had not been farther than fifty miles from the homestead.

I owed to this woman most of the good that ever came my way in my boyhood, and had a reverential[9] affection for her. During the years when I was riding herd for my uncle, my aunt, after cooking the three meals—the first of which was ready at six o'clock in the morning—and putting the six children to bed, would often stand until midnight at her ironing-board, with me at the kitchen table beside her, hearing me recite Latin declensions and conjugations,[10] gently shaking me when my drowsy head sank down over a page of irregular verbs. It was to her, at her ironing or mending, that I read my first Shakespere, and her old text-book on mythology was the first that ever came into my empty hands. She taught me my scales and exercises on the little parlor organ which her husband had bought her after fifteen years, during which she had not so much as seen a musical instrument. She would sit beside me by the hour, darning and counting, while I struggled with the "Joyous Farmer."[11] She seldom talked to me about music, and I understood why. Once when I had been doggedly beating out some easy passages from an old score of Euryanthe[12] I had found among her music books, she came up to me and, putting her hands over my eyes, gently drew my head back upon her shoulder, saying tremulously,[13] "Don't love it so well, Clark, or it may be taken from you."

---

[5] Franz-Joseph-Land is a group of islands in the Arctic Ocean.

[6] The Congo River in central Africa is also called the Zaire River.

[7] The Green Mountains extend from western Massachusetts through Vermont and into Canada.

[8] Callow means "inexperienced" or "immature."

[9] Reverential means "with a feeling of deep respect and awe."

[10] Declensions are different forms of nouns, pronouns, and adjectives. Conjugations are different forms of verbs. Students often memorize these forms when learning a new language.

[11] "Joyous Farmer" is one of a series of compositions for children by Robert Shumann (1810–1856).

[12] Euryanthe (ā ûr i än tā) is an opera by the German composer Carl Maria von Weber (1786–1826).

[13] Tremulously means "in a trembling or shaking manner."

Point of View How is your understanding of this passage affected by the point of view of the story? 2

Vocabulary

reproach (ri prōch´) n. an expression of disapproval; a reprimand

Vocabulary

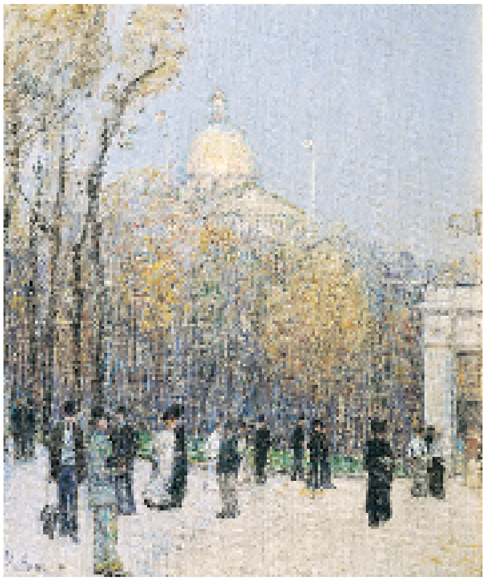
doggedly (dô´ gid lē) adv. in a stubbornly persistent manner; obstinately

Writing Practice

Imagery Point out Cather's use of color throughout this story. Have students look for references to colors in the descriptions of the women in the concert hall and of Georgiana's home in Nebraska. Then ask students to make a table contrasting the different uses of color.

Dark Colors	Bright Colors
Georgiana's clothes	Colorful frocks at opera

After completing the table, have students write a one-paragraph response to the following questions: Why did the author include these details about color? How do they convey the meaning of the story?



Boston Common, 1901. Childe Hassam. Oil on canvas, 16 x 20 in. David David Gallery, Philadelphia.

View the Art In contrast to Aunt Georgiana's city-to-country transition, Boston Common underwent the opposite transformation—from a field of grazing cattle to a landscaped city park. Suppose Aunt Georgiana saw a scene like this one when she arrived in Boston. How might she have reacted? Explain. ★

When my aunt appeared on the morning after her arrival in Boston, she was still in a semi-somnambulant[14] state. She seemed not to realize that she was in the city where she had spent her youth, the place longed for hungrily half a lifetime. She had been so wretchedly train-sick throughout the journey that she had no recollection of anything but her discomfort, and, to all intents and purposes, there were but a few hours of nightmare between the farm in Red Willow County and my study on Newbury Street. I had planned a little pleasure for her that afternoon, to repay her for some of the glorious moments she had given me when we used to milk together in the straw-thatched cowshed and she, because I was more than usually tired, or because her husband had spoken sharply to me, would tell me of the splendid performance of the Huguenots[15] she had seen in Paris, in her youth.

At two o'clock the Symphony Orchestra was to give a Wagner program, and I intended to take my aunt; though, as I conversed with her, I grew doubtful about her enjoyment of it. I suggested our visiting the Conservatory and the Common[16] before lunch, but she seemed altogether too timid to wish to venture out. She questioned me absently about various changes in the city, but she was chiefly concerned that she had forgotten to leave instructions about feeding half-skimmed milk to a certain weakling calf, "old Maggie's calf, you know, Clark," she explained, evidently having forgotten how long I had been away. She was further troubled because she had neglected to tell her daughter about the freshly-opened kit of mackerel in the cellar, which would spoil if it were not used directly.

I asked her whether she had ever heard any of the Wagnerian operas, and found that she had not, though she was perfectly familiar with their respective situations, and had once possessed the piano score of The Flying Dutchman. I began to think it would be best to get her back to Red Willow County without waking her, and regretted having suggested the concert.

From the time we entered the concert hall, however, she was a trifle less passive and inert, and for the first time seemed to perceive her surroundings. I had felt some trepidation lest she might become aware of her queer, country clothes, or might experience some painful embarrassment at stepping suddenly into the world to which she had been dead for a quarter

Regionalism How does the concert hall draw Georgiana's attention away from the farm in a way the city could not? 3

Vocabulary

trepidation (trep´ ə dā´ shən) n. nervous anticipation; anxiety

---

[14] Semi-somnambulant (sem′ ē som nam′ byə lənt) means "bewildered or dazed, as if sleepwalking."

[15] Huguenots (hū′ gə nots′) is a French opera by the German composer Giacomo Meyerbeer (1791–1864).

[16] Common refers to Boston Common, a public park.

Teach

Big Idea 3

Regionalism Answer: The concert hall evokes a more personal response in Georgiana than the walks through Boston, for her the contrast between the farm and the hall is greater than that between the farm and the city. The effect of musicians playing is a world away from farm life.

APPROACHING Ask students to reread the page, looking for adjectives that describe Georgiana's behavior while in the city and then for her reaction to what she sees in the concert hall. Explain to students why Clark compares Georgiana to old miners and statues of Rameses.

View the Art ★

Answer: Students may say that Georgiana may have been excited to see such a bustling, vibrant city or that she may been overwhelmed and intimidated by the sophisticated city.

Childe Hassam (1859–1935) was born in Dorchester, Massachusetts. He attended art schools in Boston and in Paris, where he learned the techniques of Impressionism. This style features brilliant light and color.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging The details in the passages describing pioneer life present it in an unflattering light. Help students find examples of these details ("cave dwellings," "inmates," and "primitive conditions") on page 522. Discuss these terms and their negative connotations. Ask: How does Clark seem to feel about pioneer life in Nebraska? (Students may say that it sounds unendurable to Clark.)

Established Help students understand Clark's dissatisfaction with Georgiana's life in Nebraska. Discuss her relationship with Clark when he was young. Ask: What does this tell you about Georgiana? (She was well educated, and she cared about Clark.) Why do you think Clark is critical of the life she chose? (She is not able to make use of her education or talents at her home in Nebraska or to enjoy the music she loves.)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Identify Sequence Answer: Through the flashbacks, readers learn what Clark knows of Georgiana's background. They also allow readers to understand the concert's significance to Georgiana as Clark understands it.

Cultural History

Richard Wagner Nineteenth-century German composer Richard Wagner is known not only for his innovation in the art of opera but also for his controversial political views. Some views expressed in his writings are considered antisemitic.

of a century. But, again, I found how superficially I had judged her. She sat looking about her with eyes as impersonal, almost as stony, as those with which the granite Rameses[17] in a museum watches the froth and fret that ebbs and flows[18] about his pedestal. I have seen this same aloofness in old miners who drift into the Brown hotel at Denver, their pockets full of bullion,[19] their linen soiled, their haggard faces unshaven; standing in the thronged corridors as solitary as though they were still in a frozen camp on the Yukon.[20]

The matinée audience was made up chiefly of women. One lost the contour of faces and figures, indeed any effect of line whatever, and there was only the color of bodices past counting, the shimmer of fabrics soft and firm, silky and sheer; red, mauve, pink, blue, lilac, purple, écru,[21] rose, yellow, cream, and white, all the colors that an impressionist[22] finds in a sunlit landscape, with here and there the dead shadow of a frock coat. My Aunt Georgiana regarded them as though they had been so many daubs of tube-paint on a palette.

When the musicians came out and took their places, she gave a little stir of anticipation, and looked with quickening interest down over the rail at that invariable grouping, perhaps the first wholly familiar thing that had greeted her eye since she had left old Maggie and her weakling calf. I could feel how all those details sank into her soul, for I had not forgotten how they had sunk into mine when I came fresh from ploughing forever and forever between green aisles of corn, where, as in a treadmill, one might walk from daybreak to dusk without perceiving a shadow of change. The clean profiles of the musicians, the gloss of their linen, the dull black of their coats, the beloved shapes of the instruments, the patches of yellow light on the smooth, varnished bellies of the 'cellos and the bass viols in the rear, the restless, wind-tossed forest of fiddle necks and bows—I recalled how, in the first orchestra I ever heard, those long bow-strokes seemed to draw the heart out of me, as a conjurer's stick reels out yards of paper ribbon from a hat.

The first number was the Tannhauser overture. When the horns drew out the first strain of the Pilgrim's chorus, Aunt Georgiana clutched my coat sleeve. Then it was I first realized that for her this broke a silence of thirty years. I saw again the tall, naked house on the prairie, black and grim as a wooden fortress; the black pond where I had learned to swim, its margin pitted with sun-dried cattle tracks; the rain gullied clay banks about the naked house, the four dwarf ash seedlings where the dish-cloths were always hung to dry before the kitchen door. The world there was the flat world of the ancients;[23] to the east, a cornfield that stretched to daybreak; to the west, a corral that reached to sunset; between, the conquests of peace, dearer-bought than those of war.

The overture closed, my aunt released my coat sleeve, but she said nothing. She sat staring dully at the orchestra. What, I wondered, did she get from it? She had been a good pianist in her day, I knew, and her musical education had been broader than that of most music teachers of a quarter of a century ago. She had often told me of Mozart's operas and Meyerbeer's, and I could remember hearing her sing, years ago, certain melodies of Verdi.[24] When I had fallen ill with a fever in her house she used to sit by my cot in the evening—

---

[17] Rameses (ram′ ə sēz) is the name shared by several kings of ancient Egypt.

[18] [froth and fret . . . flows] This phrase refers to the general busy activity that would come and go past a museum statue.

[19] Here, bullion (bool′ yən) is gold.

[20] Yukon refers to the Yukon River, a major route to the Klondike gold fields in Canada.

[21] Écru (ā′ kro͞o) is beige.

[22] An impressionist is a member of a movement in French painting that emphasized the play of light and color.

[23] The ancients refers to those who lived in classical Greece and Rome.

[24] Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (woolf′ gang′ ä′ mə dā′ əs mōt′ särt) (1756–1791) was an Austrian composer. Giuseppe Verdi (jo͞o zep′ pe ver′ dē) (1813–1901) was an Italian composer of opera.

Identify Sequence How do the flashbacks contribute to the effect of Clark's realizations about his aunt? 1

Listening Practice

Analyze Music Point out to students that they hear music all around them, far more than people in Georgiana's time did. To respond thoughtfully to music, have students analyze its content. Have students use these questions to help them analyze a favorite piece of music:

- How does the music affect my mood? What emotions do I associate with the music?
- How do the melody and lyrics contribute to the mood of the music?
- What instruments are used to perform the music? What is the tempo of the music?

when the cool, night wind blew in through the faded mosquito netting tacked over the window and I lay watching a certain bright star that burned red above the cornfield—and sing "Home to our mountains, O, let us return!" in a way fit to break the heart of a Vermont boy near dead of homesickness already.

I watched her closely through the prelude to Tristan and Isolde, trying vainly to conjecture what that seething turmoil of strings and winds might mean to her, but she sat mutely staring at the violin bows that drove obliquely downward, like the pelting streaks of rain in a summer shower. Had this music any message for her? Had she enough left to at all comprehend this power which had kindled the world since she had left it? I was in a fever of curiosity, but Aunt Georgiana sat silent upon her peak in Darien.[25] She preserved this utter immobility throughout the number from The Flying Dutchman, though her fingers worked mechanically upon her black dress, as if, of themselves, they were recalling the piano score they had once played. Poor hands! They had been stretched and twisted into mere tentacles to hold and lift and knead with; on one of them a thin, worn band that had once been a wedding ring. As I pressed and gently quieted one of those groping hands, I remembered with quivering eyelids their services for me in other days.

Soon after the tenor began the "Prize Song," I heard a quick drawn breath and turned to my aunt. Her eyes were closed, but the tears were glistening on her cheeks, and I think, in a moment more, they were in my eyes as well. It never really died, then—the soul which can suffer so excruciatingly and so interminably; it withers to the outward eye only; like that strange moss which can lie on a dusty shelf half a century and yet, if placed in water, grows green again. She wept so throughout the development and elaboration of the melody.

4 During the intermission before the second half, I questioned my aunt and found that the "Prize Song" was not new to her. Some years before there had drifted to the farm in Red Willow County a young German, a tramp cowpuncher,[26] who had sung in the chorus at Bayreuth[27] when he was a boy, along with the other peasant boys and girls. Of a Sunday morning he used to sit on his gingham-sheeted bed in the hands' bedroom which opened off the kitchen, cleaning the leather of his boots and saddle, singing the "Prize Song," while my aunt went about her work in the kitchen. She had hovered over him until she had prevailed upon him to join the country church, though his sole fitness for this step, in so far as I could gather, lay in his boyish face and his possession of this divine melody. Shortly afterward, he had gone to town on the Fourth of July, been drunk for several days, lost his money at a faro[28] table, ridden a saddled Texas steer on a bet, and disappeared with a fractured collar-bone. All this my aunt told me huskily, wanderingly, as though she were talking in the weak lapses of illness.

"Well, we have come to better things than the old Trovatore[29] at any rate, Aunt Georgie?" I queried, with a well meant effort at jocularity.[30]

Her lip quivered and she hastily put her handkerchief up to her mouth. From behind it

---

[25] The phrase "peak in Darien" (dār′ ē en′) alludes to the poem "On First Looking into Chapman's Homer" by John Keats. The poem describes Spanish explorers on a mountain in Darien, now Panama, who stand silently and in awe, as the first Europeans to view the Pacific Ocean.

[26] Cowpuncher means "cowboy."

[27] Bayreuth (bī roit′) is a German city famous for its annual Wagnerian music festival.

[28] Faro (fār′ ō) is a gambling game played with a deck of cards.

[29] Trovatore (tro və tōr′e) refers to Il Trovatore, an opera by Giuseppe Verdi.

[30] Jocularity means "joking" or "humor."

2 Point of View What effect does the first-person point of view have on the depiction of the concert?

3 Regionalism What does the description of Georgiana's hands reveal about the difference between Boston and the Nebraska farm, according to Clark?

Vocabulary

obliquely (ō blēk′ lē) adv. in a slanting or sloping direction

Teach

Literary Element 2

Point of View Answer: It allows the reader to share in Clark's effort to understand Georgiana's reaction to the concert. Because Clark does not know Georgiana's precise feelings, suspense is added as he reveals bits of her history throughout the story.

Big Idea 3

Regionalism Answer: As Clark watches Georgiana's "tentacles," he realizes that farm-work has destroyed her ability to make music as she once did.

Literary Element 4

Characterization Ask students to read the anecdote about Georgiana and the young German. Ask: What does this story reveal about Georgiana's character? (Her love for music is so great that she befriended a young man almost solely because of his musical ability.)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging This story features long, complex sentences and short phrases. To improve reading fluency, urge students to read each paragraph silently before reading it aloud to a partner. Remind students that, when reading, commas and semicolons suggest short pauses, whereas end punctuation requires longer pauses.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Point of View Answer: He has experienced both city life and farm life, so he can empathize with his aunt.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 76.

Baritone Bryn Terfel as Wolfram in Wagner's Tannhäuser at the Metropolitan Opera.

she murmured, "And you have been hearing this ever since you left me, Clark?" Her question was the gentlest and saddest of reproaches.

The second half of the program consisted of four numbers from the Ring, and closed with Siegfried's funeral march. My aunt wept quietly, but almost continuously, as a shallow vessel overflows in a rain-storm. From time to time her dim eyes looked up at the lights, burning softly under their dull glass globes.

The deluge of sound poured on and on; I never knew what she found in the shining current of it; I never knew how far it bore her, or past what happy islands. From the trembling of her face I could well believe that before the last number she had been carried out where the myriad[31] graves are, into the grey, nameless burying grounds of the sea; or into some world of death vaster yet, where, from the beginning of the world, hope has lain down with hope and dream with dream and, renouncing,[32] slept.

The concert was over; the people filed out of the hall chattering and laughing, glad to relax and find the living level again, but my kinswoman made no effort to rise. The harpist slipped the green felt cover over his instrument; the flute-players shook the water from their mouthpieces; the men of the orchestra went out one by one, leaving the stage to the chairs and music stands, empty as a winter cornfield.

I spoke to my aunt. She burst into tears and sobbed pleadingly. "I don't want to go, Clark, I don't want to go!"

I understood. For her, just outside the concert hall, lay the black pond with the cattle-tracked bluffs; the tall, unpainted house, with weather-curled boards, naked as a tower; the crook-backed ash seedlings where the dish-cloths hung to dry; the gaunt,[33] moulting turkeys picking up refuse about the kitchen door.

---

[31] Myriad means "countless" or "innumerable."

[32] Renouncing means "giving up."

[33] Gaunt means "extremely thin."

Point of View How does Clark know what his aunt is feeling? 1

Reading Practice

Compare Comparison refers to an expression of either similarity or difference. In literary works, metaphors are often used to develop subtle and complex comparisons. Work with students to find examples of metaphors and comparisons in the story—of colors, of the ways Georgiana's hands function, of the similarity of Nebraska life to prehistoric times or to a prison. Urge students to list as many comparisons and metaphors as they can. Discuss generalizations students can make about the comparisons—for instance, that they mostly favor Boston.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. How did the story affect your impressions of nineteenth-century frontier life?

2. (a)How does Clark react to the letter from his uncle? (b)Why does he react so strongly to the letter?

3. The narrator says that he owed to his aunt "most of the good that ever came my way in my boyhood." How is her influence apparent in his adult life?

4. (a)How does Georgiana behave after the concert ends? (b)What might the concert hall symbolize for her?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Georgiana seldom talks to Clark about music. Why then does she tell Clark about the Huguenots performance she saw in Paris?

6. After his experience with Georgiana, how might Clark perceive his access to concerts?

Connect

7. Big Idea Regionalism In what ways is this story regional? In what ways is it universal?

8. Connect to the Author How is Cather's ambivalence toward Nebraska reflected in this story? Explain, using details from the story.

Primary Source Quotation

Growing Up in Red Cloud

Cather moved to Nebraska with her family when she was nine. Prairie homesteaders endured severe conditions in a barren landscape. Due to the scarcity of trees, many lived in sod houses like the one shown below right. Despite hardships, Cather enjoyed riding her pony and hearing the stories of European immigrants. She learned Greek and Latin, and attended theatrical and opera performances. Prairie life inspired Cather to write novels and short stories.

> "So the [Nebraska] country and I had it out together and by the end of the first autumn, that shaggy grass country had gripped me with a passion I never have been able to shake. It has been the happiness and curse of my life."
>
> —Willa Cather

Group Activity Discuss the following questions with your classmates.

Based on what you have read, how do you think Cather's experience of prairie life influenced her writing of "A Wagner Matinée"? How might these experiences have shaped her different portrayals of Aunt Georgiana and the narrator?

Primary Source Quotation

1. Students should be able to compare the rugged characteristics of the narrator in "A Wagner Matinée" to the life of someone living on the prairie. They may also see a relationship between Cather's interest in theater and opera as a girl.

2. Prairie life subjected people to conditions such as living in sod houses, loneliness, and harsh weather. Aunt Georgiana was brought up in Boston; she was exposed to a more cosmopolitan lifestyle in her early youth.

After You Read

Assess

1. Possible answer: I gained new insight into the difficulties of frontier life and the sacrifices people made to live it.

2. (a) He feels like a shy farm boy again. (b) Clark has been deeply affected by his aunt's kindness to him. He also realizes that this trip may be significant for her.

3. Georgiana's influence is apparent in Clark's appreciation of culture and in his choice of city life over country life.

4. (a) She cries because she does not want to go return to a life so lacking in culture. (b) The concert hall symbolizes her youth and her lost opportunities.

5. She wants to console Clark and distract him from his own pain.

6. Clark will appreciate even more his access to cultural events.

7. The story is regional in its depiction of Aunt Georgiana, scenes from her pioneer life, and scenes from her visit to Boston, where she is now an outsider. As a story about choices and regrets, it is a universal story.

8. The narrator's admiration for Aunt Georgiana and a few of his recollections about the farm convey the author's appreciation for her life as a pioneer. However, Aunt Georgiana's desire to stay in Boston and the narrator's recollections of the harshness of the pioneer life suggest the author's appreciation for city life.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 169–170.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Element

1. Clark grew up close to Georgiana, knows the details of her background, and cares about her feelings.
2. Her comments about the concert seem to confirm Clark's inferences.

Progress Check

Can students analyze point of view?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 71.

Review: Voice

1. Clark is curious about what Georgiana is thinking.
2. That he is sensitive to music's powerful effect on his aunt
3. Clark's voice reveals that he is sensitive, passionate, educated, and observant.

Reading Strategy

1. C is the correct answer because the use of flashbacks enables Cather to extend readers' knowledge of the characters into the past while centering the action in the present.

Progress Check

Can students identify sequence?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 72.

Literary Element Point of View

"A Wagner Matinée" is written from the first-person point of view. The story is filtered through the sensations, thoughts, and memories of Clark, the narrator. The use of pronouns such as I, you, and me also indicates first-person point of view.

In stories told in the first person, the narrator is a character in the story, and the story is limited to his or her knowledge, experience, and biases. The narrator may not be reliable, so judge whether his or her interpretation of events is accurate. Use details in the story to help evaluate narrator reliability and to infer events the narrator may not know or share.

1. Why might the reader trust Clark's interpretation of Georgiana?
2. What details about Georgiana confirm Clark's interpretation of her?

Review: Voice

Voice refers to the distinctive language that conveys the author's or narrator's personality to the reader. Voice is determined by elements of style such as word choice, sentence structure, and tone.

Partner Activity Discuss how Clark's voice is conveyed in the excerpt below and answer the questions.

1. What does Clark's use of questions reveal?
2. What do words such as power, kindled, and fever and the Darien allusion reveal about Clark?
3. How does Clark's voice convey his personality?

"Had this music any message for her? Had she enough left to at all comprehend this power which had kindled the world since she had left it? I was in a fever of curiosity, but Aunt Georgiana sat silent upon her peak in Darien."

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Reading Strategy Identify Sequence

ACT Skills Practice

1. Cather might have used flashbacks instead of presenting events chronologically to
   - I. provide important background information about the characters.
   - II. maintain the focus of the action on Georgiana's visit to Boston.
   - III. create a sense of what might happen after the story ends.

A. I only
C. I and II only
B. III only
D. I, II, and III

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Analogies Choose the word that best completes each analogy.

1. grandparent : legacy :: groom :
   - a. house c. bride
   - b. ring d. husband
2. quickly : fast :: doggedly :
   - a. stubborn c. obediently
   - b. proud d. docile
3. reproach : disapproval :: compliment :
   - a. criticism c. affection
   - b. approval d. attention
4. sweat : trepidation :: wink :
   - a. anxiety c. mischief
   - b. blink d. eye
5. obliquely : direction :: passionately :
   - a. reason c. spontaneous
   - b. instinct d. feeling

Academic Vocabulary

Aunt Georgiana has an internal response to the external stimulus of music.

External has many meanings. Using context clues, infer its meaning in each sentence below.

1. The skin is an external feature of the body.
2. Despite her external composure, Deepali was so on edge she could barely breathe.

Vocabulary

1. b 2. a 3. b 4. c 5. d

Academic Vocabulary

1. In this sentence, external means "exterior."
2. In this sentence, external means "superficial or appearing merely as such."

Respond Through Writing

Reflective Essay

Compare and Contrast Hearing Wagner once again in a concert hall has a powerful effect on Aunt Georgiana. Write a reflective essay about a time when a particular piece of music or art had a strong effect on you. Compare and contrast your experiences with the events in "A Wagner Matinée." Why did this experience affect you strongly? What generalizations about the nature of art can you make based on your experience?

Understand the Task In a reflective essay, you describe an experience to better understand what it means personally and what it might teach others. It is important to develop a theme, or central message about life, in your essay.

Prewrite Brainstorm, look over old journal entries, revisit some of your favorite music or art, or talk to friends to help you recall the experience you wish to describe. Consider how it shaped your views.

Draft Compare your experience to Aunt Georgiana's response to hearing Wagner in the story. Pay attention to your word choice, sentence structure, and tone. In "A Wagner Matinée," Cather uses details and evocative images to describe Georgiana's memories. This specificity helps the reader glean more abstract ideas about Georgiana's life. Include details and imagery that highlight the significance of the event to you so that the reader can draw more abstract ideas and themes from your reflection.

Event	Significance	Details and Images

Revise Exchange papers with a partner. Ask your partner to underline your essay's thesis and circle its supporting details. Ask him or her if your experience relates to a broader theme or idea. Based on your partner's feedback, revise your draft.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your paper, correcting any errors in grammar, spelling, and punctuation. See the Grammar Tip in the side column for help using absolute phrases.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing a reflective essay.

Grammar: Using absolute phrases.

Grammar Tip

Absolute Phrases

Absolute phrases modify an entire sentence rather than a specific word. They consist of nouns or pronouns modified by participles or participial phrases. In the following example, the absolute phrase is underlined:

- The concert drawing to a close, Aunt Georgiana began to dread leaving.
- His aunt overwhelmed with emotion, Clark found it hard to talk to her.

Sometimes the participle being is understood:

- His aunt [being] near the end of her life, Clark knew change would be hard.

After You Read

Teach

Writing

Students' reflective essays should relate a significant event and compare that event to themes in "A Wagner Matinée." Essays should also relate to broader themes or abstract ideas and should employ emotional language and descriptions.

For grammar practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 75.

Scoring Guide

Assess students' performance in the following categories with reference to the scoring guide at the bottom of the page:

- Addresses all parts of the writing task.
- Provides a meaningful thesis; maintains focus and organization.
- Supports the thesis with details and examples.
- Provides a variety of sentence types; uses precise, descriptive language.
- Observes English language conventions.

Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Task addressed	fully	mostly	partially	barely
Thesis	meaningful	provided	partial	weak
Support	thoughtful	provided	limited	weak
Language	varied, descriptive	varied, often descriptive	predictable, imprecise	repetitive, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	many	serious

Focus

Write this sentence on the board:

Your substitute teacher, a retired college professor, will administer the exam.

Discuss how the substitute teacher's being a retired professor is an extra detail.

Teach

Essential/Nonessential One way to classify an appositive is to remove it. If the meaning of the sentence is still clear, the appositive is nonessential. Ask: Does the posted sentence contain an essential or a nonessential appositive? Explain. (Nonessential: if the appositive "a retired college professor" is removed, the sentence is still clear.)

Assess

Revise

1. Willa Cather, a prolific writer, was known for her portrayal of pioneer life.
2. "A Wagner Matinée" appeared in The Troll Garden, a collection of stories.
3. The music evoked nostalgia that brought the woman, Clark's aunt, to tears.
4. A cowpuncher, a young German who had sung at Bayreuth, had drifted in.
5. Correct

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Grammar:
Distinguishing between essential and nonessential appositives.
Using commas with nonessential elements.

Grammar Workshop

Appositives

Literature Connection In the following quotation, Howard Carpenter is an appositive—a noun, a pronoun, or a noun phrase that further identifies another noun, pronoun, or noun phrase.

> "One summer . . . she had kindled the callow fancy of my uncle, Howard Carpenter, then an idle, shiftless boy of twenty-one."
>
> —Willa Cather, from "A Wagner Matinée"

The appositive is set off with commas because it is nonessential (or nonrestrictive). Removing it would not change the meaning of my uncle; it simply adds information—the uncle's name. If Cather had written she had kindled the fancy of my uncle Howard, the appositive Howard would be essential (or restrictive); it would provide essential information, specifying which uncle the speaker is referring to.

Examples

Cather's experiences inspired the novels My Ántonia and O Pioneers!

Here, the appositive My Ántonia and O Pioneers! specifies which novels—it is essential to the meaning of the sentence.

She was in the city where she had spent her youth, a place longed for.

Here, the appositive a place longed for is nonessential. It supplies information about city, but does not change its meaning. Notice that the appositive comes after an adjective clause (where she had spent her youth) modifying city.

Appositives

An appositive is a noun, pronoun, or noun phrase that identifies another noun, pronoun, or a noun phase.

Restrictive (essential) appositives are not set off with commas. (My brother Alfred is a poet.)

Nonrestrictive (nonessential) appositives are set off with commas. (Alfred, our family poet, has never been published.)

Tip

To determine whether to set off an appositive with commas, try reading the sentence without it. If the appositive is not needed to identify a noun, add commas.

Language Handbook

For more on appositives, see Language Handbook pp. R42–R61.

Literature Online

Grammar For more grammar practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Revise Write the five sentences below, adding commas as necessary. One sentence needs no commas.

1. Willa Cather a prolific writer was known for her portrayal of pioneer life.
2. "A Wagner Matinée" appeared in The Troll Garden a collection of stories.
3. The music evoked nostalgia that brought the woman Clark's aunt to tears.
4. A cowpuncher a young German who had sung at Bayreuth had drifted in.
5. The aria "The Prize Song" is from Wagner's opera Die Meistersinger.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To decide whether an appositive is essential, students should ask themselves whether taking out the appositive changes the meaning of the sentence. Write the following sentence on the board: My sister Jessica runs track. Ask: Which is the appositive? (Jessica) Erase the word Jessica. Point out that the sentence still makes sense but that its meaning has changed in that it does not tell which sister runs track. The appositive is therefore essential to the sentence. Have students complete the "Revise" exercise on this page and remind them to insert commas around nonessential appositives. Afterwards, have students read each exercise sentence aloud. Then have them read the sentence again without the appositive and decide whether removing the appositive changed the meaning of the sentence.

Before You Read

I Will Fight No More Forever

Meet Chief Joseph

(ca. 1840–1904)

Chief Joseph—whose given name was Hinmaton Yalaktit (hin mə tō´ yä läkh´ tet) or "Thunder Rolling Down the Mountain"—was born in the Wallowa Valley in what is now northeastern Oregon. When his father died in 1871, Joseph was elected to succeed him as a chief of the Nez Percé (nez´ purs´), the largest and most powerful of the Sahaptin-speaking tribes that lived in present-day central Idaho and contiguous areas in Oregon and Washington. Other Sahaptin-speaking tribes include the Cayuse, Tenino, Wallawalla, and Yakima.

The Nez Percé were more warlike than neighboring tribes, especially after acquiring the horse from the Plains Indians in the early eighteenth century. However, they had maintained peace with the whites for decades, ever since the Lewis and Clark expedition in 1805, which was their first significant contact with whites. Nevertheless, Joseph inherited a volatile situation. In 1863, following a gold rush into Nez Percé territory, the U.S. government had reclaimed three quarters of the land it had ceded to the tribe in an 1855 treaty. Chief Joseph successfully resisted efforts to remove his band from the Wallowa Valley until 1877, when the government threatened removal by force.

> "Hear me, my chiefs. I am tired; my heart is sick and sad."
>
> —Chief Joseph

Cooperator and Leader To avoid bloodshed, Chief Joseph decided to cooperate, but as he led his band toward a reservation in Idaho, he learned that three of his braves, enraged at the government's action, had killed a group of white settlers and prospectors. To escape retaliation by the U.S. Army, Chief Joseph led his people—some 200 to 300 warriors and their families—on a long, grueling march toward the Canadian border. They trekked through Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana for nearly three months, covering 1,000 miles as the warriors successfully fought off U.S. troops. Within forty miles of their destination, in the Bear Paw mountains of Montana, the Nez Percé were surrounded and forced to surrender. The chase and intermittent skirmishes had claimed the lives of 239 Nez Percé, many of them women and children, as well as the lives of 266 U.S. Army personnel.

Lasting Legacy Although Chief Joseph had thought his people would be able to return home, they were removed to Indian Territory, or present-day Oklahoma, where many fell ill and died. In 1885 some of the survivors were returned to the Pacific Northwest, but about half, including Chief Joseph, were taken to Colville reservation, a non-Nez Percé reservation in Washington State. There Chief Joseph died, according to his doctor, "of a broken heart." At a ceremony honoring him, a Nez Percé chief named Yellow Bull said, "Joseph is dead, but his words will live forever."

LOG ON Literature Online

Author Search For more about Chief Joseph, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 34

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 47

Or share a selection of editorials about controversial issues in your local or larger community.

Ask: What opinions are argued and defended in these articles? How do the writers use reasons and evidence to support their positions?

Have students consider, as they read, how the persuasive arguments used by Chief Joseph compare with ones used about other issues in other times.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resour-ces Book, pp. 79–90.

Selection Skills

I Will Fight No More Forever

Literary Elements
- Tone (SE pp. 532, 534)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Journal Entry (SE p. 534)

Reading Skills
- Evaluate Style (SE pp. 532–534)
- Predict (TE p. 532)

Vocabulary Skills
- Academic Vocabulary (SE p. 534)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 531)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In the midst of his tribe's desperate flight to Canada, Chief Joseph realizes that many of the tribe's leaders are dead and that the women and children are freezing and starving. After years of fighting with white people to protect the Nez Perce land and way of life, he concludes that it is time to stop fighting.

Cultural History ☆

Media Influence The national press followed the Nez Perce retreat closely. By the time of surrender, Chief Joseph had earned the respect and admiration not only of his opponents but also of a great many others. He did not mistreat his prisoners, and he showed great leadership and empathy in his care for the women, the children, and the elderly. Also, instead of stealing supplies, he bought them from ranches and stores as the Nez Perce retreated.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 3.0
DRP: 41
Lexile: 380

Literature and Reading Preview

Learning Objectives

For pages 531–534

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing tone.

Reading: Evaluating style.

Writing: Writing a journal entry.

Connect to the Speech

What does it mean to lose with dignity? Discuss this question with a partner.

Build Background

The Nez Percé was the southeasternmost tribe in the Plateau culture, which developed on the plateaus between the coastal mountain ranges and the Rocky Mountains. In the winter, the Plateau tribes lived by rivers. In the summer, they moved to mountain valleys to hunt and gather roots. By the time Chief Joseph came to power, the Nez Percé had strayed away from the Plateau culture and adopted many cultural components of the Plains Indians, including the war bonnet and the teepee.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Regionalism

As you read, ask yourself, How were the Native Americans affected by westward expansion?

Literary Element Tone

Tone is the writer's attitude toward the subject of a work. Writers create the tone of a work primarily through diction, or word choice. As you read, ask yourself, How does Chief Joseph's diction contribute to the tone of his speech?

Reading Strategy Evaluate Style

Style refers to the way that a writer uses language. Elements of style include tone, diction, sentence length, and imagery. When you evaluate style, you make a judgment about it based on the application of appropriate standards. As you read, evaluate how individual elements contribute to Chief Joseph's style.

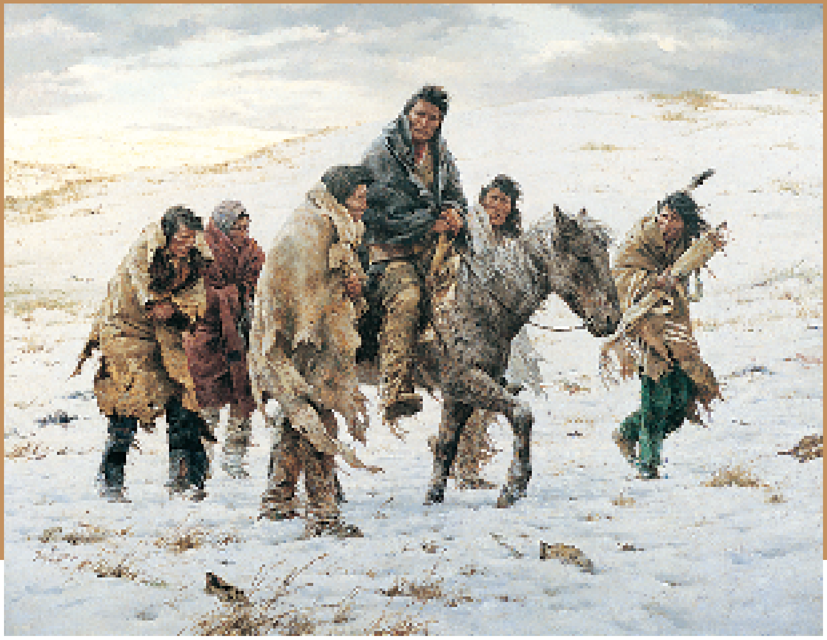
Tip: Take Notes Use a chart to record examples of different elements of Chief Joseph's style. In the right-hand column, explain briefly how the elements work.

Element	Example	Effect
Tone	"Maybe I shall find [the children] among the dead."

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Predict Ask students to reread the quotation by Chief Joseph and the paragraph titled "Cooperator and Leader" on page 531. Then have students study the painting on page 533 and imagine how Chief Joseph must have felt as he rode forward to surrender.

Ask: What do you think the tone of the speech will be? (sad, weary) Have students describe the people in the painting. Tell students to use the clues from the text and the painting to brainstorm about possible reasons for Chief Joseph's decision to surrender.



Chief Joseph Rides to Surrender, 1979. Howard Terpning. Oil on canvas. ©1979 Howard Terpning. ©1979 The Greenwich Workshop® Inc. Courtesy of The Greenwich Workshop Inc., Shelton, CT. ★

I Will Fight No More Forever

Chief Joseph

1 "Tell General Howard[1] I know his heart. What he told me before, I have in my heart. I am tired of fighting. Our chiefs are killed. Looking Glass[2] is dead. Too Hul Hul Suit[3] is dead. The old men are all dead. It is the young men who say yes and no. He who led on the young men is dead.[4] It is cold and we have no blankets. The little children are freezing to death. My people, some of them, have run away to the hills and have no blankets, no food; no one knows where they are—perhaps freezing to death. I want to have time to look for my children and see how many I can find. Maybe I shall find them among the dead. Hear me, my chiefs. I am tired; my heart is sick and sad. From where the sun now stands I will fight no more forever."

---

[1] General (Oliver Otis) Howard (1830–1909) had been a Union general in the Civil War. He sent troops to fight the Nez Percé in the Battle of White Bird Canyon.

[2] Looking Glass was a respected leader of the Nez Percé. He took part in the 1877 retreat.

[3] Too Hul Hul Suit, or Tu Ku Lxu C'uut (tœ kœl′ hu sœt′), leader of the White Bird tribe, was a member of the negotiating team that met with General Howard. He favored fighting for the Nez Percé land rather than moving to a reservation.

[4] [He who led . . . dead.] refers to Chief Joseph's younger brother, Ollikut (ōl okh′ ut).

Evaluate Style What do the form and content of these two sentences emphasize? How do you think they affect the listener or reader? 2

Teach

Big Idea 1

Regionalism Say: Keep these questions in mind as you read: How does Chief Joseph's speech suggest the time and place of its writing? (It describes the cold and barren surroundings and the moment of despair facing the Nez Perce.) What has happened to the community of the Nez Perce? (The community is broken and some members are lost.)

Reading Strategy 2

Evaluate Style Answer: The parallel structure of the sentences emphasizes the deaths of two individuals close to Joseph. Joseph's use of the chiefs' names makes it easier for the listener or reader to connect to his message.

View the Art ★

Howard Terpning (1927–) was born and educated in Illinois and later lived in Arizona. He has painted many aspects of Native American life and the Old West. His paintings are much sought after by collectors.

Approaching Level

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

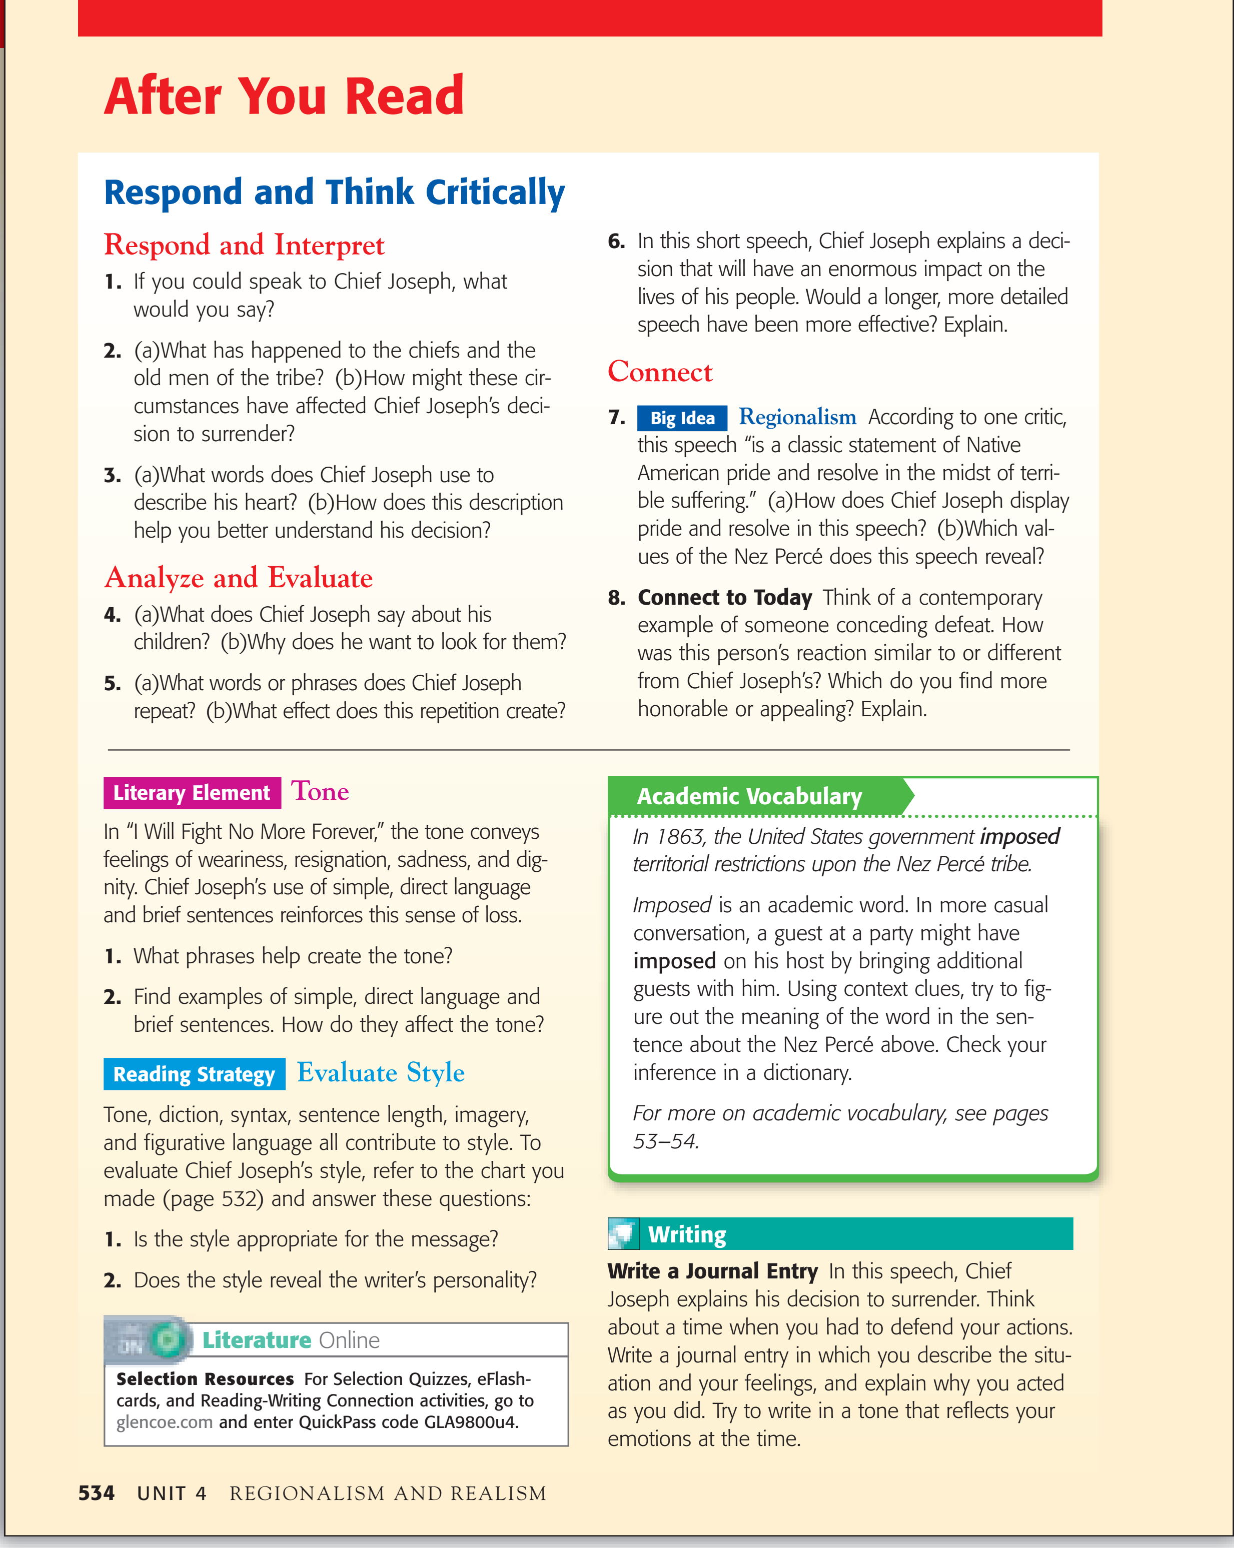
Emerging Help students analyze Chief Joseph's reasons for surrendering so close to the Canadian border. Ask: What does Chief Joseph hope to achieve by giving this speech? (He hopes for peace and the chance to find rest for his people.) What reasons does he give for his decision to surrender? (The chiefs and all of the old men are dead, and the children are freezing to death. He wants to look for his missing people, and he is tired and full of sorrow.)

After You Read

Assess

1. Students may wish that they could have asked whether he had ever regretted his decision or what General Howard said.
2. (a) They have all died. (b) They may have discouraged Joseph and convinced him that it was time for the next generation to lead.
3. (a) Sick and sad (b) His sorrow is the cause of his decision to stop fighting.
4. (a) They have fled to the hills and are suffering from exposure. (b) He is the father of his people, so he wants to help them.
5. (a) He repeats the phrases "is dead" and "freezing to death." (b) The repetition reinforces his sorrow at the many deaths.
6. Possible answer: The speech effectively expresses the chief's feelings. The shortness of the speech suggests his weariness.
7. (a) He uses words such as "know," "no blankets," and "death," indicating finality. (b) honor, bravery, and dignity
8. Students may discuss political candidates' calling their opponents to concede an election, a confrontation's arising, or an important decision to be made.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 171–172.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. If you could speak to Chief Joseph, what would you say?
2. (a)What has happened to the chiefs and the old men of the tribe? (b)How might these circumstances have affected Chief Joseph's decision to surrender?
3. (a)What words does Chief Joseph use to describe his heart? (b)How does this description help you better understand his decision?

Analyze and Evaluate

4. (a)What does Chief Joseph say about his children? (b)Why does he want to look for them?
5. (a)What words or phrases does Chief Joseph repeat? (b)What effect does this repetition create?
6. In this short speech, Chief Joseph explains a decision that will have an enormous impact on the lives of his people. Would a longer, more detailed speech have been more effective? Explain.

Connect

7. Big Idea Regionalism According to one critic, this speech "is a classic statement of Native American pride and resolve in the midst of terrible suffering." (a)How does Chief Joseph display pride and resolve in this speech? (b)Which values of the Nez Percé does this speech reveal?
8. Connect to Today Think of a contemporary example of someone conceding defeat. How was this person's reaction similar to or different from Chief Joseph's? Which do you find more honorable or appealing? Explain.

Literary Element Tone

In "I Will Fight No More Forever," the tone conveys feelings of weariness, resignation, sadness, and dignity. Chief Joseph's use of simple, direct language and brief sentences reinforces this sense of loss.

1. What phrases help create the tone?
2. Find examples of simple, direct language and brief sentences. How do they affect the tone?

Reading Strategy Evaluate Style

Tone, diction, syntax, sentence length, imagery, and figurative language all contribute to style. To evaluate Chief Joseph's style, refer to the chart you made (page 532) and answer these questions:

1. Is the style appropriate for the message?
2. Does the style reveal the writer's personality?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Academic Vocabulary

In 1863, the United States government imposed territorial restrictions upon the Nez Percé tribe.

Imposed is an academic word. In more casual conversation, a guest at a party might have imposed on his host by bringing additional guests with him. Using context clues, try to figure out the meaning of the word in the sentence about the Nez Percé above. Check your inference in a dictionary.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Writing

Write a Journal Entry In this speech, Chief Joseph explains his decision to surrender. Think about a time when you had to defend your actions. Write a journal entry in which you describe the situation and your feelings, and explain why you acted as you did. Try to write in a tone that reflects your emotions at the time.

Literary Element

1. "I am tired of fighting"; "I am tired; my heart is sick and sad."
2. "The old men are all dead"; the repetition of "dead" and "freezing." Both contribute to the sad, resigned tone of the speech.

Reading Strategy

1. Yes. It vividly portrays their stark plight.
2. Yes. It reflects his dignity and anguish.

Progress Check

Can students analyze tone?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 85.

Academic Vocabulary

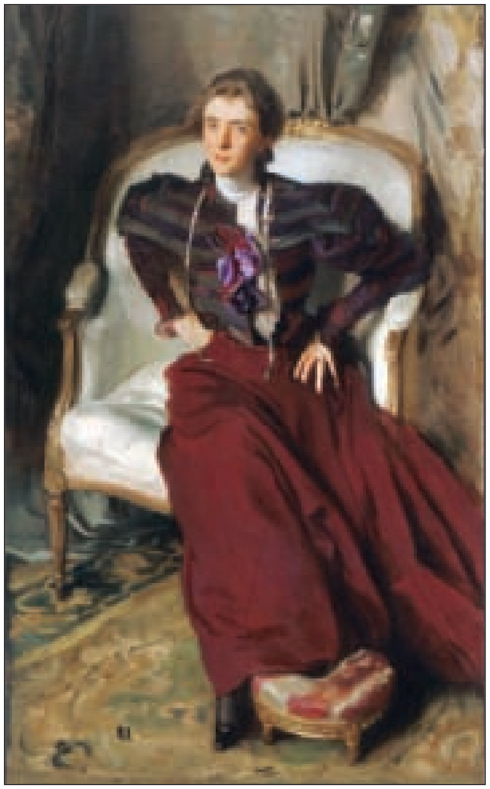
Students should be able to deduce from the context that impose means "to apply authority" or "to bring about by force."

Writing

Students might write about a conflict with an authority figure such as a parent, a teacher, or a coach; how they felt during the conflict; and how it was resolved.

PART 2

Realism and Naturalism



Mrs. Charles Thursby, 1897–1898. John Singer Sargent. Oil on canvas, 78 x 39¾ in. Collection of The Newark Museum, NJ.

View the Art One of the most famous portraitists of his time, John Singer Sargent was known for capturing the personality of his subjects. Looking at this painting, what impressions do you have of the woman pictured? What details contribute to your impressions? ★

> "There are two ways of spreading light: to be
> The candle or the mirror that reflects it." 1
>
> —Edith Wharton, "Vesalius in Zante"

UNIT FOUR

PART 2

Analyze and Extend

Literary Element 1

Figurative Language Ask: What might spreading light be a metaphor for? What might candle and mirror be metaphors for? (Spreading light suggests sharing knowledge. A candle provides light directly and a mirror indirectly.)

Say: People used the quotation to comment on the human responsibility to make new discoveries or to inspire others to improve human life. Ask: What human conditions needed improvement during this period? (urban poverty and women's rights)

View the Art ★

Answer: The woman looks confident and assertive. She is sitting with her legs crossed, hands on her hips, leaning forward in her chair.

John Singer Sargent (1856–1925) was known for his portrait painting. Ask: How do you think this portrait relates to the quotation? (The woman looks strong and capable of having and sharing knowledge.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Ask: How would you know what to call an adult you meet? (Ask what the person would like to be called; notice how someone introduces himself or herself.) Explain that in the past, a married woman in the United States was referred to by her husband's name—for example, Mrs. Charles Thursby.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To make the quotation by Wharton more meaningful, ask students to write down examples of direct light and examples of reflected light. Ask: Which kind of light is better? (They are different, but both are beneficial.)

For additional support for English Learners, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 94.

Literary History

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 48

Or have students discuss this question: Is the United States a classless society? (Students may say that today's classes are defined by family income, "white collar" versus "blue collar" jobs, and level of education.)

Say: As you read the essay, consider to what extent these class differences exist today and how social reform has helped diminish them.

Teach

Literary Element

Stream of Consciousness

Read students the passage on page 586 from Stephen Crane's "The Open Boat": "If I am going to be drowned . . . "

Ask: Why is stream of consciousness an appropriate technique of Realism? (Inner monologues realistically portray free-flowing human thoughts.)

Learning Objectives

For pages 536–537

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing literary periods.
Evaluating historical influences.
Connecting to the literature.

Literary History

Urban America's Two Faces

IN THE LATE NINETEENTH AND EARLY twentieth centuries, despite the growing middle class, rapid industrialization created two sharply contrasting urban classes: wealthy entrepreneurs and poor immigrants from Europe and Asia who provided them with cheap labor. Although dependent upon each other, these groups seldom met, living in starkly different neighborhoods. Wealthy families established fashionable districts in the hearts of cities, where they built fabulous mansions.

By contrast, the majority of factory workers squeezed into dark, overcrowded tenements where crime, violence, fire, and disease were constant threats. U.S. writers of the time responded to and reflected these urban conditions.

> "The entire metropolitan center possessed a high and mighty air calculated to . . . make the gulf between poverty and success seem both wide and deep."
>
> —Theodore Dreiser
> Sister Carrie

The Face of the Urban Rich

Two major Realist writers from the upper class who reflected and criticized its values were the famous literary friends Edith Wharton and Henry James.

Edith Wharton was born in 1862 into one of New York's most prominent families. Her interest in architecture prompted her to criticize and satirize the "conspicuous consumption" (a term coined by social critic Thorstein Veblen) that led to the fashionable, cluttered interior decoration favored by her social class. In Wharton's early novel The House of Mirth (1905), heroine Lily Bart's descent from wealth into poverty is mirrored by a decline in the houses she is forced to inhabit.

Wharton's older contemporary and friend Henry James was born into a distinguished Boston family in 1843. James became the master chronicler of the inner lives of his characters, and his subtle innovations in narrative point of view contributed to the literary technique that his brother William, the famous psychologist, called "the stream of consciousness." James used this technique to probe the complex relationship between wealth and culture. One of his favorite themes was the confrontation between naïve, wealthy, uncultured Americans and highly cultivated and sophisticated Europeans, whose aristocratic civilization was in decline. James's treatment of this theme reached its zenith in his late novel The Ambassadors (1903).

Picnicking in Central Park, 1885. Robert L. Bracklow. Black and white photograph.

Study Skills Practice

Track Terminology Ask students the following questions about the term conspicuous consumption and the man who coined it. Encourage students to use a history textbook, a source of quotations, a biographical dictionary, a regular dictionary, and reliable Web sites to find the answers.

- What was the title of Thorstein Veblen's now-famous 1902 book in which he coined the term conspicuous consumption? (The Theory of the Leisure Class)
- What are two definitions of conspicuous? ("attracting attention" and "violating good taste")
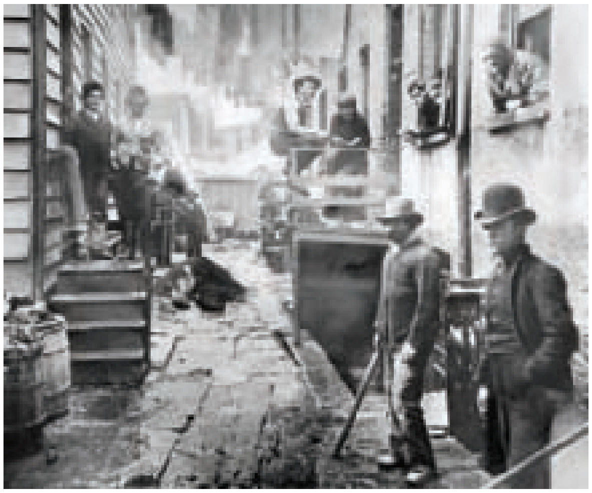
- How would you paraphrase the following line by Veblen: "Conspicuous consumption of valuable goods is a means of reputability to the gentleman of leisure"? (Rich people buy expensive things to impress others.)

The Face of the Urban Poor

The plight of the urban poor was a favorite subject of the new group of Naturalist writers. Stephen Crane's Maggie: A Girl of the Streets is a bleak study of life in the slums of New York City.

Some writers focused their attention on the hardships of immigrants and ethnic groups who faced bigotry and discrimination as well as poverty in U.S. cities. Anzia Yezierska and Abraham Cahan wrote about the social, cultural, and political tensions experienced by Eastern European Jews living in New York's Lower East Side.

Perhaps the most famous writer to address the socioeconomic plight of the urban poor was Theodore Dreiser. In his first and perhaps greatest novel, Sister Carrie (1900), Carrie Meeber, a naïve country girl, comes to Chicago looking for work. There she endures the impersonal cruelty and loneliness of a large U.S. city at the turn of the century.



Men gather in an alley called "Bandit's Roost" in Manhattan's Little Italy. Around the turn of the century, this part of Mulberry Bend was a notoriously dilapidated and dangerous section of New York City. ca. 1890s. Jacob August Riis.

View the Art How do the people in this scene compare with those of the previous page? ★

Reformers and Muckrakers

In the late nineteenth century, a social reform movement arose that was dedicated to providing better conditions for the urban working class. Perhaps the most prominent reformer was Jane Addams. In Twenty Years at Hull-House (1910), she tells how she turned an old home in an immigrant neighborhood in Chicago into a settlement house where residents could learn to speak English, discuss political events, and hold celebrations.

Journalists and novelists known as "muckrakers" began to criticize the social, economic, and political system creating the gulf between rich and poor. In How the Other Half Lives (1890), Jacob Riis alerted President Roosevelt to the squalor of New York City slum tenements. Improvements in the water supply, child labor laws, and other areas resulted. The Jungle (1906), Upton Sinclair's exposé of brutal working conditions in meatpacking, led to the 1906 Meat Inspection and the Pure Food and Drug Acts.

Literature Online

Literature and Reading For more about the literature of urban America, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Respond and Think Critically

1. In Dreiser's Sister Carrie, the protagonist believes that the city will provide her with new opportunities and a new life. Would you have wanted to live in a large city at the turn of the twentieth century? Why or why not?
2. What were Edith Wharton's and Henry James's main criticisms of the wealthy upper class in the United States?
3. How would you compare and contrast Realist and Naturalist Fiction with their predecessor, Romantic Fiction?

Teach

View the Art ★

Answer: The general mood and scenery of this candid photograph contrasts with the formal pose and park setting shown in the photograph on page 536. This group's clothes are plainer, and the view shows laundry and rubbish, instead of "the great outdoors."

Assess

1. Some students may say that they would have been attracted by the city's opportunities and excitement. Others may think that most people in cities suffered dehumanizing conditions.
2. Wharton satirized their conspicuous consumption and aggressiveness. James criticized them for lack of culture and sophistication.
3. Romantic Fiction glorified the imagination; Realist and Naturalist Fiction explored the motivations, actions, and behaviors of real people. The real people whom Naturalists focused on were generally poor or working-class individuals, waging hopeless battles against an unresponsive society or universe.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 93–94.

English Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Advanced Read short sections of "The Two Faces of Urban America" aloud to students. After reading the section called The Face of the Urban Rich, ask: What does the author mean when he says that Henry James was the "master chronicler of inner lives?" (He wrote about people's thoughts and feelings.) After reading The Face of the Urban Poor section, ask: What do you think the "impersonal cruelty and loneliness of the big city" means? (the harshness of living alone, without support, and unknown by others) After reading the final section, ask: What do you think "the other half" means in the Riis book title? (the very poor people)

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 49

Or remind students that American women did not have the right to vote until passage of the Nineteenth Amendment in 1920 and had few opportunities for educational development or economic independence.

Ask: What do you think life was like for women at this time? What do you think young women at this time hoped for?

As they read, have students consider Theodora's hopes and the realities of her life. Have students research the Nineteenth Amendment and compare the intentions of the Amendment to her life.

Before You Read

April Showers

Meet Edith Wharton

(1862–1937)

Edith Wharton is best known for her novels depicting the intricate codes of conduct that ruled the lives of New York City's aristocracy at the end of the 1800s. She felt that the upper-class discouraged both art and the artist.

> "Mrs. Ballinger is one of the ladies who pursue Culture in Bands, as though it were dangerous to meet it alone."
>
> —Edith Wharton
> Xingu and Other Stories, 1916

A Privileged Youth Edith Newbold Jones was born into one of New York City's wealthiest and most distinguished families. Taught by private tutors, she received an excellent education both in the United States and abroad. When she was sixteen, Edith privately published her first book. Her mother may have arranged the publication, hoping that Edith would feel fulfilled, stop writing, and take up interests considered more suited to her social position.

In 1885 Edith married Edward Wharton, a wealthy Boston banker. Shortly after, he began to suffer from both mental and physical illnesses. It was during this time that Wharton began seriously writing fiction with the intention of publishing. She modeled her work mostly after novelist Henry James—combining complicated psychological portraits with critiques of social convention. Throughout the 1890s, she contributed to various magazines and produced two collections of short stories.

A Novelist Abroad Wharton's first novel, The Valley of Decision, was published in 1902. In 1905 the acclaimed novel The House of Mirth appeared.

In 1907, after selling her home and separating from her husband, Wharton permanently settled in Paris, where she felt female artists were more accepted.

As World War I raged, Wharton worked in support of the French—aiding Belgian refugees and raising money from Americans. For this she was given the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the highest honor awarded to a foreigner in France.

During this time Wharton published some of her greatest novels: Ethan Frome, The Reef, The Custom of the Country, and Summer. For The Age of Innocence (1920), probably her best-known work, Wharton became the first woman to be awarded a Pulitzer Prize for fiction.

Wharton's greatness came from her ability to depict the interplay between the life of the mind and of society. Alternately tragic and satiric, Wharton's incisive fiction helped to establish Realism as the most important movement of her day.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Edith Wharton, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Selection Skills

April Showers

Literary Elements
- Flashback (SE pp. 539, 540, 545, 547)
- Theme (SE p. 547)
- Characterization (TE p. 546)
- Sentence Fragments (TE p. 544)

Reading Skills
- Make and Verify Predictions (SE pp. 539, 541, 543, 545, 546, 548)
- Preview (TE p. 540)

Vocabulary Skills
- Denotation and Connotation (SE pp. 548)
- Synonyms (TE p. 539)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Point of View (SE p. 548)
- Summarize (TE p. 542)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 544)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

Have you ever neglected your responsibilities in order to devote yourself to a project you felt passionately about? What was the result? Freewrite for ten minutes on this subject.

Build Background

"April Showers" is set in Massachusetts in the early 1900s. At the time, novels were often printed in magazines in serial form, appearing in weekly or monthly installments.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Realism

As you read, ask yourself, How is Realism's focus on psychology and human behavior displayed in "April Showers"?

Literary Element Flashback

A flashback is an interruption in the chronological order of a narrative to show an event that happened earlier. A writer may use the flashback structure to give readers information that explains the main events of a story. As you read, ask yourself, How does Wharton's use of flashbacks help the reader better understand Theodora's character and the story's events?

Reading Strategy Make and Verify Predictions

To predict means to make an educated guess about what will happen in a text, using the clues that a writer provides. Predicting will help you stay engaged in the plot of a story as it evolves. While you read "April Showers," verify, adjust, or change your predictions as new information emerges in the text.

Tip: Take Notes Use a chart to record your predictions and the evidence on which you base those predictions.

Prediction	Evidence
Theodora's obsession with her novel will come back to haunt her.	Theodora is neglecting her family obligations.

Learning Objectives

For pages 538–548

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing flashback.

Reading: Making and verifying predictions.

Writing: Applying point of view in a brief narrative.

Vocabulary

prosperous (pros´ pər əs) adj. wealthy or successful; p. 540 The Smiths, who owned a factory, were the most prosperous family in town.

obscure (əb skyoor´) adj. little known or having an insignificant reputation; p. 541 The more obscure painters were overlooked in the student's research paper.

stupor (sto͞o´ pər) n. a confused or dazed state of mind; p. 543 Jack was in a stupor after having his tonsils removed the day before.

calamity (kə lam´ ə tē) n. an unfortunate event or disaster; p. 543 The hurricane was a terrible calamity for the small coastal town.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Seventeen-year-old Theodora Dace ignores her responsibilities in order to write a novel. When her novel is apparently accepted, she becomes a local celebrity. After a misunderstanding, Theodora confronts the publisher and retrieves her manuscript. At the end, she learns something about her father's aspirations.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 95–100.

Vocabulary

Synonyms Have students name two new synonyms for each vocabulary word. (prosperous: rich, affluent; obscure: hidden, unknown; stupor: trance, daze; calamity: catastrophe, tragedy.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Explain that the roots of words can help distinguish one synonymous word from another. For example, a synonym for the word stupor is daze, whose root means "to become weary." Someone who is not paying attention might be described as "in a daze." The word stupor comes from a Latin root that means "numb" or "stunned." Ask: Which is more extreme, a daze or a stupor? (stupor)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p.103.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate On page 538 it says that Wharton's work contained "complicated psychological portraits" and "critiques of social convention." Explain that the first phrase means that her characters are like real people: neither all good nor all bad. Say: Think of a fairy tale or comic book character such as Superman. Ask: How does this character compare to someone you know? (The figure always does good things, while the person they know does not.) Explain the meaning of "critiques of social convention": Wharton wrote honestly about the damaging restrictions that upper-class society placed on people. Have students use sticky notes to mark this sort of commentary as they read.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Realism Answer: This comment suggests that Theodora is confident in her abilities as a writer. She may, in fact, be overly confident.

Say: Remember that Realists attempted to re-create the appearance of ordinary lives in their writing.

Literary Element 2

Flashback Answer: This sentence gives the reader clues that what is being described happened in the past and that this is a flashback.

Ask: What information does this flashback provide? (It tells the reader what Theodora's world is like.)

Language History ☆

A-one The expression A-one means "excellent, superior, or first class." It comes from the world of transatlantic shipping, in which the term referred to the condition of first-class ships. The expression can also be written A 1 or A number 1.

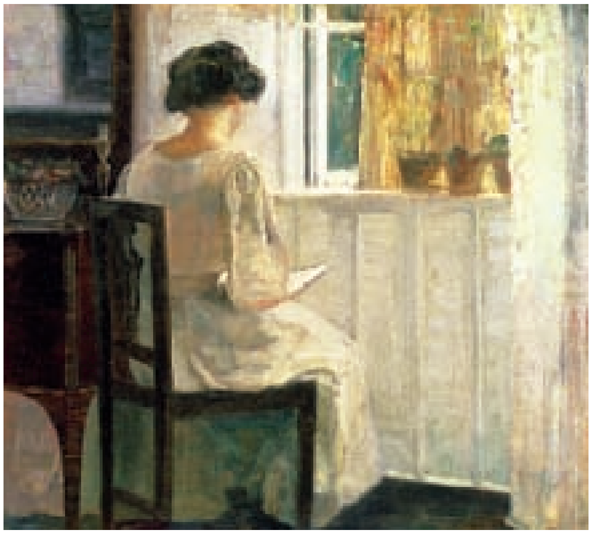
For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 5.8
DRP: 60
Lexile: 1020

April Showers

Edith Wharton



Girl Sitting in a Sunlit Room. Carl Holsoe. Private collection.

"But Guy's heart slept under the violets on Muriel's grave."

It was a beautiful ending; Theodora had seen girls cry over last chapters that weren't half as pathetic. She laid her pen aside and read the words over, letting her voice linger on the fall of the sentence; then, drawing a deep breath, she wrote across the foot of the page the name by which she had decided to become known in literature—Gladys Glyn.

Downstairs the library clock struck two. Its muffled thump sounded like an admonitory knock against her bedroom floor. Two o'clock! and she had promised her mother to be up early enough to see that the buttons were sewn on Johnny's reefer,[1] and that Kate had her cod-liver oil[2] before starting for school!

Lingeringly, tenderly she gathered up the pages of her novel—there were five hundred of them—and tied them with the blue satin ribbon that her Aunt Julia had given her. She had meant to wear the ribbon with her new dotted muslin on Sundays, but this was putting it to a nobler use. She bound it round her manuscript, tying the ends in a pretty bow. Theodora was clever at making bows, and could have trimmed hats beautifully, had not all her spare moments been given to literature. Then, with a last look at the precious pages, she sealed and addressed the package. She meant to send it off next morning to the Home Circle. She knew it would be hard to obtain access to a paper which numbered so many popular authors among its contributors, but she had been encouraged to make the venture by something her Uncle James had said the last time he had come down from Boston.

He had been telling his brother, Doctor Dace, about his new house out at Brookline. Uncle James was prosperous, and was always moving into new houses with more "modern improvements." Hygiene was his passion, and he migrated in the wake of sanitary plumbing.

---

[1] A reefer is a short, heavy jacket.

[2] Cod-liver oil is an unpleasant-tasting liquid rich in vitamins A and D.

1 Realism What can you infer about Theodora's view of herself from this comment?

Flashback What does this sentence indicate about the paragraphs following it? 2

Vocabulary

prosperous (pros′ pər əs) adj. wealthy or successful

Reading Practice

Preview Explain that this story focuses on the discrepancy between a young woman's hopes and the reality of daily life. Theodora dreams of becoming a famous writer, but the real world intrudes upon her fantasies. Ask: Have you ever gotten so lost in your dreams or expectations that you missed what was really happening? Have students take notes as they read in order to answer the following questions: At which points in the story is Theodora lost in her fantasy world? (while she prepares to mail her manuscript; while waiting to hear about its acceptance; after she receives the acceptance letter) At which points in the story does she awaken to reality? (when the editor explains the mistake)

"The bathrooms alone are worth the money," he was saying, cheerfully, "although it is a big rent. But then, when a man's got no children to save up for—" he glanced compassionately round Doctor Dace's crowded table "—and it is something to be in a neighborhood where the drainage is A-one. That's what I was telling our neighbor. Who do you suppose she is, by the way?" He smiled at Theodora. "I rather think that young lady knows all about her. Ever hear of Kathleen Kyd?"

Kathleen Kyd! The famous "society novelist," the creator of more "favorite heroines" than all her predecessors put together had ever turned out, the author of Fashion and Passion, An American Duchess, Rhona's Revolt. Was there any intelligent girl from Maine to California whose heart would not have beat faster at the mention of that name?

"Why, yes," Uncle James was saying, "Kathleen Kyd lives next door. Frances G. Wollop is her real name, and her husband's a dentist. She's a very pleasant, sociable kind of woman; you'd never think she was a writer. Ever hear how she began to write? She told me the whole story. It seems she was a saleswoman in a store, working on starvation wages, with a mother and a consumptive sister to support. Well, she wrote a story one day, just for fun, and sent it to the Home Circle. They'd never heard of her, of course, and she never expected to hear from them. She did, though. They took the story and passed their plate for more. She became a regular contributor and eventually was known all over the country. Now she tells me her books bring her in about ten thousand a year. Rather more than you and I can boast of, eh, John? Well, I hope this household doesn't contribute to her support." He glanced sharply at Theodora. "I don't believe in feeding youngsters on sentimental trash; it's like sewer gas—doesn't smell bad, and infects the system without your knowing it."

Theodora listened breathlessly. Kathleen Kyd's first story had been accepted by the Home Circle, and they had asked for more! Why should Gladys Glyn be less fortunate? Theodora had done a great deal of novel reading—far more than her parents were aware of—and felt herself competent to pronounce upon the quality of her own work. She was almost sure that "April Showers" was a remarkable book. If it lacked Kathleen Kyd's lightness of touch, it had an emotional intensity never achieved by that brilliant writer. Theodora did not care to amuse her readers; she left that to more frivolous talents. Her aim was to stir the depths of human nature, and she felt she had succeeded. It was a great thing for a girl to be able to feel that about her first novel. Theodora was only seventeen; and she remembered, with a touch of retrospective compassion, that George Eliot[3] had not become famous till she was nearly forty.

No, there was no doubt about the merit of "April Showers." But would not an inferior work have had a better chance of success? Theodora recalled the early struggles of famous authors, the notorious antagonism[4] of publishers and editors to any new writer of exceptional promise. Would it not be wiser to write the book down to the average reader's level, reserving for some later work the great "effects" into which she had thrown all the fever of her imagination? The thought was sacrilege! Never would she lay hands on the sacred structure she had reared; never would she resort to the inartistic expedient of modifying her work to suit the popular taste. Better obscure failure than a vulgar triumph. The great authors never stooped to such concessions, and Theodora felt [3] George Eliot (1819–1880) was the pen name of famed British novelist Mary Ann Cross.

---

[4] Antagonism means "hostility."

Make and Verify Predictions What is your prediction of Gladys Glyn's success? 3

Vocabulary

obscure (əb skyoor´) adj. little known or having an insignificant reputation

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Make and Verify Predictions Answer:

Students might feel this statement is ironic and that Gladys Glyn will not experience much success.

Ask: On what do you base your prediction? (Students may suggest that Theodora's youth and romantic ideas about writing set her up for disappointment.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 102.

Literary History ☆

George Eliot Theodora's allusion to George Eliot is ironic. Eliot was one of the great British writers of the nineteenth century. Her realistic works examined the lives of people in an industrialized and socially stratified Britain. Eliot wrote serious novels, including Middlemarch, The Mill on the Floss, and Daniel Deronda. She was the antithesis of a young Romantic writer like Theodora.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Have students create a chart with these headings: Unfamiliar Word, What I Think It Means, and Meaning. Have students fill in the first two columns as they read, using context clues to fill in the second. Have students use a dictionary to complete the third column.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Explain that predictions are statements about future events based upon observations, experience, or reason. For example, you might have guessed that Theodora would not sew on her brother's buttons; she was preoccupied with her book. Ask: What is Uncle James's opinion of romantic novels? (dislikes them; calls them "sentimental trash"; compares them to sewer gas) Ask: What do you think his reaction would be to Theodora writing a book? (Students may guess that he will disapprove.)

Teach

Big Idea 1

Realism Answer: In some books written by Romantic authors, characters might not behave in a realistic way. Most students will think that characters in this story are portrayed in a realistic way.

Ask: What is realistic about the way Theodora is portrayed? (Theodora's romantic ideas and irresponsible behavior suggest that she is a typical teenager.)

Cultural History ☆

Medicine in the Early 1900s

In the early twentieth century, the practice of medicine was not highly developed. Local doctors visited patients in their homes but sometimes could offer little help to very sick ones. Effective medicines and treatments were not available for some diseases at the time.

---

herself included in their ranks by the firmness with which she rejected all thought of conciliating[5] an unappreciative public. The manuscript should be sent as it was.

She woke with a start and a heavy sense of apprehension. The Home Circle had refused "April Showers"! No, that couldn't be it; there lay the precious manuscript, waiting to be posted. What was it, then? Ah, that ominous thump below stairs—nine o'clock striking! It was Johnny's buttons!

> "I suppose you didn't get home from the ball till morning?"

She sprang out of bed in dismay. She had been so determined not to disappoint her mother about Johnny's buttons! Mrs. Dace, helpless from chronic rheumatism,[6] had to entrust the care of the household to her eldest daughter; and Theodora honestly meant to see that Johnny had his full complement of buttons, and that Kate and Bertha went to school tidy. Unfortunately, the writing of a great novel leaves little time or memory for the lesser obligations of life, and Theodora usually found that her good intentions matured too late for practical results.

Her contrition[7] was softened by the thought that literary success would enable her to make up for all the little negligences of which she was guilty. She meant to spend all her money on her family; and already she had visions of a wheeled chair for her mother, a fresh wallpaper for the doctor's shabby office, bicycles for the girls, and Johnny's establishment at a boarding school where sewing on his buttons would be included in the curriculum. If her parents could have guessed her intentions, they would not have found fault with her as they did; and Doctor Dace, on this particular morning, would not have looked up to say, with his fagged,[8] ironical air:

"I suppose you didn't get home from the ball till morning?"

Theodora's sense of being in the right enabled her to take the thrust with a dignity that would have awed the unfeeling parent to fiction.

"I'm sorry to be late, father," she said.

Doctor Dace, who could never be counted on to behave like a father in a book, shrugged his shoulders impatiently.

"Your sentiments do you credit, but they haven't kept your mother's breakfast warm."

"Hasn't mother's tray gone up yet?"

"Who was to take it, I should like to know? The girls came down so late that I had to hustle them off before they'd finished breakfast, and Johnny's hands were so dirty that I sent him back to his room to make himself decent. It's a pretty thing for the doctor's children to be the dirtiest little savages in Norton!"

Theodora had hastily prepared her mother's tray, leaving her own breakfast untouched. As she entered the room upstairs, Mrs. Dace's patient face turned to her with a smile much harder to bear than her father's reproaches.

"Mother, I'm so sorry—"

"No matter, dear. I suppose Johnny's buttons kept you. I can't think what that boy does to his clothes!"

Theodora sat the tray down without speaking. It was impossible to own to having forgotten Johnny's buttons without revealing the cause of her forgetfulness. For a few weeks longer she

---

[5] Conciliating means "appeasing."

[6] Rheumatism is an illness that causes discomfort in the joints or muscles.

[7] Contrition means "remorse."

[8] Fagged means "tired" or "weary."

Realism How might a person's behavior in reality differ from his or her behavior in a book? Are the characters in this story portrayed realistically? 1

Writing Practice

Summarize Remind students that summarizing is a skill that can help them read fiction. Review that a summary is a short restatement of main ideas and key details in a passage. Say: The first full paragraph on page 543 shows how Theodora is handling her responsibilities at home. Reread the paragraph and then write a summary of it. Students' summaries should mention Theodora's reactions to the postman and her family. Ask: What does this paragraph say about Theodora's home life and her role in it? (It is chaotic and falling apart, and Theodora is doing little to help.)

must bear to be misunderstood; then—ah, then if her novel were accepted, how gladly would she forget and forgive! But what if it were refused? She turned aside to hide the dismay that flushed her face. Well, then she would admit the truth—she would ask her parents' pardon, and settle down without a murmur to an obscure existence of mending and combing. 2

She had said to herself that after the manuscript had been sent, she would have time to look after the children and catch up with the mending; but she had reckoned without the postman. He came three times a day; for an hour before each ring she was too excited to do anything but wonder if he would bring an answer this time, and for an hour afterward she moved about in a leaden stupor of disappointment. The children had never been so trying. They seemed to be always coming to pieces, like cheap furniture; one would have supposed they had been put together with bad glue. Mrs. Dace worried herself ill over Johnny's tatters, Bertha's bad marks at school, and Kate's open abstention[9] from cod-liver oil; and Doctor ☆ Dace, coming back late from a long round of visits to a fireless office with a smoky lamp, called out furiously to know if Theodora would kindly come down and remove the "East, West, home's best" that hung above the empty grate.

In the midst of it all, Miss Sophy Brill called. It was very kind of her to come, for she was the busiest woman in Norton. She made it her duty to look after other people's affairs, and there was not a house in town but had the benefit of her personal supervision. She generally came when things were going wrong, and the sight of her bonnet on the doorstep was a surer sign of calamity than a crepe bow[10] on the bell. After she left, Mrs. Dace looked very sad, and the doctor punished Johnny for warbling down the entry:

"Miss Sophy Brill
Is a bitter pill!"

while Theodora, locking herself in her room, resolved with tears that she would never write another novel.

The week was a long nightmare. Theodora could neither eat nor sleep. She was up early enough, but instead of looking after the children and seeing that breakfast was ready, she wandered down the road to meet the postman, and came back wan and empty-handed, oblivious of her morning duties. She had no idea how long the suspense would last; but she didn't see how authors could live if they were kept waiting more than a week.

Then suddenly, one afternoon—she never quite knew how or when it happened—she found herself with a Home Circle envelope in her hands, and her dazzled eyes flashing over a wild dance of words that wouldn't settle down and make sense.

"Dear Madam:" (They called her Madam! And then; yes, the words were beginning to fall into line now.) "Your novel, 'April Showers,' has been received, and we are glad to accept it on the usual terms. A serial on which we were counting for immediate publication has been ☆ delayed by the author's illness, and the first chapters of 'April Showers' will therefore appear in our midsummer number. Thanking you for favoring us with your manuscript, we remain," and so forth.

Theodora found herself in the wood beyond the schoolhouse. She was kneeling on the ground, brushing aside the dead leaves and pressing her lips to the little bursting green things that pushed up eager tips through last year's decay. It was spring—spring! Everything was crowding toward the light and in her own heart hundreds of germinating hopes had burst

---

[9] Abstention means "the act of refraining from something."

[10] A crepe bow is a piece of black fabric displayed as a sign of mourning.

Vocabulary

stupor (stōō´ pər) n. a confused or dazed state of mind

calamity (kə lam´ ə tē) n. an unfortunate event or disaster

Make and Verify Predictions What news do you think the envelope will contain? 3

Teach

Vocabulary 2

Word Choice Ask: Why does Wharton repeat obscure here? (Being obscure is what Theodora dreads and is probably what her future holds.)

Reading Strategy 3

Make and Verify Predictions Answer: Some students may expect the envelope to contain good news; others will expect it to contain notice of the novel's rejection.

Writer's Technique ☆

Voice The publisher's letter provides Wharton an opportunity to use an outsider's voice in the story. The language in the letter is formal and businesslike.

Ask: How does the voice in the letter compare with Theodora's? (It is a mature and businesslike voice unlike Theodora's, but it is still somewhat flowery.)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Students may be confused by the use of flashbacks. Have students create a timeline that indicates when each event takes place. Remind them to look for clue words and shifts in verb tense that indicate when an event occurs.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate To help students understand unfamiliar words, remind them to use their knowledge of word parts. Point out that manuscript is made up of two Latin roots: manu, meaning "hand," and script, meaning "writing." Ask: What do you think the meaning of manuscript is? (writing done by hand) Point out that today the word refers to typed as well as handwritten documents.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Realism Answer: These descriptions suggest that most people are impressed by success. Some students may say that some people pay attention only to important people.

Say: Describe how people's attitudes toward Theodora changed. (Her parents have become more lenient, and people outside the family have become more respectful of and interested in Theodora.)

View the Photograph ★

In 1870 approximately 53,000 miles of railroads connected the regions of the United States. By 1916 there were 254,000 miles of track. The train was the most practical way for Theodora to get to Boston quickly.

Trains at Paddington Station, London, 1910. ★ into sudden leaf. She wondered if the thrust of those little green fingers hurt the surface of the earth as her springing raptures hurt—yes, actually hurt!—her hot, constricted breast! She looked up through interlacing boughs at a tender, opaque blue sky full of the coming of a milky moon. She seemed enveloped in an atmosphere of loving comprehension. The brown earth throbbed with her joy, the treetops trembled with it, and a sudden star broke through the branches like an audible "I know!"

Theodora, on the whole, behaved very well. Her mother cried, her father whistled and said he supposed he must put up with grounds in his coffee now, and be thankful if he ever got a hot meal again; while the children took the most deafening and harassing advantage of what seemed a sudden suspension of the laws of nature.

Within a week everybody in Norton knew that Theodora had written a novel, and that it was coming out in the Home Circle. On Sundays, when she walked up the aisle, her friends dropped their prayer books and the soprano sang false in her excitement. Girls with more pin money than Theodora had ever dreamed of copied her hats and imitated her way of speaking. The local paper asked her for a poem; her old school teachers stopped to shake hands and grew shy over their congratulations; and Miss Sophy Brill came to call. She had put on her Sunday bonnet and her manner was almost abject.[11] She ventured, very timidly, to ask her young friend how she wrote, whether it "just came to her," and if she had found that the kind of pen she used made any difference; and wound up by begging Theodora to write a sentiment in her album.

Even Uncle James came down from Boston to talk the wonder over. He called Theodora a "sly baggage," and proposed that she should give him her earnings to invest in a new patent greasetrap company. From what Kathleen Kyd had told him, he thought Theodora would probably get a thousand dollars for her story. He concluded by suggesting that she should base her next romance on the subject of sanitation, making the heroine nearly die of sewer gas poisoning because her parents won't listen to the handsome young doctor next door, when he warns them that their plumbing is out of order. That was a subject that would interest everybody, and do a lot more good than the sentimental trash most women wrote.

At last the great day came. Theodora had left an order with the bookseller for the midsummer number of the Home Circle and before the shop was open she was waiting on the sidewalk. She clutched her precious paper and ran home without opening it. Her excitement was almost more than she could bear. Not heeding her father's call to breakfast, she rushed upstairs and locked herself in her room. Her hands trembled so that 1 Realism What do these descriptions of people's reactions to Theodora's success suggest about human behavior?

---

[11] Abject means "miserable."

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Sentence Fragments Explain that writers often use sentence fragments to convey the way people actually speak. To illustrate, have students identify sentence fragments in the second to the last full paragraph on p. 545. An example is "Mrs. Kyd's new serial?" Ask students to rewrite the paragraph as a complete dialogue between Theodora and the publisher at Home Circle. Then have a few volunteers read their dialogues aloud to the class. Ask students to compare their dialogues with Wharton's. (Wharton's is more realistic. Full dialogue slows the pace of the flashback.)

she could hardly turn the pages. At last—yes, there it was: "April Showers."

The paper dropped from her hands. What name had she read beneath the title? Had her emotion blinded her?

"April Showers, by Kathleen Kyd."

Kathleen Kyd! Oh, cruel misprint! Oh, dastardly typographer! Through tears of rage and disappointment Theodora looked again; yes, there was no mistaking the hateful name. Her glance ran on. She found herself reading a first paragraph that she had never seen before. She read farther. All was strange. The horrible truth burst upon her: It was not her story!

2 She never knew how she got back to the station. She struggled through the crowd on the platform, and a gold-banded arm pushed her into the train just starting for Norton. It would be dark when she reached home; but that didn't matter—nothing mattered now. She sank into her seat, closing her eyes in the vain attempt to shut out the vision of the last few hours; but minute by minute memory forced her to relive it; she felt like a rebellious schoolchild dragged forth to repeat the same detested "piece."

> The voice went on, like the steady pressure of a surgeon's hand on a shrieking nerve.

Although she did not know Boston well, she had made her way easily enough to the Home Circle building; at least, she supposed she had, since she remembered nothing till she found herself ascending the editorial stairs as easily as one does incredible things in dreams. She must have walked very fast, for her heart was beating furiously, and she had barely breath to whisper the editor's name to a young man who looked out at her from a glass case, like a zoological specimen. The young man led her past other glass cases containing similar specimens to an inner enclosure which seemed filled by an enormous presence. Theodora felt herself enveloped in the presence, submerged by it, gasping for air as she sank under its rising surges.

Gradually fragments of speech floated to the surface. "'April Showers?' Mrs. Kyd's new serial? Your manuscript, you say? You have a letter from me? The name, please? Evidently some unfortunate misunderstanding. One moment." And then a bell ringing, a zoological specimen ordered to unlock a safe, her name asked for again, the manuscript, her own precious manuscript, tied with Aunt Julia's ribbon, laid on the table before her, and her outcries, her protests, her interrogations, drowned in a flood of bland apology: "An unfortunate accident—Mrs. Kyd's manuscript received the same day—extraordinary coincidence in the choice of a title—duplicate answers sent by mistake—Miss Dace's novel hardly suited to their purpose—should of course have been returned—regrettable oversight—accidents would happen—sure she understood."

The voice went on, like the steady pressure of a surgeon's hand on a shrieking nerve. When it stopped she was in the street. A cab nearly ran her down, and a car bell jangled furiously in her ears. She clutched her manuscript, carrying it tenderly through the crowd, like a live thing that had been hurt. She could not bear to look at its soiled edges and the ink stain on Aunt Julia's ribbon.

The train stopped with a jerk and she opened her eyes. It was dark, and by the windy flare of gas on the platform she saw the Norton passengers getting out. She stood up stiffly and followed them. A warm wind blew into her face the fragrance of the summer woods, and 3 Making and Verifying Predictions How does this turn of events compare with your predictions about Theodora's success?

Flashback What clues does this give you about the chronology of the story? 4

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Say: Identify sentences on this page that contain similes. (For example, "The voice went on, like the steady pressure of a surgeon's hand on a shrieking nerve" and "She clutched her manuscript, carrying it tenderly through the crowd, like a live thing that had been wounded.") Discuss the literal and figurative meanings of these expressions.

Teach

Literary Element 2

Flashback Point out that the story jumps abruptly forward at this point.

Ask: Why did the author break up the narrative in this way? (The flashback is more efficient. Wharton does not have to tell how Theodora got to Boston; she can cover only the most important parts.)

APPROACHING Ask: What in the text indicates that the author is writing a flashback? (She gets on the train "just starting for Norton" before you know she had traveled to Boston.)

Reading Strategy 3

Make and Verify Predictions Answer: Students' answers will vary. Some will be surprised that Theodora's success was actually a mistake. Others may have suspected that her good fortune would change.

Literary Element 4

Flashback Answer: The previous action happened earlier in the story, and the narration has now returned to the present.

Ask: How does the flashback affect the tone or feeling of the story? (The flashback is fast-paced and filled with sentence fragments and sensory details. It changes the tone from hopefulness to anxiety.)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Make and Verify Predictions Answer: Students' answers will vary. Most students would not have expected Doctor Dace to be sympathetic.

Ask: Why do you think Doctor Dace is now sympathetic to Theodora? (He may have remembered that he was like Theodora when he was younger; he may understand her disappointment.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Theodora's father showed "a face of unexpected participation" while walking Theodora home from the train station. Students may be confused by this phrase. Have students replace the word participation with the synonym sympathy, and then describe his face using their own words.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 106.

Progress Check

Can students analyze a flashback?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 101.

she remembered how, two months earlier, she had knelt among the dead leaves, pressing her lips to the first shoots of green. Then for the first time she thought of home. She had fled away in the morning without a word, and her heart sank at the thought of her mother's fears. And her father—how angry he would be! She bent her head under the coming storm of his derision.

The night was cloudy, and as she stepped into the darkness beyond the station a hand was slipped in hers. She stood still, too weary to feel frightened, and a voice said, quietly:

"Don't walk so fast, child. You look tired."

"Father!" Her hand dropped from his, but he recaptured it, and drew it through his arm. When she found voice, it was to whisper, "You were at the station?"

"It's such a good night I thought I'd stroll down and meet you."

Her arm trembled against his. She could not see his face in the dimness, but the light of his cigar looked down on her like a friendly eye, and she took courage to falter out: "Then you knew—"

"That you'd gone to Boston? Well, I rather thought you had."

They walked on slowly, and presently he added, "You see, you left the Home Circle lying in your room."

How she blessed the darkness and the muffled sky! She could not have borne the scrutiny of the tiniest star.

"Then mother wasn't very much frightened?"

"Why, no, she didn't appear to be. She's been busy all day over some toggery[12] of Bertha's."

Theodora choked. "Father, I'll—" She groped for words, but they eluded her. "I'll do things—differently; I haven't meant—" Suddenly she heard herself bursting out: "It was all a mistake, you know—about my story. They didn't want it; they won't have it!" and she shrank back involuntarily from his impending mirth.

She felt the pressure of his arm, but he didn't speak, and she figured his mute hilarity. They moved on in silence. Presently he said:

"It hurts a bit just at first, doesn't it?"

"O Father!"

He stood still, and the gleam of his cigar showed a face of unexpected participation.

"You see I've been through it myself."

"You, Father? You?"

"Why, yes. Didn't I ever tell you? I wrote a novel once. I was just out of college, and didn't want to be a doctor. No; I wanted to be a genius, so I wrote a novel."

The doctor paused, and Theodora clung to him in a mute passion of commiseration.[13] It was as if a drowning creature caught a live hand through the murderous fury of the waves.

"Father—O Father!"

"It took me a year—a whole year's hard work; and when I'd finished it the public wouldn't have it, either; not at any price and that's why I came down to meet you, because I remembered my walk home."

---

[12] Toggery means "clothes."

[13] Commiseration means "sympathy."

Make and Verify Predictions Is this a comment you would have expected from Doctor Dace? Why or why not?

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Characterization Review with students the methods Wharton uses to give readers a sense of who Theodora Dace and her father are. In direct characterization, the writer makes explicit statements about a character. In indirect characterization, the writer reveals a character through his or her words and actions. Have students draw a two-column chart that has the headings Beginning and Ending. Under each heading, have students jot down character traits of Theodora and her father as they are perceived in the beginning of the story and then at the end of the story. Have students identify the character trait as the result of direct or indirect characterization.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. (a)How do you feel about Theodora? (b)Do you think she is a sympathetic character? Explain.
2. (a)At the start of "April Showers," how does Theodora feel about her novel? (b)How do you think the narrator feels about it? Explain.
3. (a)Describe Theodora's reaction to both the letter she receives from Home Circle and to the midsummer issue of the magazine. (b)In what ways are these reactions similar? What does this tell you about Theodora's character?
4. (a)When Theodora goes to Boston, what explanation does the editor at Home Circle give her for the confusion over the novel? (b)What does this suggest to you about the quality of Theodora's novel?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)What tone does the narrator take toward Theodora? (b)Is the tone appropriate? Explain.
6. (a)How does Theodora feel about neglecting her responsibilities at home? (b)Is she right to feel this way? Explain.
7. (a)What is ironic about Theodora's father meeting her at the station? (b)How does your perception of his character change at the end of the story?

Connect

8. Big Idea Realism In what ways does this story demonstrate the techniques of Realism?
9. Connect to Today Is it easier or harder for young adults to make names for themselves today than in Wharton's time? Explain.

Literary Element Flashback

SAT Skills Practice

1. What does Theodora's reference to her uncle's visit ("He had been . . . Brookline") signal?
   - (A) A return to the present time
   - (B) A projection into the future
   - (C) A description of past events
   - (D) A shift in narrator
   - (E) The climax of the story
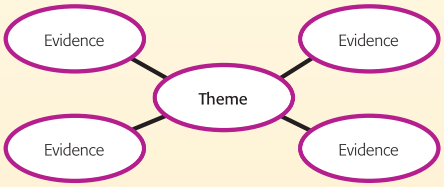
2. The flashbacks in "April Showers" serve to
   - (A) foreshadow the similarity of Theodora's and her father's experiences
   - (B) highlight the depth of Theodora's desire to become a published writer
   - (C) shift the point of view to reveal Theodora's unconscious feelings
   - (D) show the competition between Theodora's uncle and father for her affection
   - (E) create tension that involves the reader in Theodora's experiences

Review: Theme

The theme of a piece of literature is a dominant idea, often a universal message about life, that the writer communicates to the reader. Most short stories have one main, or central, theme. They may also have secondary themes.

Partner Activity Meet with a classmate to identify the central theme of "April Showers." Working with your partner, create a web diagram like the one below. First, write the theme in the center oval. Then fill in the outer ovals with evidence that supports the theme.



After You Read

Assess

1. (a) Sympathetic (b) Yes; she has remorse and good intentions.
2. (a) Rapturous (b) The narrator is more skeptical. The opening line is meant to be ironic, as are Theodora's romantic exclamations.
3. (a) She is thrown into a rapture and kisses the ground. When she sees Kyd's story, she is shocked. (b) Both are exaggerated; they suggest that Theodora is melodramatic.
4. (a) He tells her that Kathleen Kyd submitted a story on the same day with the same title. (b) It may not be as memorable as she has thought.
5. (a) The narrator is sympathetic but also critical of and amused by Theodora. (b) It is an appropriate balance of sympathy and skepticism.
6. (a) She feels guilty but thinks literary success will make up for her neglectfulness. (b) Students may argue that her family should be her first priority.
7. (a) He had been critical of her earlier. (b) He is sympathetic now because he once went through the same experience as Theodora.
8. Wharton's exploration of Theodora's inner life, her attention to detail, and her balanced presentation are characteristics of Realism.
9. Students might comment on the increased competition for fame and success today; yet with many more magazines, cable television, and the internet, more people can gain access to the media.

Literary Element

1. C is the correct answer because the visit took place in the past and explains Theodora's confidence in submitting her novel for publication.
2. E is the correct answer because the flashbacks jar readers from the chronological sequence of events in an engaging way.

Review: Theme

Theme: A writer's life is filled with highs and lows.

Evidence: Theodora is thrilled by her celebrity status.

Evidence: Theodora is crushed by her rejection.

Evidence: The doctor once tried to write but was disappointed too.

After You Read

Assess

Reading Strategy

1. The realistic images of plumbing and sewing buttons, the reference to George Eliot, and the details about Theodora's family life all hint at the disappointment she will experience.
2. Students may see that the title of Theodora's story hints at a sad ending.

Vocabulary

1. prosperous
2. insignificant
3. stupor
4. calamity

Academic Vocabulary

1. The weather is not conducive to swimming, so notion means "a whim or fancy."
2. The uncle has a theory that vitamins can prevent all disease, so here notion means "a belief held by a person or group."

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 173–174.

Reading Strategy Make and Verify Predictions

Predictions About Plot Inevitably, the predictions you make will sometimes be wrong. In this story, Wharton intentionally withholds information in order to increase the dramatic tension. However, she does provide clues throughout the text that make it possible to predict the plot's outcome.

1. What images, details, or descriptions did you notice that seemed to hint at the story's conclusion?
2. List any details you did not notice while reading that may seem relevant now.

Vocabulary Practice

Denotation and Connotation Denotation is the literal, or dictionary, meaning of a word. Connotation is the implied, or cultural, meaning of a word. For example, the words pleased and ecstatic have a similar denotation, "happy," but they have different connotations:

Weaker	Stronger
pleased	ecstatic

For each pair below, choose the word that has the stronger connotation.

1. prosperous	well-off
2. obscure	insignificant
3. stupor	haze
4. calamity	misfortune

Academic Vocabulary

Theodora has the notion that she could be a great author.

Notion is an academic word. Using context clues, infer its meaning in these sentences.

1. Lawrence had the notion to go swimming, even though it was still winter.
2. My uncle has the notion that vitamins can prevent all illnesses.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

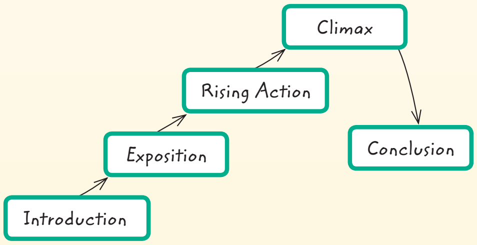
Write with Style

Apply Point of View

Assignment By cruel coincidence, Theodora is mistakenly led to believe that Home Circle will publish her novel. Because this story is told from the third person limited point of view, the reader discovers the story's twist at the same time as Theodora. Think of an experience from your own life when things didn't turn out as expected. Write a narrative of this experience, using third person limited point of view.

Get Ideas Look over old journal entries or talk to friends to help you think of instances in which things didn't turn out as expected. Choose the experience that you find most compelling.

Give It Structure Use a plot diagram like the one below to chart the course of events of your story. Think about which character you would like to follow in your point of view. Use your diagram to guide you as you write.



Look at Language Note the variety in Wharton's sentences and her careful diction. Emulate these qualities in your writing. After you have written your story, review it and see if you can further vary the lengths of your sentences or add more precise words to your descriptions.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Writing

Students' stories should

- use the third person limited point of view
- use a variety of sentences structures
- use precise diction

For grammar practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 105.

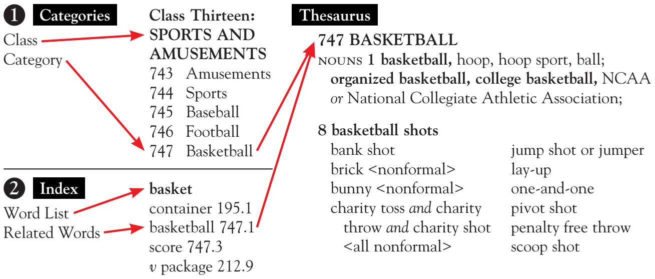
Vocabulary Workshop

Thesaurus Use

Literature Connection In "April Showers," a character describes author Kathleen Kyd as a "pleasant, sociable kind of woman." Pleasant and sociable are synonyms. Some synonyms are practically interchangeable, but many convey subtle differences in meaning or connotation. Recognizing such distinctions can improve your reading, writing, listening, and speaking.

A thesaurus is a dictionary used to find synonyms, alternative expressions, or information about specialized terminology. Thesauruses are available on CD-ROM, as part of word-processing software, on the Internet, or in print form.

Organization Thesauruses are organized two ways. The traditional style of organization is by concept (because you may not know the word you want to find). In Example 1 below, a search for names of basketball shots begins with the concept of sports and leads to a thesaurus listing of names of basketball shots. If you know a key word for your search, you can also begin with the index, an alphabetical list of terms, as in Example 2.



❶ Categories
Class
Category
Class Thirteen:
SPORTS AND AMUSEMENTS
743 Amusements
744 Sports
745 Baseball
746 Football
747 Basketball
❷ Index
Word List
Related Words basket container 195.1
basketball 747.1
score 747.3
v package 212.9
Thesaurus
747 BASKETBALL
NOUNS 1 basketball, hoop, hoop sport, ball; organized basketball, college basketball, NCAA or National Collegiate Athletic Association;
8 basketball shots
bank shot
brick <nonformal>
bunny <nonformal>
charity toss and charity throw and charity shot <all nonformal> jump shot or jumper lay-up one-and-one pivot shot penalty free throw scoop shot

Thesauruses can also be organized like dictionaries, with words and synonyms listed together in alphabetical order.

Practice

1. Using a thesaurus, find two synonyms for each word below. Then find the precise meaning for each synonym in a dictionary.
   a. pathetic b. linger c. prosperous
2. Using the above list of words and the synonyms you have found, use each word in a sentence. Be sure that your sentences reflect the slight differences in meaning within each group of synonyms.

Learning Objectives

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objective:

Vocabulary: Understanding language resources.

Synonyms and Antonyms

Synonyms are words that have similar meanings but possibly different connotations. Antonyms are words that have opposite meanings. Both synonyms and antonyms are always the same part of speech.

Tip

Many Internet and CD-ROM thesauruses have extra features such as audio pronunciation and the ability to define a word within an entry.

LOG ON Literature Online

Vocabulary For more vocabulary practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Vocabulary Workshop

Thesaurus Use

Focus

Ask: When do you as a writer need to find a synonym? (Students may suggest needing synonyms when they have used a given word too often.)

Teach

Thesaurus Usage Caution students to be selective with synonyms and to consider their audience, purpose, and tone when choosing. Their synonym choice should rest on connotation, the associations a word has beyond its literal meaning.

Assess

Practice

1. Possible synonyms:
   a. mournful, pitiable
   b. continue, persevere
   c. wealthy, affluent
2. Answers will vary.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Explain that synonyms are important because writers often want to substitute a long, fancy word for a perfectly good short word for literary purposes. The key to selecting a synonym is knowing whether it achieves the desired connotation. Have students try each synonym for kind in the sentence. Ask them to choose those that fit well in the sentence. Then discuss the connotations of each synonym.

Synonyms for kind

benign	charitable	supportive benevolent	considerate	tender
caring	genial	thoughtful

Although the little boy is often rude, he is _____ toward his mother and kittens.

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 35

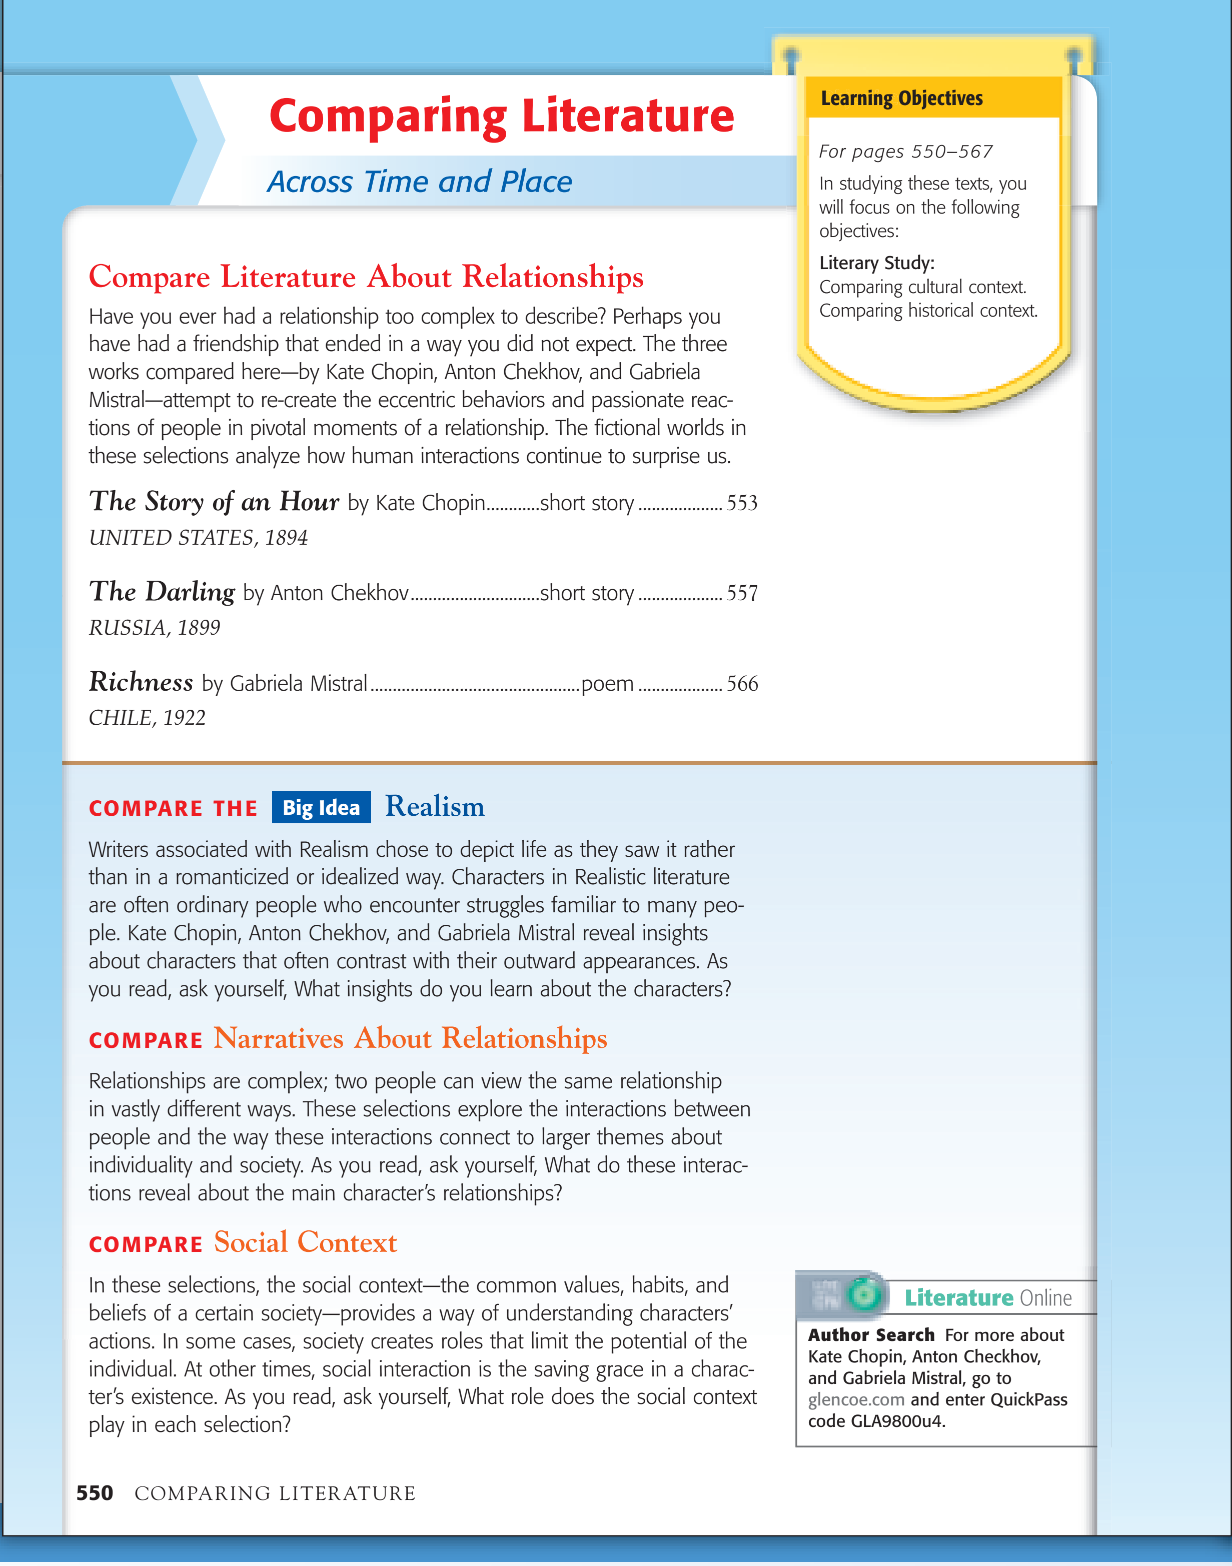
Daily Language Practice
Transparency 50

Or ask students to consider the dynamics of marriage.

Ask: What adjustments might a man and a woman have to make when they get married? (Changing daily routines and habits to fit each other's schedules and personalities.) Ask: In what ways do people react at the end of a relationship? (Some students may say that it is best to move on it "wasn't meant to be"; feelings of loss heal only with time.)

Compare Literature About Relationships

Allow students to share their responses to the questions. Then have students discuss what they know about Kate Chopin, Anton Chekhov, and Gabriela Mistral.



Comparing Literature

Across Time and Place

Learning Objectives

For pages 550–567

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Comparing cultural context.
Comparing historical context.

Compare Literature About Relationships

Have you ever had a relationship too complex to describe? Perhaps you have had a friendship that ended in a way you did not expect. The three works compared here—by Kate Chopin, Anton Chekhov, and Gabriela Mistral—attempt to re-create the eccentric behaviors and passionate reactions of people in pivotal moments of a relationship. The fictional worlds in these selections analyze how human interactions continue to surprise us.

The Story of an Hour by Kate Chopin............short story 553
UNITED STATES, 1894

The Darling by Anton Chekhov............................short story 557
RUSSIA, 1899

Richness by Gabriela Mistral..poem 566
CHILE, 1922

COMPARE THE Big Idea Realism

Writers associated with Realism chose to depict life as they saw it rather than in a romanticized or idealized way. Characters in Realistic literature are often ordinary people who encounter struggles familiar to many people. Kate Chopin, Anton Chekhov, and Gabriela Mistral reveal insights about characters that often contrast with their outward appearances. As you read, ask yourself, What insights do you learn about the characters?

COMPARE Narratives About Relationships

Relationships are complex; two people can view the same relationship in vastly different ways. These selections explore the interactions between people and the way these interactions connect to larger themes about individuality and society. As you read, ask yourself, What do these interactions reveal about the main character's relationships?

COMPARE Social Context

In these selections, the social context—the common values, habits, and beliefs of a certain society—provides a way of understanding characters' actions. In some cases, society creates roles that limit the potential of the individual. At other times, social interaction is the saving grace in a character's existence. As you read, ask yourself, What role does the social context play in each selection?

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Kate Chopin, Anton Checkhov, and Gabriela Mistral, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Skills Practice

Comparing Literature

Literary Elements
- Conflict (SE pp. 552, 554, 556)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Interior Monologue (SE p. 556)
- Journal Entry (TE p. 552)
- Adapt a Short Story to Drama (TE p. 554)

Reading Skills
- Apply Background Knowledge (SE pp. 552, 554–556)
- Author's Viewpoint (TE p. 558)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Usage (SE p. 556)
- Context Clues (TE p. 563)
- Titles of Respect (TE p. 565)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Oral Interpretation (TE p. 566)
- Analyze Art (TE pp. 559, 562)

Before You Read

The Story of an Hour

Meet Kate Chopin

(1850–1904)

Kate Chopin (shō´ pan) was the first female writer in the U.S. to portray frankly the passions and discontents of women confined to traditional roles as wives and mothers. Critics condemned her, focusing their wrath on her novel The Awakening, the story of a woman who abandons her husband and children to find her identity. They called it shocking, morbid, coarse, and vulgar.

Strong, Independent Women Chopin was born Katherine O'Flaherty in St. Louis, Missouri. She grew up in the late Victorian period, a time when the ideal woman devoted herself to the will of her husband and to the welfare of her children. When Chopin was five, her father died in a railroad accident. For the next two years she studied at home with her mother, grandmother, and great-grandmother. Growing up among strong, independent women shaped Chopin as a person and a writer.

> "The artist must possess the courageous soul that dares and defies."
>
> —Kate Chopin, The Awakening

At twenty, Kate married Oscar Chopin and moved to New Orleans. Business problems soon forced them to move to Oscar's hometown Cloutierville, Louisiana, which later inspired many of her stories. Oscar died in 1882, leaving Chopin with children to raise and support. She soon moved back to St. Louis to be near her family. When her mother died a year later, she was overwhelmed with grief. At her doctor's advice, she turned to writing and published her first work in 1889. ☆

Daring Pieces During the next ten years, Chopin published over 100 short stories, two story collections, and two novels. She earned praise for early stories that captured the local color of Louisiana. In later stories, she explored women's issues considered controversial in her time. She took inspiration from the work of Guy de Maupassant, the French master of the Realist short story. Not surprisingly, she had difficulty finding publishers for her most daring pieces, including "The Story of an Hour."

Chopin was not prepared for the reaction to The Awakening in 1899. The deluge of negative reviews destroyed her spirit. She continued to write, but by 1903 her health was failing. After visiting the 1904 St. Louis World's Fair, Chopin complained of head pain. Two days later she died of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Lonely Pioneer For more than fifty years, Chopin's works were ignored. Then, in 1969, as the women's movement in the U.S. gained momentum, Per Seyersted published Chopin's biography and complete works. His efforts galvanized modern readers hungry to learn more about the woman who, according to scholar Emily Toth, had written "the most radical novel of the 1890s." Today The Awakening is one of the most read novels in colleges and universities across the U.S. Kate Chopin is celebrated as a lonely pioneer who dared to write realistic portraits of women trapped and stifled by the social conventions of their time.

Comparing Literature

Before You Read

Focus

Read aloud the following statements and ask students to make an informed guess about whether each statement is true or false for women in the late 1800s.

1. Women had the right to vote. (F)
2. Married women could own property. (F)
3. Generally, the husband was considered the one and only head of the household. (T)

Cultural History ☆

Women's Career Choices In the late 1800s, women had few career choices. For example, in 1872, Myra Bradwell was denied entry to the state bar even though she had passed the exam. When her appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court failed, Justice Joseph P. Bradley wrote: "The natural and proper timidity and delicacy which belongs to the female sex evidently unfits it for many of the occupations of civil life."

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Review with students the definitions of an external conflict and an internal conflict. Explain that an external conflict is a character's disagreement or struggle with an external force, while an internal conflict is a character's struggle within his or her mind. Ask students to classify each of these conflicts as external or internal: (1) A woman feels both proud and jealous of her friend who has just won an award. (internal) (2) A father gets lost in the mountains and is struggling to survive in the wilderness. (external) (3) A woman is successful in business despite the fact that her previous business failed. (external) (4) A boy is torn between playing basketball with friends and spending time with visiting grandparents. (internal) As students read the story, ask them to look for potential conflicts by noting the main character's interactions with other characters and the main character's thoughts and feelings.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

When Mrs. Mallard hears about her husband's death in an accident, she becomes emotional. However, in the privacy of her room, she realizes that his death comes with a benefit: her freedom from the demands and expectations of a husband. Mrs. Mallard becomes enamored of this thought. When it turns out that her husband is still alive, she feels such intense shock that her heart gives out.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 93–97.

Vocabulary

The Suffix -ly The suffix -ly can be added to certain adjectives to form adverbs. Ask: What adverbs can you form from the vocabulary words or a word in their word families by adding the suffix -ly? (elusively, exaltedly, perceptively, persistently)

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 117.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

What are some advantages and disadvantages of having others depend on you for their happiness? Freewrite on this topic for fifteen minutes. Then discuss the question and your answers with a small group of classmates. Explore this question by making a chart like the one below.

Build Background

Some women in the 1890s attended college and entered professions previously open only to men, but many others were told that "the woman's place" was in the home. Although society glorified the roles of wives and mothers, women had few legal rights. For example, when her husband died, Chopin had to petition the court to be appointed the legal guardian of her own children. In much of Chopin's fiction, she criticized the institution of marriage and wrote about women who struggled against social convention in expressing their individuality.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Realism

As you read the story, ask yourself, What details does Chopin use to create a realistic description of Mrs. Mallard's thoughts and emotions?

Literary Element Conflict

Conflict is the central struggle between two opposing forces in a literary work. External conflict exists when a character struggles against an outside force, such as a person, nature, society, or fate. Internal conflict takes place within the mind of a character who is torn between opposing feelings, desires, or goals. As you read, ask, What types of conflict operate in this story?

Reading Strategy Apply Background Knowledge

Knowing the historical, social, and cultural forces that influenced an author can help you understand his or her writing. As you read "The Story of an Hour," ask yourself these questions:

- How does the information you have read about Kate Chopin affect your understanding of the story?
- If you knew nothing about Chopin or her time, how might your opinion of the characters be different?

Vocabulary

elusive (i lo͞o´ siv) adj. difficult to explain or grasp; p. 554 The speaker's elusive argument left the audience scratching their heads.

tumultuously (to͞o mul´ cho͞o əs lē) adv. in an agitated manner; violently; p. 554 The wind swirled tumultuously across the plains.

exalted (ig zôl´ təd) adj. elevated; p. 555 The film actress enjoyed the exalted status of a star.

perception (pər sep´ shən) n. an awareness; an insight; p. 555 The musician responded modestly to the applause to avoid giving the perception that he was conceited.

persistence (pər sis´ təns) n. stubborn or determined continuance; p. 555 The newspaper reporters pursued the politician with a persistence that frustrated his campaign workers.

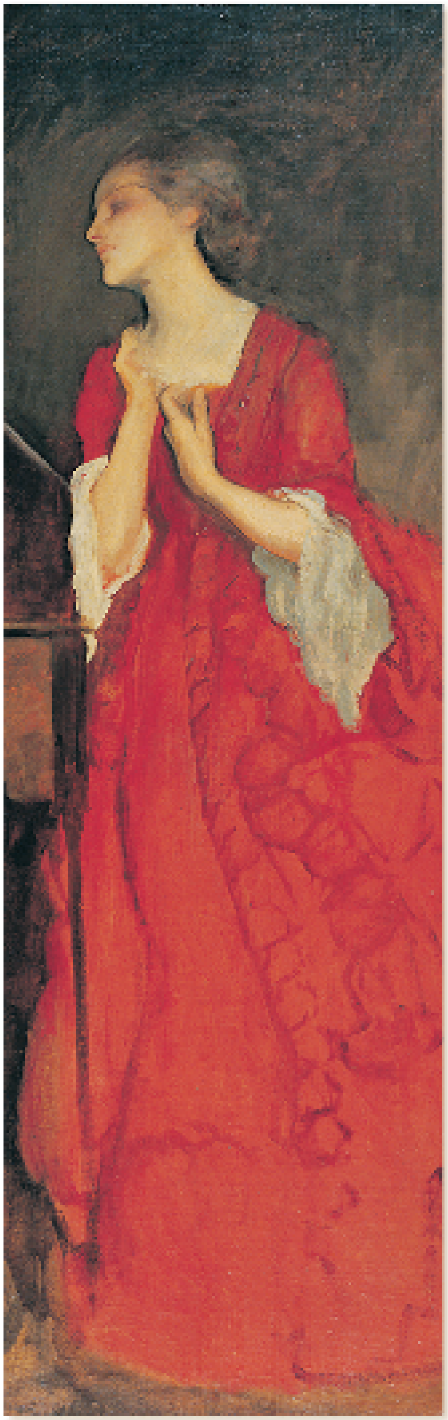
Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Journal Entry Have students read Kate Chopin's biography and the Build Background section on this page. Then ask students to write a short journal entry from the point of view of a married woman in the late 1800s who has just learned of her husband's death. Have students imagine the characters of the woman and her husband and the kind of marriage they had. Ask them to consider the feelings the woman might have had about her marriage. Have students give details in their journal entries about how the woman felt when she learned of her husband's death. Remind them to write from a first-person point of view.



The Story of an Hour

Kate Chopin

The Lady Anne, 1899. Edwin Austin Abbey. Oil on canvas, 48 x 24 in. The Butler Institute of American Art, Youngstown, OH.

Teach

View the Art ★

Edwin Austin Abbey loved history—particularly the medieval period. As such, he was a Romantic even in the age of Realism. Lady Anne does in fact assume a Romantic pose: her hair fading into the dark background, her hands theatrical. Lady Anne led a dramatic life. She was the widow of Edward, Prince of Wales, who was murdered by Richard III of England (who reigned from 1483 to 1485). Nevertheless, Anne later agreed to marry Richard.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 7.3
DRP: 57
Lexile: 970

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Help students better comprehend the story and improve reading fluency by asking them questions. Have students read the first paragraph of the story on the next page. Point out that the paragraph succinctly lays out the Who? What? Where? When? Why? and How?

Ask: Who are the characters introduced in the first paragraph? (Mrs. Mallard, Mr. Mallard, her sister Josephine, her husband's friend Richards) Where does the story take place? (Mrs. Mallard's home) What has happened to Mrs. Mallard's husband? (He has died in a railroad disaster.) How does Richards find out about Mr. Mallard's death? (A list of people "killed" in a railroad disaster is sent to the newspaper office. Richards then double-checks to be sure that Mr. Mallard is dead by sending a second telegram.)

Tell students that as they read the rest of the story, they should pause every so often to ask themselves questions about what is happening in the story. This will help them keep track of the events.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Conflict Answer: This passage directly follows mention of Mrs. Mallard's sister, so the conflict could be between them. It seems more likely, however, that it will be an internal conflict because Mrs. Mallard goes to her room alone.

Literary Element 2

Conflict Answer: Clearly, there is internal conflict. Mrs. Mallard is struggling with an approaching thought that scares her.

Reading Strategy 3

Apply Background Knowledge Answer: During the Victorian era, women did not have many rights and were expected to do as their husbands said. For Mrs. Mallard to whisper "free, free, free!" shows that she looks forward to a major change in her lifestyle.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 116.

Cultural History ☆

Telegram Remind students of communication technology in the late 1800s. A telegram is a paper printout of a message sent by telegraph; telegraphy is a system of communication, invented in 1837, that was based on coded electrical pulses.

Knowing that Mrs. Mallard was afflicted with a heart trouble, great care was taken to break to her as gently as possible the news of her husband's death. It was her sister Josephine who told her, in broken sentences; veiled[1] hints that revealed in half concealing. Her husband's friend Richards was there, too, near her. It was he who had been in the newspaper office when intelligence of the railroad disaster was received, with Brently Mallard's name leading the list of "killed." He had only taken the time to assure himself of its truth by a second telegram, and had hastened to forestall[2] any less careful, less tender friend in bearing the sad message.

She did not hear the story as many women have heard the same, with a paralyzed inability to accept its significance. She wept at once, with sudden, wild abandonment, in her sister's arms. When the storm of grief had spent[3] itself she went to her room alone. She would have no one follow her.

There stood, facing the open window, a comfortable, roomy armchair. Into this she sank, pressed down by a physical exhaustion that haunted her body and seemed to reach into her soul.

She could see in the open square before her house the tops of trees that were all aquiver with the new spring life. The delicious breath of rain was in the air. In the street below a peddler was crying his wares. The notes of a distant song which some one was singing reached her faintly, and countless sparrows were twittering in the eaves.

There were patches of blue sky showing here and there through the clouds that had met and piled one above the other in the west facing her window.

She sat with her head thrown back upon the cushion of the chair, quite motionless, except when a sob came up into her throat and shook her, as a child who has cried itself to sleep continues to sob in its dreams.

She was young, with a fair, calm face, whose lines bespoke repression and even a certain strength. But now there was a dull stare in her eyes, whose gaze was fixed away off yonder on one of those patches of blue sky. It was not a glance of reflection, but rather indicated a suspension of intelligent thought.

There was something coming to her and she was waiting for it, fearfully. What was it? She did not know; it was too subtle and elusive to name. But she felt it, creeping out of the sky, reaching toward her through the sounds, the scents, the color that filled the air.

Now her bosom rose and fell tumultuously. She was beginning to recognize this thing that was approaching to possess her, and she was striving to beat it back with her will—as powerless as her two white slender hands would have been.

When she abandoned herself a little whispered word escaped her slightly parted lips. She said it over and over under her breath: "free, free, free!" The vacant stare and the look of terror that had followed it went from her eyes. They stayed keen and bright. Her pulses beat fast, and the coursing[4] blood warmed and relaxed every inch of her body.

She did not stop to ask if it were or were not a monstrous joy that held her. A clear and

---

[1] Veiled means "disguised" or "obscure."

[2] Forestall means "to hinder by action taken beforehand."

[3] Here, spent means "exhausted."

[4] Coursing means "swiftly moving."

1 Conflict Based on this passage, what do you think the main conflict will be?

2 Conflict How does this passage complicate the conflict?

3 Apply Background Knowledge What knowledge about the Victorian era helps you understand this passage?

Vocabulary

elusive (i lo͞o′ siv) adj. difficult to explain or grasp tumultuously (to͞o mul′ cho͞o əs lē) adv. in an agitated manner; violently

Writing Practice

Adapt a Short Story to Drama

Have students dramatize the second and final page of the story. They should designate part of Chopin's text as dialogue and part as stage direction. They will have to generate some material from scratch—perhaps converting some of Mrs. Mallard's inner thoughts into a spoken monologue. Students will also have to decide where to end the story—at the point of Mrs. Mallard's collapse or of the doctors' explanation of her death.

exalted perception enabled her to dismiss the suggestion as trivial.

She knew that she would weep again when she saw the kind, tender hands folded in death; the face that had never looked save[5] with love upon her, fixed and gray and dead. But she saw beyond that bitter moment a long procession of years to come that would belong to her absolutely. And she opened and spread her arms out to them in welcome.

There would be no one to live for her during those coming years; she would live for herself. There would be no powerful will bending hers in that blind persistence with which men and women believe they have a right to impose a private will upon a fellow-creature. A kind intention or a cruel intention made the act seem no less a crime as she looked upon it in that brief moment of illumination.

"Free! Body and soul free!" she kept whispering.

And yet she had loved him—sometimes. Often she had not. What did it matter! What could love, the unsolved mystery, count for in face of this possession of self-assertion which she suddenly recognized as the strongest impulse of her being!

"Free! Body and soul free!" she kept whispering.

Josephine was kneeling before the closed door with her lips to the keyhole, imploring for admission. "Louise, open the door! I beg; open the door—you will make yourself ill. What are you doing, Louise? For heaven's sake open the door."

"Go away. I am not making myself ill." No; she was drinking in a very elixir of life[6] through that open window.

Her fancy was running riot along those days ahead of her. Spring days, and summer days, and all sorts of days that would be her own. She breathed a quick prayer that life might be long. It was only yesterday she had thought with a shudder that life might be long.

She arose at length and opened the door to her sister's importunities.[7] There was a feverish triumph in her eyes, and she carried herself unwittingly like a goddess of Victory. She clasped her sister's waist, and together they descended the stairs. Richards stood waiting for them at the bottom.

Some one was opening the front door with a latchkey. It was Brently Mallard who entered, a little travel-stained, composedly carrying his grip-sack[8] and umbrella. He had been far from the scene of accident, and did not even know there had been one. He stood amazed at Josephine's piercing cry; at Richards' quick motion to screen him from the view of his wife.

But Richards was too late.

When the doctors came they said she had died of heart disease—of joy that kills.

---

[5] Here, save means "except."

[6] An elixir (i lik´ sər) of life is a substance thought to prolong life indefinitely.

[7] Importunities are persistent requests or demands.

[8] A grip-sack is a small traveling bag.

4 Realism Why does Chopin include this information?

Vocabulary

exalted (ig zôl´ təd) adj. elevated perception (pər sep´ shən) n. an awareness; an insight persistence (pər sis´ təns) n. stubborn or determined continuance

Apply Background Knowledge How does this passage reflect what you know about Chopin's writing? 5

Comparing Literature

Teach

Big Idea 4

Realism Answer: Chopin presents a realistic view of marriage as she sees it—marked by love but not necessarily by all-abiding love. Without this insight by Mrs. Mallard, the reader could not fully understand her feelings toward widowhood.

Reading Strategy 5

Apply Background Knowledge Answer: This is an example of the type of writing for which Chopin was criticized—a realistic description of women's frustration with their status in the world.

Cultural History ☆

Nike The Greek goddess of victory and triumph was Nike, who was known primarily for her speed. When Chopin compared Mrs. Mallard to "a goddess of Victory," she may have been thinking about the eight-foot marble statue Nike of Samothrace (c. 200–190 B.C.). The statue is considered by some to be the greatest masterpiece of Hellenistic sculpture.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Help students understand the conflict in this story. Ask: What does Mrs. Mallard do when she hears that her husband has died? What does her action tell you about her feelings? (She weeps; this suggests that she feels grief.) Then ask students to read the paragraph starting with the words "When she abandoned herself . . ." Ask: What word does Mrs. Mallard repeat? What does this suggest about how she feels? (She repeats the word free*; this suggests that she feels relief.)* Point out that Mrs. Mallard's conflicting feelings reflect an internal conflict.

After You Read

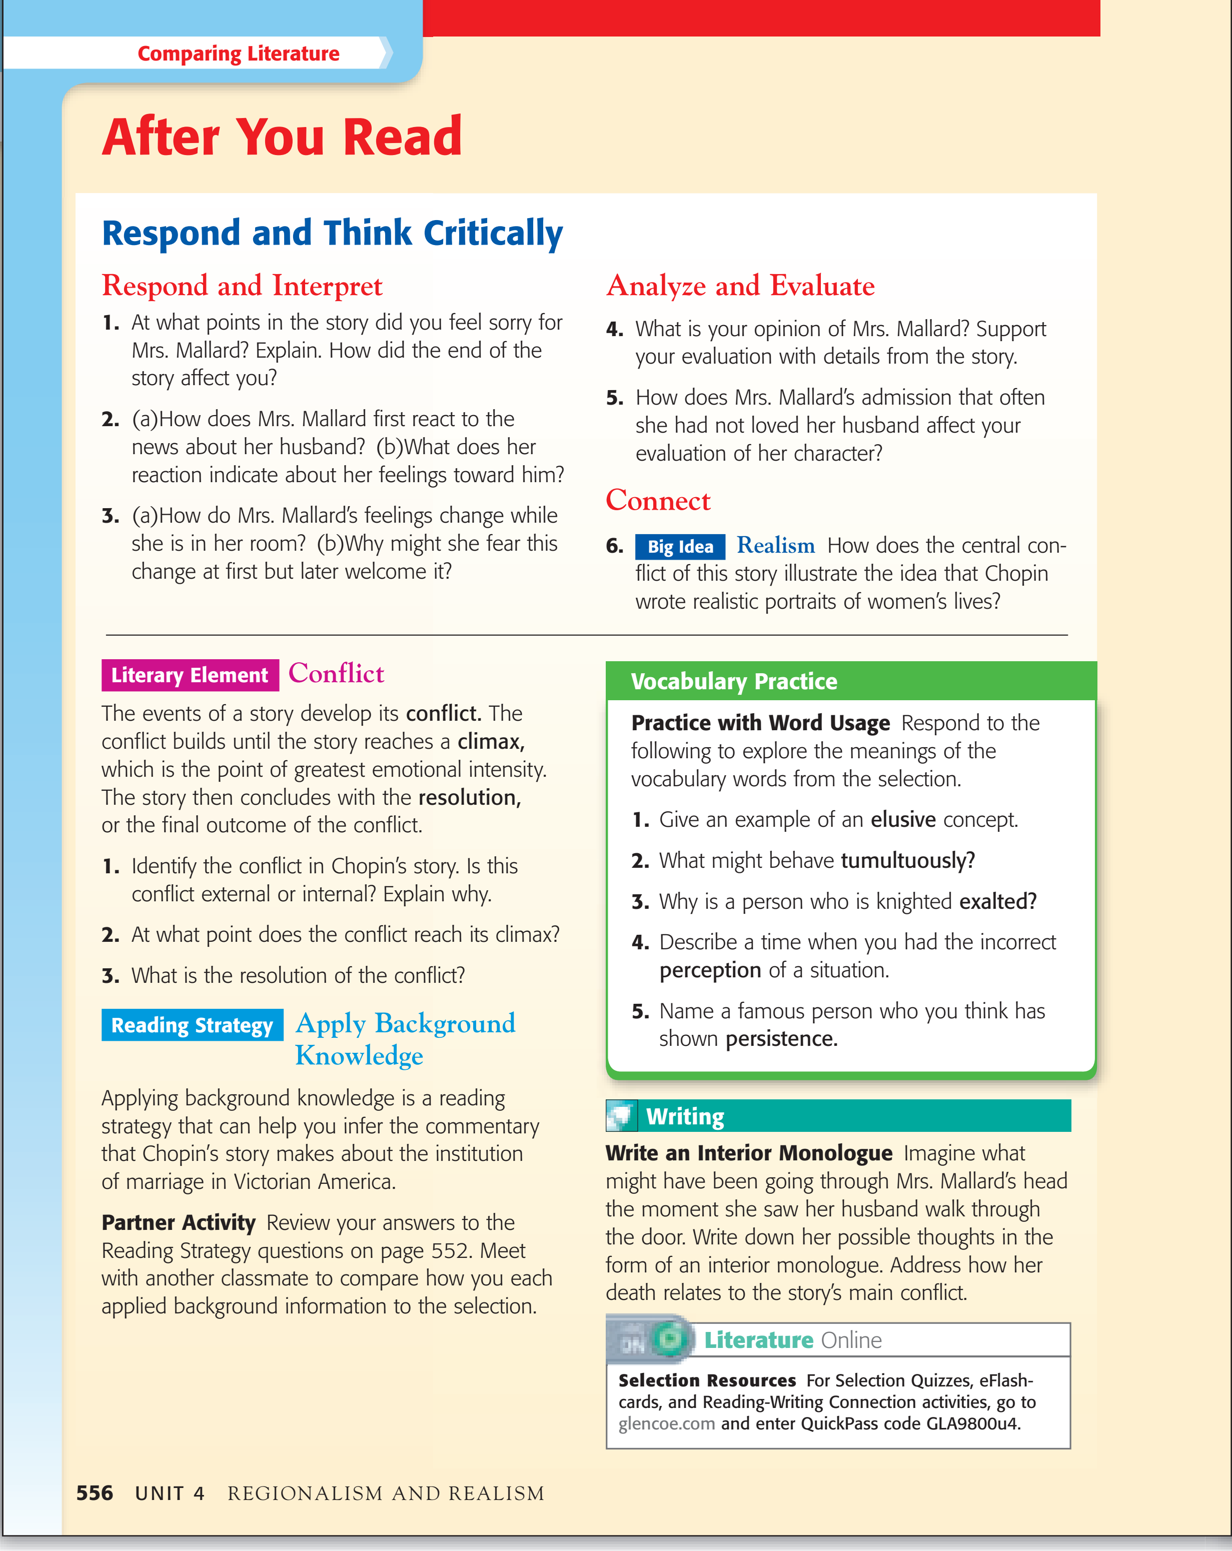
Assess

1. At the news of her husband's death; at the discovery that her marriage was not happy. Students may feel surprised.
2. (a) She grieves. (b) She will miss him.
3. (a) She realizes that she will be free. (b) It is socially unacceptable; later on, freedom appeals to her.
4. She feels trapped by marriage.
5. She may have a good reason for her feelings, but her feelings about her husband's death may be troubling.
6. In writing about Mrs. Mallard's struggle, Chopin realistically describes the character's thoughts.

Progress Check

Can students analyze conflict?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 115.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. At what points in the story did you feel sorry for Mrs. Mallard? Explain. How did the end of the story affect you?
2. (a)How does Mrs. Mallard first react to the news about her husband? (b)What does her reaction indicate about her feelings toward him?
3. (a)How do Mrs. Mallard's feelings change while she is in her room? (b)Why might she fear this change at first but later welcome it?

Analyze and Evaluate

4. What is your opinion of Mrs. Mallard? Support your evaluation with details from the story.
5. How does Mrs. Mallard's admission that often she had not loved her husband affect your evaluation of her character?

Connect

6. Big Idea Realism How does the central conflict of this story illustrate the idea that Chopin wrote realistic portraits of women's lives?

Literary Element Conflict

The events of a story develop its conflict. The conflict builds until the story reaches a climax, which is the point of greatest emotional intensity. The story then concludes with the resolution, or the final outcome of the conflict.

1. Identify the conflict in Chopin's story. Is this conflict external or internal? Explain why.
2. At what point does the conflict reach its climax?
3. What is the resolution of the conflict?

Reading Strategy Apply Background Knowledge

Applying background knowledge is a reading strategy that can help you infer the commentary that Chopin's story makes about the institution of marriage in Victorian America.

Partner Activity Review your answers to the Reading Strategy questions on page 552. Meet with another classmate to compare how you each applied background information to the selection.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Word Usage Respond to the following to explore the meanings of the vocabulary words from the selection.

1. Give an example of an elusive concept.
2. What might behave tumultuously?
3. Why is a person who is knighted exalted?
4. Describe a time when you had the incorrect perception of a situation.
5. Name a famous person who you think has shown persistence.

Writing

Write an Interior Monologue Imagine what might have been going through Mrs. Mallard's head the moment she saw her husband walk through the door. Write down her possible thoughts in the form of an interior monologue. Address how her death relates to the story's main conflict.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Literary Element

1. Mrs. Mallard's struggle to embrace the knowledge that she is free; internal
2. Chopin describes Mrs. Mallard's thoughts: shock and grief, then joy. The climax occurs when Mrs. Mallard sees her husband.
3. She dies, perhaps from the shocking disappointment of seeing her husband.

Vocabulary

1. String Theory is an elusive concept.
2. A hurricane may behave tumultuously; it can cause much damage.
3. A knighted person has an elevated status, so he can be seen as exalted.
4. I had the mistaken perception that my teacher did not like my essay.
5. Abraham Lincoln was persistent in his campaign for president because initially he was not popular.

Reading Strategy

Chopin critcizes marriage: Mrs. Mallard tastes freedom before realizing that she is still trapped in a unfulfilling marriage.

Writing

Students' monologues should connect to events in the stories and be written from the perspective of Mrs. Mallard.

The Darling

Anton Chekhov

Translated by Harvey Pitcher

Open-air Theater of Acrobats. Boris Kustodiev. Russian State Museum, St. Petersburg, Russia.

Build Background

Anton Chekhov studied both medicine and literature. He eventually focused on his literary pursuits, becoming a master of the short story as well as Russia's most revered playwright. His realistic stories, which focus on atmosphere and character rather than plot and action, became an essential influence on modern literature. Chekhov's substantial place in literature comes in part from his ability to reveal how ordinary events can have a huge impact on people's lives.

Olenka,[1] the daughter of retired collegiate assessor Plemyannikov, sat on the porch in her yard, lost in thought. It was hot, the flies wouldn't leave her alone, and it was bliss to think it would soon be evening. Dark rainclouds were moving up from the east, preceded by occasional wafts of humid air.

In the middle of the yard Snookin, manager-proprietor of the Tivoli Pleasure Gardens, who lodged across the yard in Olenka's fliegel,[2] stood gazing at the sky.

"Not again!" he was saying in despair. "Not rain again! Day after day, day after day, rain, rain, rain! Just my luck! What I have to put up with! I'm ruined! I'm losing huge sums every day!"

Throwing up his hands, he turned to Olenka and said:

---

[1] Olenka is a nickname for Olga. In Russia, people are often informally referred to by their given name and then a patronymic, which is a variation of their father's given name. If the father's name were Ivan, the son's patronymic name would be Ivanovich, and the daughter's would be Ivanovna. Semyonovna is Olga's patronymic.

[2] A fliegel is a small house that is on the property of a larger house and might be rented out.

Comparing Literature

Focus

Summary

Olga Semyonovna marries a theater manager. She comes to love the theater and lives happily until her husband dies suddenly. Then she marries the manager of a lumberyard and helps her husband run his business. He too dies. She begins spending time with a veterinarian, but he moves away. When he returns many years later, Olga helps him raise his son. Her love for the child restores happiness and purpose to her life.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 7.3

DRP: 57

Lexile: 1100

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

African American Vernacular English Approaching-level students who use AAVE may at times place adverbs such as always, never, and usually before the verb to be. For example, they may say, "The rain always is falling." Remind students to place adverbs after the verb to be. Have students practice the correct placement of adverbs with these sentences and adverbs:

1) The sky is overcast. (often) (The sky is often overcast.)

2) Snookin is complaining about the weather. (always) (Snookin is always complaining about the weather.)

3) Olenka sits on the porch in the evening. (sometimes) (Olenka is sometimes sitting on the porch in the evening.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Characterization Ask: What does Snookin reveal about himself through his speech? (He presents himself as a man with high standards who has to put up with the whims of nature and with a shallow public.)

Reading Strategy 2

Author's Viewpoint Explain that the way Chekhov portrays his characters reveals his opinion of married life. Ask: How do you think Chekhov felt about the relationship between Olenka and Snookin? Explain. (He thinks the relationship is unhealthy—one feels pity for Olenka when she readily adopts her husband's opinions as her own.)

ADVANCED Challenge students to find the topic sentence that sums up Olenka's character in the paragraph that begins "Olenka said nothing." ("She was constantly in love with someone and could not live otherwise.")

1 "You see what our life's like, Olga Semyonovna. Enough to make you weep! You work hard and do your best, you worry and have sleepless nights, you're always thinking of improvements—and what's the result? Take audiences for a start. They're nothing but ignorant savages. I give them the best operetta and pantomime, top-quality burlesque,[3] but is that what they want? Do they appreciate it? No, they want some vulgar little peepshow. Then take the weather. Rain almost every evening. May 10th it started, and it's been at it right through May and June. Appalling! The public stays away, but who has to pay the rent, I ask you? Who has to pay the performers?"

Clouds began gathering at the same time next day.

"Oh yes, let it all come!" Snookin said, laughing hysterically. "Let it flood the whole Gardens and take me with it! I don't deserve any happiness in this world or the next! Let the performers take me to court! Why stop at that? Make it penal servitude in Siberia! The scaffold![4] Ha-ha-ha!"

It was the same next day. . . .

2 Olenka said nothing but listened to Snookin gravely, and sometimes tears came to her eyes. In the end his misfortunes moved her and she fell in love with him. He was short and skinny, with a sallow complexion and hair combed back off the temples, he spoke in a high-pitched tenor, twisting his mouth as he did so, and his face wore an expression of permanent despair—yet he aroused in her deep and genuine emotion. She was constantly in love with someone and could not live otherwise. Previously she had loved her Papa, now an invalid sitting in his armchair in a darkened room and breathing with difficulty; then she had loved her aunt, who came to visit them every other year from Bryansk;[5] and earlier still she had loved the French master at her school. She was a quiet, good-natured, tender-hearted girl, with soft gentle eyes, and in the best of health. Looking at her plump rosy cheeks and soft white neck with its dark birthmark, at the innocent, kindly smile on her face whenever she was listening to something pleasant, men said to themselves, "yes, not a bad one, that," and smiled, too, while her female visitors could not refrain from seizing her by the hand in the middle of a conversation and exclaiming with delight:

"You're such a darling!"

The house she had lived in all her life and was due to inherit stood on the edge of town in Gypsy Lane, not far from the Tivoli, so that in the evenings and at night, hearing the band playing and the rockets going off with a bang, she imagined this was Snookin challenging his fate and taking his chief enemy, the indifferent public, by storm; her heart would melt, she didn't feel a bit sleepy, and when he returned home in the early hours, she would knock softly on her bedroom window and, letting him see through the curtains only her face and one shoulder, smile affectionately. . . .

He proposed and they were married. Now that he could see her neck and both her plump healthy shoulders properly, he threw up his hands and said:

"You darling, you!"

He was happy, but since it rained on the wedding day and on the wedding night, the look of despair never left his face.

Life went well after the marriage. She sat in his box office, supervised the Gardens, wrote down expenses and paid out salaries, and you'd catch a glimpse of her rosy cheeks and sweetly innocent, radiant smile at the box office window one moment, behind stage

---

[3] An operetta is a form of opera that includes elaborate dancing and music, as well as a romantic, usually comic plot. A pantomime relies on body movement to tell a story. A burlesque, usually a series of comic short skits, uses exaggeration to ridicule.

[4] The governments of Imperial Russia and the Soviet Union sent criminals to Siberia, an area known for being remote and having a harsh climate. Here, scaffold refers to the platform on which a criminal is executed.

[5] Bryansk is a Russian city southwest of Moscow.

Grammar Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Subordinate Clauses Review with students that a subordinate clause is a group of words that has a subject and a predicate but cannot stand alone as a sentence. A subordinate clause can be used as an adjective. Adjective clauses begin with a relative pronoun such as which, who, whom, whose, or that.

Ask: What is the subordinate clause in this sentence: "She was like the hens, she thought, which stay awake all night and are restive when the cock isn't in the henhouse." What word signals the beginning of the subordinate clause? (which stay awake all night and are restive when the cock isn't in the henhouse; the word which*)* Have students practice using subordinate clauses by writing sentences about the story.

the next, and now in the refreshment bar. Already she was telling her friends that nothing in the world was so remarkable, so important and necessary as the theatre, and only in the theatre could you experience real enjoyment and become an educated, civilized human being.

3 "But does the public appreciate that?" she would say. "What they want is a peepshow. Yesterday we did Faust Inside Out and almost all the boxes were empty, but if we'd put on something vulgar, me and Vanya,[6] we'd have been packed out, I can tell you. Tomorrow we're 4 doing Orpheus in the Underworld, me and Vanya, why don't you come?"

Whatever Snookin said about the theatre and the actors, she repeated. Like him, she despised the public for its indifference to art and its ignorance, interfered in rehearsals, corrected the actors and made sure the musicians behaved, and whenever there was a bad notice in the local press, she would cry and then go round to the editorial office to have it out with them.

The actors were fond of her and called her "Me and Vanya" and "The Darling." She felt sorry for them and gave them small loans, and if they let her down, she just had a quiet cry and said nothing to her husband.

Life went well that winter, too. They hired the town theatre for the whole season and rented it out for short periods to a Ukrainian troupe, a conjuror, and the local amateur dramatic company. Olenka put on weight and positively radiated well-being, but Snookin looked thin and sallow, and complained of huge losses, even though business was quite good all winter. At night he coughed and she gave him raspberry or lime-blossom tea to drink, rubbed him with eau-de-Cologne and wrapped him in her soft shawls.

"My wonderful little man!" she would say with complete sincerity, as she stroked his hair. "My handsome little man!"

During Lent[7] he went off to Moscow to engage a new company, and in his absence she couldn't sleep, but sat by the window looking at the stars. She was like the hens, she thought, which stay awake all night and are restive when the cock isn't in the henhouse. Snookin was delayed in Moscow but said he'd be back by Easter, and his letters were already giving her instructions about the Tivoli. But on the Sunday before Easter, late at night, there was a sudden ominous knocking outside. Someone was banging on the gate until it started booming like a barrel. The Russian Woman at the Window, 1923. Boris Kustodiev. Watercolor over pencil on paper, 24.3 x 21.5 cm. Museum of Fine Arts, Kostroma, Russia. ★

---

[6] Vanya is a nickname for Ivan, which is Snookin's given name.

[7] Lent is a period of fasting and self-denial prior to the celebration of Easter that is observed by some Christian denominations.

Comparing Literature

Teach

Big Idea 3

Realism Here Olenka is saying exactly the sort of thing Snookin said earlier. Ask: What does this fact suggest about nineteenth-century married life? (Wives presented themselves not as individuals but as extensions of their husbands.)

Literary Element 4

Literary Allusion In medieval literature, Faust is a philosopher who sells his soul to the devil in exchange for power. In Greek mythology, Orpheus is a genius musician. Ask: Do you think Olenka has ever read the plays? (No, Olenka is just repeating her husband's words. She probably has not read the plays.)

View the Art ★

Boris Kustodiev (1878–1927) was known for his colorful, joyful paintings—even at this point in his career, when he had become paralyzed. Confined to his studio, he painted scenes from his memory. Ask: What, if anything, about this painting looks Russian? (Some may say the woman's hairstyle and the lace curtains seem Russian; others may say the scene could be from anywhere.)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Help students analyze the characters in the story. Say: Describe Snookin's appearance. (Snookin is "short and skinny, with a sallow complexion and hair combed back off the temples . . . his face wore an expression of permanent despair.) Then, tell students to reread Snookin's dialogue as they keep his appearance in mind. Ask: Based on Snookin's words to Olenka, what do you think of Snookin's character? (He is always complaining about something but he does seem to love Olenka.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Repetition Say: On this page we read that “life went well for Pustovalov and Olenka after their marriage.” We also learn that the timber business “was the most vitally important thing in life” for Olenka. Where have you read such statements before? (Students should recognize that Olenka expressed similar sentiments about the business of her first husband. Students may comment on an emerging pattern.)

sleepy cook ran to answer, her bare feet splashing in the puddles.

“Open up, please!” someone outside was saying in a deep bass. “Telegram for you!”

Olenka had received telegrams from her husband before, but now for some reason she felt petrified. She opened it with trembling hands and read as follows:

“Ivan Petrovich[8] died suddenly today suchly await instructions funreal Tuesday.”

That was what the telegram said, “funreal” and the other meaningless word “suchly”; it was signed by the producer of the operetta company.

“My darling!” Olenka sobbed. “My sweet darling little Vanya! Why did I ever meet you? Why did I come to know you and love you? Who’s going to look after your poor wretched Olenka now you’ve abandoned her?”

Snookin was buried on the Tuesday at the Vagankovo Cemetery in Moscow. Olenka returned home on Wednesday and as soon as she entered her room, flung herself down on the bed and sobbed so loudly she could be heard in the street and the neighboring yards.

“Poor darling!” the women neighbors said, crossing themselves. “She is taking it badly, poor darling Olga Semyonovna!”

Three months later Olenka, in full mourning, was returning home sadly one day from church. It so happened that a neighbor of hers, Vasily Andreich Pustovalov, manager of the merchant Babakayev’s timber yard, was also returning from church and walking alongside her. He was wearing a straw hat and a white waistcoat[9] with a gold watch-chain, and looked more like a landowner than a tradesman.

“Everything has to take its proper course, Olga Semyonovna,” he was saying soberly, with a sympathetic note in his voice, “and if someone dear to us dies, that means it is God’s wish, so we must contain ourselves and bear it with resignation.”

After seeing Olenka to her gate, he said goodbye and walked on. For the rest of the day she kept hearing that sober voice, and she had only to close her eyes to picture his dark beard to herself. She liked him very much. Evidently she had made an impression on him, too, for not long afterwards an elderly lady, whom she scarcely knew, came to drink coffee with her, and had no sooner sat down at the table than she started talking about Pustovalov, what a good, reliable man he was and how any young lady would be delighted to have him for a husband. Three days later Pustovalov himself paid her a visit, stayed no more than about ten minutes and said little, but Olenka fell for him so completely that she lay awake all night feeling hot and feverish, and next morning sent for the elderly lady. The match was quickly arranged, then came the wedding.

Life went well for Pustovalov and Olenka after their marriage. He would usually stay at the timber yard until lunch and then go out on business, whereupon Olenka would take his place and stay in the office until evening, doing the accounts and dispatching orders.

1 “Timber’s going up by twenty percent a year now,” she would tell customers and friends. “In the past we used to get our timber locally, but now, imagine, my Vasya[10] has to fetch it every year from Mogilyov Province. And the freight charges!” she would say, covering both cheeks with her hands in horror. “The freight charges!”

She felt that she had been dealing in timber for ages and ages, and it was the most vitally important thing in life, and the words joist, batten, offcut, purlin,[11] round beam, short beam, frame and slab, were like dear old friends to her. At night she dreamed of whole mountains of boards and battens, of never-ending convoys of carts carrying timber somewhere far beyond the town; she dreamed of a

---

[8] Ivan Petrovich is Snookin’s name.

[9] A waistcoat is an ornamental vest worn under a jacket.

[10] Vasya is a nickname for Vasily.

[11] A joist is a type of wood beam; a batten is a piece of wood used on a boat or in a floor; an offcut is a small piece of wood; a purlin is a piece of wood used in a roof.

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Understand Footnotes Have students identify the kind of information that is presented in the footnotes. (The footnotes provide definitions of foreign and unfamiliar words and terms used in the text. They also explain cultural references and present other information related to the text.)

Ask: Why is certain information provided in footnotes instead of in the main text of a selection? (The information is not essential to the story’s theme and may distract from the flow of the story.)

whole regiment of beams, thirty feet by nine inches, marching upright into battle against the timber yard, and how beams, joists and slabs banged together with the resounding thud of dry wood, falling over and then righting themselves, piling up on top of each other. Olenka would cry out in her sleep and Pustovalov would say to her tenderly:

"What's the matter, Olenka dear? Better cross yourself!"[12]

Whatever thoughts her husband had, she had also. If he thought the room was too hot or business had become quiet, she thought the same. Her husband did not like any entertainments and on holidays stayed at home; so did she.

"You're always at home or in the office," friends said to her. "You should go to the theatre, darling, or the circus."

2 "Me and Vasya have no time for theatres," she replied soberly. "We're working folk, we can't be bothered with trifles. What do people see in those theatres, anyway?"

On Saturdays she and Pustovalov attended the all-night vigil, and on feast days early-morning service. Afterwards, walking home side by side, they both looked deeply moved, they smelt fragrant, and her silk dress rustled agreeably. At home they drank tea, with rich white bread and various jams, then they had pie. Every day at noon the yard and the street outside the gates were filled with the appetizing smell of borsch[13] and roast lamb or duck, or fish on fast days, and no one could walk past without beginning to feel hungry. In the office the samovar[14] was always on the boil, and customers were treated to tea and buns. Once a week the couple went to the baths and walked home side by side, both red in the face.

"We're not complaining," Olenka told her friends. "Life's going well, praise be to God. May God grant everyone as good a life as me and Vasya."

When Pustovalov went off to Mogilyov Province for timber, she missed him terribly and could not sleep at night for crying. Sometimes she had an evening visit from the young man renting her fliegel, a regimental vet[15] called Smirnin. He would tell her about something or they'd play cards, and this cheered her up. She was particularly interested to hear about his own family life: he was married with a son, but had separated from his wife because she'd been unfaithful, and now he hated her and sent her forty roubles[16] a month for the boy's maintenance. As she listened, Olenka sighed and shook her head, and felt sorry for him.

"The Lord be with you," she would say, bidding him good night and lighting him to the top of the stairs with a candle. "It was kind of you to while away your time with me, may God and the Holy Mother watch over you. . . ."

She always expressed herself in the same sober, judicious tones, imitating her husband. The vet was already disappearing behind the downstairs door when she would call him back and say:

"Vladimir Platonych,[17] don't you think you should make it up with your wife? Forgive her, if only for your son's sake! That little chap knows just what's going on, be sure of that."

When Pustovalov returned, she would tell him in a hushed voice about the vet and his unhappy family situation, and both would sigh, shake their heads and talk of how the boy must be missing his father; then, by some strange association of ideas they would both kneel before the icons,[18] prostrate themselves and pray that God might send them children.

---

[12] Pustovalov is suggesting that Olenka make the sign of a cross to help keep away her nightmare.

[13] Borsch is beet soup.

[14] A samovar is a type of urn used to make tea in Russia.

[15] Here, vet is short for veterinarian.

[16] Roubles is an alternate spelling of rubles, Russian currency.

[17] Vladimir Platonych is Smirnin's formal name.

[18] Here, icons refers to religious images, often painted on wood and used in religious practices.

Comparing Literature

Teach

Literary Element 2

Characterization Explain that when Olenka denigrates the theater, which was previously the center of her life, Chekhov expects the reader to find the character silly.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Help students understand Olenka's words. Explain that trifle means "something of little value." The question "What do people see in those theatres, anyway?" means "Why do people want to go to the theater, anyway?"

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Explain that an idiom is a saying that has a meaning that is different from the meaning of the individual words that make up the saying. Say: Look at the dialogue of the neighbor women on page 560. What do they say that may be an idiom? ("taking it badly") Ask: Can you find another idiom a few paragraphs later? ("made an impression on him") Discuss the meanings of these idioms. ("Taking it badly" means experiencing difficult emotions in response to something. "Making an impression" is not making a physical mark on someone but having an effect or influencing someone's mind, feelings, or senses.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Repetition Say: Identify an example of repetition on this page. (When Pustovalov dies, Olenka sobs, "Who will look after me now?" Excessive mourning and lamenting were also characteristics of Olenka when her first husband died).

Reading Strategy 2

Predict Point out that Olenka's behavior follows a pattern. Ask: What do you think will happen now that Pustovalov is dead? (Olenka may marry Smirnin.)

ADVANCED Ask: What clues in the story hint that the relationship between Olenka and Smirnin may break Olenka's pattern? (Smirnin was married before and has a son; Olenka had pushed for Smirnin to reconcile with his wife.)

Portrait of Vasily Mathé, 1902. Boris Kustodiev. Oil on canvas, 125 x 151 cm. Russian State Museum, St. Petersburg, Russia. ★

Thus did the Pustovalovs live for six years, quietly and peacefully, in love and complete harmony. But one winter's day at the yard Vasily Andreich went out bare-headed to dispatch some timber after drinking hot tea, caught cold and fell ill. He was treated by the best doctors, but the illness took its course and he died four months later.

Olenka had become a widow again.

1 "Who will look after me now, my darling?" she sobbed, after burying her husband. "How can I possibly live without you? I'm so wretched and unhappy! Pity me, good people, I'm all alone now. . . ."

She wore a black dress with weepers,[19] having vowed never to wear a hat or gloves again, went out seldom and then only to church or to her husband's grave, and lived at home like a nun. Six months passed before she discarded the weepers and began opening her shutters. Some mornings she was to be seen shopping for food in the market with her cook, but people could only surmise how she was living now and what her domestic arrangements were. They surmised when they saw her, for example, sitting in her little garden drinking tea with the vet while he read the newspaper out to her, and also when she bumped into a female friend at the post office and was heard to say:

2 "Our town has no proper veterinary inspection and that gives rise to many illnesses. You're always hearing of people being infected by milk or catching diseases from horses and cows. We really ought to treat the health of domestic animals as seriously as we do that of human beings."

She repeated the vet's thoughts and now shared his opinions on everything. It was clear that she could not survive even for a year without an attachment and had found her new happiness in the fliegel next door. Anyone else would have been condemned for this, but no one could think ill of Olenka, her whole life was so transparent. She and the vet did not tell anyone about the change that had taken place in their relationship and tried to conceal it, but without success, because Olenka could not keep a secret. When regimental colleagues came to visit him and she was pouring out their tea or serving supper, she would start talking about cattle plague, pearl disease,[20] and the municipal slaughterhouses. This made him terribly embarrassed, and as they were leaving, he would seize her by the arm and hiss angrily:

"Haven't I told you before not to talk about things you don't understand? When we vets are talking shop, please don't butt in. It's extremely tedious."

She would look at him in alarm and astonishment, and say:

---

[19] Here, weepers means "a veil worn as a symbol of mourning."

[20] Pearl disease is a blood disease in cattle.

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Characterization Challenge students to discuss how Olenka's character changes in the course of this page. Ask students to find two contrasting portrayals of Olenka. (Olenka "lived at home like a nun;" Olenka "found her new happiness in the fliegel next door.")

Then review with students the methods Chekhov uses to give readers a sense of Olenka. The narrator makes direct statements about the character's appearance and mood; the author shows us the character's statements and actions.

View the Art ★

The subject of the painting, Vasily Mathé, was one of Kustodiev's teachers. Mathé had taught the artist etching in St. Petersburg. Note that the portrait is from the same era as Chekhov's story.

"But Volodya[21] dear, what am I to talk about?!"

With tears in her eyes she embraced him and begged him not to be angry, and they were both happy.

But this happiness did not last long. The vet departed with his regiment, and since they had been transferred somewhere very distant, practically to Siberia, his departure was permanent.

Olenka was left on her own.

This time she was completely on her own. Her father had long since died, and his armchair, with one leg missing, was gathering dust in the attic. She became plain and thin, and people meeting her in the street no longer looked at her and smiled as they used to; her best years were evidently gone for good, now a new, unknown life was beginning that did not bear thinking about. In the evenings Olenka sat on her porch and could hear the band playing and the rockets going off at the Tivoli, but this no longer made her think of anything. 3 She gazed apathetically at her empty yard, had no thoughts or desires, and when night fell, went to bed and dreamed of her empty yard. She seemed reluctant even to eat or drink.

But the worst thing of all was no longer having any opinions. She saw objects round her and understood everything that was going on, but she could not form opinions about anything and did not know what to talk about. How awful it is not to have an opinion! You see a bottle, for example, standing there, or the rain falling, or a peasant going along in his cart, but what the bottle or rain or peasant are for, what sense they make, you can't say and couldn't say, even if they offered you a thousand roubles. In Snookin's and Pustovalov's time, and then with the vet, Olenka could explain everything and give her opinion on any subject you liked, whereas now her mind and heart were as empty as the yard outside. It was a horrible, bitter sensation, like a mouthful of wormwood.[22]

The town has gradually expanded in all directions. Gypsy Lane is now called a street, and where the Tivoli and the timber yards once stood, houses have sprung up and there are a number of side streets. How time flies! Olenka's house looks dingy, the roof has rusted, the shed is leaning to one side, and the yard is completely overgrown with weeds and stinging nettles.[23] Olenka herself has grown older and plainer. In summer she sits on her porch, with the same feeling of emptiness, boredom, and bitterness in her soul as before, in winter she sits by her window gazing at the snow. If she feels the breath of spring, or hears the sound of cathedral bells carried on the wind, memories suddenly flood in, tugging at her heart-strings, and copious tears stream down her face; but this lasts only a minute, then the same emptiness and sense of futility returns. Her black cat Bryska snuggles up to her, purring softly, but Olenka is unmoved by these feline caresses. Is that what she needs? No, she needs the kind of love that will possess her completely, mind and soul, that will provide her with thoughts and a direction in life, and warm her aging blood. She bundles black Bryska off her lap and says irritably:

"Go away . . . I don't want you here!"

It's the same day after day, year after year—she doesn't have a single joy in life or a single opinion. Whatever Mavra the cook says is good enough.

One hot July day, towards evening, when the town cattle were being driven past and clouds of dust had filled the yard, all of a sudden someone knocked at the gate. Olenka went to open it herself, took one look and was completely dumbfounded: Smirnin the vet was standing there, grey-haired and in civilian clothes. Suddenly everything came back to her, she broke down and burst into tears, laid her head on his chest without saying a word, and was so overcome that afterwards she had

---

[21] Volodya is Smirnin's nickname (his first name is Vladimir).

[22] Wormwood is a plant that produces a bitter oil.

[23] Stinging nettles are a perennial herb with sharp leaves and white flowers.

Teach

Vocabulary 3

Context Clues Ask: How can you figure out the meaning of the word apathetically from reading the previous sentence, the sentence containing the word, and the following sentence? (All three sentences tell the reader about Olenka's lack of desire and interest in the world, so apathetically must mean "without interest or emotion.") Have students practice using the word apathetically in sentences.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Help students figure out the meaning of the word apathetically. Have students reread the three sentences again and write down phrases that tell of Olenka's lack of interest in the world. ("no longer made her think of anything," "had no thoughts or desires," "reluctant to eat or drink") Tell students that looking for context clues while reading is a good way to figure out new vocabulary words.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Have students read aloud what Smirnin says to Olenka on page 562: "When we vets are talking shop, please don't butt in. It's extremely tedious." Explain that while talking shop and butt in are informal expressions, the phrase extremely tedious is more formal. It is unlikely that these three expressions would appear together in the speech of native English speakers. Remind students that this story has been translated from Russian and that it can be difficult for translators to find a balanced mix of formal and informal English. Ask students to rewrite the first sentence in formal English.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Realism Chekhov depicts Olenka as acting totally subservient to Vladimir Platonych. She sacrifices herself so that he and his family will be comfortable. Ask: What view is Chekhov underscoring here? (He is underscoring his view that women did not look out for themselves in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.) Ask: How does that compare with married women you know today? (Women today are more independent, more educated, and often have careers of their own.)

Writer's Technique ☆

Author's Voice After describing Olenka's willingness to give her life away for her new love, the narrator asks the reader directly, "Why? Who can possibly say why?" Explain to students that although less common in modern literature, there is a tradition of authors directly addressing their readers in order to draw readers' attention to a specific comment or issue.

no recollection of how they went into the house together and sat down to drink tea.

"Vladimir Platonych," she murmured, trembling with joy, "dearest! Whatever brings you here?"

"I'd like to settle down here permanently," he told her. "I've resigned my commission and come to try my luck as a civilian, leading a settled life. Then there's my son, he's growing up and it's time he went to grammar school. I've made it up with my wife, you know."

"And where is she now?" Olenka asked.

"At the hotel with the boy while I go round looking for lodgings."

1 "But good heavens, have my house, dear! Far better than lodgings. Oh heavens above, I don't want any rent," Olenka went on, becoming agitated and bursting into tears again. "You live here and the fliegel will do for me. Wonderful!"

Next day they were already painting the roof and whitewashing the walls, and Olenka was walking about the yard, arms on hips, giving orders. Her face shone with its old smile, and everything about her was fresh and lively, as if she had just woken from a long sleep. The vet's wife arrived, a thin, unattractive woman with short hair and a peevish expression. With her came the boy, Sasha, who was small for his age (he was over nine) and chubby, with bright blue eyes and dimpled cheeks. He had no sooner set foot in the yard than he began chasing the cat, and his merry, joyful laughter rang out.

"Is that your cat, Auntie?" he asked Olenka. "When it has babies, will you give us one, please? Mamma's scared stiff of mice."

Olenka chatted to him and gave him tea, and suddenly felt a warm glow and pleasurable tightening in her heart, as if this boy were her own son. And when he was sitting in the dining-room repeating his lessons in the evenings, she would look at him with tenderness and pity, and whisper:

"My darling, my pretty little child. . . . You're so clever and your skin is so fair."

"An island," he read out, "is an area of dry land surrounded on all sides by water."

"An island is an area of dry land . . ." she repeated, and this was the first opinion she had expressed with confidence after all those years of silence and emptiness of mind.

Now she had her own opinions and talked to Sasha's parents over supper about how hard children had to work at grammar school these days, but all the same a classical education was better than a modern one, because every career was open to you afterwards—doctor, engineer, whatever you wished.

Sasha had begun attending the grammar school. His mother went away to her sister's in Kharkov and did not come back, his father went off somewhere every day to inspect herds and might be away for three days at a time, and Olenka felt that Sasha was being completely neglected, his parents didn't want him and he must be starving to death; so she transferred him to her fliegel and fixed him up in a little room there.

Six months have now passed since Sasha began living in her fliegel. Every morning Olenka goes into his room: he is fast asleep with his hand under his cheek, breathing imperceptibly. She is sorry to have to wake him.

"Sashenka," she says sadly, "get up, dear! Time for school."

He gets up, dresses, says his prayers, and then sits down to drink tea; he drinks three glasses and consumes two large rolls and half a French loaf with butter. Still not fully awake, he is in a bad mood.

"You didn't learn your fable properly, you know, Sashenka," Olenka says, looking at him as if about to see him off on a long journey. "What a worry you are to me. You must make an effort to learn, dear, and do as the teachers say."

"Oh, stop nagging!" says Sasha.

Then he walks along the street to school, a small boy in a big cap, with a satchel on his back. Olenka follows silently behind.

"Sashenka-a!" she calls.

Writing Practice

Journal Entry Have students write a couple of journal entries as Olenka. The first entry takes place after the vet is transferred to somewhere distant, leaving Olenka alone. The second entry should be set when Smirnin and his family move back to the area. The journal entries should use sensory details to describe Olenka's life when she apathetically isolates herself in her house and her life when she starts to devote herself to caring for Sasha. Tell students to look for clues in the story and write about Olenka's feelings. Remind students that Olenka's feelings should be different in the two journal entries.

He looks round, and she pops a date or a caramel into his hand. When they turn into the school street, he feels ashamed at being followed by this tall, stout woman, looks round and says:

2 "You go home now, Auntie, I'll do the last bit on my own."

She stops and keeps her eyes fixed on him until he disappears through the school entrance. Oh, how she loves him! Not one of her previous attachments has been so deep, never before has she surrendered herself so wholeheartedly, unselfishly and joyfully as now, when her maternal feelings are being kindled more and more. For this boy, who is not hers, for his cap and his dimpled cheeks, she would give away her whole life, and do so with gladness and tears of emotion. Why? ☆ Who can possibly say why?

Suddenly there's a loud knock at the gate. Olenka wakes up, too terrified to breathe. Her heart is thumping. Half a minute passes, then there's another knock.

After seeing Sasha off, she returns home quietly, feeling so calm and contented, and overflowing with love. In these last six months her face has become younger, she is smiling and radiant, and people meeting her in the street feel pleasure as they look at her, and say:

"Olga Semyonovna darling, good morning! How are you, darling?"

"They have to work so hard at grammar school these days," she tells them in the market. "It's no laughing matter. Yesterday the first year had a fable to learn by heart and a Latin translation and a math problem. . . . How can a small boy cope?"

She goes on to talk about teachers and lessons and textbooks—repeating exactly what Sasha tells her.

Between two and three they have their meal together, and in the evening they do Sasha's homework together and cry. Putting him to bed, she spends a long time making the sign of the cross over him and whispering a prayer, then, on going to bed herself, she pictures that distant hazy future when Sasha has finished his degree and become a doctor or an engineer, has his own large house with horses and a carriage, marries and has children. . . . She falls asleep still thinking about it all, and tears run down her cheeks from her closed eyes. The black cat lies purring by her side: mrr, mrr, mrr. . . .

Suddenly there's a loud knock at the gate. Olenka wakes up, too terrified to breathe. Her heart is thumping. Half a minute passes, then there's another knock.

"It's a telegram from Kharkov," she thinks, beginning to tremble all over. "Sasha's mother wants him to live with her in Kharkov. . . . Oh heavens!"

She is in despair. Her head, arms and legs turn cold, she feels the unhappiest person in the world. But another minute passes and she hears voices. It's the vet, he's come back from his club.

"Oh, thank God," she thinks.

Gradually the pressure on her heart eases and she feels relaxed again. She lies down and thinks of Sasha, who is sleeping soundly in the room next door. From time to time he starts talking in his sleep:

"I'll show you! Get out! Stop fighting!" ❧

Quickwrite

Olenka is described as being "constantly in love" and unable to live without love. How does love affect Olenka? In what ways is her need for love both beneficial and detrimental to her? Write a short response explaining your views.

Comparing Literature

Teach

Vocabulary 2

Titles of Respect Sasha calls Olenka "Auntie" not because they are relatives but as a sign of respect toward an elder. Elicit from students the titles used in their home cultures when a young person addresses an older person.

Quickwrite

Students may say that Olenka bases her identity on the person she loves. Each time she loses her beloved, she also loses her thoughts and opinions. This trait benefits her when she is with someone who loves her, but she suffers when she is alone.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Point out to students that although Olenka does not marry the vet as predicted, her character has not changed at the end of the story. Have students reread the paragraph beginning "She goes on to talk about . . . ."

Ask: What is one hint that Olenka has not changed? (Olenka repeats the opinions of Sasha, just as she used to repeat her husbands' opinions.)

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Have students form small discussion groups to answer the following questions: Why does Olenka break into a cold sweat when there is a knock on the door? (She is afraid she will lose Sasha.) Is it a happy ending when the vet appears at the door? (No. Olenka is temporarily happy, but her happiness is still dependent on others.) What prediction can you make for Olenka's future? (She will lose Sasha eventually and she will go into despair again.) Is it healthy to depend on others for your happiness? Explain. (No, other people may not always be around.)

Focus

Read the famous line by Tennyson in its modernized form: "It's better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." Ask students whether they agree with the statement.

Teach

Literary Element

Theme Ask: What the meaning of "Richness" is? (Life is complex; we experience deep feelings of happiness and deep feelings of sadness, sometimes at the same time.)

APPROACHING Ask: What lines are repeated in the poem? ("I have a faithful joy and a joy that is lost.") Explain that these lines stand for the theme: happiness and sadness are both part of life.

Quickwrite

Mistral links the contrasting "richness" of joy and sorrow through contrasting similes—the "faithful joy" is like a rose and the "joy that is lost" is like a thorn.

Tête De Jeune Fille, 1916. Amedeo Modigliani. Oil on canvas. Private collection.

Richness

Gabriela Mistral

Translated by Doris Dana

I have a faithful joy
and a joy that is lost.
One is like a rose,
the other, a thorn.
The one that was stolen
I have not lost.
I have a faithful joy
and a joy that is lost.
I am as rich with purple
as with sorrow.
Ay! How loved is the rose,
how loving the thorn!
Paired as twin fruit,
I have a faithful joy
and a joy that is lost.

Build Background

Gabriela Mistral (gä brē ā′ lä mēs träl′) became the first Latin American writer to receive the Nobel Prize in Literature. Many of her poems explore themes of suffering and compassion, and the Bible was one of her most important influences.

Quickwrite

Mistral describes two sides of experience in this poem—joy and sorrow. She suggests the "richness" of life includes both of these feelings. Describe how the poem links joy and sorrow, exploring how the imagery adds to the theme. Cite evidence from the poem in your response.

Listening and Speaking Practice

SMALL GROUP

Oral Interpretation To help students understand the poem, have two students read the poem aloud, alternating lines as follows: the first to read lines 1, 3, 5–7, 9, 11, and 13–14; the other to read lines 2, 4, 8, 10, 12, and 15. With two voices reading different lines in the poem, students may better see and understand the poem's rich and unique contrasts.

Students may have trouble understanding how a thorn can represent joy and love. Split them into groups and have them discuss how thorns or difficult, sharp things in life can also represent joy and love. Have students share their answers with the class. (Thorns keep roses safe, just as parents sometimes do things that seem harsh in order to protect their children.)

Wrap-Up: Comparing Literature

Across Time and Place

- The Story of an Hour by Kate Chopin
- The Darling by Anton Chekhov
- Richness by Gabriela Mistral

A Friendly Call, 1895. William Merritt Chase. Oil on canvas, 76.5 x 122.5 cm. National Gallery of Art, Washington, DC.

COMPARE THE Big Idea Realism

Speaking and Listening In creating verisimilitude, or the illusion of reality in a literary work, Realist writers tend to focus more on the motivations of characters than on advancing a plot. These writers strive to portray the confusion and contradiction of their characters. With a small group, discuss how Mrs. Mallard in "The Story of an Hour," Olenka in "The Darling," and the speaker in "Richness" each respond to their problems.

1. Do you find their circumstances and their responses realistic?
2. What contradictions do you find in their thoughts and behaviors?
3. What misconceptions might other characters have about them?

Choose one person to summarize the group's conclusions for the class.

COMPARE Narratives About Relationships

Writing Activity Realist writers explore the complexity of close relationships, a mixture of good and bad, an amalgam of benefits and difficulties. Write a short-response essay in which you describe the complexity of the relationships involving Mrs. Mallard, Olenka, and the speaker in "Richness." Cite evidence from the selections to support your ideas.

COMPARE Social Context

Partner Activity Social context, or the values and morals of society, plays a role in each of these selections. Chopin and Chekhov both use the actions and dialogue of various characters to reveal social context. However, Mistral renders the feelings of the poem's speaker in isolation from social context. With a partner, discuss the following questions:

1. Compare and contrast the use of social context in the stories by Chopin and Chekhov.
2. How does the lack of social context affect the reader's understanding of Mistral's poem?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Assess

Compare the Big Idea

Speaking and Listening

1. Students should discuss how the circumstances are portrayed in each selection and how they themselves would act.
2. Discussions should cover Mrs. Mallard's initial apprehension at embracing her new freedom, Olenka's shifts in loyalty, and the dual nature of the comments in "Richness."
3. Josephine has no idea of Mrs. Mallard's joy; Sasha doesn't understand his importance to Olenka; an observer of the speaker in "Richness" might not understand the comfort she finds in loss.

Compare Narratives About Relationships

Writing Activity

Students should note Mrs. Mallard's anguish and new sense of freedom; the sustenance and then the emptiness Olenka feels; and the joy and the sorrow that the speaker in "Richness" feels.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 175–176.

Compare Social Context

Partner Activity

1. Students should address the conventions governing marriage and women's behavior in Victorian culture. Students may say that social context helps increase the serious realism in "The Story of an Hour" and the humorous realism in "The Darling."
2. Students may say that the lack of social context in "Richness" makes the speaker's circumstances less clear. This confusion may either frustrate the reader or allow the reader to make a more personal connection to the poem.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Literature Launchers:
Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Selection Launcher

Selection Focus Transparency 36

Daily Language Practice Transparency 51

Or ask: Do you sometimes feel you have to "wear" more than one face? Are you one person at home, another at school, and yet another when out with friends? Have students consider their different "masks" as they read "We Wear the Mask."

Interactive Read and Write

Other options for teaching this selection can be found in

- Interactive Read and Write for EL Students, pp. 171–178
- Interactive Read and Write for Approaching-Level Students, pp. 171–178
- Interactive Read and Write for On-Level Students, pp. 171–178

Before You Read

Douglass and We Wear the Mask

Meet Paul Laurence Dunbar
(1872–1906)

> "I know why the caged bird sings, ah me, . . . When he beats his bars and he would be free. . . ."
>
> —Paul Laurence Dunbar, "Sympathy"

These words aptly describe the complex plight of Paul Laurence Dunbar. To reach an audience for his poetry, he often felt he had to "sing" within the constraints of the taste and prejudice that dominated his times.

A Midwestern Childhood One of the first African American writers to attain national recognition, Dunbar was the son of formerly enslaved people. He grew up hearing their stories of pre-Emancipation days, which would later provide a wealth of material for his work. Dunbar had a close relationship with his mother throughout his life, but his father died when Dunbar was only twelve years old.

Dunbar was the only African American student at his Dayton, Ohio, high school. He excelled at his studies, edited the school paper, wrote plays for the drama club, and became class president. Despite his success in school, he could not afford college and had trouble finding a job in a newspaper or a legal office. He worked instead as an elevator operator and spent time writing between calls for the elevator. With help from the Wright Brothers—who owned a printing business in addition to pioneering aviation—he published the Dayton Tattler, an African American newsletter.

Dunbar the Poet Dunbar took out a loan in 1893 to publish his first volume of poetry, Oak and Ivy, which he sold to elevator passengers and at recitals. After it was published, he joined Frederick Douglass at the Chicago World's Fair, where he gave recitations of his poetry. His second volume, Majors and Minors, came out in 1895 and was followed by Lyrics of a Lonely Life in 1896. He married Alice Ruth Moore, an African American poet, in 1898. When the influential writer and critic William Dean Howells favorably reviewed Majors and Minors, Dunbar found himself famous and in great demand across the United States and in England as a reader.

Much to Dunbar's despair, the poems he wrote in black dialect were his best-received works. He also wrote novels, librettos, short stories, and Standard English poems, but these received little attention from critics and readers. His poetry eventually garnered him a clerkship at the Library of Congress. Toward the end of his life, he told James Weldon Johnson, "I have never really gotten to the things I really wanted to do." Despite this sentiment, he was the first African American who was able to live solely on the profits of his writing, and his home became the first state memorial to an African American.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Paul Laurence Dunbar, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Selection Skills

Douglass/We Wear the Mask

Literary Elements
- Rhyme Scheme (SE pp. 569, 571, 572)
- Sonnet (TE p. 570)

Reading Skills
- Clarify Meaning (SE pp. 569, 570, 572)

Vocabulary Skills
- Denotation and Connotation (SE p. 572)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE pp. 570, 571)
- Compare Poetry (TE p. 570)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a Letter (SE p. 572)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

What are the advantages and disadvantages of wearing a "mask"? In what situations do you wear a mask? Explore these questions in a short journal entry.

Build Background

Dunbar wrote two kinds of poetry. He was known and loved for his sentimental verse, written in dialect, about an idyllic, pastoral, pre-Civil War plantation life. However, this portion of his work has led some to criticize him for failing to confront the issues of racial stereotypes and discrimination. Dunbar also produced less popular poems in Standard English that meditate on love, nature, or death; express pride in African Americans; or lament thwarted efforts to live and create freely. "Douglass" and "We Wear the Mask" are examples of his Standard English poems.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Naturalism

Naturalism held that people often faced challenges beyond their control. As you read, ask yourself, How much control does Dunbar seem to have felt over his own life and challenges?

Literary Element Rhyme Scheme

The pattern formed by end rhymes in a stanza or poem is called a rhyme scheme. If you assign a different letter to each ending sound in "Douglass," you can chart the rhyme scheme like this: abba, abba, cdcdcd. As you read, ask yourself, What is the rhyme scheme of "We Wear the Mask"?

Reading Strategy Clarify Meaning

If you have trouble understanding a passage, carefully reread it to better comprehend its meaning. Be sure to read any footnotes and definitions that accompany the text and look for context clues to define unfamiliar words.

Tip: Paraphrase You can clarify meaning by paraphrasing, or stating a passage in your own words. When paraphrasing a poem, look for natural breaks in thoughts—at the ends of lines or stanzas and at end punctuation. Paraphrase sections, then combine them to form complete thoughts. Here is one paraphrase of lines 11–14 of "Douglass": Today, with so much disagreement and no leaders whom we can trust, we need your clear voice, guiding arm, and inspiring presence.

Learning Objectives

For pages 568–572

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing rhyme scheme.

Reading: Clarifying meaning.

Writing: Writing a letter.

Vocabulary

salient (sāl´ yənt) adj. prominent or conspicuously noticeable; p. 570 Arrogance was a salient aspect of his personality.

tempest (tem´ pist) n. a violent storm; p. 570 The trees shook wildly in the tempest.

dissension (di sen´ shən) n. disagreement or discord; p. 570 There was dissension in the drama club over which play to perform.

guile (gīl) n. deceit or slyness; p. 571 She swayed the jury with her guile.

vile (vīl) adj. repulsive or disgusting; p. 571 The smell of the rotten fish was vile.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In "Douglass," the speaker notes that the struggles of his day are even harsher than those that Frederick Douglass (1817?–1895) faced as an enslaved person. He wishes that Douglass were alive to guide his people. "We Wear the Mask" describes the jolting contrast between the inner and outer lives of African Americans.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 122–127.

Vocabulary

Write a Short Story Have groups of students practice using the vocabulary words by writing a short story. Students should use at least four of the vocabulary words in their story. Have students read their stories to the class and discuss their use of the vocabulary words.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 130.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Explain to students that poets sometimes use archaic English words and contracted forms of words in their poems. Write these words on the board: thou, thee, thy, fall'n, didst, amaze, lieth, o'er, nay. Explain that thou is the form of the word "you" when used as the subject of a sentence. Thee is the form of "you" when used as the object of a sentence. Thy means "your." Fall'n is the contracted form of the word "fallen." Didst is a form of the word "did." Amaze in modern English is used as a verb but it was also used as a noun meaning "amazement" a long time ago. Lieth is a poetic way to say "lies down." O'er is the contracted form of the word "over." Nay means "no." Help students better remember these words by having them translate modern English sentences into archaic English. For example, "You did a great job" would translate to "Thou didst a great job." Give students other sentences to practice with, such as "Your mother asked you to help her after she had fallen" which would translate to "Thy mother asked thee to help her after she had fall'n."

Teach

Literary Element 1

Sonnet Explain that a sonnet is a fourteen-line poem, typically with five stresses in each line: an unstressed syllable followed by a stressed one. The first stanza (eight lines) presents a situation, a question, or an idea. The second stanza (six lines) provides a resolution, an answer, or a comment.

Reading Strategy 2

Clarify Meaning Answer: The speaker says that life is full of more evil than in Douglass's time.

Big Idea 3

Naturalism Answer: The speaker's cry clearly suggests that the speaker does not feel in control of his life.

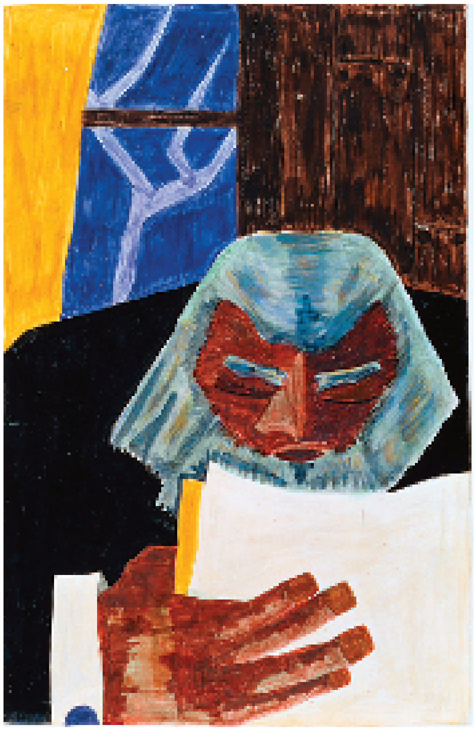
View the Art ★

Jacob Lawrence is famous for his series of paintings based on Frederick Douglass's autobiography.

Ask: How is Lawrence's view of Douglass similar to Dunbar's view? (Both see Douglass as a large, dominant figure.)

Douglass

Paul Laurence Dunbar



The Life of Frederick Douglass #30, 1939. Jacob Lawrence. © ARS, NY. Casein tempera on hardboard, 12 x 17⅞ in. Hampton University Museum. ★

Ah, Douglass,[1] we have fall'n on evil days,
Such days as thou, not even thou didst know, 1
When thee, the eyes of that harsh long ago
Saw, salient, at the cross of devious ways,
And all the country heard thee with amaze.
Not ended then, the passionate ebb and flow,[2]
The awful tide that battled to and fro;
We ride amid a tempest of dispraise.

Now, when the waves of swift dissension swarm,
And Honor, the strong pilot, lieth stark,[3]
Oh, for thy voice high-sounding o'er the storm,
For thy strong arm to guide the shivering bark,[4]
The blast-defying power of thy form,
To give us comfort through the lonely dark.

---

[1] Frederick Douglass escaped from slavery and became a great speaker and leader in the abolition movement.

[2] Ebb and flow means "fall and rise."

[3] Stark means "stiffly" or "rigidly."

[4] A bark is a type of boat.

Clarify Meaning What does the speaker tell Douglass in the first two lines? 2

Naturalism From this statement, do you think that the speaker feels like he has control over his circumstances? 3

Vocabulary

salient (sāl´ yənt) adj. prominent or conspicuously noticeable tempest (tem´ pist) n. a violent storm

dissension (di sen´ shən) n. disagreement or discord

Listening and Speaking Practice

Compare Poetry Have students turn to page 359 to read a poem titled "Frederick Douglass" by Robert Hayden. Hayden's poem was published in 1946, more than forty years after "Douglass" by Paul Laurence Dunbar was published (1903). Have students create a Venn diagram with the title "Dunbar" over the left circle and "Hayden" over the right. Have a student reread Dunbar's poem aloud while students create a list of observations in the left circle. Then, as a student volunteer reads Hayden's poem aloud, students should create a list of observations about the poem in the right circle. Discuss with students the similarities and differences in the poems. Students should pay attention to word choice (Dunbar's use of old English), form (both are fourteen lines), and purpose (Dunbar calls on Douglass for inspiration; Hayden honors his memory). Through discussion of the two poems, create a list of similarities to place in the overlapping section of the diagram. Ask: Are the two poems more alike than different? Have students explain their answers using specific examples.

We Wear the Mask

Paul Laurence Dunbar

We wear the mask that grins and lies,
It hides our cheeks and shades our eyes,—
This debt we pay to human guile;
With torn and bleeding hearts we smile,
And mouth with myriad[1] subtleties.[2]

Why should the world be overwise,
In counting all our tears and sighs?
Nay, let them only see us, while
We wear the mask.

We smile, but, O great Christ, our cries
To thee from tortured souls arise.
We sing, but oh the clay is vile
Beneath our feet, and long the mile;
But let the world dream otherwise,
We wear the mask!

---

[1] Myriad means "countless" or "innumerable."

[2] Subtleties are things so slight that they are barely perceptible.

4 Rhyme Scheme What is the rhyme scheme of this poem? What is the effect of the word mask?

Vocabulary

guile (gīl) n. deceit or slyness vile (vīl) adj. repulsive or disgusting

Back Home from Up the Country. Romare Bearden. Romare Bearden Foundation. Licensed by VAGA, New York. ★

Teach

Literary Element 4

Rhyme Scheme Answer: aabba aabc aabbac. The sound of the word mask breaks the rhyme pattern but then is repeated at the end of the poem.

View the Art ★

Romare Bearden (1911–1988), an African American artist who focused on cultural and historical themes, is best known for his collages, such as the one on this page. Say: Explain why this collage works well as an illustration for this particular poem. (Several of the figures' faces are constructed in a way that makes them look like masks.)

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 132.

Progress Check

Can students analyze rhyme scheme?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 128.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

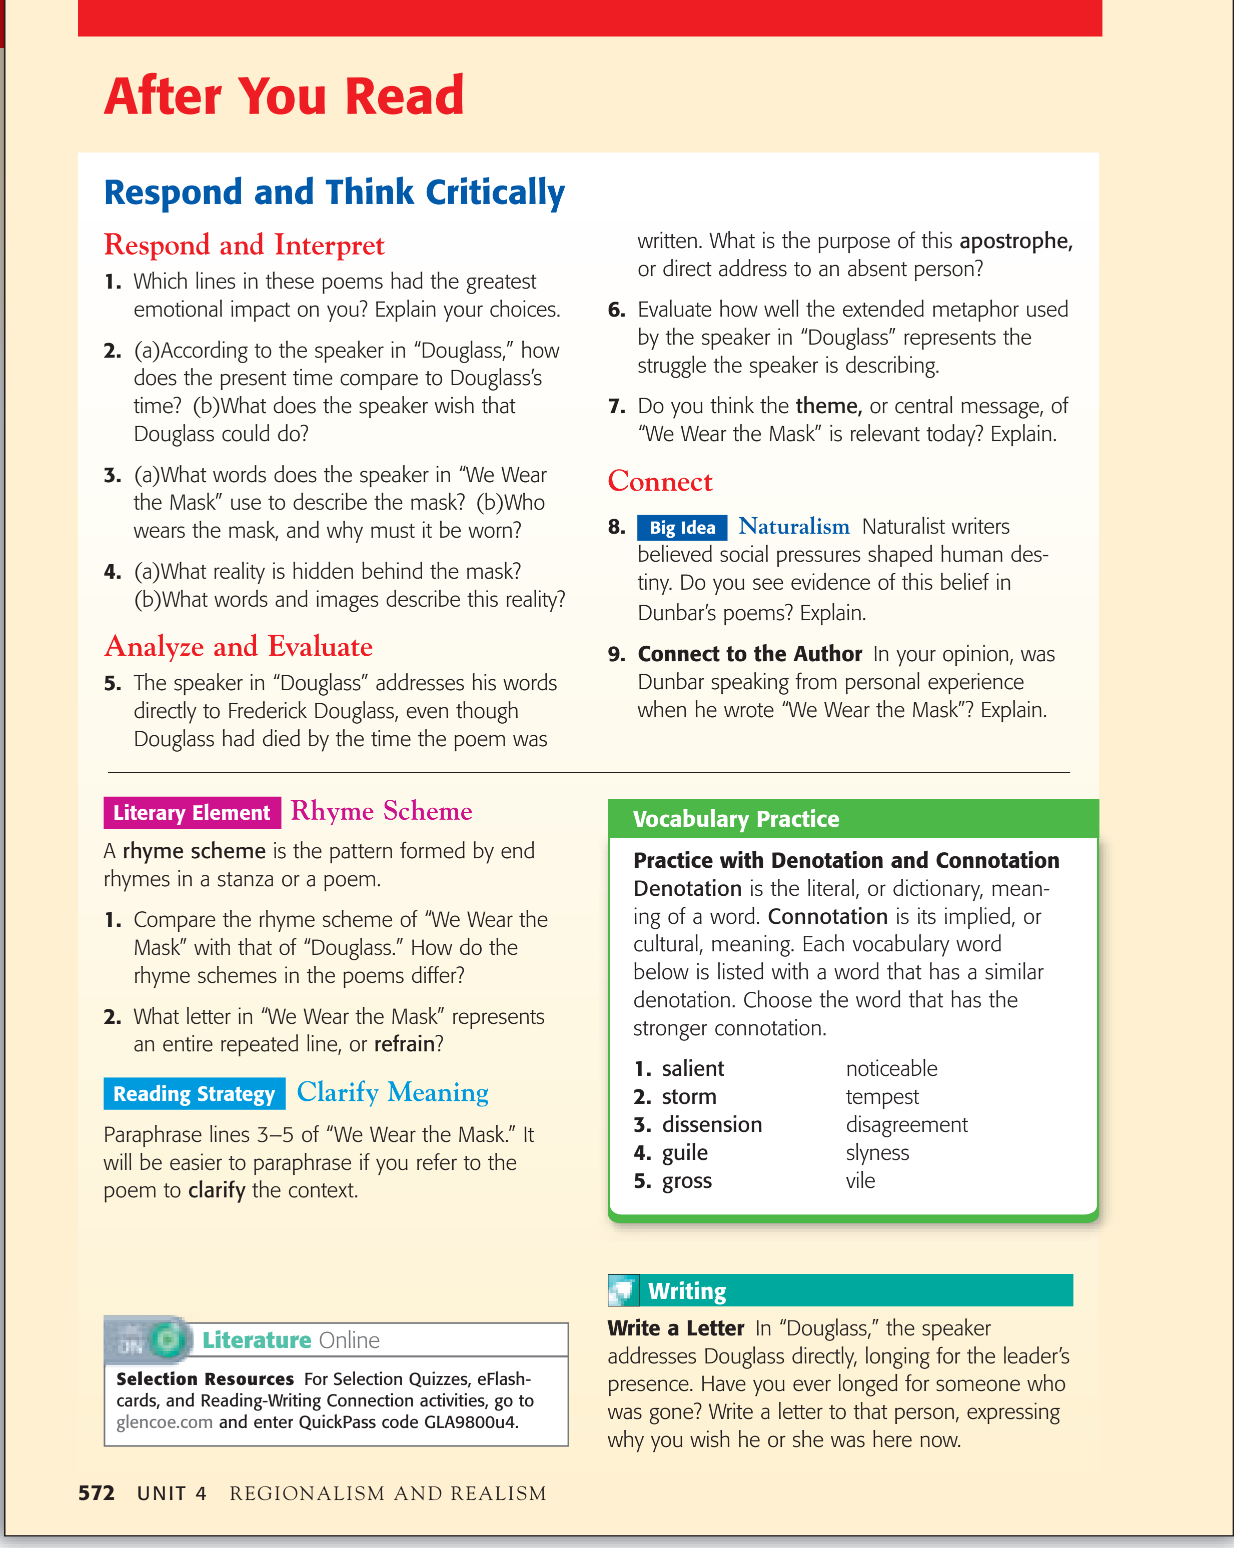
Emerging To create rhyme and maintain rhythm, poets sometimes use inverted sentences that do not follow the usual subject-verb-object word order. To improve reading fluency, have students restate line 3 of "We Wear the Mask" in standard word order. (We pay this debt to human guile.)

Established Explain that personification is figurative language that gives human characteristics to an inanimate object. Ask: How does Dunbar use personification in this poem? (Dunbar makes the mask an animate object by saying that it "grins and lies.") Where in the poem does the poet explain why we wear the mask? What is the reason? (second stanza; so that others cannot see the tears or hear the sighs) Based on this poem, what is Dunbar's view on life? (Life is hard and full of sorrow, but people put on an act and pretend they are fine.)

After You Read

Assess

1. Students may cite "Mask" lines ". . . our cries/To thee from tortured souls arise."
2. (a) The "evil days" the speaker is living through are worse than those days that Douglass lived through. (b) Return and lead his people through these times
3. (a) The mask "grins and lies" and "hides." (b) African Americans wear it to hide their suffering.
4. (a) The mask hides a grim reality. (b) "Tears and sighs"; "torn and bleeding hearts"
5. To awaken in readers the memory of this strong leader
6. A tempest is a powerful and violent force. The speaker sees opposition to African Americans as strong and violent; therefore, the metaphor is appropriate.
7. The message remains relevant because people today still hide their suffering.
8. Douglass desired to challenge injustice; the speaker in "Douglass" sees the need for another leader to do this. In "We Wear the Mask," people "grin" and "lie" in order to conform.
9. Students may say that writing the poem contradicts what one who wears a mask would do.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which lines in these poems had the greatest emotional impact on you? Explain your choices.
2. (a)According to the speaker in "Douglass," how does the present time compare to Douglass's time? (b)What does the speaker wish that Douglass could do?
3. (a)What words does the speaker in "We Wear the Mask" use to describe the mask? (b)Who wears the mask, and why must it be worn?
4. (a)What reality is hidden behind the mask? (b)What words and images describe this reality?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. The speaker in "Douglass" addresses his words directly to Frederick Douglass, even though Douglass had died by the time the poem was written. What is the purpose of this apostrophe, or direct address to an absent person?
6. Evaluate how well the extended metaphor used by the speaker in "Douglass" represents the struggle the speaker is describing.
7. Do you think the theme, or central message, of "We Wear the Mask" is relevant today? Explain.

Connect

8. Big Idea Naturalism Naturalist writers believed social pressures shaped human destiny. Do you see evidence of this belief in Dunbar's poems? Explain.
9. Connect to the Author In your opinion, was Dunbar speaking from personal experience when he wrote "We Wear the Mask"? Explain.

Literary Element Rhyme Scheme

A rhyme scheme is the pattern formed by end rhymes in a stanza or a poem.

1. Compare the rhyme scheme of "We Wear the Mask" with that of "Douglass." How do the rhyme schemes in the poems differ?
2. What letter in "We Wear the Mask" represents an entire repeated line, or refrain?

Reading Strategy Clarify Meaning

Paraphrase lines 3–5 of "We Wear the Mask." It will be easier to paraphrase if you refer to the poem to clarify the meaning.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Denotation and Connotation
Denotation is the literal, or dictionary, meaning of a word. Connotation is its implied, or cultural, meaning. Each vocabulary word below is listed with a word that has a similar denotation. Choose the word that has the stronger connotation.

1. salient	noticeable
2. storm	tempest
3. dissension	disagreement
4. guile	slyness
5. gross	vile

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Writing

Write a Letter In "Douglass," the speaker addresses Douglass directly, longing for the leader's presence. Have you ever longed for someone who was gone? Write a letter to that person, expressing why you wish he or she was here now.

Reading Strategy

To lie about our pain, we must smile, though our hearts are torn and bleeding, and we must speak with care.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 177–178.

Literary Element

1. In "Douglass," end rhymes alternate; in "We Wear the Mask," end rhymes are paired, with variations in the last lines of the stanzas.
2. The letter c

Vocabulary

1. salient 2. tempest 3. dissension 4. guile 5. vile

Writing

Students' letters should be addressed to a person of significance in their lives.

Before You Read

Richard Cory and Miniver Cheevy

Meet Edwin Arlington Robinson (1869–1935)

Describing his childhood in Gardiner, Maine, as stark and unhappy, Edwin Arlington Robinson once wrote to a friend that by the time he was six years old he wondered why he had been born. He began writing at an early age because he felt "doomed, or elected, or sentenced for life, to the writing of poetry." As a high school student, he practiced intricate verse forms under the guidance of a local poet. He continued to write during the two years he attended Harvard University until family financial problems forced him to leave and return to a troubled home. Robinson's father died in 1892, and his mother died of diphtheria in 1896. One of Robinson's brothers became a drug addict, and the other became an alcoholic; both died early.

> "I used to read about clearness, force, and elegance in the rhetoric books, but I'm afraid I go in chiefly for force. . ."
>
> —Edwin Arlington Robinson

Hope and Despair Robinson's characters are often people who feel defeated or frustrated by life and who lack a sense of direction. Most of his poems are written in an ironic tone, with philosophical themes, and tragic ending. However, Robinson was not a true pessimist. He believed that life has meaning despite its hardships and that there is hope beyond "the black and awful chaos of the night." Most of Robinson's early poems are dramatic lyrics, and he became known for his poetic structure based on natural diction and skillful rhyming patterns within stanzas. His later works include several long narrative poems in blank verse, which were often expanded versions of the psychological portraits he wrote during his earlier period. Robinson was not an experimental poet, yet his poems do break with the traditions of nineteenth-century romantic verse in their use of conversational language and irregular lines.

Struggle for Recognition Robinson's first books of poems, The Torrent and the Night Before and The Children of the Night, were published in 1896 and 1897 at his friends' expense. He moved to New York City in 1897 when he was twenty-eight and poverty-stricken. He held a variety of jobs there but made little money and was unable to publish more poetry. He was rescued from his desperate state by President Theodore Roosevelt, who had read and admired his work. Roosevelt arranged a position for Robinson at the U.S. Customs House in New York, an easy job that enabled him to write without worrying about money. Robinson dedicated his third collection, The Town Down by the River, to the president. He left his position at the Customs House in 1909 to devote himself entirely to writing. Robinson was generally ignored by both critics and the public until relatively late in his career. His first critical acclaim came with The Man Against the Sky (1916). His later works include a trilogy based on Arthurian legend, Merlin, Lancelot, and Tristram, which became a big critical and popular success. Eventually, Robinson won three Pulitzer Prizes and became one of America's favorite poets.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Edwin Arlington Robinson, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 37

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 52

Or show students several photographs of rich, famous, and successful celebrities. Have students consider whether these celebrities truly "have it all."

Ask: What is the difference between how people are perceived and the reality of their lives? Brainstorm with students the reasons people might hide the difficult parts of their lives.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Selection Skills

Richard Cory/Miniver Cheevy

Literary Elements
- Irony (SE pp. 574, 576, 577; TE p. 574)

Reading Skills
- Make Inferences About Characters (SE pp. 574, 575, 577; TE p. 576)

Vocabulary Skills
- Denotation and Connotation (SE p. 577)
- Word Origins (TE p. 574)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a Poem (SE p. 577)
- Poetry (TE p. 576)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 575)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In the first poem, Richard Cory, rich and kingly, is much admired by the working class. One night, Cory goes home and shoots himself. In the second poem, Miniver Cheevy, an idle, unhappy man, dreams of ancient and more glorious times.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 134–139.

Vocabulary

Word Origins Ask students to look up the words imperially, assail, and incessantly in the dictionary and find out the origins of these words. *(*Imperially is from the Latin word imperium meaning "command, empire." Assail is from the Latin prefix ad- plus the verb salire meaning "to leap." Incessantly is from the Latin prefix in- plus the word cessant- meaning "to delay.") Have students practice using these new vocabulary words in sentences.

APPROACHING Because in AAVE there is often no distinction between /i/ and /e/ before /m/ and /n/, some students may pronounce the word imperially as emperially. Model the pronunciation for students. Then have students repeat the word aloud and use the word in a sentence.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

How much control do you think people have over their lives and their feelings? How much is outside of our control? Discuss these questions in a small group.

Build Background

More than sixty of Robinson's earliest and best-known poems are set in Tilbury Town, a fictional setting modeled on the poet's hometown, Gardiner, Maine. Robinson is daringly realistic in his portrayal of the town and its inhabitants.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Naturalism

Robinson's poetry often focuses on characters who seem to have little control over their lives or the scientific, social, and environmental forces that affect them. As you read, ask, How do Richard Cory and Miniver Cheevy react to these forces?

Literary Element Irony

Irony is a discrepancy between appearance and reality. In literature it is often accompanied by grim humor. As you read, ask, How is appearance different from reality in these poems?

Reading Strategy Make Inferences About Characters

You make inferences when you use reason and your experience to understand meaning that is implied but not stated directly. As you read Robinson's portraits of Richard Cory and Miniver Cheevy, look for the clues that the poet offers about each man's public and private "faces"—how they appear to the world around them and how they appear to themselves.

Tip: Take Notes Use a chart to record the inferences you draw from the details presented.

Detail	Inference
p. 575 "He was a gentleman from sole to crown"	Richard Cory takes care of his appearance and dresses appropriately.

Learning Objectives

For pages 573–577

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing irony.

Reading: Making inferences about characters.

Writing: Writing a poem.

Vocabulary

imperially (im pēr′ ē əl ē) adv. majestically; magnificently; p. 575 The queen walked imperially into the palace.

assail (ə sāl′) v. to attack violently; p. 576 The ship was assailed by the heavy storm.

fragrant (frā′ grənt) adj. having a strong, pleasant smell; p. 576 The fragrant roses made the apartment look and smell lovely.

incessantly (in ses′ ənt lē) adv. continually; happening over and over without interruption; p. 576 Alison's brother incessantly asked for a cookie.

scorn (skôrn) v. to treat with open contempt; reject something as worthless; p. 576 The angry citizens scorned the mayor's proposal.

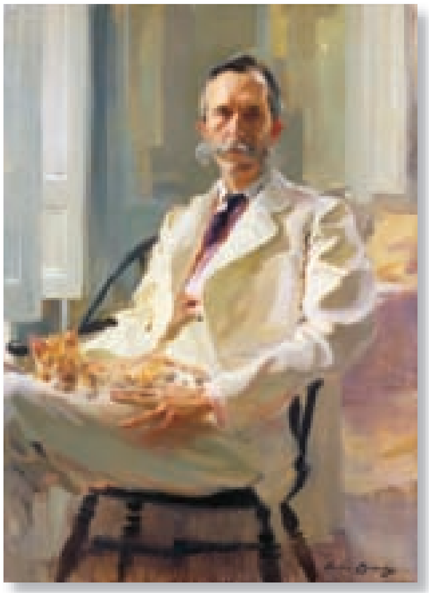
Reading Practice

Situational Irony Review with students that situational irony occurs when something happens that is the opposite of what the readers expect. A classic example of situational irony is O. Henry's story "The Gift of the Magi." In the story, a couple is too poor to buy each other Christmas gifts. The wife cuts and sells her beautiful hair to buy her husband a watch chain. He sells his gold watch to buy her combs for her hair. Ask: How is this situation ironic? (The husband no longer has a watch to use with the watch chain and the wife no longer has the long hair to wear the combs.)

Richard Cory

Edwin Arlington Robinson



Man with the Cat (Henry Sturgis Drinker), 1898. Cecilia Beaux. Oil on canvas, 48 x 34⅝ in. Bequest of Henry Ward Ranger through the National Academy of Design. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC. ★

Whenever Richard Cory went down town,
We people on the pavement looked at him: 1
He was a gentleman from sole to crown,
Clean favored,[1] and imperially slim.

And he was always quietly arrayed,[2]
And he was always human when he talked;
But still he fluttered pulses when he said,
"Good-morning," and he glittered when he walked.

And he was rich—yes, richer than a king—
And admirably schooled in every grace:
In fine,[3] we thought that he was everything
To make us wish that we were in his place.

So on we worked, and waited for the light,
And went without the meat, and cursed the bread;
And Richard Cory, one calm summer night,
Went home and put a bullet through his head.

---

[1] Clean favored means "having a tidy appearance."

[2] Arrayed means "dressed."

[3] In fine means "in short."

Make Inferences About Characters What can you infer about Richard Cory's relationship with the people based on the speaker's description? 2

Vocabulary

imperially (im pēr´ ē əl ē) adv. majestically; magnificently

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism Naturalist writers did not shy away from showing the dark sides of the human condition. "Richard Cory" addresses depression. As they read, have students consider what they know about the effects of depression.

Reading Strategy 2

Make Inferences About Characters Answer: Cory seems down-to-earth but is still capable of intimidating the townsfolk, who consider him "above" them.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 153.

View the Art ★

Cecilia Beaux (1863–1942) was a prominent portrait artist of social figures and political leaders. The subject of this portrait was the artist's brother-in-law.

Ask: What details show an outward connection between Mr. Drinker and Richard Cory? (Drinker looks like a rich gentleman; he wears a white suit, suggesting that he does not do manual labor; his apparent gentleness with pets calls to mind Cory's "human" behavior to others.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Read the poem one paragraph at a time with students. After each of the first three stanzas, ask students to summarize what they have learned about Richard Cory. (Cory is a tidy, thin gentleman; Cory is admired; Cory is rich and well educated.) After the final paragraph, ask students whether they learned anything new. (Cory killed himself.) Ask: Why does Robinson wait to tell you this in the last line? (Robinson wants to surprise the reader. The ending is dramatic.) Help students see that they have to get to line 16 before they can fully appreciate the first fifteen lines of the poem. Remind students that effective readers generally reread a poem several times after making their way through it for the first time.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Make Inferences About Characters Have students paraphrase lines 13–16 to better understand the meaning of those lines. (Miniver misses the days of famous successful people. Romantic and artistic feelings, he claims, are no more.) Ask: Based on the paraphrase, what can you infer about Cheevy? (He seems to see the world in black and white: the past was great; the present is not.)

Literary Element 2

Irony Answer: The character thinks of armor as graceful when, in reality, it is uncomfortable and makes smooth movement impossible.

Writer's Technique ☆

What's in a Name? Writers often give hints about a character's nature by giving that character a particular name. Miniver is the name of a white fur trim on robes worn by medieval nobles.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 144.

Miniver Cheevy ☆

Edwin Arlington Robinson

Miniver Cheevy, child of scorn,
Grew lean while he assailed the seasons;
He wept that he was ever born,
And he had reasons.

Miniver loved the days of old
When swords were bright and steeds were prancing;
The vision of a warrior bold
Would set him dancing.

Miniver sighed for what was not,
And dreamed, and rested from his labors;
He dreamed of Thebes[1] and Camelot,[2]
And Priam's[3] neighbors.

Miniver mourned the ripe renown
That made so many a name so fragrant;
He mourned Romance, now on the town,[4]
And Art, a vagrant.

1

Miniver loved the Medici,[5]
Albeit he had never seen one;
He would have sinned incessantly
Could he have been one.

Miniver cursed the commonplace
And eyed a khaki suit with loathing;
He missed the mediæval grace
Of iron clothing.

Miniver scorned the gold he sought,
But sore annoyed was he without it;
Miniver thought, and thought, and thought,
And thought about it.

Miniver Cheevy, born too late,
Scratched his head and kept on thinking;
Miniver coughed, and called it fate,
And kept on drinking.

Vocabulary

assail (ə sāl´) v. to attack violently fragrant (frā´ grənt) adj. having a strong, pleasant smell incessantly (in ses´ ənt lē´) adv. continually; happening over and over without interruption scorn (skôrn) v. to treat with open contempt; reject something as worthless

---

[1] Thebes (thēbz) was a city-state in ancient Greece.

[2] Camelot is the legendary site of King Arthur's court.

[3] In Homer's Iliad, Priam was the king of Troy.

[4] On the town means "on welfare."

[5] Medici (med' i chē) refers to a noble, rich, and powerful family in Florence, Italy (1300–1500).

Irony What is the verbal irony in these lines? 2

Writing Practice

SMALL GROUP

Poetry Have students analyze the rhythm of the poem:

ˇ / ˇ / ˇ / ˇ /
Miniver loved the days of old
ˇ / ˇ / ˇ / ˇ
When swords were bright and steeds were / ˇ prancing;

Then have them analyze rhyme (abab) and imagery. (Flashing swords and prancing horses convey a romantic attitude toward the past.) After students analyze the poem, have them work in groups to write a poem in the style of Robinson's work. Remind students to create their own unhappy characters and suitable images to describe these characters before they start writing their poems.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What was your reaction to the last line in each poem? Give reasons for your answer.
2. (a)Summarize the speaker's description of Richard Cory. (b)In what ways does Cory's life differ from the lives of the "people on the pavement"?
3. (a)What does Richard Cory do "one calm summer night"? (b)What does this action suggest about Cory's quality of life?
4. (a)What does Miniver Cheevy blame for his unhappiness? (b)What do you think is the real reason he is unhappy? Explain.

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)What is ironic about Cory's life and death? (b)Can you sympathize with him? Explain.
6. (a)What is the speaker's tone, or attitude, toward Miniver Cheevy? (b)How does the speaker's tone affect your attitude toward him?

Connect

7. Big Idea Naturalism According to Robinson, why do money and art not always make people happy or help them overcome limitations?
8. Connect to Today Do you think any of these poems' themes is relevant to today? Explain.

Literary Element Irony

Situational irony occurs when the actual outcome of a situation is the opposite of what is expected. Verbal irony occurs when the meaning of a statement is the opposite of what is said.

Partner Activity Discuss this question: How does Robinson use situational and verbal irony to reveal details about the various characters?

Reading Strategy Make Inferences About Characters

Refer to your chart from page 574 to help you answer the following questions.

1. What clues indicate that the townspeople regard Richard Cory as many people regard royalty?
2. What details lead you to understand that Miniver Cheevy is an unhappy person who is unable or unwilling to improve his life?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Vocabulary Practice

Denotation and Connotation Denotation is the literal, or dictionary, meaning of a word. Connotation is the implied, or cultural, meaning. For example, determined, stubborn, and unshakeable have similar denotation—"unwilling to change"—but different connotations:

Negative	Neutral	Positive
stubborn	determined	unshakeable

From each pair below, choose the word with a more neutral or positive connotation.

1. imperially	majestically
2. assail	apprehend
3. fragrant	odoriferous
4. incessantly	continually
5. scorn	dislike

Writing

Write a Poem Robinson uses irony to comment on the people and culture of his time. Using his work as an example, write a poem in which you use verbal or situational irony to reveal something about today's society.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students may be surprised by the last line of each poem.
2. (a) He is rich, well-dressed, and educated. (b) He lives luxuriously.
3. (a) He shoots himself. (b) This action suggests that his life was not a happy one.
4. (a) The fact that the present is not like the past (b) Students should provide support for their opinions.
5. (a) His wealth cannot relieve the unhappiness that leads him to suicide. (b) Some students may sympathize with Cory's depression; others may feel that Cory should have appreciated all that he had.
6. (a) Sarcastic and critical (b) It causes readers to have negative feelings toward Cheevy.
7. Wealth and art do not give people control over their personal anxieties or disappointments.
8. Students' connections will vary.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 179–180.

Reading Strategy

1. "[A] gentleman from sole to crown," "imperially slim," and "richer than a king"
2. Cheevy regrets being born; he wishes he could wear armor; he drinks instead of living life.

Progress Check

Can students analyze irony?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 152.

Literary Element

Situational irony occurs in line 16 of "Richard Cory." Envying Cory is ironic: the townspeople's lives were more satisfying than his. Verbal irony in "Miniver Cheevy" includes the statement that "he had reasons" to regret being born.

Vocabulary

1. majestically
2. apprehend
3. fragrant
4. continually
5. disliked

Writing

Students' poems should be about modern society and contain irony.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 38

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 53

Or have students read the lines that are printed in large type on this page.

Ask: What do these lines suggest about the quality of Crane's work? Given these lines, how would you interpret the statement that Crane "lived quickly and wrote fast"?

Before You Read

The Open Boat

Meet Stephen Crane
(1871–1900)

By the time he reached college, Stephen Crane was better known for his baseball-playing skills than for his scholarly achievements. Within a decade, however, Crane's rebelliousness toward his schooling, his upbringing, and society at large would help shape a short but prolific literary career. In his work, Crane embraced a pessimistic realism that undermined earlier, romanticized visions of human experiences. In fiction, as in journalism, Crane portrayed life as it was, not as one wished it were.

> "Stephen Crane was a craftsman. The stones he put in the wall are still there."
>
> —Sherwood Anderson

Bowery Life The fourteenth child of a Methodist minister and his devout wife, Crane chafed against the constraints of structured family life. University life left him with much the same feeling, and he attended classes sporadically before leaving college entirely to work as a newspaper writer. As a freelance reporter, Crane lived in the Bowery district of Manhattan, reporting on the poverty of the district's slums through firsthand experience. His observations of Bowery life eventually became the basis for his controversial first novel, Maggie: A Girl of the Streets (1893). Crane's sympathetic but starkly realistic portrayal of New York slum life repelled publishers; he finally published the novel at his own expense under the pseudonym Johnston Smith. Crane's harsh story did not sell well. However, critics Hamlin Garland and William Dean Howells noticed Crane's talent and became his mentors.

Live Quick; Write Fast Crane's second novel, The Red Badge of Courage: An Episode of the American Civil War, appeared first as a syndicated newspaper feature in 1894 and became a bestseller in 1895. At age twenty-four, the struggling journalist had reached international fame with the novel's success. In The Red Badge of Courage, Crane turned his power for acute observation inward, exploring the psychology of a Civil War soldier who grapples with his fear, cowardice, and pride in battle. Ironically, Crane became famous for his realistic portrayal of a soldier during battle even though he had not yet experienced war firsthand and was born six years after the Civil War ended. Nonetheless, many veterans applauded his ability to re-create the internal tension experienced during combat. In late 1895, Crane published a book of poems, The Black Riders and Other Lines, to less favorable reviews.

Fascinated with danger and war, Crane covered the Greco-Turkish War in Greece and the Spanish-American War in Cuba. He then settled in Sussex, England, in 1899, heavily in debt and ill with tuberculosis and recurrent malarial fever. Years of exposure, poor food, and lack of treatment ended Crane's life at twenty-eight.

Crane is known as a man who "lived quickly and wrote fast." Despite a brief literary career, his studies of characters overwhelmed by uncontrollable circumstances still resonate today.

Literature Online

Author Search For more on Stephen Crane, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Selection Skills

The Open Boat

Literary Elements
- Author's Purpose (SE pp. 579, 581, 584, 586, 588, 591, 595, 599; TE p. 586)
- Conflict (SE p. 599)

Reading Skills
- Summarize (SE pp. 579, 582, 584, 586, 588, 591, 592, 594, 596, 599)
- Visualize (TE p. 580)

Vocabulary Skills
- Context Clues (SE pp. 579, 599)
- Adjectives and Adverbs (TE p. 584)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE pp. 587, 593, 598; TE pp. 583, 590, 593)
- Interview (TE p. 592)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Story Review (SE p. 600)
- Evaluate a Story (TE p. 588)
- Research (TE p. 594)
- News Story (TE p. 596)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

How do one's priorities change in times of great danger? List what your own priorities would be in such a situation.

Build Background

As a war correspondent, Crane traveled from Jacksonville, Florida, to Cuba aboard the steamship Commodore in January 1897. The ship sank, and Crane and three others faced the raging Atlantic in a ten-foot dinghy until they managed to reach the Florida coast. Afterward, Crane published a fictionalized account in Scribner's Magazine. The tale became the title story in his book The Open Boat and Other Tales of Adventure.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Naturalism

Like other Naturalists, Crane does not soften his depiction of the struggle his characters face. As you read, ask yourself, How does Crane depict the relationship between his characters in "The Open Boat" and their environment?

Literary Element Author's Purpose

An author's purpose is his or her intent in writing a literary work. For example, an author may want to inform, entertain, persuade, or express an opinion. An author's purpose may be expressed through direct commentary, through the dialogue, actions, and thoughts of the characters, or through tone, word choice, and narrative point of view. As you read, ask yourself, Where in this story does Crane reveal his purpose?

Reading Strategy Summarize

Summarizing means stating the main ideas of a selection or passage in your own words and in a logical sequence. Summarizing will help you understand and think about what you have read.

Tip: Answer the 5 Ws Use a chart to help you answer who, what, where, when, and why questions about the passage you're summarizing.

Quotation:

Who	What	Where	When	Why

Learning Objectives

For pages 578–599

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing author's purpose.

Reading: Summarizing.

Vocabulary

uncanny (un ka´ nē) adj. strangely unsettling; eerie; p. 582 Yoshi found the presence of two dead birds on the path uncanny.

emphatic (em fa´ tik) adj. forceful; p. 582 Jon gave one last emphatic push, and the door opened.

ingenuously (in jen´ ū əs lē) adv. honestly; frankly; p. 585 The child talked ingenuously to the doctor about his broken arm.

impudently (im´ pyə dənt lē) adv. in an offensively bold manner; p. 585 The politician spoke so impudently that few voters trusted him.

coerce (kō urs´) v. to force; p. 595 The boy coerced his sister into giving him all her candy.

Tip: Context Clues Use words and sentences that come before and after an unfamiliar word to infer information about its meaning.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Four men—a cook, an oiler, a captain, and a newspaper correspondent—are stranded in a small rowboat after their ship sinks off the coast of Florida. The crew eventually sights land, but there are no rescue brigades. The crew spends a long night on the open water. In the morning, the men get as close to shore as they can and then swim the rest of the way. Only three men survive the ordeal.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 146–151.

Vocabulary

Reinforce Meaning

Ask: Would you need to coerce your friends to eat ice cream? If someone gives an emphatic "no" for an answer, is she likely to change her mind? Explain. What might happen if a student spoke impudently to the principal? Explain.

APPROACHING Caution students not to confuse ingenuously ("honestly; frankly") with ingeniously ("in a clever and inventive manner"). Students who are users of AAVE may not distinguish between /i/ and /e/ before /m/ or /n/, so pin and pen sound the same. Model the correct pronunciation of emphatic, with a focus on the /e/ at the beginning of the word. Provide other examples, such as tent and tint, imagine, and empathy.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate To help English learners understand and visualize the setting of this story, present the following terms:

- "the hue of slate"
- "froth-top"
- "broken sea"
- "thin little oar"
- "seat upon a bucking bronco"

Allow students to work together in small groups to determine the meanings of these phrases. When students have worked out the meanings, ask what impression they convey about the setting of the story. Then have students predict what the story might be about based on their impressions.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism Say: Before you answer the question, remember that Crane combines realistic details and events with a depiction of nature as indifferent to humanity's needs and hopes.

Answer: The passage presents humans as powerless victims of indifferent natural and social forces.

Literary History ☆

The Sinking of the Commodore

According to newspaper reports of the incident, as Crane and the others in the dinghy left the ship, they joked about whether or not it would sink. As they looked back at the ship, however, they were horrified to discover that seven crewmen were still on board. Ask: How might this experience have influenced Crane's writing?

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 7.6
DRP: 60
Lexile: 980

The Open Boat

Stephen Crane

A tale intended to be after the fact. Being the experience of four men from the sunk steamer Commodore . . . ☆

I

None of them knew the color of the sky. Their eyes glanced level, and were fastened upon the waves that swept toward them. These waves were of the hue of slate, save for the tops, which were of foaming white, and all of the men knew the colors of the sea. The horizon narrowed and widened, and dipped and rose, and at all times its edge was jagged with waves that seemed thrust up in points like rocks.

Many a man ought to have a bathtub larger than the boat which here rode upon the sea. These waves were most wrongfully and barbarously abrupt and tall, and each froth-top was a problem in small boat navigation.

The cook squatted in the bottom and looked with both eyes at the six inches of gunwale[1] which separated him from the ocean. His sleeves were rolled over his fat forearms, and the two flaps of his unbuttoned vest dangled as he bent to bail out the boat. Often he said: "Gawd! That was a narrow clip." As he remarked it he invariably gazed eastward over the broken sea.

The oiler,[2] steering with one of the two oars in the boat, sometimes raised himself suddenly to keep clear of water that swirled in over the stern.[3] It was a thin little oar and it seemed often ready to snap.

The correspondent, pulling at the other oar, watched the waves and wondered why he was there.

The injured captain, lying in the bow, was at this time buried in that profound dejection and indifference which comes, temporarily at least, to even the bravest and most enduring when, willy nilly,[4] the firm fails, the army loses, the ship goes down. The mind of the master of a vessel is rooted deep in the timbers

---

[1] A gunwale is the upper edge of the side of a boat.

[2] The oiler is the person responsible for oiling machinery in the engine room on a ship.

[3] The stern is the rear part of a boat or ship.

[4] Willy nilly means "whether one wishes it or not."

Naturalism How does this passage reflect characteristics of Naturalism? 1

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Visualize Spatial Relationships The story takes place almost entirely within the confines of a crowded rowboat. Visualizing the boat will help students understand the men's predicament. After students read part I of the story, ask four students to demonstrate the amount of room in the dinghy by measuring a space of 10 by 5 feet and seating themselves as the men were seated. Ask students to visualize the boat in relation to the ocean. Ask students to explain how the exercise increased their understanding of the characters' situation. Encourage them to continue visualizing the situation as they read.

of her, though he command for a day or a decade, and this captain had on him the stern impression of a scene in the grays of dawn of seven turned faces, and later a stump of a topmast with a white ball on it that slashed to and fro at the waves, went low and lower, and down. Thereafter there was something strange in his voice. Although steady, it was deep with mourning, and of a quality beyond oration[5] or tears.

"Keep'er a little more south, Billie," said he.

"'A little more south,' sir," said the oiler in the stern.

2 A seat in this boat was not unlike a seat upon a bucking bronco, and, by the same token, a bronco is not much smaller. The craft pranced and reared, and plunged like an animal. As each wave came, and she rose for it, she seemed like a horse making at a fence outrageously high. The manner of her scramble over these walls of water is a mystic thing, and, moreover, at the top of them were ordinarily these problems in white water, the foam racing down from the summit of each wave, requiring a new leap, and a leap from the air. Then, after scornfully bumping a crest, she would slide, and race, and splash down a long incline and arrive bobbing and nodding in front of the next menace.

A singular disadvantage of the sea lies in the fact that after successfully surmounting one wave you discover that there is another behind it just as important and just as nervously anxious to do something effective in the way of swamping boats. In a ten-foot dinghy one can get an idea of the resources of the sea in the line of waves that is not probable to the average experience, which is never at sea in a dinghy. As each slaty[6] wall of water approached, it shut all else from the view of the men in the boat, and it was not difficult to imagine that this particular wave was the final outburst of the ocean, the last effort of the grim water. There was a terrible grace in the move of the waves, and they came in silence, save for the snarling of the crests.

In the wan[7] light, the faces of the men must have been gray. Their eyes must have glinted in strange ways as they gazed steadily astern. ☆ Viewed from a balcony, the whole thing would doubtlessly have been weirdly picturesque. But the men in the boat had no time to see it, and if they had had leisure there were other things to occupy their minds. The sun swung steadily up the sky, and they knew it was broad day because the color of the sea changed from slate to emerald green, streaked with amber lights, and the foam was like tumbling snow. The process of the breaking day was unknown to them. They were aware only of this effect upon the color of the waves that rolled toward them.

In disjointed sentences the cook and the correspondent argued as to the difference between a lifesaving station and a house of refuge. The cook had said: "There's a house of refuge just north of the Mosquito Inlet Light, and as soon as they see us, they'll come off in their boat and pick us up."

"As soon as who see us?" said the correspondent.

"The crew," said the cook.

"Houses of refuge don't have crews," said the correspondent. "As I understand them, they are only places where clothes and grub are stored for the benefit of shipwrecked people. They don't carry crews."

"Oh, yes, they do," said the cook.

"No, they don't," said the correspondent.

"Well, we're not there yet, anyhow," said the oiler, in the stern.

"Well," said the cook, "perhaps it's not a house of refuge that I'm thinking of as being near Mosquito Inlet Light. Perhaps it's a lifesaving station."

"We're not there yet," said the oiler, in the stern.

---

[5] An oration is a formal speech.

[6] Slaty means "having the bluish gray color of slate."

[7] Wan means "pale."

3 Author's Purpose Why does Crane have the narrator address the reader in this paragraph?

Teach

Literary Element 2

Figurative Language Say: Notice how Crane compares the boat to a bucking bronco.

Ask: What figure of speech does Crane use here and how does it reveal Crane's use of Naturalism? (It is a simile that makes the boat seem like an untamed animal and that gives a sense of how the men are not in control.)

Literary Element 3

Author's Purpose Answer: Crane wishes to inform the reader about the sea's devastating power.

Ask: What figure of speech does Crane use at the end of this paragraph? (He uses a metaphor to compare the waves to a graceful, snarling animal.)

Writer's Technique ☆

Narrator's Perspective In this passage, the narrator is trying to imagine his situation from the perspective of an outsider. For the most part, though, the narrator focuses only on details the men themselves would notice, such as the color of the waves.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To give students practice in summarizing, ask them to list the most important information from part I. Remind students that a summary includes all important information, but not all details. Students' lists should include the characters, the situation they are in, the reason they are in the situation, the dangers of their predicament, and their goal. Help students who include other information to see that additional details are not critical to a basic plot summary.

Advanced Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Analysis Have advanced learners analyze Crane's use of description to set the mood. Emphasize that descriptive details may appeal to all senses. Suggest that students first identify relevant details, and then explain how these details create mood.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Summarize Answer: The men are stubborn and try to think optimistically, but they are also aware of the reality of their situation. They seem to feel hope and despair equally, so instead of expressing either they do not say anything.

Ask: What do you learn about the men based on your summary? (Students may say that the men think alike and are working as a unit; all the men are realistic and responsible.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 153.

II

As the boat bounced from the top of each wave, the wind tore through the hair of the hatless men, and as the craft plopped her stern down again the spray slashed past them. The crest of each of these waves was a hill, from the top of which the men surveyed, for a moment, a broad tumultuous[8] expanse, shining and wind-riven. It was probably splendid. It was probably glorious, this play of the free sea, wild with lights of emerald and white and amber.

"Bully good thing it's an onshore wind,"[9] said the cook. "If not, where would we be? Wouldn't have a show."

"That's right," said the correspondent.

The busy oiler nodded his assent.

Then the captain, in the bow, chuckled in a way that expressed humor, contempt, tragedy, all in one. "Do you think we've got much of a show, now, boys?" said he.

Whereupon the three were silent, save for a trifle of hemming and hawing. To express any particular optimism at this time they felt to be childish and stupid, but they all doubtless possessed this sense of the situation in their mind. A young man thinks doggedly[10] at such times. On the other hand, the ethics of their condition was decidedly against any open suggestion of hopelessness. So they were silent.

"Oh, well," said the captain, soothing his children, "we'll get ashore all right."

But there was that in his tone which made them think, so the oiler quoth: "Yes! If this wind holds!"

The cook was bailing. "Yes! If we don't catch hell in the surf."

Canton flannel gulls[11] flew near and far. Sometimes they sat down on the sea, near patches of brown seaweed that rolled over the waves with a movement like carpets on a line in a gale. The birds sat comfortably in groups, and they were envied by some in the dinghy, for the wrath of the sea was no more to them than it was to a covey of prairie chickens a thousand miles inland. Often they came very close and stared at the men with black bead-like eyes. At these times they were uncanny and sinister[12] in their unblinking scrutiny, and the men hooted angrily at them, telling them to be gone. One came, and evidently decided to alight on the top of the captain's head. The bird flew parallel to the boat and did not circle, but made short sidelong jumps in the air in chicken-fashion. His black eyes were wistfully fixed upon the captain's head. "Ugly brute," said the oiler to the bird. "You look as if you were made with a jackknife." The cook and the correspondent swore darkly at the creature. The captain naturally wished to knock it away with the end of the heavy painter,[13] but he did not dare do it, because anything resembling an emphatic gesture would have capsized this freighted boat, and so with his open hand, the captain gently and carefully waved the gull away. After it had been discouraged from the pursuit the captain breathed easier on account of his hair, and others breathed easier because the bird struck their minds at this time as being somehow gruesome and ominous.

In the meantime the oiler and the correspondent rowed. And also they rowed.

They sat together in the same seat, and each rowed an oar. Then the oiler took both oars; then the correspondent took both oars; then the oiler; then the correspondent. They rowed

---

[8] Tumultuous means "agitated" or "turbulent."
[9] An onshore wind is one that blows toward the shore.
[10] Doggedly means "in a stubbornly persistent manner."
[11] Canton flannel gulls are gulls whose feathers resemble Canton flannel, a strong cotton fabric that is soft on one side and ribbed on the other.
[12] Sinister means "evil" or "ominous."
[13] A painter is a rope attached to the front of a boat, used for tying up to a dock.

1 Summarize How would you summarize the thoughts of the four men at this point?

Naturalism How is the influence of Naturalism reflected in this passage? 2

Vocabulary

uncanny (un ka´ nē) adj. strangely unsettling; eerie emphatic (em fa´ tik) adj. forceful

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Descriptive Language Explain that good writers use precise words to convey specific ideas or images. Write the following sentence from the story on the board: "After [the bird] had been discouraged from the pursuit the captain breathed easier on account of his hair, and others breathed easier because the bird struck their minds at this time as being somehow gruesome and ominous." Direct students' attention to the words gruesome and ominous. Ask: What mood is created by these words? (eerie, scary, tense) Ask students to identify other descriptive words that contribute to this mood. (Possible responses: hopelessness, uncanny, sinister, wrath of the sea)

Moonlit Shipwreck at Sea, 1901. Thomas Moran. Oil on canvas, 30 x 40¹⁄₄ in. Private collection.

and they rowed. The very ticklish part of the business was when the time came for the reclining one in the stern to take his turn at the oars. By the very last star of truth, it is easier to steal eggs from under a hen than it was to change seats in the dinghy. First the man in the stern slid his hand along the thwart[14] and moved with care, as if he were of Sèvres.[15] Then the man in the rowing seat slid his hand along the other thwart. It was all done with the most extraordinary care. As the two sidled past each other, the whole party kept watchful eyes on the coming wave, and the captain cried: "Look out now! Steady there!"

The brown mats of seaweed that appeared from time to time were like islands, bits of earth. They were traveling, apparently, neither one way nor the other. They were, to all intents, stationary. They informed the men in the boat that it was making progress slowly toward the land.

The captain, rearing cautiously in the bow, after the dinghy soared on a great swell, said that he had seen the lighthouse at Mosquito Inlet. Presently the cook remarked that he had seen it. The correspondent was at the oars, then, and for some reason he too wished to look at the lighthouse, but his back was toward the far shore and the waves were important, and for some time he could not seize an opportunity to turn his head. But at last there came a wave more gentle than the others, and when at the crest of it he swiftly scoured the western horizon.

"See it?" said the captain.

"No," said the correspondent, slowly, "I didn't see anything."

"Look again," said the captain. He pointed. "It's exactly in that direction."

---

[14] A thwart is a seat going across a boat, on which a rower or passenger sits.

[15] Sèvres (sev′ rə) refers to fine porcelain made in Sèvres, France.

Teach

Big Idea 2

Naturalism Answer: The passage indicates the indifference of nature toward the men. The sea is a natural force that could prove fatal to the crew, but the "wrath" the men associate with the sea is not a threat to the birds.

Ask: Is the narrator's depiction of the birds in the paragraph realistic, naturalistic, or both? (The birds are described realistically and naturalistically; while they are indifferent to the men's situation, they also have an aura of cruelty.)

View the Art

Thomas Moran was a member of the Hudson River school. The school was a style specific to a group of nineteenth-century American artists who painted landscapes. Through large, detailed, and highly romanticized depictions, they conveyed the majesty, wildness, and potential power of the new country. The group took its name from the Catskill region of New York State, an area that was still wild in the early 1800s. Thomas Moran was best known for his paintings of the American West.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate In small groups, have English learners read two or three paragraphs aloud and then help one another summarize what is happening. Assign one student to take notes on the main ideas. At the end of each page, students should review the main ideas and predict what they think will happen. The notetaker should keep track of predictions.

Advanced Remind students that figurative language makes imaginative comparisons. Ask them to find two examples of figurative language on this page (Two similes: "First the man in the stern slid his hand along the thwart and moved with care, as if he were of Sèvres" and "The brown mats of seaweed that appeared from time to time were like islands, bits of earth.")

Teach

Literary Element 1

Author's Purpose Answer: The captain's reply gives hope to the other men and creates suspense for the reader. Say: Notice how the correspondent has broken the unspoken rule of the boat of not voicing optimism or fatalism when he asks the captain to comment on their chances of survival.

Reading Strategy 2

Summarize Answer: From the crew's perspective, the boat appears to be making little progress in the vast ocean.

Literary History ☆

Author's Purpose As Crane was writing "The Open Boat," he met with Edward Murphy, captain of the Commodore. Crane read Murphy the first part of the story and said to him, "Listen, Ed, I want to have this right, from your point of view. How does it sound so far?" Murphy is said to have replied, "You've got it, Steve."

At the top of another wave, the correspondent did as he was bid, and this time his eyes chanced on a small still thing on the edge of the swaying horizon. It was precisely like the point of a pin. It took an anxious eye to find a lighthouse so tiny.

"Think we'll make it, Captain?"

"If this wind holds and the boat don't swamp, we can't do much else," said the captain.

The little boat, lifted by each towering sea, and splashed viciously by the crests, made progress that in the absence of seaweed was not apparent to those in her. She seemed just a wee thing wallowing, miraculously, top up, at the mercy of five oceans. Occasionally, a great spread of water, like white flames, swarmed into her.

"Bail her, cook," said the captain, serenely.

"All right, Captain," said the cheerful cook.

III

It would be difficult to describe the subtle brotherhood of men that was here established on the seas. No one said that it was so. No one mentioned it. But it dwelt in the boat, and each man felt it warm him. They were a captain, an oiler, a cook, and a correspondent, and they were friends, friends in a more curiously iron-bound degree than may be common. The hurt captain, lying against the water jar in the bow, spoke always in a low voice and calmly, but he could never command a more ready and swiftly obedient crew than the motley three of the dinghy. It was more than a mere recognition of what was best for the common safety. There was surely in it a quality that was personal and heartfelt. And after this devotion to the commander of the boat there was this comradeship that the correspondent, for instance, who had been taught to be cynical of men, knew even at the time was the best experience of his life. But no one said that it was so. No one mentioned it.

"I wish we had a sail," remarked the captain. "We might try my overcoat on the end of an oar and give you two boys a chance to rest." So the cook and the correspondent held the mast and spread wide the overcoat. The oiler steered, and the little boat made good way with her new rig. Sometimes the oiler had to scull[16] sharply to keep a sea from breaking into the boat, but otherwise sailing was a success. ☆

Meanwhile the lighthouse had been growing slowly larger. It had now almost assumed color, and appeared like a little gray shadow on the sky. The man at the oars could not be prevented from turning his head rather often to try for a glimpse of this little gray shadow.

At last, from the top of each wave the men in the tossing boat could see land. Even as the lighthouse was an upright shadow on the sky, this land seemed but a long black shadow on the sea. It certainly was thinner than paper. "We must be about opposite New Smyrna,"[17] said the cook, who had coasted this shore often in schooners. "Captain, by the way, I believe they abandoned that lifesaving station there about a year ago."

"Did they?" said the captain.

The wind slowly died away. The cook and the correspondent were not now obliged to slave in order to hold high the oar. But the waves continued their old impetuous swooping at the dinghy, and the little craft, no longer under way, struggled woundily over them. The oiler or the correspondent took the oars again.

3 Shipwrecks are apropos[18] of nothing. If men could only train for them and have them occur when the men had reached pink condition, there would be less drowning at sea. Of the

1 Author's Purpose What is the function of the captain's optimistic reply to the correspondent?

2 Summarize What is the main idea expressed in this paragraph?

---

[16] Scull means "to propel a boat forward by moving a single oar from side to side over the stern of a boat."

[17] New Smyrna refers to the town of New Smyrna Beach, on the east coast of Florida.

[18] Apropos means "relevant" or "pertinent."

Vocabulary Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Adjectives and Adverbs Explain that adjectives and adverbs add vivid detail to Crane's descriptions. They help readers imagine the scene. Tell students to draw a two-column chart with the headings Adjectives and Adverbs. Select a paragraph or two from the passage, and ask students to identify all the adjectives and adverbs and write them in the appropriate columns in the chart. Review students' answers as a class.

Discuss the effect of these adjectives and adverbs on the story.

four in the dinghy none had slept any time worth mentioning for two days and two nights previous to embarking in the dinghy, and in the excitement of clambering about the deck of a foundering[19] ship they had also forgotten to eat heartily.

3 For these reasons, and for others, neither the oiler nor the correspondent was fond of rowing at this time. The correspondent wondered ingenuously how in the name of all that was sane could there be people who thought it amusing to row a boat. It was not an amusement; it was a diabolical punishment, and even a genius of mental aberrations could never conclude that it was anything but a horror to the muscles and a crime against the back. He mentioned to the boat in general how the amusement of rowing struck him, and the weary-faced oiler smiled in full sympathy. Previously to the foundering, by the way, the oiler had worked doublewatch in the engineroom of the ship.

"Take her easy, now, boys," said the captain. "Don't spend yourselves. If we have to run a surf you'll need all your strength, because we'll sure have to swim for it. Take your time."

Slowly the land arose from the sea. From a black line it became a line of black and a line of white—trees and sand. Finally, the captain said that he could make out a house on the shore. "That's the house of refuge, sure," said the cook. "They'll see us before long, and come out after us."

The distant lighthouse reared high. "The keeper ought to be able to make us out now, if he's looking through a glass," said the captain. "He'll notify the lifesaving people."

"None of those other boats could have got ashore to give word of the wreck," said the oiler, in a low voice. "Else the lifeboat would be out hunting us."

Slowly and beautifully the land loomed out of the sea. The wind came again. It had veered from the northeast to the southeast. Finally, a new sound struck the ears of the men in the boat. It was the low thunder of the surf on the shore. "We'll never be able to make the lighthouse now," said the captain. "Swing her head a little more north, Billie."

"'A little more north,' sir," said the oiler.

Whereupon the little boat turned her nose once more down the wind, and all but the oarsman watched the shore grow. Under the influence of this expansion doubt and direful apprehension was leaving the minds of the men. The management of the boat was still most absorbing, but it could not prevent a quiet cheerfulness. In an hour, perhaps, they would be ashore.

"Funny they don't see us," said the men.

Their backbones had become thoroughly used to balancing in the boat and they now rode this wild colt of a dinghy like circus men. The correspondent thought that he had been drenched to the skin, but happening to feel in the top pocket of his coat, he found therein eight cigars. Four of them were soaked with seawater; four were perfectly scatheless. After a search, somebody produced three dry matches, and thereupon the four waifs[20] rode impudently in their little boat, and with an assurance of an impending rescue shining in their eyes, puffed

---

[19] Foundering means "sinking."

[20] Waifs are persons having no apparent home.

4 Naturalism From your understanding of Naturalism, why is this passage important to the story?

Vocabulary

ingenuously (in jen′ ū əs lē) adv. honestly; frankly

Vocabulary

impudently (im′ pyə dənt lē) adv. in an offensively bold manner

Teach

Literary Element 3

Foreshadow Point out to students that the narrator goes into great detail about the men's state of exhaustion and the toll that rowing takes on them. Notice that the captain warns, "Take her easy, now, boys." Ask: How might the captain's words foreshadow the outcome of the story? (The captain's warning and the narrator's comments about the men's weakening strength suggest that not all the men survive.)

Big Idea 4

Naturalism Answer: The passage emphasizes the instinctual drives—namely hunger and fatigue—that will motivate the characters' actions.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Remind students to slow their pace and to reread suspenseful parts. After they have read part III, have them make a summary list of the important information. Remind them to include essential information but not all details. You might wish to challenge them to write a one-paragraph summary from their list of details.

Established Students with short attention spans may have difficulty keeping track of developments in a long story such as "The Open Boat." Have these students list three to five important events in each part. Guide them in identifying the most important information to include and have the students write a one-paragraph summary.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Suspense Say: Suspense is the tension that readers feel when they do not know the outcome of a story.

Ask: How has the narrator built up suspense in the story so far? (He has described the power of the waves; he has mentioned the men's weakness; he has suggested that there may not be a rescue crew at the lighthouse.)

Say: Pace is part of building suspense. The narrator gives us a break from the suspense by allowing the men to relax for a moment.

Reading Strategy 2

Summarize Answer: The crew does not realize that there is not a lifesaving station anywhere near them. They curse the missing "lifesavers" as though the lifesavers are on shore but do not see the dinghy.

Big Idea 3

Naturalism Answer: A Naturalist might say that the crew's response is unwarranted. They should understand that their situation is merely the result of factors beyond their control, and they should accept the inevitability of their fate. Say: The crew's response characterizes the forces of nature as inherently unjust. When the crew thinks fate will win, they resort to calling it names. Ask: How do the crew members characterize fate? (They imply that fate is stupid and without purpose by calling it an "old ninny-woman" and an "old hen.") at the big cigars and judged well and ill of all men. Everybody took a drink of water.

IV

1 "Cook," remarked the captain, "there don't seem to be any signs of life about your house of refuge."

"No," replied the cook. "Funny they don't see us!"

A broad stretch of lowly coast lay before the eyes of the men. It was of dunes topped with dark vegetation. The roar of the surf was plain, and sometimes they could see the white lip of a wave as it spun up the beach. A tiny house was blocked out black upon the sky. Southward, the slim lighthouse lifted its little gray length.

Tide, wind, and waves were swinging the dinghy northward. "Funny they don't see us," said the men.

The surf's roar was here dulled, but its tone was, nevertheless, thunderous and mighty. As the boat swam over the great rollers, the men sat listening to this roar. "We'll swamp sure," said everybody.

It is fair to say here that there was not a lifesaving station within twenty miles in either direction, but the men did not know this fact and in consequence they made dark and opprobrious[21] remarks concerning the eyesight of the nation's lifesavers. ☆ Four scowling men sat in the dinghy and surpassed records in the invention of epithets.[22]

"Funny they don't see us."

The light-heartedness of a former time had completely faded. To their sharpened minds it was easy to conjure pictures of all kinds of incompetency and blindness and, indeed, cowardice. There was the shore of the populous land, and it was bitter and bitter to them that from it came no sign.

"Well," said the captain, ultimately, "I suppose we'll have to make a try for ourselves. If we stay out here too long, we'll none of us have strength left to swim after the boat swamps."

And so the oiler, who was at the oars, turned the boat straight for the shore. There was a sudden tightening of muscles. There was some thinking.

"If we don't all get ashore—" said the captain. "If we don't all get ashore, I suppose you fellows know where to send news of my finish?"

They then briefly exchanged some addresses and admonitions.[23] As for the reflections of the men, there was a great deal of rage in them. Perchance they might be formulated thus: "If I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned, why, in the name of the seven mad gods who rule the sea,[24] was I allowed to come thus far and contemplate sand and trees? Was I brought here merely to have my nose dragged away as I was about to nibble the sacred cheese of life? It is preposterous. If this old ninny-woman, Fate,[25] cannot do better than this, she should be deprived of the management of men's fortunes. She is an old hen who knows not her intention. If she has decided to drown me, why did she not do it in the beginning and save me all this trouble. The whole affair is absurd. . . . But, no, she cannot mean to drown me. She dare not drown me. She cannot drown me. Not after all this work." Afterward the man might have had an impulse to shake his fist at the clouds. "Just you drown me, now, and then hear what I call you!"

---

[21] Opprobrious (ə prō′ brē əs) means "derogatory."

[22] Epithets are descriptive, sometimes abusive, words or phrases used with or in place of a name.

[23] Admonitions are warnings or advice.

[24] [seven . . . the sea] This description probably refers to the seven major seas, each at the mercy of a deity.

[25] Fate implies a supernatural power guiding one to an inevitable end. In classical mythology, the three Fates were portrayed as old women.

2 Summarize In your own words, summarize what is happening in this paragraph.

Naturalism What might the response of a Naturalist be to this question? 3

Author's Purpose Why does Crane have the narrator attribute this sentiment to the men in the boat? 4

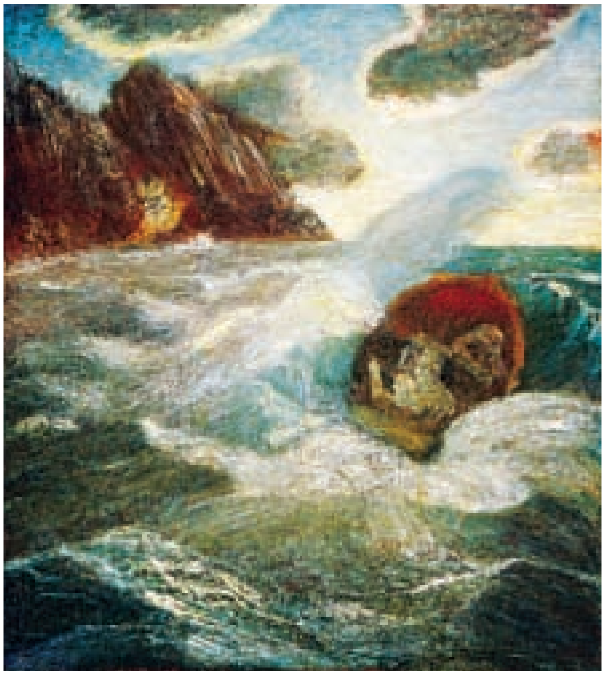
Reading Practice

Understand Author's Purpose In a class discussion, have students review what they have learned about Crane's life as well as what they know about Realism and Naturalism. Then write the following questions on the board:

- Why do you think Crane decided to write a fictional account of his experience on a lifeboat?
- What ideas do you think Crane intended readers to take away from his story?

Have students write their responses to these questions.



Lord Ullin's Daughter, before 1907. Albert Pinkham Ryder. Oil on canvas, 20½ x 18⅜ in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Gift of John Gellatly.

View the Art In an attempt to create visual depth and intensity, Albert Pinkham Ryder applied multiple layers of paint colors—often so thick that the paint failed to dry, cracking over time. How does this painting convey a sense of the power of the sea? ★

The billows that came at this time were more formidable. They seemed always just about to break and roll over the little boat in a turmoil of foam. There was a preparatory and long growl in the speech of them. No mind unused to the sea would have concluded that the dinghy could ascend these sheer heights in time. The shore was still afar. The oiler was a wily[26] surfman. "Boys," he said, swiftly, "she won't live three minutes more and we're too far out to swim. Shall I take her to sea again, Captain?"

"Yes! Go ahead!" said the captain.

This oiler, by a series of quick miracles, and fast and steady oarsmanship, turned the boat in the middle of the surf and took her safely to sea again.

There was a considerable silence as the boat bumped over the furrowed sea to deeper water. Then somebody in gloom spoke. "Well, anyhow, they must have seen us from the shore by now."

The gulls went in slanting flight up the wind toward the gray desolate east. A squall,[27] marked by dingy clouds, and clouds brick-red, like smoke from a burning building, appeared from the southeast.

"What do you think of those lifesaving people? Ain't they peaches?"

"Funny they haven't seen us."

"Maybe they think we're out here for sport? Maybe they think we're fishin'. Maybe they think we're damned fools."

It was a long afternoon. A changed tide tried to force them southward, but wind and wave said northward. Far ahead, where coastline, sea, and sky formed their mighty angle, there were little dots which seemed to indicate a city on the shore.

"St. Augustine?"

The captain shook his head. "Too near Mosquito Inlet."

And the oiler rowed, and then the correspondent rowed. Then the oiler rowed. It was a weary business. The human back can become the seat of more aches and pains than are registered in books for the composite anatomy of a regiment. It is a limited area, but it can become the theater of innumerable muscular conflicts, tangles, wrenches, knots, and other comforts.

"Did you ever like to row, Billie?" asked the correspondent.

"No," said the oiler. "Hang it."

When one exchanged the rowing-seat for a place in the bottom of the boat, he suffered a

---

[26] Wily means "cunning" or "sly."

[27] A squall is a short, sudden, strong windstorm, often accompanied by rain or snow.

Teach

Literary Element 4

Author's Purpose Answer: Some students may say that Crane's purpose is to ridicule the men for attributing supernatural intention to an indifferent universe.

Say: Remember that Naturalists believe that blind forces that are beyond our control shape our lives and choices. These forces are also known as fate or destiny.

View the Art ★

Answer: The boat appears overwhelmed by huge, whitecapped waves. The waves dominate the painting.

Artist Albert Pinkham Ryder painted scenes from myth, literature, and the stage. He worked with thick, broad, boldly colored strokes to convey the power of natural forces.

Language History ☆

Epithet Epithet is a word that may have neutral or negative connotations. The word comes from ancient Greek. Greek grammarians first used the word to mean "adjective." In English, the word first had a similar meaning: "a word that describes." It was not until the early 1700s that it took on its additional meaning of "derogatory expression or insulting description."

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate Students may find the action in part IV difficult to understand because of the dialogue. To guide students' comprehension, ask: What do the men see on the shore? What happens? Why aren't the men rescued? Tell students to work together to answer the questions and to make predictions about what will happen.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Dialogue Say: The narrator does not always specify which of the four men is speaking in this section of the story.

Ask: Why doesn't the narrator tell who is speaking? (He may want to indicate that all of the men are experiencing similar periods of surprise, shock, and anger. He may also wish to emphasize their shared feelings of confusion and exhaustion.)

Reading Strategy 2

Summarize Answer: The oiler and the correspondent are so weary from rowing that they feel relief while resting at the bottom of the boat, despite the cold and wetness. At this point in the trip, the thought that the boat might capsize even seems comforting.

Literary Element 3

Author's Purpose Answer: Crane wishes to show how the men's feelings vacillate between hope and despair.

Ask: What do you think is happening in this scene? Are the people on shore stupid or just playing around? (Students should suggest that people on shore may feel concern for the crew but are unable to communicate this concern across the water. They may be signaling for the crew to row further north.)

bodily depression that caused him to be careless of everything save an obligation to wiggle one finger. There was cold seawater swashing to and fro in the boat, and he lay in it. His head, pillowed on a thwart, was within an inch of the swirl of a wave crest, and sometimes a particularly obstreperous[28] sea came inboard and drenched him once more. But these matters did not annoy him. It is almost certain that if the boat had capsized he would have tumbled comfortably out upon the ocean as if he felt sure that it was a great soft mattress.

“Look! There's a man on the shore!”

“Where?”

“There! See 'im? See 'im?”

“Yes, sure! He's walking along.”

“Now he's stopped. Look! He's facing us!”

“He's waving at us!”

1 “So he is! By thunder!”

“Ah, now, we're all right! Now we're all right! There'll be a boat out here for us in half an hour.”

“He's going on. He's running. He's going up to that house there.”

The remote beach seemed lower than the sea, and it required a searching glance to discern the little black figure. The captain saw a floating stick and they rowed to it. A bath-towel was by some weird chance in the boat, and, tying this on the stick, the captain waved it. The oarsman did not dare turn his head, so he was obliged to ask questions.

“What's he doing now?”

“He's standing still again. He's looking, I think. . . . There he goes again. Toward the house. . . . Now he's stopped again.”

“Is he waving at us?”

“No, not now! he was, though.”

“Look! There comes another man!”

“He's running.”

“Look at him go, would you.”

“Why, he's on a bicycle. Now he's met the other man. They're both waving at us. Look!”

“There comes something up the beach.”

“What the devil is that thing?”

“Why, it looks like a boat.”

“Why, certainly it's a boat.”

“No, it's on wheels.”

“Yes, so it is. Well, that must be the lifeboat. They drag them along shore on a wagon.”

“That's the lifeboat, sure.”

“No, by——, it's—it's an omnibus.”[29]

“I tell you it's a lifeboat.”

“It is not! It's an omnibus. I can see it plain. See? One of those big hotel omnibuses.”

“By thunder, you're right. It's an omnibus, sure as fate. What do you suppose they are doing with an omnibus? Maybe they are going around collecting the lifecrew, hey?”

“That's it, likely. Look! There's a fellow waving a little black flag. He's standing on the steps of the omnibus. There come those other two fellows. Now they're all talking together. Look at the fellow with the flag. Maybe he ain't waving it!”

“That ain't a flag, is it? That's his coat. Why, certainly, that's his coat.”

“So it is. It's his coat. He's taken it off and is waving it around his head. But would you look at him swing it!”

“Oh, say, there isn't any lifesaving station there. That's just a winter resort hotel omnibus that has brought over some of the boarders to see us drown.”

“What's that idiot with the coat mean? What's he signaling, anyhow?”

“It looks as if he were trying to tell us to go north. There must be a lifesaving station up there.”

“No! He thinks we're fishing. Just giving us a merry hand. See? Ah, there, Willie.”

“Well, I wish I could make something out of those signals. What do you suppose he means?”

“He don't mean anything. He's just playing.”

---

[28] Obstreperous (əb strep′ ər əs) means “unruly.”

[29] An omnibus, or bus, would have been pulled by horses during this time period.

2 Summarize Summarize this paragraph in your own words.

Author's Purpose What is the function of these lines at this point in the story? 3

Writing Practice

Evaluate a Story Remind students that when they interpret a work of literature, they do more than simply read it. They consider the author's message, or theme, and the literary elements he or she uses to convey it, such as setting, imagery, character, plot, and conflict. Have students write a paragraph examining Crane's use of one of these elements and its significance in the story. Remind students to include specific examples from the story.

"Well, if he'd just signal us to try the surf again, or to go to sea and wait, or go north, or go south, or go to hell—there would be some reason in it. But look at him. He just stands there and keeps his coat revolving like a wheel. The ass!"

"There come more people."

"Now there's quite a mob. Look! Isn't that a boat?"

"Where? Oh, I see where you mean. No, that's no boat."

"That fellow is still waving his coat."

"He must think we like to see him do that. Why don't he quit it. It don't mean anything."

"I don't know. I think he is trying to make us go north. It must be that there's a lifesaving station there somewhere."

"Say, he ain't tired yet. Look at 'im wave."

"Wonder how long he can keep that up. He's been revolving his coat ever since he caught sight of us. He's an idiot. Why aren't they getting men to bring a boat out. A fishing boat—one of those big yawls[30]—could come out here all right. Why don't he do something?"

"Oh, it's all right, now."

"They'll have a boat out here for us in less than no time, now that they've seen us."

A faint yellow tone came into the sky over the low land. The shadows on the sea slowly deepened. The wind bore coldness with it, and the men began to shiver.

"Holy smoke!" said one, allowing his voice to express his impious mood, "if we keep on monkeying out here! If we've got to flounder out here all night!"

"Oh, we'll never have to stay here all night! Don't you worry. They've seen us now, and it won't be long before they'll come chasing out after us."

The shore grew dusky. The man waving a coat blended gradually into this gloom, and it swallowed in the same manner the omnibus and the group of people. The spray, when it dashed uproariously over the side, made the voyagers shrink and swear like men who were being branded.

"I'd like to catch the chump who waved the coat. I feel like soaking him one, just for luck."

"Why? What did he do?"

"Oh, nothing, but then he seemed so damned cheerful."

In the meantime the oiler rowed, and then the correspondent rowed, and then the oiler rowed. Gray-faced and bowed forward, they mechanically, turn by turn, plied the leaden oars. The form of the lighthouse had vanished from the southern horizon, but finally a pale star appeared, just lifting from the sea. The streaked saffron[31] in the west passed before the all-merging darkness, and the sea to the east was black. The land had vanished, and was expressed only by the low and drear thunder of the surf.

"If I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned, why, in the name of the seven mad gods who rule the sea, was I allowed to come thus far and contemplate sand and trees? Was I brought here merely to have my nose dragged away as I was about to nibble the sacred cheese of life?"

The patient captain, drooped over the water jar, was sometimes obliged to speak to the oarsman.

"Keep her head up! Keep her head up!"

"'Keep her head up,' sir." The voices were weary and low.

This was surely a quiet evening. All save the oarsman lay heavily and listlessly in the boat's bottom. As for him, his eyes were just capable of noting the tall black waves that swept forward in a most sinister silence, save for an occasional subdued growl of a crest.

The cook's head was on a thwart, and he looked without interest at the water under his nose. He was deep in other scenes. Finally he spoke. "Billie," he murmured, dreamfully, "what kind of pie do you like best?"

---

[30] A yawl is a sailboat with two masts, the large mast near the front of the boat and the smaller one near the back.

[31] Here, saffron means "yellow-orange in color."

Author's Purpose Why does Crane repeat this speech verbatim from page 586? 4

Teach

Literary Element 4

Author's Purpose Answer: Crane wants to underscore his theme that much of human life is determined by chance, not justice or reason.

Say: The narrator uses a metaphor here, comparing man's quest for survival to a mouse nibbling at "the sacred cheese of life." The metaphor emphasizes the Naturalist belief that humans are as small and insignificant as mice, compared to the forces of nature.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Many of the nautical words in the story, such as bow, stern, rollers, and row, have other meanings as well. Have students explain the nautical meaning of these words as well as another meaning. Urge them to list other words with a nautical meaning in this story that also have another meaning.

Students might wish to find a picture of a rowboat and label the bow and stern, as well as any other parts they have learned about in this story, such as the gunwale.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism Answer: A Naturalist might argue that in extreme situations, people act instinctively to satisfy hunger. The oiler and the correspondent are doing their best not to let their instincts make them act irrationally, so they want to avoid any mention of food.

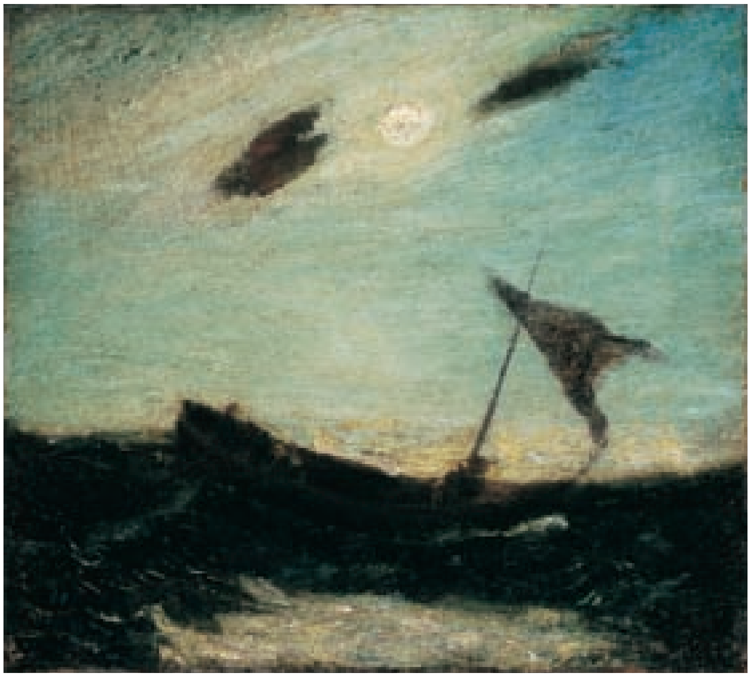
Say: It is natural for the cook to be thinking about food. For him food is a source of enjoyment, but for the oiler and the correspondent it is a dangerous distraction from their efforts at self-control.

View the Art

Unlike the Hudson River school painters who were his contemporaries, Albert Pinkham Ryder did not glorify nature in his art. More a Naturalist than a Romantic, Ryder emphasized nature's power and forcefulness. In the painting here, the boat is depicted in the same dark colors as the water. It is as if the dark water were swallowing the boat, just as the night swallowed the people standing on the shore in the story.



Moonlight, 1885. Albert Pinkham Ryder. Oil on canvas, 16 x 17¾ in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC.

V

"Pie," said the oiler and the correspondent, agitatedly. "Don't talk about those things, blast you!"

"Well," said the cook, "I was just thinking about ham sandwiches, and—"

A night on the sea in an open boat is a long night. As darkness settled finally, the shine of the light, lifting from the sea in the south, changed to full gold. On the northern horizon a new light appeared, a small bluish gleam on the edge of the waters. These two lights were the furniture of the world. Otherwise there was nothing but waves.

2 Naturalism From your understanding of Naturalism, why might discussion of food be dangerous, rather than pleasantly distracting, given the circumstances?

Two men huddled in the stern, and distances were so magnificent in the dinghy that the rower was enabled to keep his feet partly warmed by thrusting them under his companions. Their legs indeed extended far under the rowing seat until they touched the feet of the captain forward. Sometimes, despite the efforts of the tired oarsman, a wave came piling into the boat, an icy wave of the night, and the chilling water soaked them anew. They would twist their bodies for a moment and groan, and sleep the dead sleep once more, while the water in the boat gurgled about them as the craft rocked.

The plan of the oiler and the correspondent was for one to row until he lost the ability, and then arouse the other from his seawater couch in the bottom of the boat.

The oiler plied the oars until his head drooped forward, and the overpowering sleep blinded him. And he rowed yet afterward. Then he touched a man in the bottom of the boat, and called his name. "Will you spell me for a little while?" he said, meekly.

"Sure, Billie," said the correspondent, awakening and dragging himself to a sitting position. They exchanged places carefully, and the oiler, cuddling down in the seawater at the cook's side, seemed to go to sleep instantly.

The particular violence of the sea had ceased. The waves came without snarling. The obligation of the man at the oars was to keep the boat headed so that the tilt of the rollers would not capsize her, and to preserve her from filling when the crests rushed past. The black

Study Skills Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Use Text Structure Point out that "The Open Boat" is a long story. Crane has made it more manageable by dividing it into seven sections. Have students construct informal outlines as they read "The Open Boat." Their outlines should have seven headings that correspond to the seven sections of the story. Under each heading, students should jot down notes on plot, character, point of view, and tone, or on any other element they find in the story. When they have completed their notes, students should review them to discern the significant developments in each section that combine to reveal the theme or meaning of the story. Have students discuss this question: What view of life is revealed by the events in this story? (Students may discuss some aspect of the naturalists' view of the power of nature and the powerlessness of humans.)

waves were silent and hard to be seen in the darkness. Often one was almost upon the boat before the oarsman was aware.

In a low voice the correspondent addressed the captain. He was not sure that the captain was awake, although this iron man seemed to be always awake. "Captain, shall I keep her making for that light north, sir?"

The same steady voice answered him. "Yes. Keep it about two points off the port bow."[32]

The cook had tied a life belt around himself in order to get even the warmth which this clumsy cork contrivance could donate, and he seemed almost stove-like when a rower, whose teeth invariably chattered wildly as soon as he ceased his labor, dropped down to sleep.

The correspondent, as he rowed, looked down at the two men sleeping under foot. The cook's arm was around the oiler's shoulders, and, with their fragmentary clothing and haggard faces, they were the babes of the sea, a grotesque rendering of the old babes in the wood.[33]

Later he must have grown stupid at his work, for suddenly there was a growling of water, and a crest came with a roar and a swash into the boat, and it was a wonder that it did not set the cook afloat in his life belt. The cook continued to sleep, but the oiler sat up, blinking his eyes and shaking with the new cold.

"Oh, I'm awful sorry, Billie," said the correspondent, contritely.

"That's all right, old boy," said the oiler, and lay down again and was asleep.

Presently it seemed that even the captain dozed, and the correspondent thought that he was the one man afloat on all the oceans. The wind had a voice as it came over the waves, and it was sadder than the end.

There was a long, loud swishing astern of the boat, and a gleaming trail of phosphorescence, like blue flame, was furrowed on the black waters. It might have been made by a monstrous knife.

Then there came a stillness, while the correspondent breathed with the open mouth and looked at the sea.

Suddenly there was another swish and another long flash of bluish light, and this time it was alongside the boat, and might almost have been reached with an oar. The correspondent saw an enormous fin speed like a shadow through the water, hurling the crystalline spray and leaving the long glowing trail.

The correspondent looked over his shoulder at the captain. His face was hidden, and he seemed to be asleep. He looked at the babes of the sea. They certainly were asleep. So, being bereft[34] of sympathy, he leaned a little way to one side and swore softly into the sea.

But the thing did not then leave the vicinity of the boat. Ahead or astern, on one side or the other, at intervals long or short, fled the long sparkling streak, and there was to be heard the whiroo of the dark fin. The speed and power of the thing was greatly to be admired. It cut the water like a gigantic and keen projectile.

The presence of this biding thing did not affect the man with the same horror that it would if he had been a picnicker. He simply looked at the sea dully and swore in an undertone.

Nevertheless, it is true that he did not wish to be alone with the thing. He wished one of his companions to awaken by chance and keep him company with it. But the captain hung motionless over the water jar and the oiler and the cook in the bottom of the boat were plunged in slumber.

---

[32] The bow is the forward part of a boat or ship. The port bow, then, would be the left side of the forward part.

[33] In the fairy tale "Babes in the Wood," two children are left after their parents die. An uncle tries to have them killed, but the children are spared. Alone in the woods, the children are lulled to sleep by birds.

[34] Bereft means "lacking something needed."

2 Summarize Summarize this paragraph. How have the crew's challenges changed?

3 Author's Purpose Why does Crane have the correspondent react this way to the shark?

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Summarize Answer: The sea has calmed, but now the man at the oars must focus on keeping the boat steady so that it does not capsize or fill with water. The crew's challenges have shifted from environmental pressures to internal pressure as the oarsmen fight fatigue.

ENGLISH LEARNERS To help English learners summarize this paragraph, ensure that they understand the meaning of ceased, obligation, tilt of the rollers, and capsize.

Literary Element 3

Author's Purpose Answer: The correspondent is too exhausted to react to the threat of the shark. This passage suggests that he is becoming reconciled to the possibility of his own death.

Ask: What does the correspondent wish for in this passage? (He wishes that one of the men would awaken so he would have company and not have to watch the shark alone.)

Say: Notice how this passage reinforces the theme of comradeship and solidarity that Crane introduced earlier.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Have students create a Venn diagram to compare and contrast the correspondent with one other character from the story. Where the circles overlap, students should identify traits that the two characters have in common. Students should list the character traits or thoughts unique to each man in the areas where the circles do not overlap. Have students use the information to make generalizations about the characters. Give them frame sentences to help them state their generalizations like the following: The correspondent and _____ are both _____, but _____ is _____ while _____ is _____.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Summarize Answer: The correspondent imagines the dying soldier and realizes that he feels sorry for this anonymous man. After experiencing the terrible indifference of nature himself, the correspondent can now relate to the soldier in the verse. The correspondent comprehends for the first time that death affects everyone.

Literary History ☆

Misquotation of the Poem

Crane actually misquotes the poem, omitting about twenty words. Critics have argued over whether Crane omits the words on purpose or whether he simply forgets them. He may have deleted them to show how the narrator's indifference as a child has made him misremember the poem that means so much to him now.

VI

"If I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned, why, in the name of the seven mad gods who rule the sea, was I allowed to come thus far and contemplate sand and trees?"

During this dismal night, it may be remarked that a man would conclude that it was really the intention of the seven mad gods to drown him, despite the abominable injustice of it. For it was certainly an abominable injustice to drown a man who had worked so hard, so hard. The man felt it would be a crime most unnatural. Other people had drowned at sea since galleys[35] swarmed with painted sails, but still—

When it occurs to a man that nature does not regard him as important, and that she feels she would not maim the universe by disposing of him, he at first wishes to throw bricks at the temple, and he hates deeply the fact that there are no bricks and no temples. Any visible expression of nature would surely be pelleted with his jeers.

Then, if there be no tangible thing to hoot he feels, perhaps, the desire to confront a personification and indulge in pleas, bowed to one knee, and with hands supplicant, saying: "Yes, but I love myself."

A high cold star on a winter's night is the word he feels that she says to him. Thereafter he knows the pathos[36] of his situation.

The men in the dinghy had not discussed these matters, but each had, no doubt, reflected upon them in silence and according to his mind. There was seldom any expression upon their faces save the general one of complete weariness. Speech was devoted to the business of the boat.

To chime the notes of his emotion, a verse mysteriously entered the correspondent's head. He had even forgotten that he had forgotten this verse, but it suddenly was in his mind.

A soldier of the Legion[37] lay dying in ☆ Algiers,[38]
There was lack of woman's nursing,
 there was dearth of woman's tears;
But a comrade stood beside him, and he took that comrade's hand,
And he said: "I never more shall see my own, my native land."[39]

In his childhood, the correspondent had been made acquainted with the fact that a soldier of the Legion lay dying in Algiers, but he had never regarded it as important. Myriads of his schoolfellows had informed him of the soldier's plight, but the dinning[40] had naturally ended by making him perfectly indifferent. He had never considered it his affair that a soldier of the Legion lay dying in Algiers, nor had it appeared to him as a matter for sorrow. It was less to him than the breaking of a pencil's point.

Now, however, it quaintly came to him as a human, living thing. It was no longer merely a picture of a few throes[41] in the breast of a poet, meanwhile drinking tea and warming his feet at the grate; it was an actuality—stern, mournful, and fine.

The correspondent plainly saw the soldier. He lay on the sand with his feet out straight and still. While his pale left hand was upon his chest in an attempt to thwart the going of his life, the blood came between his fingers. In the far Algerian distance, a city of low square forms was set against a sky that was faint with the last sunset hues. The correspondent, plying the oars and dreaming of the slow and slower movements of the lips of the soldier, was moved by a profound

---

[35] A galley is a medieval ship propelled by sails and a row (or rows) of oars on either side.

[36] Pathos means "deep sadness."

[37] Legion refers to the French Foreign Legion, an army composed mainly of foreign volunteers.

[38] Algiers (al jērz′) is the capital of Algeria, a country in northern Africa that was once ruled by France.

[39] This verse compresses the first stanza of "Bingen on the Rhine" by English poet Caroline E. S. Norton (1808–1877).

[40] Dinning means "insistent repetition."

[41] Throes are pains.

Summarize Summarize this passage. Why has the correspondent's reaction to the poem changed since he was a child? 1

Listening and Speaking Practice

SMALL GROUP

Interview Role-playing an interview with a character will give students an opportunity to consider the events of the story both as an outsider and as a character. After students have read the story, have them work in groups of three, with one student playing the role of interviewer, one playing one of the men in the story, and one as notetaker.

The interviewer should pose up to five questions about the man's experiences and thoughts. The student playing the character should answer in that character's voice, while the third student records responses. Encourage interviewers to prepare thoughtful questions that encourage the respondent to think about the meaning of his experience.

and perfectly impersonal comprehension. He was sorry for the soldier of the Legion who lay dying in Algiers.

The thing which had followed the boat and waited had evidently grown bored at the delay. There was no longer to be heard the slash of the cut water, and there was no longer the flame of the long trail. The light in the north still glimmered, but it was apparently no nearer to the boat. Sometimes the boom of the surf rang in the correspondent's ears, and he turned the craft seaward then and rowed harder. Southward, some one had evidently built a watch fire on the beach. It was too low and too far to be seen, but it made a shimmering, roseate reflection upon the bluff back of it, and this could be discerned from the boat. The wind came stronger, and sometimes a wave suddenly raged out like a mountain cat and there was to be seen the sheen and sparkle of a broken crest.

The captain, in the bow, moved on his water jar and sat erect. "Pretty long night," he observed to the correspondent. He looked at the shore. "Those lifesaving people take their time."

"Did you see that shark playing around?"

"Yes, I saw him. He was a big fellow, all right."

"Wish I had known you were awake."

Later the correspondent spoke into the bottom of the boat.

"Billie!" There was a slow and gradual disentanglement. "Billie, will you spell me?"

"Sure," said the oiler.

As soon as the correspondent touched the cold comfortable seawater in the bottom of the boat, and had huddled close to the cook's life belt he was deep in sleep, despite the fact that his teeth played all the popular airs. This sleep was so good to him that it was but a moment before he heard a voice call his name in a tone that demonstrated the last stages of exhaustion. "Will you spell me?"

"Sure, Billie."

The light in the north had mysteriously vanished, but the correspondent took his course from the wide-awake captain.

Later in the night they took the boat farther out to sea, and the captain directed the cook to take one oar at the stern and keep the boat facing the seas. He was to call out if he should hear the thunder of the surf. This plan enabled the oiler and the correspondent to get respite together. "We'll give those boys a chance to get into shape again," said the captain. They curled down and, after a few preliminary chatterings and trembles, slept once more the dead sleep. Neither knew they had bequeathed to the cook the company of another shark, or perhaps the same shark.

As the boat caroused on the waves, spray occasionally bumped over the side and gave Veiled Moon, 1995. Jane Wilson. Oil on linen, 18 x 18 in. Fischbach Gallery, NY.

View the Art Inspired by the light and landscape of Long Island, New York, Jane Wilson creates luminous paintings that appear universal enough to come from almost anywhere. How does Wilson portray nature in this painting? ★

Teach

View the Art ★

Answer: The painting depicts nature as serene and beautiful, if indifferent.

Say: There are no humans in the painting, so it is difficult to gauge nature in relationship to us. To a viewer outside the painting, it appears beautiful.

Iowa native Jane Wilson specializes in dreamy, impressionistic nature scenes that often depict a cloud-obscured sky.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Students may need assistance in understanding the meaning of the poem and its relevance to the story. Tell them to use the footnotes for explanations of unfamiliar terms. Read the poem aloud, and discuss the meaning of each line. Ask students what the poem means to them. Is their reaction to the poem more like that of the correspondent as a child or of the adult correspondent in the boat? Then ask them what the poem may mean to the correspondent in his present situation.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Summarize Answer: The men are so exhausted that they are numb to the effects of the wind and water.

Ask: How are the men like mummies? (They have bodies but have no feelings or reactions to their surroundings.)

Literary Element 2

Suspense As the story approaches its climax, Crane goes into more detail about the actions of the men.

Ask: How does providing more detail help to build suspense? (It gives the reader a clearer picture of the situation; it also delays the outcome.)

APPROACHING Ask students to identify the specific details that create suspense.

Big Idea 3

Naturalism Answer: The correspondent perceives nature as indifferent to the fate of human beings.

Say: People often "make a deal" when they are faced with the possibility of death. For example, they promise a higher power that they will change or improve themselves in exchange for survival.

---

them a fresh soaking, but this had no power to break their repose. The ominous slash of the wind and the water affected them as it would have affected mummies.

"Boys," said the cook, with the notes of every reluctance in his voice, "she's drifted in pretty close. I guess one of you had better take her to sea again." The correspondent, aroused, heard the crash of the toppled crests.

As he was rowing, the captain gave him some whiskey and water, and this steadied the chills out of him. "If I ever get ashore and anybody shows me even a photograph of an oar—"

At last there was a short conversation.

"Billie . . . Billie, will you spell me?"

"Sure," said the oiler.

VII

When the correspondent again opened his eyes, the sea and the sky were each of the gray hue of the dawning. Later, carmine and gold was painted upon the waters. The morning appeared finally, in its splendor, with a sky of pure blue, and the sunlight flamed on the tips of the waves.

On the distant dunes were set many little black cottages, and a tall white windmill reared above them. No man, nor dog, nor bicycle appeared on the beach. The cottages might have formed a deserted village.

The voyagers scanned the shore. A conference was held in the boat. "Well," said the captain, "if no help is coming, we might better try a run through the surf right away. If we stay out here much longer we will be too weak to do anything for ourselves at all." The others silently acquiesced in this reasoning. The boat was headed for the beach. The correspondent wondered if none ever ascended the tall wind-tower, and if then they never looked seaward. This tower was a giant, standing with its back to the plight of the ants. It represented in a degree, to the correspondent, the serenity of nature amid the struggles of the individual—nature in the wind, and nature in the vision of men. She did not seem cruel to him then, nor beneficent, nor treacherous, nor wise. But she was indifferent, flatly indifferent. It is, perhaps, plausible that a man in this situation, impressed with the unconcern of the universe, should see the innumerable flaws of his life and have them taste wickedly in his mind and wish for another chance. A distinction between right and wrong seems absurdly clear to him, then, in this new ignorance of the grave-edge, and he understands that if he were given another opportunity he would mend his conduct and his words, and be better and brighter during an introduction, or at a tea.

"Now, boys," said the captain, "she is going to swamp sure. All we can do is to work her in as far as possible, and then when she swamps, pile out and scramble for the beach. Keep cool now, and don't jump until she swamps sure."

The oiler took the oars. Over his shoulders he scanned the surf. "Captain," he said, "I think I'd better bring her about, and keep her head-on to the seas and back her in."

"All right, Billie," said the captain. "Back her in." The oiler swung the boat then and, seated in the stern, the cook and the correspondent were obliged to look over their shoulders to contemplate the lonely and indifferent shore.

2 The monstrous inshore rollers heaved the boat high until the men were again enabled to see the white sheets of water scudding[42] up the slanted beach. "We won't get in very close," said the captain. Each time a man could wrest his attention from the rollers, he turned his glance toward the shore, and in the expression of the eyes during this contemplation there was a singular quality. The correspondent, observing the others, knew that they were not afraid,

---

[42] Scudding means "moving swiftly."

1 Summarize What is the main idea expressed in this paragraph?

Naturalism How is Naturalism apparent in the correspondent's attitude in this paragraph? 3

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Research The Open Boat is a fictionalized account of the sinking of the Commodore. Have students use the Internet and other resources to learn more about the actual shipwreck. Have them consult the article "Stephen Crane's Own Story," which appeared in The New York Press on January 7, 1897. Have students write a brief essay, comparing the article with the short story. In their essay, students should identify the events in Crane's article that do not appear in the story. They should also compare the tone and style of the article to the short story.

but the full meaning of their glances was shrouded.

As for himself, he was too tired to grapple fundamentally with the fact. He tried to coerce his mind into thinking of it, but the mind was dominated at this time by the muscles, and the muscles said they did not care. It merely occurred to him that if he should drown it would be a shame.

There were no hurried words, no pallor,[43] no plain agitation. The men simply looked at the shore. "Now, remember to get well clear of the boat when you jump," said the captain.

Seaward the crest of a roller suddenly fell with a thunderous crash, and the long white comber[44] came roaring down upon the boat.

"Steady now," said the captain. The men were silent. They turned their eyes from the shore to the comber and waited. The boat slid up the incline, leaped at the furious top, bounced over it, and swung down the long back of the wave. Some water had been shipped and the cook bailed it out.

But the next crest crashed also. The tumbling boiling flood of white water caught the boat and whirled it almost perpendicular. Water swarmed in from all sides. The correspondent had his hands on the gunwale at this time, and when the water entered at that place he swiftly withdrew his fingers, as if he objected to wetting them.

The little boat, drunken with this weight of water, reeled and snuggled deeper into the sea.

"Bail her out, cook! Bail her out," said the captain.

"All right, Captain," said the cook.

"Now, boys, the next one will do for us, sure," said the oiler. "Mind to jump clear of the boat."

4 The third wave moved forward, huge, furious, implacable.[45] It fairly swallowed the dinghy, and almost simultaneously the men tumbled into the sea. A piece of life belt had lain in the bottom of the boat, and as the correspondent went overboard he held this to his chest with his left hand.

The January water was icy, and he reflected immediately that it was colder than he had expected to find it off the coast of Florida. This appeared to his dazed mind as a fact important enough to be noted at the time. The coldness of the water was sad; it was tragic. This fact was somehow so mixed and confused with his opinion of his own situation that it seemed almost a proper reason for tears. The water was cold.

When he came to the surface he was conscious of little but the noisy water. Afterward he saw his companions in the sea. The oiler was ahead in the race. He was swimming strongly and rapidly. Off to the correspondent's left, the cook's great white and corked back bulged out of the water, and in the rear the captain was hanging with his one good hand to the keel[46] of the overturned dinghy.

There is a certain immovable quality to a shore, and the correspondent wondered at it amid the confusion of the sea.

It seemed also very attractive, but the correspondent knew that it was a long journey, and he paddled leisurely. The piece of life preserver lay under him, and sometimes he whirled down the incline of a wave as if he were on a hand-sled.

But finally he arrived at a place in the sea where travel was beset with difficulty. He did not pause swimming to inquire what manner of current had caught him, but there his progress ceased. The shore was set before him like a bit of scenery on a stage, and he looked at it and understood with his eyes each detail of it.

As the cook passed, much farther to the left, the captain was calling to him, "Turn over on

---

[43] Pallor is paleness or the lack of natural or healthy color.

[44] A comber is a long, rolling wave that curls and breaks.

[45] Implacable means "unrelenting" or "unyielding."

[46] The keel runs along the center of the bottom of a boat. It supports the boat's frame and gives the boat stability.

Vocabulary

coerce (kō urs´) v. to force

Author's Purpose Why do you think Crane chose to narrate this part of the story from the correspondent's point of view? 5

Teach

Literary Element 4

Climax Point out to students that the story reaches its climax with the sentence, "The third wave moved forward, huge, furious, implacable."

Ask: Why is this climax particularly appropriate to a Naturalist work of literature? (At the climax, nature is in full control and the men are helpless.)

APPROACHING Remind students that the climax is the turning point in the action. Ask: What do you think will happen now? (The men will either drown or be rescued. There will be no more waiting.)

Literary Element 5

Author's Purpose Answer: Students may note that, because the correspondent is a newspaper reporter, he is trained to be a keen observer of events. Also, because the correspondent is a sensitive and educated person, his impressions of the events are bound to be more articulate and informative than those of his companions.

Approaching Level

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

AAVE Read the last sentence on page 594. Note the phrase they were not afraid. Approaching level students who use African American vernacular English (AAVE) may use was, instead of were, in the plural. Give students a few other examples: We were happy, They were my friends. Then give students a list of pronoun subjects (I, you, he, she, it, we, they) and a list of adjectives and predicate nouns (happy, my family, your friend, friendly, etc.) and have them join words from each list using either was or were, as required.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Conflict Say: The correspondent must now battle an internal conflict, as well as his external conflict with the sea. In this passage, the thought of respite from his struggle, even death, seems appealing.

Ask: Do you think the correspondent will give up? (The correspondent's earlier anger at the possibility that he might drown will drive him to continue swimming.)

Reading Strategy 2

Summarize Answer: The correspondent is swimming toward the captain and the boat. His main goal now is not survival but avoiding pain.

your back, cook! Turn over on your back and use the oar."

"All right, sir." The cook turned on his back, and, paddling with an oar, went ahead as if he were a canoe.

Presently the boat also passed to the left of the correspondent with the captain clinging with one hand to the keel. He would have appeared like a man raising himself to look over a board fence, if it were not for the extraordinary gymnastics of the boat. The correspondent marvelled that the captain could still hold to it.

They passed on, nearer to shore—the oiler, the cook, the captain—and following them went the water jar, bouncing gayly over the seas.

The correspondent remained in the grip of this strange new enemy—a current. The shore, with its white slope of sand and its green bluff, topped with little silent cottages, was spread like a picture before him. It was very near to him then, but he was impressed as one who in a gallery looks at a scene from Brittany[47] or Holland.

> Perhaps an individual must consider his own death to be the final phenomenon of nature.

He thought: "I am going to drown? Can it be possible? Can it be possible? Can it be possible?" Perhaps an individual must consider his own death to be the final phenomenon of nature.

But later a wave perhaps whirled him out of this small deadly current, for he found suddenly that he could again make progress toward the shore. Later still, he was aware that the captain, clinging with one hand to the keel of the dinghy, had his face turned away from the shore and toward him, and was calling his name. "Come to the boat! Come to the boat!"

1 In his struggle to reach the captain and the boat, he reflected that when one gets properly wearied, drowning must really be a comfortable arrangement, a cessation of hostilities accompanied by a large degree of relief, and he was glad of it, for the main thing in his mind for some moments had been horror of the temporary agony. He did not wish to be hurt.

Presently he saw a man running along the shore. He was undressing with most remarkable speed. Coat, trousers, shirt, everything flew magically off him.

"Come to the boat," called the captain.

"All right, Captain." As the correspondent paddled, he saw the captain let himself down to bottom and leave the boat. Then the correspondent performed his one little marvel of the voyage. A large wave caught him and flung him with ease and supreme speed completely over the boat and far beyond it. It struck him even then as an event in gymnastics, and a true miracle of the sea. An overturned boat in the surf is not a plaything to a swimming man.

The correspondent arrived in water that reached only to his waist, but his condition did not enable him to stand for more than a moment. Each wave knocked him into a heap, and the undertow pulled at him.

Then he saw the man who had been running and undressing, and undressing and running, come bounding into the water. He dragged ashore the cook, and then waded toward the captain, but the captain waved him away, and sent him to the correspondent. He was naked, naked as a tree in winter, but a halo was about his head, and he shone like a saint. He gave a strong pull, and a long drag, and a bully heave at the correspondent's hand. The correspondent, schooled in the minor formulæ, said: "Thanks, old man." But suddenly the man

Summarize Summarize this paragraph and explain how the correspondent's goals have changed. 2

---

[47] Brittany is a region in northwestern France.

Writing Practice

News Story Have students imagine that they are reporters for a newspaper and write a news story about the rescue of the men in the boat. Remind students that news stories report the five Ws and an H: who, what, when, where, why, and how. After this basic information is covered, the news story may elaborate with additional background, such as what caused their ship to sink. News stories may also include interviews with the rescued men. (Students may use interview material developed in the previous Skills Practice.)

Moonrise on the Seashore, 1821. Caspar David Friedrich. Oil on canvas, 22½ x 28½ in. Hermitage, St. Petersburg, Russia.

cried: "What's that?" He pointed a swift finger. The correspondent said: "Go."

In the shallows, face downward, lay the oiler. His forehead touched sand that was periodically, between each wave, clear of the sea.

The correspondent did not know all that transpired afterward. When he achieved safe ground he fell, striking the sand with each particular part of his body. It was as if he had dropped from a roof, but the thud was grateful to him.

It seems that instantly the beach was populated with men with blankets, clothes, and flasks, and women with coffeepots and all the remedies sacred to their minds. The welcome of the land to the men from the sea was warm and generous, but a still and dripping shape was carried slowly up the beach, and the land's welcome for it could only be the different and sinister hospitality of the grave.

When it came night, the white waves paced to and fro in the moonlight, and the wind brought the sound of the great sea's voice to the men on shore, and they felt that they could then be interpreters. ೋ

3 Naturalism What ironic prophecy is fulfilled by the oiler's death?

Teach

Big Idea 3

Naturalism Answer: Students may identify the following passage as a prophecy: ". . . if I am going to be drowned, why, in the name of the seven mad gods who rule the sea, was I allowed to come thus far and contemplate sand and trees?"

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 157.

View the Art ★

Caspar David Friedrich was a pioneer of the Romantic movement in Germany. His paintings often contain religious symbols and a sense of alienation.

Ask: Does this painting provide a sense of hope? (Students may say that the light on the horizon provides a sense of hope. The landscape is desolate, but the people seem to be relying on each other.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate After students have completed the story, divide them into groups of four. Assign one character from the story to each student. Have students review the story and take notes on their assigned character in a three-column chart with the heads Actions, Words, and Thoughts. When students have completed their charts, have them write sentences about the key traits of their character. Then have them present their descriptions orally to their groups.

After You Read

Assess

1. Some may feel the oiler's death is unjustified; others may say this emphasizes the indifference of nature.
2. (a) They are stranded at sea in a ten-foot dinghy after their ship sinks. (b) The cook is optimistic; the correspondent is not; the oiler is both cautious and optimistic.
3. (a) The captain is awake and silent. The correspondent is silent as he rows. He and the oiler row until the captain orders the cook to steer while the rowers rest. (b) The captain and the cook are considerate; the oiler and the correspondent are determined; the captain and the correspondent are thoughtful.
4. (a) The men swim ashore. All but the oiler survive. (b) The strongest and most sympathetic man dies.
5. (a) boat and bronco (simile), water and flames (simile), men to mice and ants (metaphors) (b) They help the reader visualize the dangers of the sea and emphasize the connection between the men and nature.
6. Literary devices give the story emotional impact.
7. The crew accepts that nature has no stake in their survival.
8. Some people may identify with the idea that humans are at the mercy of an indifferent universe.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 181–182.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. How did you react when you realized the correspondent survives but the oiler does not?
2. (a)Summarize the situation of the four men in part I. (b)From the discussion that three of the men have at the end of part I, what might you infer about each man's character?
3. (a)How does each man behave during the night at sea (parts V and VI)? (b)What can you infer about their characters from their actions?
4. (a)What is the outcome of the story? (b)How is the outcome ironic, and what might this imply about nature?

Analyze and Evaluate

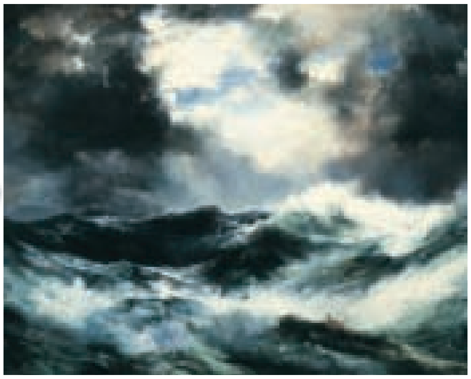
5. (a)List several similes and metaphors Crane uses in the story. (b)What effect do these comparisons have on the reader?
6. Could the emotional effect of this story be conveyed just as well in the form of a newspaper article about the shipwreck and the men's struggle to survive? Explain.

Connect

7. Big Idea Naturalism How might being lost at sea influence the crew's view of nature in a way that another type of mishap might not?
8. Connect to Today People today still identify with Crane's stories, characters, and themes. Why do you think this is?

Visual Literacy

Fine Art



Moonlit Shipwreck at Sea, 1901. (detail) Thomas Moran. Oil on canvas, 30 x $40\frac{1}{4}$ in. Private Collection.

Thomas Moran belonged to the Hudson River school, a group of painters who attempted to evoke specific moods and emotional states, often to express the sublime—that which is awe-inspiring—in nature.

Answer these questions about Moran's painting: (see page 583 for a larger version)

1. (a)What is the subject of the painting? (b)How is the human element treated?
2. (a)What is the effect of the light and shadow in the painting? (b)How is this effect comparable to Crane's literary effects in "The Open Boat"?
3. (a)From what perspective is the viewer watching this scene? (b)How does this perspective contribute to the mood of the painting?

Visual Literacy

1. (a) A shipwreck (b) The only trace of humans is the tiny boat. (c) Like the dinghy in the story, the boat is outmatched by the sea.
2. (a) The dramatic contrast shows both the power and splendor of the sea. (b) Crane uses contrast to help reveal how the crew's feelings about the sea shift from anger to acceptance.
3. (a) From a great distance (b) It creates feelings of helplessness and awe.

Literary Element Author's Purpose

An author can have more than one purpose in writing a literary work. For example, a short story writer's main purpose might be to convey an idea or present a philosophical view of life. In addition, the writer might have several other purposes, such as to construct a suspenseful plot, to create sympathetic characters, or to entertain the reader through humor, irony, or figurative language.

1. (a)What do you think was Crane's main purpose in writing "The Open Boat"? (b)Identify at least one of Crane's other purposes.
2. On page 584, the narrator says of the crew, ". . . there was this comradeship that the correspondent, for instance, who had been taught to be cynical of men, knew even at the time was the best experience of his life." What might Crane's purpose have been in having the narrator make this statement?

Review: Conflict

As you learned on page 552, conflict refers to the central struggle between two opposing forces in a story. External conflict exists when a character struggles against an outside force, such as another person, nature, society, or fate. Internal conflict is a struggle between two opposing thoughts or desires within the mind of a character.

Partner Activity With a partner, discuss the conflicts that the correspondent faces in "The Open Boat." Which type of conflict—internal or external—is more prevalent? With your partner, discuss whether one type of conflict is more prevalent or they are about equal.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Reading Strategy Summarize

Summarize Theme By analyzing the elements of a story, you can piece together the author's message about life. Refer to your chart you made on page 579 as you respond to the following:

1. Summarize the theme of Crane's story.
2. What story details support your summary?

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Context Clues Identify the context clues in the following sentences that help you determine the meaning of each boldfaced vocabulary word.

1. An emphatic crash in the alley jolted Miranda awake.
2. The feeling that he had the same conversation with his friend earlier, even though he knew he hadn't, was uncanny.
3. When diagnosing the patient, it was important for the doctor to talk frankly, or ingenuously.
4. At the political rally, some citizens behaved politely, whereas others acted impudently.
5. In order to restrain the rabid dog, the animal control officer had to coerce it into the back of his van.

Academic Vocabulary

Stephen Crane uses naturalistic techniques, such as focusing on the sky and the waves, to illustrate the characters' struggle.

Technique is an academic word. In more casual conversation, someone might say a dancer uses excellent or poor techniques.

To study this word further, use context clues to figure out the meaning of the word technique in the sentence above. Then check your inference in a print or online dictionary.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Element

1. (a) Students may say that Crane's main purpose was to demonstrate the Naturalistic belief that nature is indifferent to human life. (b) A purpose may have been to entertain the reader with a suspenseful plot.
2. Students may say that it shows how people bond together in a crisis and put aside their differences in the interest of a shared humanity.

Progress Check

Can students interpret the author's purpose?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 152.

Review: Conflict

External Conflicts: ocean waves, cold, wind, night, seabirds, shark

Internal Conflicts: fear, physical exhaustion, hunger, desire for sleep and for relief from pain

Reading Strategy

1. Nature is indifferent toward people, and people are insignificant in the universe.
2. The narrator notes, "…it occurs to a man that nature does not regard him as important, and that she feels she would not maim the universe by disposing of him.…" The sinister description of the birds on page 582, the relentless churning of the waves, and the inability of the people on shore to rescue the men indicate a similar indifference.

Vocabulary

1. The context of the sentence and the use of the word "jolted" imply that the meaning of emphatic is "forceful."
2. The feeling is eerie, or uncanny.
3. The synonym of ingenuously, which is "frankly," is used in the sentence.
4. The antonym of impudently, which is "politely," is used in the sentence; therefore, impudently means "in an impulsive bold manner."
5. The context of the sentence and the use of the word "restrain" implies that the meaning of coerce is "to force."

Academic Vocabulary

An example of naturalistic technique is given. Students should infer that "technique" means "the manner in which something is treated."

After You Read

Assess

Writing

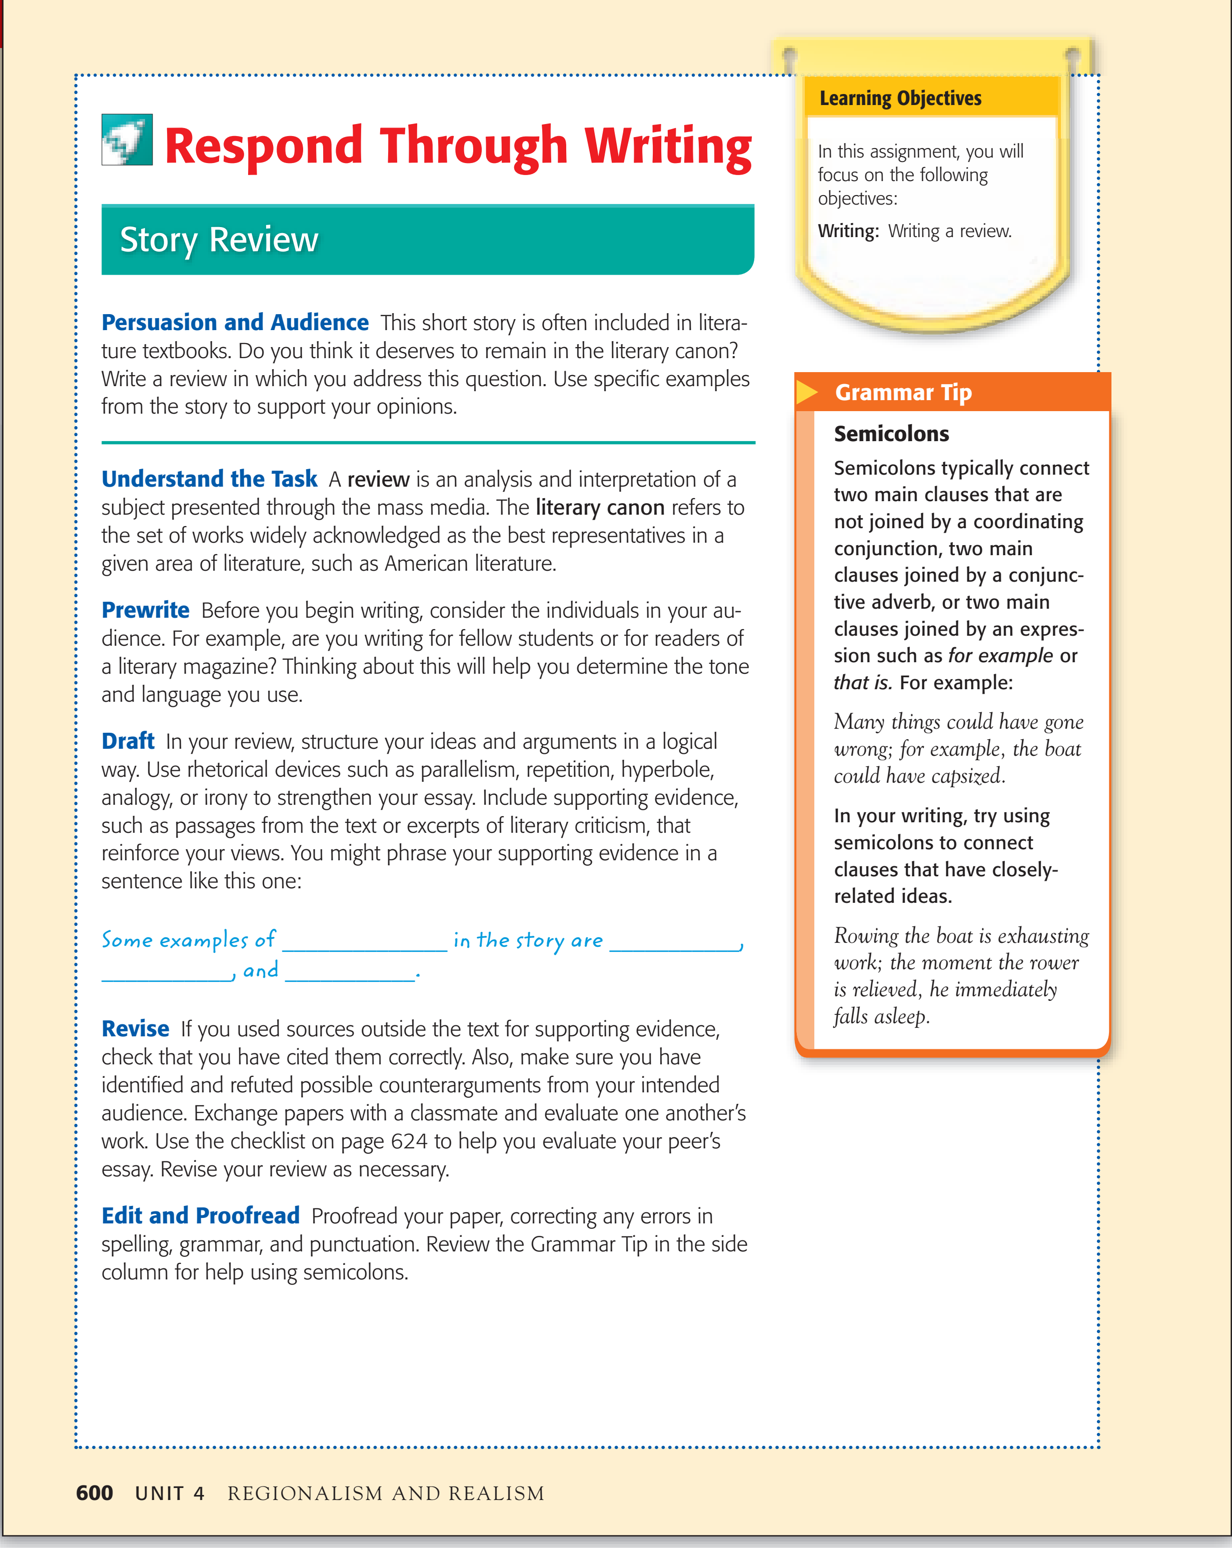
Students' reviews should present ideas and arguments in a logical way, supported by evidence from the text or excerpts of other literary criticism. Reviews should also refute possible counterarguments.

Scoring Guide

Assess students performance in the following categories using the scoring guide at the bottom of the page:

- Addresses all parts of the writing task.
- Provides a meaningful thesis, maintains focus and organization.
- Supports the thesis with details and examples.
- Provides a variety of sentence types; uses precise, descriptive language.
- Follows English language conventions.
- Makes a logical, convincing argument.

For grammar practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 156.



Respond Through Writing

Story Review

Persuasion and Audience This short story is often included in literature textbooks. Do you think it deserves to remain in the literary canon? Write a review in which you address this question. Use specific examples from the story to support your opinions.

Understand the Task A review is an analysis and interpretation of a subject presented through the mass media. The literary canon refers to the set of works widely acknowledged as the best representatives in a given area of literature, such as American literature.

Prewrite Before you begin writing, consider the individuals in your audience. For example, are you writing for fellow students or for readers of a literary magazine? Thinking about this will help you determine the tone and language you use.

Draft In your review, structure your ideas and arguments in a logical way. Use rhetorical devices such as parallelism, repetition, hyperbole, analogy, or irony to strengthen your essay. Include supporting evidence, such as passages from the text or excerpts of literary criticism, that reinforce your views. You might phrase your supporting evidence in a sentence like this one:

Some examples of ______________ in the story are ____________, ____________, and ____________.

Revise If you used sources outside the text for supporting evidence, check that you have cited them correctly. Also, make sure you have identified and refuted possible counterarguments from your intended audience. Exchange papers with a classmate and evaluate one another's work. Use the checklist on page 624 to help you evaluate your peer's essay. Revise your review as necessary.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your paper, correcting any errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Review the Grammar Tip in the side column for help using semicolons.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing a review.

Grammar Tip

Semicolons

Semicolons typically connect two main clauses that are not joined by a coordinating conjunction, two main clauses joined by a conjunctive adverb, or two main clauses joined by an expression such as for example or that is. For example:

Many things could have gone wrong; for example, the boat could have capsized.

In your writing, try using semicolons to connect clauses that have closely-related ideas.

Rowing the boat is exhausting work; the moment the rower is relieved, he immediately falls asleep.

Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Task addressed	fully	mostly	partially	barely
Thesis	meaningful	provided	partial	weak
Support	thoughtful	provided	limited	weak
Language	varied, descriptive	varied, often descriptive	predictable, imprecise	repetitive, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	many	serious
Argument is	convincing	mostly convincing	partially convincing	not convincing

Before You Read

To Build a Fire

Meet Jack London
(1876–1916)

In 1897 Jack London left college and went to the Yukon to join the Klondike gold rush. He never found gold, but he did find something that proved more precious to him: a wealth of raw material for the stories that eventually made him famous.

> "I would rather be ashes than dust!"
>
> —Jack London

An Adventurous Life Born in 1876 in San Francisco to an unstable mother and a father who refused to claim him, London was raised mainly by a family friend and a stepsister. From the age of eleven, he worked to earn money to help put food on his family's table. London loved the sea, so he hung around the harbor, doing odd jobs and learning to be an expert sailor. While still in his teens, he signed on to a schooner sailing to Siberia. From that adventure came his first published story.

At eighteen, London set off to ride the rails, living the life of a drifter as he traveled across the country on freight trains. This journey became a turning point in his life as he saw up close the raw, painful lives of men and women who did not seem to belong anywhere in society. As a result of the conditions he saw, London vowed to educate himself so he could survive by his mental powers rather than by his physical strength.

After completing high school in just one year, London attended the University of California at Berkeley for a semester before rushing off to the Klondike. He failed to strike it rich, however, so he came home and turned to writing for his livelihood. In 1903, London published The Call of the Wild, the novel that firmly established his reputation. Before long, he became the country's highest-paid author—a stunning reversal of fortune for the once-impoverished writer.

Struggle to Make Ends Meet Throughout his life, London worked under pressure to support not only himself but also numerous family members and friends. He set himself the task of writing at least a thousand publishable words every day, and he rarely deviated from that schedule. But despite publishing more than fifty books and becoming the country's first millionaire author, London habitually spent more money than he earned, and he often wrote stories in order to pay off urgent debts.

In the last years of his life, London bought a ranch in northern California and began building his dream house, Wolf House, on it. In 1913, shortly before he was to move into the newly completed house, it burned down. The fire devastated London both emotionally and financially. He continued to live on the ranch but never rebuilt the house. Three years later, plagued by severe health problems and financial difficulties, London died. He was only forty years old.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Jack London, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 39

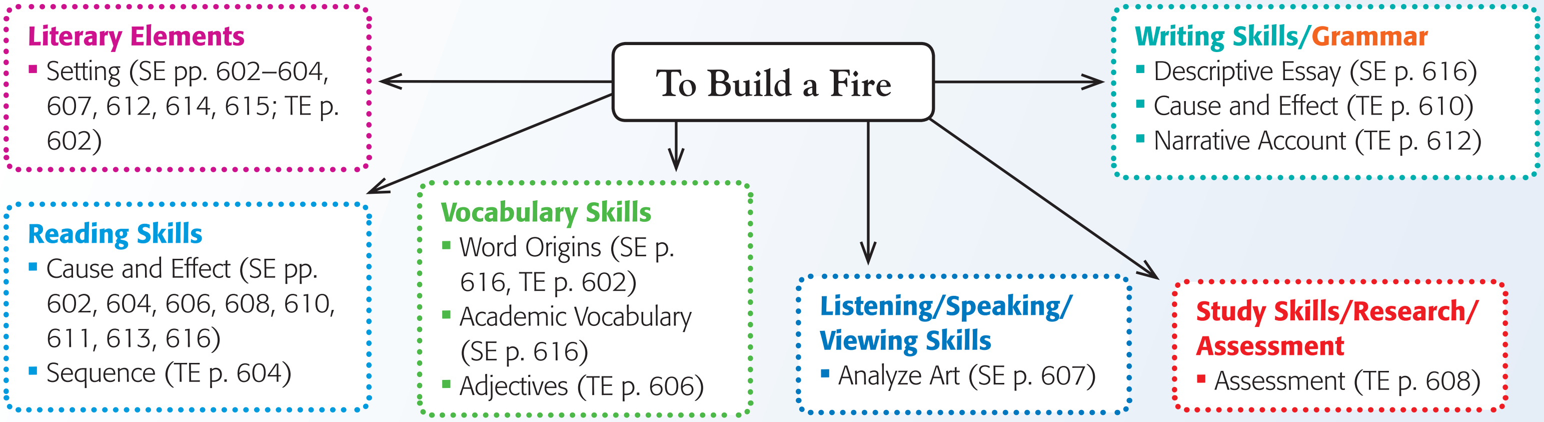
Daily Language Practice
Transparency 54

Or pass around news articles or photographs depicting people in places with extreme weather conditions, such as the Arctic, a desert, or a coastline in the aftermath of a hurricane or tsunami.

Write this statement on the board: Human beings can use their intelligence to overcome the extremities of nature.

Have students agree or disagree with this statement and explain their reasoning. Tell them to keep their response in mind and see if they feel the same way after reading this story.

Selection Skills



To Build a Fire

Literary Elements
- Setting (SE pp. 602–604, 607, 612, 614, 615; TE p. 602)

Reading Skills
- Cause and Effect (SE pp. 602, 604, 606, 608, 610, 611, 613, 616)
- Sequence (TE p. 604)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Origins (SE p. 616, TE p. 602)
- Academic Vocabulary (SE p. 616)
- Adjectives (TE p. 606)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 607)

Study Skills/Research/Assessment
- Assessment (TE p. 608)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Descriptive Essay (SE p. 616)
- Cause and Effect (TE p. 610)
- Narrative Account (TE p. 612)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

A man travels with his dog across the Yukon in temperatures reaching –75°F. He makes a fatal mistake when he steps into a spring and exposes his feet to the cold water. His one chance for survival is to remove his shoes and warm his feet by building a fire. When his fire is extinguished, he realizes that he has lost his only hope for survival. He makes anattempt to run for the camp but collapses and dies in the wilderness.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 159–164.

Vocabulary

Word Roots Have students identify the words in the vocabulary list that have these roots:

Latin tangere: to touch (tangible)

Latin mors: death (immortality)

Greek pathos: suffering, feeling (apathetically)

ADVANCED Challenge students to share other words they know that contain these roots. (Possible responses: tangent; morbid, postmortem; sympathy, pathology)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 167.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

Think about a time you took on a task that turned out to be much more difficult than you had thought. How did it affect you physically and emotionally? Explore this question in a brief journal entry.

Build Background

In 1896, miners discovered gold in a tributary of the Klondike River. By 1898, thousands of prospectors had poured into what is now Canada's Yukon Territory. Many of the prospectors were unprepared for the brutal conditions in the north, where temperatures could sink below minus fifty degrees Fahrenheit.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Naturalism

A battle with nature is a common conflict in literature, particularly in Naturalist literature. As you read, ask yourself, Do humans ever win such a battle?

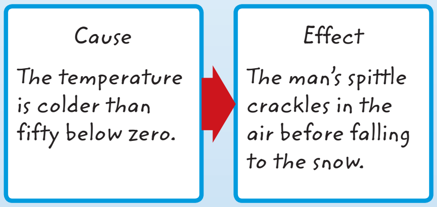
Literary Element Setting

The setting is the time and place in which the events of a literary work occur. Naturalist writers generally emphasize the setting, focusing on the importance of the environment in defining human character. As you read, ask yourself, How does London use the setting to develop plot and character?

Reading Strategy Analyze Cause-and-Effect Relationships

In a cause-and-effect relationship, one event brings about another. The second event occurs not only after the first but as a consequence of it. A cause may have several effects, and an effect may, in turn, cause other events to happen. In "To Build a Fire," cause-and-effect relationships are essential to the plot.

Tip: Take Notes Use a diagram to record causes and effects.



Cause
The temperature is colder than fifty below zero.
Effect
The man's spittle crackles in the air before falling to the snow.

Learning Objectives

For pages 601–616

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyze setting.

Reading: Analyze cause-and effect-relationships.

Writing: Apply imagery in a descriptive essay.

Vocabulary

intangible (in tan´ jə bəl) adj. not easily defined or evaluated by the mind; p. 603 Volunteer work brings not money but intangible benefits.

immortality (im´ ôr tal´ ə tē) n. the condition of having eternal life; p. 604 Unlike mortals, who live and then die, the gods in Greek myths enjoyed immortality.

compel (kəm pel´) v. to force; p. 606 His tardiness and lack of hustle compelled the coach to bench him.

intervene (in´ tər vēn´) v. to come or lie between; p. 607 He decided to intervene to prevent the quarrel between the angry motorists from escalating.

apathetically (ap´ ə thet´ i kal ē) adv. in a manner showing little interest or concern; p. 612 Apathetically, she cast her vote, not really caring who would win or lose.

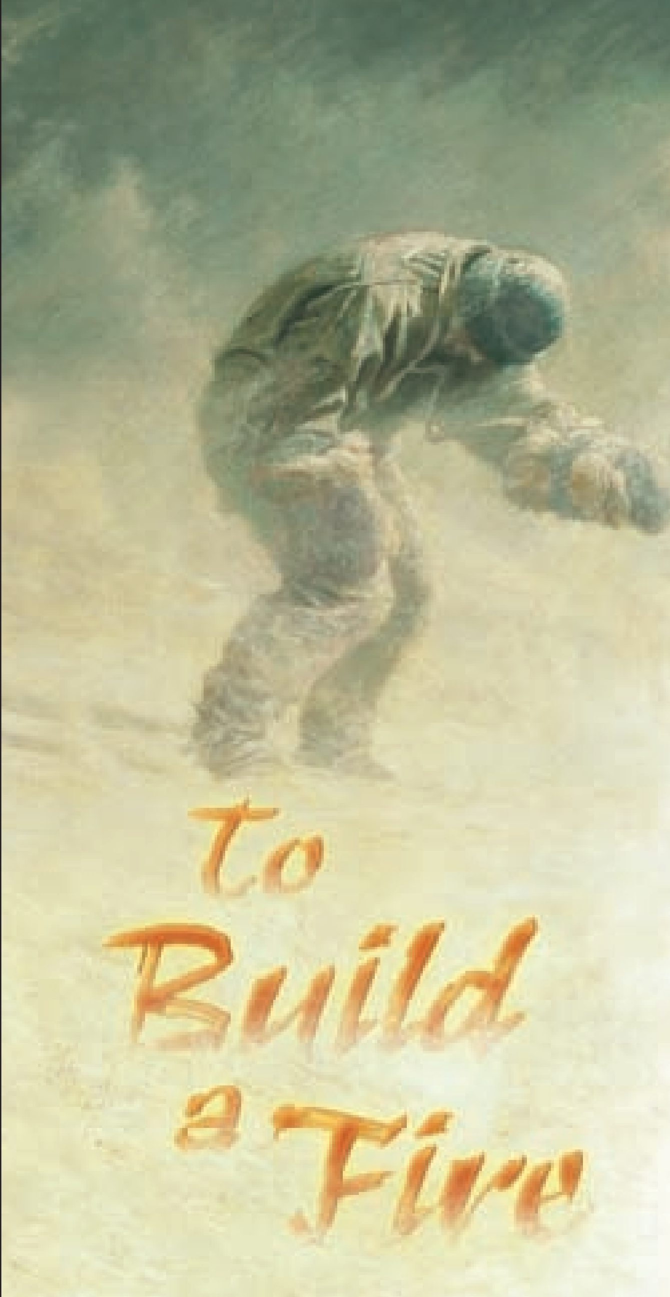
Reading Practice

Effect of Setting Tell students that the setting in this story is a critical factor. This is a story that could not take place in a different setting. Prepare students to examine the effects of the setting as they read. Have them divide a sheet of notebook paper into three sections, and label them Setting, Effects on Action, and Effects on Character. As they read, have students use this organizer to record notes on the details of the setting, the way the setting affects the development of the action, and the way the setting affects the character. Their notes will help them to see causes and effects and to discuss the setting when they have finished reading.



To Build a Fire

Jack London

Day had broken cold and gray, exceedingly cold and gray, when the man turned aside from the main Yukon[1] trail and climbed the high earth-bank, where a dim and little-traveled trail led eastward through the fat spruce timberland. It was a steep bank, and he paused for breath at the top, excusing the act to himself by looking at his watch. It was nine o'clock. There was no sun nor hint of sun, though there was not a cloud in the sky. It was a clear day, and yet there seemed an intangible pall over the face of things, a subtle gloom that made the day dark, and that was due to the absence of sun. 1

This fact did not worry the man. He was used to the lack of sun. It had been days since he had seen the sun, and he knew that a few more days must pass before that cheerful orb, ☆

---

[1] Here, Yukon refers to the Yukon River. The river was a major route to the Klondike goldfields.

Setting What mood do these details create? 2

Vocabulary

intangible (in tan´ jə bəl) adj. not easily defined or evaluated by the mind

English Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Intermediate After English learners have read the Build Background section on page 602, draw their attention to the words "brutal conditions." Explain that brutal means "harsh" or "extremely difficult." Ask students what might make up brutal conditions in this environment. (Possible responses: ice, snow, extreme cold, wind)

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism In this story, extreme temperatures provide the main conflict. Have students evaluate the man's lack of concern about the weather.

Literary Element 2

Setting Answer: Details such as "intangible pall," "subtle gloom," and "absence of sun" create a threatening mood. Ask: How does this mood foreshadow what might happen to the man in the story? (The man's situation is precarious; he may not survive.)

Writer's Technique ☆

Character's Name Here and throughout the story, the main character is simply referred to as "the man."

Ask: Why doesn't the author give the character a name? (In this setting, his identity is meaningless; he represents the whole human race.)

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 6.1

DRP: 59

Lexile: 970

Teach

Literary Element 1

Setting Answer: The details suggest that the temperature is dangerously cold, even life-threatening. The Yukon River is frozen to a depth of three feet.

Reading Strategy 2

Cause and Effect Answer: A good imagination helps one anticipate dangers and foresee the consequences of actions in this life-threatening environment.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 166.

Writer's Technique ☆

Omniscient Narrator The narrator of this story is omniscient, or all-knowing, and able to see into the minds of both the man and the dog. This point of view gives readers an opportunity to see events from two perspectives.

---

due south, would just peep above the skyline and dip immediately from view.

The man flung a look back along the way he had come. The Yukon lay a mile wide and hidden under three feet of ice. On top of this ice were as many feet of snow. It was all pure white, rolling in gentle undulations[2] where the ice jams of the freeze up had formed. North and south, as far as his eye could see, it was unbroken white save for a dark hairline that curved and twisted from around the spruce-covered island to the south, and that curved and twisted away into the north, where it disappeared behind another spruce-covered island. This dark hairline was the trail—the main trail—that led south five hundred miles to the Chilkoot Pass, Dyea, and saltwater; and that led north seventy miles to Dawson, and still on to the north a thousand miles to Nulato,[3] and finally to St. Michael on Bering Sea, a thousand miles and half a thousand more.

But all this—the mysterious, far-reaching hairline trail, the absence of sun from the sky, the tremendous cold, and the strangeness and weirdness of it all—made no impression on the man. It was not because he was long used to it. He was a newcomer in the land, a chechaquo,[4] and this was his first winter. The trouble with him was that he was without imagination. He was quick and alert in the things of life, but only in the things, and not in the significances. Fifty degrees below zero meant eighty-odd degrees of frost. Such fact impressed him as being cold and uncomfortable, and that was all. It did not lead him to meditate upon his frailty in general, able only to live within certain narrow limits of heat and cold; and from there on it did not lead him to the conjectural[5] field of immortality and man's place in the universe. Fifty degrees below zero stood for a bite of frost that hurt and that must be guarded against by the use of mittens, earflaps, warm moccasins, and thick socks. Fifty degrees below zero was to him just precisely fifty degrees below zero. That there should be anything more to it than that was a thought that never entered his head.

As he turned to go on, he spat speculatively. There was a sharp, explosive crackle that startled him. He spat again. And again, in the air, before it could fall to the snow, the spittle crackled. He knew that at fifty below spittle crackled on the snow, but this spittle had crackled in the air. Undoubtedly it was colder than fifty below—how much colder he did not know. But the temperature did not matter. He was bound for the old claim[6] on the left fork of Henderson Creek, where the boys were already. They had come over across the divide[7] from the Indian Creek country, while he had come the roundabout way to take a look at the possibilities of getting out logs in the spring from the islands in the Yukon. He would be in to camp by six o'clock; a bit after dark, it was true, but the boys would be there, a fire would be going, and a hot supper would be ready. As for lunch, he pressed his hand against the protruding bundle under his jacket. It was also under his shirt, wrapped up in a handkerchief and lying against the naked skin. It was the only way to keep the biscuits from freezing. He smiled agreeably to himself as he thought of those biscuits, each cut open and sopped in [2] Undulations are rippling or wavelike forms or outlines.

---

[3] Dyea (dī´ ā) was a mining village in Alaska at the beginning of the route to the goldfields. The trail led through the Chilkoot Pass and to northern gold-mining centers in the Yukon such as Dawson and Nulato (no͞o lä´ tō).

[4] In the language of the Chinook, Native Americans of the Pacific Northwest, a chechaquo (chē chä´ kō) is a "newcomer" or a "tenderfoot."

[5] Conjectural means "based on guesswork or indefinite evidence."

[6] A claim is a piece of land registered for mining rights.

[7] A divide is a ridge of land that separates two river drainage systems.

1 Setting Why does the author include these details?

2 Cause and Effect Why is a good imagination especially important in this environment?

Vocabulary

immortality (im´ ôr tal´ ə tē) n. the condition of having eternal life

---

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Sequence London's story mainly progresses in straightforward chronological order. Although the main character occasionally thinks of someone he met before starting his trek, the action moves forward without any significant flashbacks.

Have students take notes to keep track of the story's major events and the order in which they occur. Explain that sometimes the man's thoughts or realizations—not happenings in the outside world—are major events. Students' notes should provide a rough outline of the story, telling essentially what happens and why. When students have finished the story, draw a timeline on the board. Have students consult their notes to identify the important events to enter on the timeline.

bacon grease, and each enclosing a generous slice of fried bacon.

He plunged in among the big spruce trees. The trail was faint. A foot of snow had fallen since the last sled had passed over, and he was glad he was without sled, traveling light. In fact, he carried nothing but the lunch wrapped in the handkerchief. He was surprised, however, at the cold. It certainly was cold, he concluded, as he rubbed his numb nose and cheekbones with his mittened hand. He was a warm-whiskered man, but the hair on his face did not protect the high cheekbones and the eager nose that thrust itself aggressively into the frosty air.

> The dog had learned fire, and it wanted fire, or else to burrow under the snow and cuddle its warmth away from the air.

☆ At the man's heel trotted a dog, a big native husky, the proper wolf dog, gray-coated and without any visible or temperamental difference from its brother, the wild wolf. The animal was depressed by the tremendous cold. It knew that it was no time for traveling. Its instinct told a truer tale than was told to the man by the man's judgment. In reality, it was not merely colder than fifty below zero; it was colder than sixty below, than seventy below. It was seventy-five below zero. Since the freezing point is thirty-two above zero, it meant that one hundred and seven degrees of frost obtained. The dog did not know anything about thermometers. Possibly in its brain there was no sharp consciousness of a condition of very cold such as was in the man's brain. But the brute had its instinct. It experienced a vague but menacing apprehension that subdued it and made it slink along at the man's heels, and that made it question eagerly every unwonted[8] movement of the man as if expecting him to go into camp or to seek shelter somewhere and build a fire. The dog had learned fire, and it wanted fire, or else to burrow under the snow and cuddle its warmth away from the air.

The frozen moisture of its breathing had settled on its fur in a fine powder of frost, and especially were its jowls, muzzle, and eyelashes whitened by its crystalled breath. The man's red beard and mustache were likewise frosted, but more solidly, the deposit taking the form of ice and increasing with every warm, moist breath he exhaled. Also, the man was chewing tobacco, and the muzzle of ice held his lips so rigidly that he was unable to clear his chin when he expelled the juice. The result was that a crystal beard of the color and solidity of amber was increasing its length on his chin. If he fell down it would shatter itself, like glass, into brittle fragments. But he did not mind the appendage.[9] It was the penalty all tobacco-chewers paid in that country, and he had been out before in two cold snaps. They had not been so cold as this, he knew, but by the spirit thermometer[10] at Sixty Mile he knew they had been registered at fifty below and at fifty-five.

He held on through the level stretch of woods for several miles and dropped down a ☆ bank to the frozen bed of a small stream. This was Henderson Creek, and he knew he was ten miles from the forks. He looked at his watch. It was ten o'clock. He was making four miles an hour, and he calculated that he would arrive at

---

[8] Unwonted means "unusual."

[9] An appendage is something that is added on or attached.

[10] A spirit thermometer is an alcohol thermometer. It is used in areas of extreme cold, where the more common mercury thermometer would freeze.

Naturalism Why does the man still chew tobacco even after ice forms on his chin? 3

Teach

Big Idea 3

Naturalism Answer: The man is in a battle with nature and wants to spite nature. Also, the tobacco chewing gives him solace in the harsh environment.

Writer's Technique ☆

Conflict To make plots compelling, writers include various types of conflict. Ask: What is the main conflict in this story? (a battle between nature and man) How does London use the relationship of the man and the dog to explore the conflict between nature and humanity? (The dog is closely connected to nature and instinctively knows how to protect itself. The man relies on intellect and does not know how cold it really is, thus putting himself at risk.)

English Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

SMALL GROUP

Beginning After students have read the first few pages, have them meet in small groups to share what they know about the man based on what they have read so far. Then have each student make a statement about about one of his characteristics and support it with evidence from the story. (Sample response: He does not have good judgment; starting out on his journey in these conditions was not wise.)

Advanced Students may find it easier to understand the symbolism in the story if they explore cultural symbols with which they are already familiar. Explain that a symbol is an object, person, place, or experience that represents something else. Ask students to share familiar symbols they know. Then ask: What does fire symbolize in this story? (life)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Cause and Effect Answer: The man is unimaginative, proud, and unresponsive to the signs of danger.

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Character Point out that experts emphasize the importance of keeping dry in very cold temperatures, because water draws heat away from the body 25 times faster than air does. Ask: What does the man's situation tell you about his character flaws? (He does not foresee consequences; he lacks vision and imagination.)

the forks at half-past twelve. He decided to celebrate that event by eating his lunch there.

The dog dropped in again at his heels, with a tail drooping discouragement, as the man swung along the creek bed. The furrow[11] of the old sled trail was plainly visible, but a dozen inches of snow covered the marks of the last runners. In a month no man had come up or down that silent creek. The man held steadily on. He was not much given to thinking, and just then particularly he had nothing to think about save that he would eat lunch at the forks and that at six o'clock he would be in camp with the boys. There was nobody to talk to; and, had there been, speech would have been impossible because of the ice muzzle on his mouth. So he continued monotonously to chew tobacco and to increase the length of his amber beard.

Once in a while the thought reiterated[12] itself that it was very cold and that he had never experienced such cold. As he walked along he rubbed his cheekbones and nose with the back of his mittened hand. He did this automatically, now and again changing hands. But rub as he would, the instant he stopped his cheekbones went numb, and the following instant the end of his nose went numb. He was sure to frost his cheeks; he knew that, and experienced a pang of regret that he had not devised a nose strap of the sort Bud wore in cold snaps. Such a strap passed across the cheeks, as well, and saved them. But it didn't matter much, after all. What were frosted cheeks? A bit painful, that was all; they were never serious.

Empty as the man's mind was of thoughts, he was keenly observant, and he noticed the changes in the creek, the curves and bends and timber jams, and always he sharply noted where he placed his feet. Once, coming around the bend, he shied[13] abruptly, like a startled horse, curved away from the place where he had been walking, and retreated several paces back along the trail. The creek he knew was frozen clear to the bottom—no creek could contain water in that arctic winter—but he knew also that there were springs that bubbled out from the hillsides and ran along under the snow and on top the ice of the creek. He knew that the coldest snaps never froze these springs, and he knew likewise their danger. They were traps. They hid pools of water under the snow that might be three inches deep, or three feet. Sometimes a skin of ice half an inch thick covered them, and in turn was covered by the snow. Sometimes they were alternate layers of water and ice skin, so that when one broke through he kept on breaking through for a while, sometimes wetting himself to the waist.

2 That was why he had shied in such panic. He had felt the give under his feet and heard the crackle of a snow-hidden ice skin. And to get his feet wet in such a temperature meant trouble and danger. At the very least it meant delay, for he would be forced to stop and build a fire, and under its protection to bare his feet while he dried his socks and moccasins. He stood and studied the creek bed and its banks, and decided that the flow of water came from the right. He reflected awhile, rubbing his nose and cheeks, then skirted to the left, stepping gingerly and testing the footing for each step. Once clear of the danger, he took a fresh chew of tobacco and swung along at his four-mile gait.

In the course of the next two hours he came upon similar traps. Usually the snow above the hidden pools had a sunken, candied appearance that advertised the danger. Once again, however, he had a close call; and once, suspecting danger, he compelled the dog to go on in front. The dog did not want to go. It hung back until the man shoved it forward, and then it went quickly across the white, unbroken surface. Suddenly it broke through, floundered to one side, and got away to firmer footing. It had

---

[11] A furrow is a long, narrow groove or depression.

[12] Reiterated means "repeated."

[13] Shied means "moved suddenly, as in fear."

1 Cause and Effect Why doesn't the man seek shelter and build a fire?

Vocabulary

compel (kəm pel′) v. to force

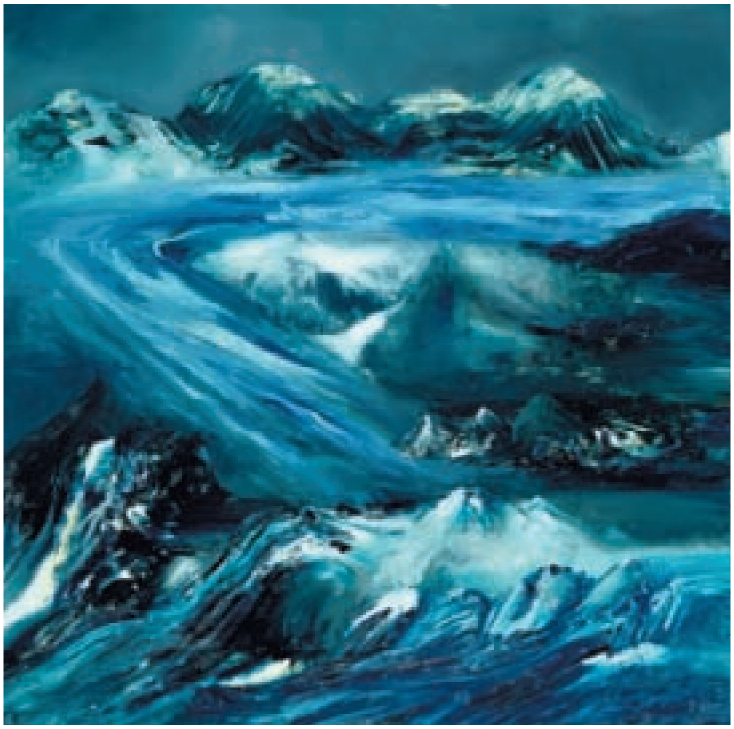
Vocabulary Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Adjectives Tell students that good writers include vivid details to make their descriptions come to life. Adjectives make the text more immediate. Have students reread the paragraph beginning "In the course of the next two hours" and make a list of the adjectives that help the reader "see" the scene. (Adjectives include hidden, sunken, candied, white, unbroken, sore, mysterious, deep, astonished, and swift.) Then ask students to explain how each word appeals to readers' senses.



Glacier, 1964. Sir Sidney Nolan. Oil on board. Private collection.

View the Art As you look at this painting, jot down the first five words that come to mind. Which of these words seems most applicable to the story? Explain. ★ wet its forefeet and legs, and almost immediately the water that clung to it turned to ice. It made quick efforts to lick the ice off its legs, then dropped down in the snow and began to bite out the ice that had formed between the toes. This was a matter of instinct. To permit the ice to remain would mean sore feet. It did not know this. It merely obeyed the mysterious prompting that arose from the deep crypts[14] of its being. But the man knew, having achieved a judgment on the subject, and he removed the mitten from his right hand and helped tear out the ice particles. He did not expose his fingers more than a minute, and was astonished at the swift numbness that smote[15] them. It certainly was cold. He pulled on the mitten hastily, and beat the hand savagely across his chest.

At twelve o'clock the day was at its brightest. Yet the sun was too far south on its winter journey to clear the horizon. The bulge of the earth intervened between it and Henderson Creek, where the man walked under a clear sky at noon and cast no shadow. At half-past twelve, to the minute, he arrived at the forks of the creek. He was pleased at the speed he had made. If he kept it up, he would certainly be with the boys by six. He unbuttoned his jacket and shirt and drew forth his lunch. The action consumed no more than a quarter of a minute, yet in that brief moment the numbness laid hold of the exposed fingers. He did not put the mitten on, but, instead, struck the fingers a dozen sharp smashes against his leg. Then he sat down on a snow-covered log to eat. The sting that followed upon the striking of his fingers against his leg ceased so quickly that he was startled. He had 4

---

[14] Here, crypts means "hidden recesses."

[15] Smote (past tense of smite) means "afflicted" or "attacked."

3 Setting What do these details suggest about the relationship of the man and the environment?

Vocabulary

intervene (in′ tər vēn′) v. to come or lie between

Teach

Literary Element 3

Setting Answer: The man still does not have the proper respect for the environment. He is astonished, but he should not be surprised that nature has the upper hand.

Big Idea 4

Naturalism Ask: What is the symbolic meaning of the fact that the man casts no shadow? (In this vast environment, the man has no importance; nature makes his shadow disappear.) Explain that the symbolism here might be even more important to a Naturalist writer than the scientific reason for the missing shadow.

View the Art ★

Answer: Possible words include majestic, serene, brilliant, vast, crisp. The photograph is beautiful, but the story has a foreboding mood. In other words, there is a discrepancy between the image and what it signifies. Similarly, the man has not yet understood the seriousness of his situation.

Advanced Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Naturalism Challenge advanced students to analyze this story in its larger literary context. Explain that London was a Naturalist, a follower of a movement that began in France during the nineteenth century. Have students read about the ideas of the Naturalists in references such as the Oxford Companion to American Literature and online. Then have students write essays connecting this story to the literary trends of the time, paying particular attention to the role nature plays in the man's life and death.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Contrast Ask: How would you contrast the dog's instinct and the man's intellect? (The dog uses instinct to protect itself from the cold. Intellect can be more powerful than instinct, but London implies that the man's lack of both instinct and imagination will probably cause him to suffer.)

Reading Strategy 2

Cause and Effect Answer: He is sensing real danger for the first time and beginning to realize his mistake in ignoring the old-timer from Sulphur Creek.

Literary Element 3

Suspense London creates suspense in this passage by waiting to provide information. Instead of simply saying that the man fell through the ice, he begins with the ominous phrase "And then it happened." Ask students to continue reading to find another example where London uses this technique to build suspense. (He delays telling the reader about snow from the trees extinguishing the fire.)

had no chance to take a bite of biscuit. He struck the fingers repeatedly and returned them to the mitten, baring the other hand for the purpose of eating. He tried to take a mouthful, but the ice muzzle prevented. He had forgotten to build a fire and thaw out. He chuckled at his foolishness, and as he chuckled he noted the numbness creeping into his exposed fingers. Also, he noted that the stinging which had first come to his toes when he sat down was already passing away. He wondered whether the toes were warm or numb. He moved them inside the moccasins and decided that they were numb.

He pulled the mitten on hurriedly and stood up. He was a bit frightened. He stamped up and down until the sting returned into the feet. It certainly was cold, was his thought. That man from Sulphur Creek had spoken the truth when telling how cold it sometimes got in the country. And he had laughed at him at the time! That showed one must not be too sure of things. There was no mistake about it, it was cold. He strode up and down, stamping his feet and threshing his arms, until reassured by the returning warmth. Then he got out matches and proceeded to make a fire. From the undergrowth, where high water of the previous spring had lodged a supply of seasoned twigs, he got his firewood. Working carefully from a small beginning, he soon had a roaring fire, over which he thawed the ice from his face and in the protection of which he ate his biscuits. For the moment the cold of space was outwitted. 1 The dog took satisfaction in the fire, stretching out close enough for warmth and far enough away to escape being singed.

When the man had finished, he filled his pipe and took his comfortable time over a smoke. Then he pulled on his mittens, settled the earflaps of his cap firmly about his ears, and took the creek trail up the left fork. The dog was disappointed and yearned back toward the fire. This man did not know cold. Possibly all the generations of his ancestry had been ignorant of cold, of real cold, of cold one hundred and seven degrees below freezing point. But the dog knew; all its ancestry knew, and it had inherited the knowledge. And it knew that it was not good to walk abroad in such fearful cold. It was the time to lie snug in a hole in the snow and wait for a curtain of cloud to be drawn across the face of outer space whence this cold came. On the other hand, there was no keen intimacy between the dog and the man. The one was the toil slave of the other, and the only caresses it had ever received were the caresses of the whiplash and of harsh and menacing throat sounds that threatened the whiplash. So the dog made no effort to communicate its apprehension to the man. It was not concerned in the welfare of the man; it was for its own sake that it yearned back toward the fire. But the man whistled, and spoke to it with the sound of whiplashes, and the dog swung in at the man's heels and followed after.

The man took a chew of tobacco and proceeded to start a new amber beard. Also, his moist breath quickly powdered with white his mustache, eyebrows, and lashes. There did not seem to be so many springs on the left fork of the Henderson, and for half an hour the man saw no signs of any. And then it happened. At a place where there were no signs, where the soft, unbroken snow seemed to advertise solidity beneath, the man broke through. 3 It was not deep. He wet himself to the knees before he floundered out to the firm crust.

He was angry, and cursed his luck aloud. He had hoped to get into camp with the boys at six o'clock, and this would delay him an hour, for he would have to build a fire and dry out his foot gear. This was imperative[16] at that low temperature—he knew that much; and he turned aside to the bank, which he climbed. On top, tangled in the underbrush about the trunks of several small spruce trees, was a high-water deposit of dry fire-

2 Cause and Effect Why does the man suddenly recall the man from Sulphur Creek?

Naturalism What view of nature is suggested by this passage? 4

---

[16] Imperative means "absolutely necessary."

Assessment Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW

Multiple-Choice Questions Point out that although multiple-choice items often test basic comprehension of story details, they may require critical thinking. Write the following example on the board:

What inference can you make about the old-timer on Sulphur Creek?

A. He valued instinct over intellect.

B. He had experience in the cold climate.

C. He was not very adventurous.

D. He respected all creatures.

(The correct answer is B.)

Review with the class ways to evaluate the answer choices so that they can eliminate incorrect ones.

wood—sticks and twigs, principally, but also larger portions of seasoned branches and fine, dry, last-year's grasses. He threw down several large pieces on top of the snow. This served for a foundation and prevented the young flame from drowning itself in the snow it otherwise would melt. The flame he got by touching a match to a small shred of birch bark that he took from his pocket. This burned even more readily than paper. Placing it on the foundation, he fed the young flame with wisps of dry grass and with the tiniest dry twigs.

He worked slowly and carefully, keenly aware of his danger. Gradually, as the flame grew stronger, he increased the size of the twigs with which he fed it. He squatted in the snow, pulling the twigs out from their entanglement in the brush and feeding directly to the flame. He knew there must be no failure. When it is seventy-five below zero, a man must not fail in his first attempt to build a fire—that is, if his feet are wet. If his feet are dry, and he fails, he can run along the trail for half a mile and restore his circulation. But the circulation of wet and freezing feet cannot be restored by running when it is seventy-five below. No matter how fast he runs, the wet feet will freeze the harder.

All this the man knew. The old-timer on Sulphur Creek had told him about it the previous fall, and now he was appreciating the advice. Already all sensation had gone out of his feet. To build the fire he had been forced to remove his mittens, and the fingers had quickly gone numb. His pace of four miles an hour had kept his heart pumping blood to the surface of his body and to all the extremities. But the instant he stopped, the action of the pump eased down. The cold of space smote the unprotected tip of the planet, and he, being on that unprotected tip, received the full force of the blow. The blood of his body recoiled before it. The blood was alive, like the dog, and like the dog it wanted to hide away and cover itself up from the fearful cold. So long as he walked four miles an hour, he pumped that blood, willy-nilly,[17] to the surface; but now it ebbed[18] away and sank down into the recesses of his body. The extremities were the first to feel its absence. His wet feet froze the faster, and his exposed fingers numbed the faster, though they had not yet begun to freeze. Nose and cheeks were already freezing, while the skin of all his body chilled as it lost its blood.

But he was safe. Toes and nose and cheeks would be only touched by the frost, for the fire was beginning to burn with strength. He was feeding it with twigs the size of his finger. In another minute he would be able to feed it with branches the size of his wrist, and then he could remove his wet foot gear, and, while it dried, he could keep his naked feet warm by the fire, rubbing them at first, of course, with snow. The fire was a success. He was safe. He remembered the advice of the old-timer on Sulphur Creek, and smiled. The old-timer had been very serious in 5 laying down the law that no man must travel alone in the Klondike after fifty below. Well, here he was; he had had the accident; he was alone; and he had saved himself. Those old-timers were rather womanish, some of them, he thought. All a man had to do was to keep his head, and he was all right. Any man who was a man could travel alone. But it was surprising, the rapidity with which his cheeks and nose were freezing. And he had not thought his fingers could go lifeless in so short a time. Lifeless they were, for he could scarcely make them move together to grip a twig, and they seemed remote from his body and from him. When he touched a twig, he had to look and see whether or not he had hold of it. The wires were pretty well down between him and his finger-ends.

All of which counted for little. There was the fire, snapping and crackling and promising life with every dancing flame. He started to untie his moccasins. They were coated with ice; the thick German socks were like sheaths of iron 6 halfway to the knees; and the moccasin strings were like rods of steel all twisted and knotted as by some conflagration. For a moment he tugged with his numb fingers, then, realizing the folly of it, he drew his sheath-knife.

But before he could cut the strings, it happened. It was his own fault or, rather, his mis-

---

[17] Willy-nilly means "without choice."

[18] Ebbed means "flowed back" or "receded."

Teach

Big Idea 4

Naturalism Answer: The man is caught in one of nature's traps. Nature is indifferent and does not regard him as a special creature.

Reading Strategy 5

Draw Conclusions Ask: What conclusions can you draw about the man, based on his comment about the old-timer from Sulphur Creek? (He lives only in the moment; he is arrogant.)

Literary Element 6

Simile Remind students that a simile is a comparison between two unlike things that contains the word like or as. Ask students to identify the similes in this passage and tell why the author includes them. (London compares the man's socks to "sheaths of iron" and his moccasin strings to "rods of steel." These similes emphasize the difficulties the man encounters in trying to remove his socks and shoes.)

English Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Intermediate Help English learners clarify the following expressions on this page and the next:

- "old-timer" (old man or someone out of touch with the present times)
- "keep his head" (stay calm and think clearly)
- "the fire . . . promising life" (the fire gives the man hope)
- "each bough was fully freighted" (each tree branch had a full load or burden)
- "sentence of death" (death sentence, handed down by a court as a punishment for a crime. In this case, the man realizes he is going to die.)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Cause and Effect Answer: The man's lack of imagination and pursuit of his own comfort finally catch up with him. He should have thought about the consequences of building a fire under a tree rather than out in the open.

take. He should not have built the fire under the spruce tree. He should have built it in the open. But it had been easier to pull twigs from the brush and drop them directly on the fire. Now the tree under which he had done this carried a weight of snow on its boughs. No wind had blown for weeks, and each bough was fully freighted. Each time he had pulled a twig he had communicated a slight agitation to the tree—an imperceptible agitation, so far as he was concerned, but an agitation sufficient to bring about the disaster. High up in the tree one bough capsized its load of snow. This fell on the boughs beneath, capsizing them. This process continued, spreading out and involving the whole tree. It grew like an avalanche, and it descended without warning upon the man and the fire, and the fire was blotted out! Where it had burned was a mantle of fresh and disordered snow.

The man was shocked. It was as though he had just heard his own sentence of death. For a moment he sat and stared at the spot where the fire had been. Then he grew very calm. Perhaps the old-timer on Sulphur Creek was right. If he had only had a trail mate he would have been in no danger now. The trail mate could have built the fire. Well, it was up to him to build the fire over again, and this second time there must be no failure. Even if he succeeded, he would most likely lose some toes. His feet must be badly frozen by now, and there would be some time before the second fire was ready.

Such were his thoughts, but he did not sit and think them. He was busy all the time they were passing through his mind. He made a new foundation for a fire, this time in the open, where no treacherous tree could blot it out. Next, he gathered dry grasses and tiny twigs from the high-water flotsam.[19] He could not bring his fingers together to pull them out, but he was able to gather them by the handful. In this way he got many rotten twigs and bits of green moss that were undesirable, but it was the best he could do. He worked methodically, even collecting an armful of the larger branches to be used later when the fire gathered strength. And all the while the dog sat and watched him, a certain yearning wistfulness[20] in its eyes, for it looked upon him as the fire provider, and the fire was slow in coming.

When all was ready, the man reached in his pocket for a second piece of birch bark. He knew the bark was there, and, though he could not feel it with his fingers, he could hear its crisp rustling as he fumbled for it. Try as he would, he could not clutch hold of it. And all the time, in his consciousness, was the knowledge that each instant his feet were freezing. This thought tended to put him in a panic, but he fought against it and kept calm. He pulled on his mittens with his teeth, and threshed his arms back and forth, beating his hands with all his might against his sides. He did this sitting down, and he stood up to do it; and all the while the dog sat in the snow, its wolf brush of a tail curled around warmly over its forefeet, its sharp wolf ears pricked forward intently as it watched the man. And the man, as he beat and threshed with his arms and hands, felt a great surge of envy as he regarded

> There was the fire, snapping and crackling and promising life with every dancing flame.

1 Cause and Effect Why does the man make a crucial mistake when his life is on the line?

---

[19] Flotsam (flot′ səm) is floating debris, here left behind by a river or stream in the spring when the water rises with the runoff from melting snow and ice.

[20] Wistfulness means "thoughtful sadness."

Writing Practice

Cause and Effect Remind students that when they read, they should look for signal words to identify relationships in text. Tell them that when they write, they should provide those signal words to show relationships among their ideas. List the following words and phrases on the board:

because because of
as a result in order to so so that consequently therefore

Tell students that these words often signal a cause and effect relationship.

Have students write three or four sentences explaining causes and effects in this story and using words that signal the cause or effect.

the creature that was warm and secure in its natural covering.

After a time he was aware of the first faraway signals of sensation in his beaten fingers. The faint tingling grew stronger till it evolved into a stinging ache that was excruciating, but which the man hailed with satisfaction. He stripped the mitten from his right hand and fetched forth the birch bark. The exposed fingers were quickly going numb again. Next he brought out his bunch of sulphur matches. But the tremendous cold had already driven the life out of his fingers. In his effort to separate one match from the others, the whole bunch fell in the snow. He tried to pick it out of the snow, but failed. The dead fingers could neither touch nor clutch. He was very careful. He drove the thought of his freezing feet, and nose, and cheeks, out of his mind, devoting his whole soul to the matches. He watched, using the sense of vision in place of that of touch, and when he saw his fingers on each side of the bunch, he closed them—that is, he willed to close them, for the wires were down, and the fingers did not obey. He pulled the mitten on the right hand, and beat it fiercely against his knee. Then, with both mittened hands, he scooped the bunch of matches, along with much snow, into his lap. Yet he was no better off.

After some manipulation he managed to get the bunch between the heels of his mittened hands. In this fashion he carried it to his mouth. The ice crackled and snapped when by a violent effort he opened his mouth. He drew the lower jaw in, curled the upper lip out of the way, and scraped the bunch with his upper teeth in order to separate a match. He succeeded in getting one, which he dropped on his lap. He was no better off. He could not pick it up. Then he devised a way. He picked it up in his teeth and scratched it on his leg. Twenty times he scratched before he succeeded in lighting it. As it flamed he held it with his teeth to the birch bark. But the burning brimstone[21] went up his nostrils and into his lungs, causing him to cough spasmodically.[22] The match fell into the snow and went out.

The old-timer on Sulphur Creek was right, he thought in the moment of controlled despair that ensued;[23] after fifty below, a man should travel with a partner. He beat his hands, but failed in exciting any sensation. Suddenly he bared both hands, removing his mittens with his teeth. He caught the whole bunch between the heels of his hands. His arm muscles not being frozen enabled him to press the hand heels tightly against the matches. Then he scratched the bunch along his leg. It flared into flame, seventy sulphur matches at once! There was no wind to blow them out. He kept his head to one side to escape the strangling fumes, and held the blazing bunch to the birch bark. As he so held it, he became aware of sensation in his hand. His flesh was burning. He could smell it. Deep down below the surface he could feel it. The sensation developed into pain that grew acute. And still he endured it, holding the flame of the matches clumsily to the bark that would not light readily because his own burning hands were in the way, absorbing most of the flame.

At last, when he could endure no more, he jerked his hands apart. The blazing matches fell sizzling into the snow, but the birch bark was alight. He began laying dry grasses and the tiniest twigs on the flame. He could not pick and choose, for he had to lift the fuel between the heels of his hands. Small pieces of rotten wood and green moss clung to the twigs, and he bit them off as well as he could with his teeth. He cherished the flame carefully and awkwardly. It

---

[21] Brimstone is sulfur.

[22] Spasmodically means "in a sudden, violent manner" or "convulsively."

[23] Ensued means "happened afterward" or "followed."

2 Naturalism Why is the dog better adapted to survive in this environment? Explain.

3 Naturalism Why does the author use the phrase the wires were down?

Cause and Effect What will be the likely consequences of the man's failure to build a fire a second time? 4

Teach

Big Idea 2

Naturalism Answer: The dog is better adapted to survive because its fur protects it from the cold and its instincts guide its actions.

Big Idea 3

Naturalism Answer: The phrase equates the man's body to an electrical system that has broken down as a result of the extreme weather.

Reading Strategy 4

Cause and Effect Answer: The man cannot make a third attempt because he has no more matches and has lost control of his hands. He will not be able to thaw out his wet and frozen feet and is likely to freeze to death in the wilderness.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ensure that English learners know the meaning of consequences. Clarify that the man's failure to build a fire is a cause, and the consequence is the effect, or what will happen as a result.

Approaching Level

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Emerging Remind students that conflict in a story is the struggle between opposing forces. Conflict can be either external—such as a character struggling against another character or against nature—or internal—a character struggling against something within himself or herself. Tell them that this story contains both external and internal conflicts. Ask: What is the external conflict the man is involved in? (He is struggling against the environment to stay alive.) What is his internal conflict? (He is struggling to stay calm, focused, and in control.)

Teach

Vocabulary 1

Word Parts Ask: What is the root of the word apathetically, and what does it mean? (The root is path, meaning "emotion.") What does the prefix a- generally mean? (not) What does the -ly ending mean? (that the word is an adverb) Have students put the word parts together to come up with a meaning for apathetically. ("in a manner that shows no emotion")

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Conflict By this point, students should be fully aware of the external conflict that London has created. Say: Describe the second conflict going on. It is an internal conflict. (Students should observe the man's difficulty in staying calm as he realizes what is happening to him.) Ask: Is one conflict more significant to London? Explain. (Some students will say that London is more interested in the man's internal conflict.)

Literary Element 3

Setting Answer: The fire represents life, so the setting must represent death.

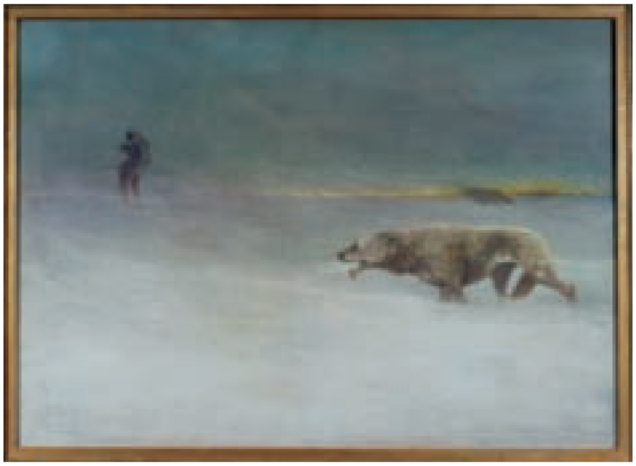
---

meant life, and it must not perish. The withdrawal of blood from the surface of his body now made him begin to shiver, and he grew more awkward. A large piece of green moss fell squarely on the little fire. He tried to poke it out with his fingers, but his shivering frame made him poke too far, and he disrupted the nucleus of the little fire, the burning grasses and tiny twigs separating and scattering. He tried to poke them together again, but in spite of the tenseness of the effort, his shivering got away with him, and the twigs were hopelessly scattered. Each twig gushed a puff of smoke and went out. The fire provider had failed. As he looked apathetically about 1 him, his eyes chanced on the dog, sitting across the ruins of the fire from him, in the snow, making restless, hunching movements, slightly lifting one forefoot and then the other, shifting its weight back and forth on them with wistful eagerness.

The sight of the dog put a wild idea into his head. He remembered the tale of the man, caught in a blizzard, who killed a steer and crawled inside the carcass, and so was saved. He would kill the dog and bury his hands in the warm body until the numbness went out of them. Then he could build another fire. He spoke to the dog, calling it to him; but in his voice was a strange note of fear that frightened 2 the animal, who had never known the man to speak in such way before. Something was the matter, and its suspicious nature sensed danger—it knew not what danger, but somewhere, somehow, in its brain arose an apprehension of the man. It flattened its ears down at the sound of the man's voice, and its restless, hunching movements and the liftings and shiftings of its forefeet became more pronounced; but it would not come to the man. He got on his hands and knees and crawled toward the dog. This unusual posture again excited suspicion, and the animal sidled mincingly[24] away.



Wolves hunting an explorer, c. 1900. H. Morgal. Watercolour and pencil. Private collection.

The man sat up in the snow for a moment and struggled for calmness. Then he pulled on his mittens, by means of his teeth, and got upon his feet. He glanced down at first in order to assure himself that he was really standing up, for the absence of sensation in his feet left him unrelated to the earth. His erect position in itself started to drive the webs of suspicion from the dog's mind; and when he spoke peremptorily,[25] with the sound of whiplashes in his voice, the dog rendered its customary allegiance and came to him. As it came within reaching distance, the man lost his control. His arms flashed out to the dog, and he experienced genuine surprise when he discovered that his hands could not clutch, that there was neither bend nor feeling in the fingers. He had forgotten for the moment that they were frozen and that they were freezing more and more. All this happened

3 Setting What does this detail tell you about the setting?

Vocabulary

apathetically (ap´ ə thet´ i kal ē) adv. in a manner showing little interest or concern

---

[24] Sidled mincingly means "moved sideways in a careful manner."

[25] Peremptorily (pə remp´ tə rə lē) means "authoritatively" or "dictatorially."

Skills Practice

WRITING: Narrative Account
Have students imagine that they are one of the miners in the camp where the man in this story was heading. Eventually this miner is out in the woods and comes across the man's body. Have students write the first-person account that the finder tells others when he returns to camp. Students should include not only what he sees but his conclusions about what happened based on the evidence nearby.

quickly, and before the animal could get away, he encircled its body with his arms. He sat down in the snow, and in this fashion held the dog, while it snarled and whined and struggled.

But it was all he could do, hold its body encircled in his arms and sit there. He realized that he could not kill the dog. There was no way to do it. With his helpless hands he could neither draw nor hold his sheath knife nor throttle the animal. He released it, and it plunged wildly away, with tail between its legs, and still snarling. It halted forty feet away and surveyed him cautiously, with ears sharply pricked forward. The man looked down at his hands in order to locate them, and found them hanging on the ends of his arms. It struck him as curious that one should have to use his eyes in order to find out where his hands were. He began threshing his arms back and forth, beating the mittened hands against his sides. He did this for five minutes, violently, and his heart pumped enough blood up to the surface to put a stop to his shivering. But no sensation was aroused in the hands. He had an impression that they hung like weights on the ends of his arms, but when he tried to run the impression down, he could not find it.

A certain fear of death, dull and oppressive, came to him. This fear quickly became poignant[26] as he realized that it was no longer a mere matter of freezing his fingers and toes, or of losing his hands and feet, but that it was a matter of life and death with the chances against him. This threw him into a panic, and he turned and ran up the creek bed along the old, dim trail. The dog joined in behind and kept up with him. He ran blindly, without intention, in fear such as he had never known in his life. Slowly, as he ploughed and floundered through the snow, he began to see things again—the banks of the creek, the old timber jams, the leafless aspens, and the sky. The running made him feel better. He did not shiver. Maybe, if he ran on, his feet would thaw out; and, anyway, if he ran far enough, he would reach camp and the boys. Without doubt he would lose some fingers and toes and some of his face; but the boys would take care of him, and save the rest of him when he got there. And at the same time there was another thought in his mind that said he would never get to the camp and the boys; that it was too many miles away, that the freezing had too great a start on him, and that he would soon be stiff and dead. This thought he kept in the background and refused to consider. Sometimes it pushed itself forward and demanded to be heard, but he thrust it back and strove to think of other things.

It struck him as curious that he could run at all on feet so frozen that he could not feel them when they struck the earth and took the weight of his body. He seemed to himself to skim along above the surface, and to have no connection with the earth. Somewhere he had once seen a winged Mercury, and he wondered if Mercury felt as he felt when skimming over the earth.

Visual Vocabulary
In Roman mythology, Mercury is the messenger of the gods. He is portrayed wearing a winged hat and winged sandals.

His theory of running until he reached camp and the boys had one flaw in it: he lacked the endurance. Several times he stumbled, and finally he tottered, crumpled up, and fell. When he tried to rise, he failed. He must sit and rest, he decided, and next time he would merely walk and keep on going. As he sat and regained his breath, he noted that he was feeling quite warm and comfortable. He was not shiver-

---

[26] Poignant (poin′ yənt) means "sharply felt" or "intensely distressing."

4 Cause and Effect Why does the man forget that his hands are frozen?

5 Cause and Effect Why does the man try to repress thoughts of his impending death?

Teach

Reading Strategy 4

Cause and Effect Answer: The man no longer feels any sensation in his hands.

Reading Strategy 5

Cause and Effect Answer: The man is afraid that such thoughts will make him panic. Even with death near, he refuses to think of his fate and recognize the power of nature.

Language History

Hypothermia The character in this story is experiencing hypothermia, a condition of dangerously low body temperature. Explain that the word comes from hypo-, meaning "below," and therme, meaning "heat." The man's extreme shivering, the numbness in his hands and feet, and his inability to use his muscles properly are symptoms. As he continues to chill, he will become confused, and before long his organs will fail, resulting in his death.

Approaching Level

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

Established To reinforce the concept of cause and effect, present the following example: Judy was late to school because she overslept. She overslept because she stayed up late the night before reading a good book. Ask: What happened first? (Judy read a good book.) Say: Judy's reading a book is a cause. What did it cause to happen? (Judy went to bed late.) Say: Going to bed late was the effect of her reading. It was also a cause. What did it cause? (Judy overslept.) What was the final effect? (She was late for school.)

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism Answer: The man's ability to cope with the cold is decreasing. He now feels he has lost control over his condition.

Literary Element 2

Setting Answer: There is no mourning for the man's death. On the contrary, it is as if nature is celebrating a victory.

ADVANCED Ask advanced students to explain the irony in this description. (Leaping and dancing are activities associated with life, not with death.)

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p.170.

Progress Check

Can students analyze setting?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 165.

---

ing, and it even seemed that a warm glow had come to his chest and trunk. And yet, when he touched his nose or cheeks, there was no sensation. Running would not thaw them out. Nor would it thaw out his hands and feet. Then the thought came to him that the frozen portions of his body must be extending. He tried to keep this thought down, to forget it, to think of something else; he was aware of the panicky feeling that it caused, and he was afraid of the panic. But the thought asserted itself, and persisted, until it produced a vision of his body totally frozen. This was too much, and he made another wild run along the trail. Once he slowed down to a walk, but the thought of the freezing extending itself made him run again.

And all the time the dog ran with him, at his heels. When he fell down a second time, it curled its tail over its forefeet and sat in front of him, facing him, curiously eager and intent. The warmth and security of the animal angered him, and he cursed it till it flattened down its ears appeasingly. This time the shivering came more quickly upon the man. He was losing in his battle with the frost. It was creeping into his body from all sides. The thought of it drove him on, but he ran no more than a hundred feet, when he staggered and pitched headlong. It was his last panic. When he had recovered his breath and control, he sat up and entertained in his mind the conception of meeting death with dignity. However, the conception did not come to him in such terms. His idea of it was that he had been making a fool of himself, running around like a chicken with its head cut off—such was the simile that occurred to him. Well, he was bound to freeze anyway, and he might as well take it decently. With this newfound peace of mind came the first glimmerings of drowsiness. A good idea, he thought, to sleep off to death. It was like taking an anaesthetic.[27] Freezing was not so bad as people thought. There were lots worse ways to die.

He pictured the boys finding his body next day. Suddenly he found himself with them, coming along the trail and looking for himself. And, still with them, he came around a turn in the trail and found himself lying in the snow. He did not belong with himself any more, for even then he was out of himself, standing with the boys and looking at himself in the snow. It certainly was cold, was his thought. When he got back to the States he could tell the folks what real cold was. He drifted on from this to a vision of the old-timer on Sulphur Creek. He could see him quite clearly, warm and comfortable, and smoking a pipe.

"You were right, old hoss; you were right," the man mumbled to the old-timer on Sulphur Creek.

Then the man drowsed off into what seemed to him the most comfortable and satisfying sleep he had ever known. The dog sat facing him and waiting. The brief day drew to a close in a long, slow twilight. There were no signs of a fire to be made, and, besides, never in the dog's experience had it known a man to sit like that in the snow and make no fire. As the twilight drew on, its eager yearning for the fire mastered it, and with a great lifting and shifting of its forefeet, it whined softly, then flattened its ears down in anticipation of being chidden[28] by the man. But the man remained silent. Later, the dog whined loudly. And still later it crept close to the man and caught the scent of death. This made the animal bristle and back away. A little longer it delayed, howling under the stars that leaped and danced and shone brightly in the cold sky. Then it turned and trotted up the trail in the direction of the camp it knew, where were the other food providers and fire providers.

---

[27] An anaesthetic is something that produces a loss of sensation.

[28] Chidden (past participle of chide) means "scolded."

1 Naturalism What do these thoughts tell us about the man as he faces this hostile environment?

2 Setting Why does the author describe the stars as leaping and dancing?

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Avoid Clichés Point out the simile "running around like a chicken with its head cut off." Ask students to explain the image. Then explain to them that this simile is a cliché, an overused and unoriginal expression. Ask them for other examples of clichés that they know, either in English or in their native languages. Tell them that it is best to avoid clichés in writing. Point out that London is not suggesting that a cliché is acceptable in a literary story; he is putting the cliché into his character's thoughts. His character, as he has already demonstrated, lacks imagination.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which images from the story do you find the most vivid and memorable?
2. (a)Where is the man going and what is his attitude toward his journey? (b)What can you infer about the man's personality and character based on the first five paragraphs?
3. (a)Describe how the man's dog behaves. (b)What event does the dog's behavior foreshadow?
4. (a)What mishap occurs shortly after the man eats lunch and resumes his journey? (b)What external and internal forces must the man struggle against?
5. (a)What happens to the man and his dog at the end of the story? (b)What lesson or lessons might be learned from reading this story?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. How are the events of the story reflected in the change of mood as the story develops?
7. (a)What contrasting qualities do the dog and the man have? (b)What does the ending suggest about London's view of these qualities in relation to survival in the natural world?

Connect

8. Big Idea Naturalism (a)What elements of Naturalism does the story contain? (b)How might the story have been different if it had been written by a Romantic writer?
9. Connect to Today In an age of computers, cellular phones, and GPS devices, do you think the theme of man battling against nature is still relevant? Explain.

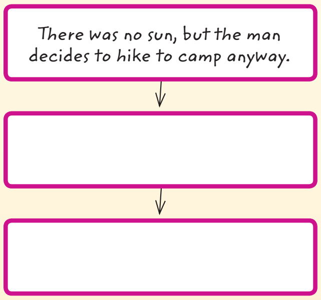
Literary Element Setting

"To Build a Fire" is set in a specific historical time and place. The setting of London's story is well-defined and essential; without the setting, this particular story could not have been written.

1. (a)How does the setting of the story establish the central conflict? (b)How does it influence the resolution, or final outcome, of this conflict?
2. How does London reveal the man's character through his interactions with the physical environment? Give specific examples.
3. How would you describe the relationship between humans and the environment in this story?

Review: Suspense

Suspense is a feeling of curiosity, anticipation, or even dread about what is going to happen next. Writers can increase suspense by creating a threat to the central character, or protagonist, and by giving readers clues as to what might happen.



There was no sun, but the man decides to hike to camp anyway.

Group Activity With a small group of classmates, discuss how each event in "To Build a Fire" builds suspense, ultimately leading to the final scene. Create a flow chart like the one started below.

After You Read

Assess

1. Burning hands, imposing setting
2. (a) He is going to Henderson Creek and feels no danger. (b) He is arrogant and does not prepare well.
3. (a) The dog fears the man, whom he associates with whippings, and wants to dig in, knowing that the temperature is too low for traveling. (b) The man's death is foreshadowed.
4. (a) The man accidentally gets his feet wet. (b) He fights nature and his fear.
5. (a) The man dies; the dog heads toward camp. (b) One must listen to experts and prepare; instincts are survival tools.
6. The changing mood reflects the man's increasing desperation.
7. (a) The man ignores common sense and dies; the dog follows instinct and survives. (b) Instinct prevails over flawed reason.
8. (a) The man struggles against forces that are beyond his control; the tone lacks sentiment. (b) A Romantic writer might have portrayed nature as vengeful rather than indifferent.
9. Most students will probably agree that nature is still a force greater than man. They may mention events such as hurricanes, tsunamis, earthquakes, or other natural disasters.

Literary Element

1. (a) The frigid snowy environment is the man's major antagonist. (b) Environmental factors prevent the man from building a life-saving fire.
2. The man lacks respect for the cold; he builds his fire too close to a tree.
3. Humans are victims, not masters, of the environment.

Review: Suspense

Possible answer: The man breaks through the ice and gets his feet wet; the man builds a fire that is extinguished by snow that falls from a tree.

Allow students to include more than three entries in their charts.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 183–184.

After You Read

Assess

Reading Strategy

1. D is the correct answer because having another person with him would have enabled the man to avoid or make up for his other mistakes.

Vocabulary

- intangible: not easily defined or evaluated by the mind (from Latin tangibilis, meaning "that may be touched"); Some people do not believe in intangible things that they cannot observe with their five senses.
- immortality: the condition of having eternal life (from Latin mort, meaning "death"); In some tales, the characters' wish for immortality backfires as their loved ones die.
- compel: to force (from Latin pellere, meaning "to drive"); The defense argued that police compelled the defendant to falsely confess.
- intervene: to come or lie between (from Latin venire, meaning "to come"); School security had to intervene when a fight broke out in the hallway.
- apathetically: in a manner showing little interest or concern (from Latin pathein, meaning "to suffer"); We knew the play was a flop when the audience responded apathetically.

Reading Strategy Analyze Cause-and-Effect Relationships

ACT Skills Practice

1. What was the greatest mistake made by the man in the story?
   A. Not having an imagination
   B. Not bringing water with him
   C. Getting his feet wet
   D. Traveling alone

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Word Origins Studying the origins of a word can help you understand and explore its meaning. Create a word map, like the one below, for each of these vocabulary words from the selection. Use a dictionary for help.

intangible intervene immortality apathetically compel

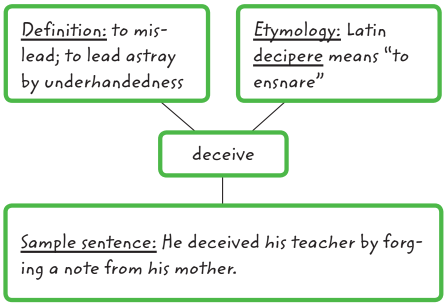
EXAMPLE:



Definition: to mislead; to lead astray by underhandedness
Etymology: Latin decipere means "to ensnare" deceive
Sample sentence: He deceived his teacher by forging a note from his mother.

Academic Vocabulary

In order to survive, the man in "To Build a Fire" relies solely on his ability to make fire.

Solely is an academic word. Using context clues, try to figure out the meaning of solely in the sentence above. Check your inference in a print or online dictionary.

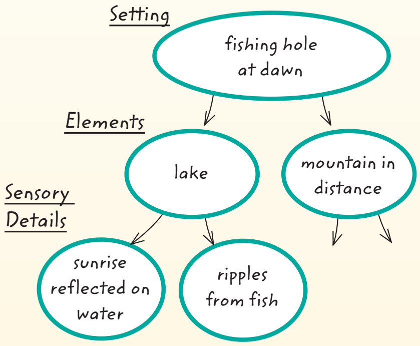
For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Write with Style

Apply Imagery

Assignment Setting is an integral part of this story. Think of a place that is special to you and, with London's work as an example, write a descriptive essay about that place.

Get Ideas Gather information about your place: review journal entries, look at photo albums, or jot down ideas about when and why you go there. If you can, visit the setting and note specific details you observe. Then make a graphic organizer like the one started below. At the center, write the name of your setting. Around the central circle, write several elements of your setting. Extending from each element, list specific sensory details.



Give It Structure Consider the different ways you could structure your essay, such as spatially, chronologically, or in order of importance. Put a number next to each element in your chart indicating the order in which you will include it in your essay. Use your graphic organizer to help you write your draft.

Look at Language After you finish writing, reread your essay and evaluate your word choice. Make sure your words reflect the mood of your setting and the impression you want to create.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Academic Vocabulary

The man must rely only on his ability because he is alone in the wilderness; this implies that solely means "exclusively."

For grammar practice, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 169.

Writing

Use these criteria when evaluating students' writing:

- Does the writer use specific sensory details to describe the setting?
- Does the writer's word choice create an appropriate mood for the setting?
- Does the writer give a full sensory picture of the setting?

from
ARCTIC DREAMS:
Imagination and Desire in a Northern Landscape
Barry Lopez

National Book Award Winner

Learning Objectives

For pages 617–623

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Making connections across literature.

Reading:
Analyzing relevance of setting.
Analyzing informational text.

Set a Purpose for Reading

As you read, ask yourself, What might compel a person to venture into the Arctic? How do people survive the harsh conditions there?

Build Background

Writer and photographer Barry Lopez finds many of the subjects for his writing in nature and the environment. He is often drawn to extreme locales, describing his own experiences in those harsh regions. In the following passage from Arctic Dreams, Lopez describes his experiences working with scientists in the Arctic Ocean.

Reading Strategy

1 Analyze Relevance of Setting

Analyzing the relevance of setting involves gathering information about the importance of time and place in a literary work. Remember that setting is not limited to the characters' physical surroundings. As you read, take notes about the setting of both Arctic Dreams and "To Build a Fire." Use a two-column chart like the one below.

Setting of "To Build a Fire"	Setting of Arctic Dreams

We left our camp on Pingok Island[1] one morning knowing a storm was moving in from the southwest, but we were not worried. We were planning to work in open water between the beach and the edge of the pack ice,[2] only a few miles out, making bottom trawls[3] from an open 20-foot boat. The four of us were dressed, as usual, in heavy clothes and foul-weather gear.

You accept the possibility of death in such situations, prepare for it, and then forget about it. We carried emergency and survival equipment in addition to all our scientific gear—signal flares, survival suits, a tent, and each of us had a pack with extra clothing, a sleeping bag, and a week's worth of food. Each morning we completed a checklist of the boat and radioed a distant base camp with our day plan. When we departed, we left a handwritten note on the table in our cabin, saying what time we left, the compass bearing we were taking, and when we expected to return.

---

1. Pingok Island lies in the Beaufort Sea, which is a part of the Arctic Ocean.
2. Pack ice is ice formed in the sea from the crashing together of floes and other ice masses.
3. Trawls are large nets that are dragged along the bottom of a body of water to gather marine life.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Preview some of the vocabulary students may not be able to determine from context. For example, to learn the meaning of prow (the forward part of a ship) and floe (a sheet of floating ice), students need to use a dictionary. Tell students to refer to a dictionary for the meaning of all unfamiliar words that cannot be determined by using context clues.

Focus

Summary

Barry Lopez travels with a group of scientists to the Arctic. One day, after the scientists accomplish their research goals in the Beaufort Sea, they set out to search for seals. They soon find that their boat is trapped by ice. The group works its way back to the open sea only to confront a fierce storm. Back at camp, with the storm dying down, Lopez takes a walk and reflects on the motivations of earlier Arctic explorers, and on their dreams and desires.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Relevance of Setting

Before students read this selection, encourage them to recall the details of the setting in "To Build a Fire." Those details will help them construct their two-column charts.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 8.0
DRP: 60
Lexile: 1130

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 172–180.

Geographical Perspective
on To Build a Fire

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism Point out that nature cooperates with the group at first, and then rather suddenly shuts them off from the sea. Say: This view of nature as indifferent to humans is a major theme of Naturalist writers. Ask students to think about this question as they read: Is the author a Naturalist?

Cultural History ☆

Arctic Seal Hunting In the third paragraph on this page, the author refers to a search for seals. He does not say anything about hunting or killing them. Until late into the twentieth century, the native peoples of the Arctic freely hunted seals for food and for skins. They sold the sealskins to Russians and others. After decades of such hunting, the fur seal population has diminished to the point where major restrictions have been placed on the commercial hunting of seals.

My companions, all scientists, were serious about this, but not solemn or tedious. They forestalled trouble by preparing for it, and were guided, not deterred, by the danger inherent in their work. It is a pleasure to travel with such people. As in other walks of life, the person who feels compelled to dramatize the risks or is either smugly complacent or eager to demonstrate his survival skills is someone you hope not to meet.

Our camaraderie came from our enthusiasm for the work and from exhilaration with the landscape, the daily contact with seabirds, seals, and fish. We rarely voiced these things to each other; they surfaced in a word of encouragement or understanding around rough work done in unending dampness and cold. Our mutual regard was founded in the accomplishment of our tasks and was as important to our survival as the emergency gear stowed in a blue box forward of the steering console.

We worked through the morning, sorting the contents of bottom trawls and vertical plankton tows.[4] Around noon we shut the engines off and drifted under overcast skies, eating our lunch. The seas were beginning to slap at the hull, but we had another couple of hours before they built up to three or four feet—our match, comfortably. ☆ We decided, then, to search for seals in the ice front before heading in. An hour later, by a movement of the ice so imperceptible it was finished before we realized it, we were cut off from the sea. The wind, compacting the ice, was closing off the channels of calm water where we had been cruising. We were suddenly 200 yards from open water, and a large floe, turning off the wind and folding in from the west, threatened to close us off even deeper in the pack. Already we had lost steerageway[5]—the boat was pinned at that moment on all four sides.

In those first hours we worked wordlessly and diligently. We all knew what we faced. Even if someone heard our distress call over the radio, we could not tell him precisely where we were, and we were in pack ice moving east. A three-day storm was coming on. The floes might crush the boat and drive it under, or they could force it out of the water where we would have it for shelter. 1

We took advantage of any momentary opening in the ice to move toward open water, widening the channels with ice chisels, pushing with the twin 90-horsepower engines, the four of us heaving at the stern and gunnels.[6] We were angling for a small patch of water within the pack. From there, it seemed, after a quick reconnoiter[7] ahead on foot, we might be able to get out to the open sea. Thirty feet shy of our patch of water, we doubted the wisdom of taking ice chisels to one particular chunk of weathered pressure ice that blocked our path. Fractured the wrong way, its center of gravity would shift and the roll could take the boat under. The only way around it was to pull the boat, which weighed

---

[4] Vertical plankton tows are funnel-shaped nets that are dropped into the water and lifted straight up to collect samples, such as plankton, from the water.

[5] Steerageway is the minimum rate of movement needed to make a boat respond to its rudder.

[6] The stern is the rear of a boat. The gunnel, or gunwale, is the upper edge of the side of a ship.

[7] Reconnoiter means "to survey."

Reading Practice

Use Visual Aids Ask students to locate Pingok Island on a map. Explain that students can use the map as a visual aid to help them follow Lopez's narrative. They should also locate other places Lopez mentions: Harrison Bay, Melville Island, and the Chukchi Sea.

Encourage students to search for map projections that show the relationship of the Arctic to the lands from which its early explorers came, according to Lopez: Scandinavia (Norway, Sweden, and Denmark), Iceland, Ireland, Great Britain, and Russia.

Small boat by iceberg in Disko Bay, Greenland. ★

3000 pounds, completely out of the water. With an improvised system of ice anchors, lines, and block and tackle,[8] and out of the terrific desire to get free, we set to. We got the boat up on the floe, across it, and back into the water.

Had that been open water, we would have cheered. As it was, we exchanged quick glances of justifiable but not foolish hope. While we had been winching the boat over the ice toward it, this patch of water had been closing up. And another large floe still separated us from the ocean. Where the surf broke against it, it fell a sheer four feet to the sea. Even if we got the boat over that ice, we could never launch it from such a precipice. 2

Two stayed in the boat. I and one other went in opposite directions along the floe. Several hundred yards to the east I found a channel. I looked it over quickly and then signaled with the upraised shaft of my ice chisel for the others. It was barely negotiable to begin with, and in the few minutes it took to get the boat there, the channel closed. We put the prow[9] of the boat against the seaward floe and brought both engines up to full power, trying to hold it against the wind. The ice beside it continued to move east. The channel started to open. With the engines roaring, the gap opened to six feet. With a silent, implicit understanding each of us acted decisively. The man at the helm reversed the engines, heeled the boat around, and burst up the channel. We made 20 quick feet, careened the boat over on its port[10] gunnel, and pivoted through a 120° turn. One ran ahead, chopping swift and hard at the closing ice with a chisel. Two of us heaved, jumping in and out of the boat, stabbing at chunks of ice closing on the props.[11] 2 One man remained at the throttles. Suddenly he lunged away, yanking the starboard[12] engine clear of fouling ice. The man ahead threw his ice chisel into the boat and jumped across to help lift at the port gunnel. We could feel how close. The starboard side of the boat slid off the ice, into the water. The bow lifted on the open sea. There was nothing more for our legs to strain against. We pulled ourselves over the gunnel and fell into the boat, limp as feed sacks. Exhausted. We were out.

We were out, and the seas were running six feet. And we were miles now from a shore that we could not see. In the hours we had been in the ice, the storm had built considerably, and we had been carried we did not know how far east. The seas were as much as the boat could handle, and too big to quarter[13]—we had to take them nearly bow-on. The brief views from wave crests showed us nothing. We could not see far enough through the driving sleet and spray, and the arctic coast here lies too low, anyway. We could only hope we were east of Pingok, the westernmost of the barrier islands, and not to the west, headed down into Harrison Bay,[14] where the wind has a greater fetch[15] and the shore is much farther on.

---

[8] A block and tackle is a series of pulleys used to pull or lift a heavy object.

[9] The prow, or bow, is the front of a boat.

[10] Port is a ship's left side.

[11] Here, props means "propellers."

[12] Starboard is a ship's right side.

[13] Here, quarter means "to travel in a crisscross manner."

[14] Harrison Bay is a shallow inlet of the Beaufort Sea.

[15] Here, fetch means "intensity."

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Relevance of Setting Help students picture what the men went through to get the boat into open water. Starting with the paragraph that begins "Had that been open water," have students discuss such things as why they could not winch the boat across the ice floe as they had done over the previous ice floe; why some men stayed in the boat and others got out; how they managed to break through the ice.

View the Photograph ★

Ask: How would you feel if you were on the boat in this photograph? (Awed by the view; frightened by the ice cliffs)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Remind students to look for context clues when they encounter unfamiliar words. Draw their attention to not deterred at the top of page 618. Tell them that guided in the same sentence provides a clue to meaning. Ask: What do you think deter means? (to discourage from doing something)

Ask students to infer the meaning of these terms from the context:

- camaraderie (a friendly relationship)
- imperceptible (hardly noticeable)

Remind students that they should verify the meanings in a dictionary.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Relevance of Setting Say: The physical setting does not change between these paragraphs—Lopez and two others are still standing on the deck of their boat. Why, then, does Lopez switch from the pronoun we to the pronoun I? (Students may point out that although the physical setting has not changed, Lopez has gone somewhere else mentally. No longer working nonstop with the others, he is no longer part of a "we" and is only himself.) Use this passage to introduce the notion that setting can involve more than real time and place.

Tourist on Ellesmere Island.

We took water over the bow and shouted strategy to each other over the wind and the sound of engines screaming as the props came out of the water. We erected a canvas shelter forward to break the force of the sea and shed water. We got all the weight we could out of the bow. A resolute steadiness came over us. We were making headway. We were secure. If we did not broach[16] and if we were far enough to the east, we would be able to run up on a leeward[17] shore somewhere and wait out the storm.

We plowed ahead. Three of us stood hunched backward to the weather.

1 I began to recognize in the enduring steadiness another kind of calmness, or relief. The distance between my body and my thoughts slowly became elongated, and muffled like a dark, carpeted corridor. I realized I was cold, that I was shivering. I sensed the dry pits of warmth under my clothes and, against this, an opening and closing over my chest, like cold breath. I realized with dreamlike stillness that the whole upper right side of my body was soaked. The shoulder seams of my foul-weather gear were torn open.

I knew I had to get to dry clothes, to get them on. But desire could not move my legs or arms. They were too far away. I was staring at someone, then moving; the soaked clothes were coming off. I could not make a word in my mouth. I felt suspended in a shaft in the earth, and then imagined I was sitting on a bare earthen floor somewhere within myself. The knowledge that I was being slammed around like a wooden box in the bottom of the boat was like something I had walked away from.

In dry wool and protected by a tarp from the seas, I understood that I was safe; but I could not understand the duration of time. I could not locate any visual image outside myself. I concentrated on trying to gain a sense of the boat; and then on a rhythmic tensing and loosening of my muscles. I kept at it and at it; then I knew time was passing.

---

[16] Here, broach means "to be turned broadside into the wind."

[17] Leeward, or the lee side, means "facing the same direction toward which the wind is blowing."

Writing Practice

Synthesize Ideas Jack London and Barry Lopez have both written about the Arctic wilderness, London in fiction and Lopez in nonfiction. Ask students to write a paper summarizing what they have learned about the Arctic wilderness from these two selections. Students may describe the environment, discuss its appeal to humans, or examine the challenges it presents. Tell them to include a thesis statement in which they present their main point and to refer to specific details or information from both selections in their papers.

There was a flow of time again. I heard a shout. I tried to shout myself, and when I heard an answer I knew that I was at the edge of time again, and could just step into it. I realized I was sitting up, that I was bracing myself against heavy seas.

The shouts were for the coast. We had found Pingok.

We anchored the boat under the lee shore and went into the cabin and changed clothes and fixed dinner. Our sense of relief came out in a patter of jokes at each other's expense. We ate quietly and went to bed and slept like bears in winter.

The storm blew for two days. We nearly lost the boat when an anchor line parted, and got wet and cold again trying to secure it; but that seemed no more than what we had chosen by coming here. I went for a long walk on the afternoon of the second day, after the storm had become only fretful gusts and sunlight threatened to break through the low clouds.

I still felt a twinge of embarrassment at having been reduced from a state of strength to such an impassive weight, to a state of disassociation, so quickly. But I did not dwell on it long. And we would go out again, when the seas dropped. We would go into the ice again. We would watch more closely; but nothing, really, had changed.

☆ With the experience so fresh in my mind, I began thinking of frail and exposed craft as I walked down the beach, of the Irish carraughs and Norse knarrs[18] that brought people across the Atlantic, bucking pack ice streaming southward on the East Greenland Current. My God, what had driven them? All we know is what we have deduced from the records of early historians. And the deference those men showed to their classical predecessors, to Ptolemy, Solinus, and Isidore,[19] their own nationalism and religious convictions, their vanity, and the shape of the ideas of their age—all this affected what they expressed. And when it was translated, or when they themselves translated from others, interpolations, adaptation, and plain error colored the historical record further. So the early record of arctic exploration is open to interpretation. And this refined history is less real, less harrowing than what had happened to us in the boat. It is events mulled and adjudicated.[20]

I wanted to walk the length of the seaside beach on Pingok, knowing the storm was dying away. I brooded over the fates of those early immigrants, people whose names no one knows, who sailed in ships of which there are neither descriptions nor drawings, through ice and storms like this one—but so much farther from a shore, with intentions and dreams I could only imagine.

The earliest arctic voyages are recorded in the Icelandic sagas and Irish imramha. But they were written down hundreds of years after the fact by people who did not make the journeys, who only heard about them. The Norse Eddas[21] and Icelandic sagas, wrote the arctic explorer and historian Fridtjof Nansen, are "narratives somewhat in the light of historical romances, founded upon legend and more or less uncertain traditions." The same can be said of the imramha and the records of Saint Brendan's voyage,[22] though in tone and incident these latter are different from the sagas.

In the following ages, beginning in a time before the sagas, the notion of a road to Cathay, a Northwest Passage,[23] emerges. The quest for such a corridor, a path to wealth that had to be followed through a perilous landscape, gathers the dreams of several ages. Rooted in this search is one of the oldest of all

---

[18] Carraughs and knarrs are both types of ships.

[19] Ptolemy (c. A.D. 85–165) was a geographer and astronomer; Gaius Julius Solinus (third century A.D.) was a Latin grammarian who wrote a book titled The Wonders of the World; Saint Isidore of Seville (A.D. 560–636) was a Spanish theologian and historian.

[20] Adjudicated means "settled" or "judged."

[21] The sagas, imramha, and Eddas are all tales of sea voyages.

[22] Saint Brendan (c. A.D. 484–578) was an Irish monk who is said to have gone on a seven-year sea voyage in search of the Garden of Eden. Some believe he found North America during this voyage.

Geographical Perspective
on To Build a Fire

Teach

Political History ☆

Exploration Chronology Lopez switches from a personal narrative to a contemplation of earlier human motivations for exploring the Arctic. Make sure that students read the footnotes to follow the chronology, beginning with Norse and Irish voyages, including that of Saint Brendan, and ending in the twentieth century.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Point out that Barry Lopez's text is densely packed with ideas and information. When students encounter text like this, they must slow down, read carefully, and reread. Tell them that it is normal not to understand everything on a first reading, and that rereading is an effective strategy. Have them work with partners to read aloud sentences or short passages and then restate what they just read. The partners can work together to clarify meaning as necessary.

Advanced Learners/Pre-AP

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Research Have advanced students choose one of the early explorers Lopez mentions and consult several electronic and print resources to write reports about him. They should include a formal bibliography, citing their research sources.

Teach

Literary History

Writers Inspiring Writers

Lopez mentions his own reading of travel logs and histories of explorers. These writings inspired him and helped motivate him to explore the Arctic and write about his experiences.

human yearnings—finding the material fortune that lies beyond human struggle, and the peace that lies on the other side of hope.

I should emphasize two points. Few original documents point up the unadorned character, the undisguised sensibilities, of the participants in these dramas. And the most common simile of comparison for these journeys—the exploits of astronauts—falls short. The astronaut is suitably dressed for his work, professionally trained, assiduously looked after en route, and nationally regarded. He possesses superb tools of navigation and observation. The people who first came into the Arctic had no photograph of the far shore before they left. They sailed in crude ships with cruder tools of navigation, and with maps that had no foundation or geographic authority. They shipwrecked so often that it is difficult to find records of their deaths, because shipwreck and death were unremarkable at the time. They received, for the most part, no support—popular or financial. They suffered brutally and fatally from the weather and from scurvy,[24] starvation, Eskimo hostility, and thirst. Their courage and determination in some instances were so extreme as to seem eerie and peculiar rather than heroic. Visions of achievement drove them on. In the worst moments they were held together by regard for each other, by invincible bearing, or by stern naval discipline. Whether one finds such resourceful courage among a group of young monks on a spiritual voyage in a carraugh, or among worldly sailors with John Davis in the sixteenth century, or in William Parry's[25] snug winter quarters on Melville Island in 1819–20, it is a sterling human quality.

In the journals and histories I read of these journeys I was drawn on by a sharp leaning in the human spirit: pure desire—the complexities of human passion and cupidity. Someone, for example, had to pay for these trips; and whoever paid was looking for a way to be paid back. Rarely was the goal anything as selfless as an increase in mankind's geographical knowledge. An arctic voyage in quest of unknown riches, or of a new passage to known riches, could mean tangible wealth for investors, and it could mean fame and social position for a captain or pilot. For a common seaman the reward might only mean some slip of the exotic, or a chance at the riches himself—at the very least a good story, probably something astounding. Enough, certainly, to sign on.

As I read, I tried to imagine the singular hunger for such things, how desire alone might convey a group of people into those fearsome seas. The achievement of one's desires may reveal what one considers moral; but it also reveals the aspiration and tack of an individual life, and the tenor of an age. In this light, one can better understand failures of nerve in the Arctic, such as Bering's in the Chukchi Sea in 1728—he simply did not have Peter the Great's[26] burning desire to define eastern Russia. And one can better understand figures in arctic exploration so obsessed with their own achievement that they found it irksome to acknowledge the Eskimos, unnamed companions, and indefatigable dogs who helped them.

Arctic history became for me, then, a legacy of desire—the desire of individual men to achieve their goals. But it was also the legacy of a kind of desire that transcends heroics and which was privately known to many—the desire for a safe and honorable passage through the world.

As I walked the beach I stopped now and then to pick over something on the storm-hardened shore—bits of whale vertebrae, water-

---

[23] Cathay is an old name for China; the Northwest Passage is a route through the Arctic that passes from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean.

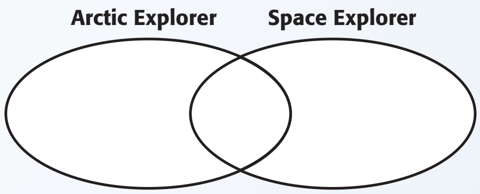
[24] Scurvy is a disease brought on by lack of vitamin C.

[25] Sir William Parry (1790–1855), a British explorer, discovered and named several islands in the Arctic, including the inhospitable Melville Island, where he and his group were forced to spend a winter because of sea ice.

[26] Vitus Bering (1681–1741) was a Danish-born Russian explorer. The Russian tsar Peter the Great chose Bering to discover whether Asia and North America were connected. Heavy fog caused Bering to return to Russia, where he was criticized for not actually seeing the American coast.

Reading Practice

Compare and Contrast Have students reread Lopez's comparison of Arctic explorers and space explorers on pages 621–622. Draw a Venn diagram on the board and fill it in with the aid of the class, noting similarities and differences. Infer Lopez's attitude toward those who explore the Arctic. Students may also make a similar comparison between Lopez's exploration group and the early explorers.



logged feathers, the odd but ubiquitous piece of plastic, a strict reminder against romance.

The narratives I carried in my head that afternoon fascinated me, but not for what they recorded of geographic accomplishment or for how they might be used in support of one side or another of a controversy, such as whether Frederick Cook or Robert Peary[27] got to the Pole first. They held the mind because of what they said about human endeavor. Behind the polite and abstemious journal entries of British naval officers, behind the self-conscious prose of dashing explorers, were the lives of courageous, bewildered, and dreaming people. Some reports suggest that heroic passage took place for many just offstage. They make clear that others struggled mightily to find some meaning in what they were doing in those regions, for the very act of exploration seemed to them at times completely mad. They wanted to feel that what they were doing was necessary, if not for themselves then for the nation, for mankind.

The literature of arctic exploration is frequently offered as a record of resolute will before the menacing fortifications of the landscape. It is more profitable I think to disregard this notion—that the land is an adversary bent on human defeat, that the people who came and went were heroes or failures in this. It is better to contemplate the record of human longing to 1 achieve something significant, to be free of some of the grim weight of life. That weight was ignorance, poverty of spirit, indolence, and the threat of anonymity and destitution. This harsh landscape became the focus of a desire to separate oneself from those things and to overcome them. In these arctic narratives, then, are the threads of dreams that serve us all. ❧

---

[27] Frederick Cook (1865–1940) and Robert Peary (1856–1920) were both American explorers. While Peary is usually listed as the first person to reach the North Pole (in April 1909), Cook claimed to have reached it in 1908.

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Write a brief summary of the main ideas in this article before you answer the following questions. For help on writing a summary, see page 79.
2. What part of this narrative did you find the most engaging? Explain.
3. (a)How does Lopez feel about the scientists with whom he worked? (b)Why is the quality of their relationships important?
4. (a)How does the boat become stuck in the ice? (b)What does this incident suggest about the arctic environment? (c)What does it suggest about the expedition?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. How do Lopez's descriptions at the end of this excerpt compare with Jack London's descriptions at the end of "To Build a Fire"?
6. Lopez recounts the stories of earlier arctic explorers. Do you agree that in these stories are "the threads of dreams that serve us all"? Why or why not?

Connect

7. Briefly describe some of the differences and similarities in the settings of Arctic Dreams and "To Build a Fire." How do these settings affect the events of each?

Geographical Perspective
on To Build a Fire

Teach

Big Idea 1

Naturalism Even though Lopez is writing a century after the Naturalist movement, he avoids romanticizing nature. Ask: What are some examples of Naturalist language in this passage? (Possible answers: "menacing fortifications of the landscape"; "that the land is an adversary bent on human defeat")

Assess

1. Students should identify key events such as leaving camp to search for seals, getting trapped by the ice, returning to camp, reflecting on the challenges, dreams, and desires of early Arctic explorers.
2. The suspense of getting the boat through the ice is likely to have engaged many students.
3. (a) He feels an unspoken camaraderie with them. (b) They are often forced to depend on one another.
4. (a) The wind shifts the ice, which cuts off the route back to the sea. (b) The environment is unpredictable and dangerous. (c) The crew, no matter how diligent, cannot avoid all dangers.
5. Lopez describes feeling that his body and mind have been disconnected. This is similar to London's portrayal of the freezing man's thoughts at the end of "To Build a Fire."
6. Students may suggest that the stories are too far removed from their own experience, or they may suggest that the stories illustrate longings that all people share.
7. Both are set in the Arctic, but the action in Arctic Dreams takes place on the open water, whereas "To Build a Fire" takes place on land. The characters have different motives for their actions and relate to their environments in different ways, even though they face similar struggles. The settings have a profound effect on the events, leading to the death of the man in "To Build a Fire" and giving purpose to the characters in Arctic Dreams.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 185–186.

Literary Analysis

Focus

Bellringer Options

Display works of art, such as the paintings on pages 583, 587, and 590 of the selection "The Open Boat." Ask: What is your response to the art? What elements in the works make you feel as you do? By examining an artwork and considering the different elements that make up the image, students are analyzing it. In a similar way, they will learn how to write a literary analysis by examining a literary work.

Summary

In this workshop, students will write and present literary analyses. They will follow the stages of the writing process, including prewriting, drafting, revising, and editing. In addition, the workshop provides a mini-lesson on subject-verb agreement.

Learning Objectives

For pages 624–633

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing a literary analysis.

Grammar: Maintaining subject-verb agreement.

Writing Process

At any stage of a writing process, you may think of new ideas to include. Feel free to return to earlier stages as you write.

- Prewrite
- Draft
- Revise
- Edit & Proofread
  - Focus Lesson: Subject-Verb Agreement
- Present

Writing Workshop

Literary Analysis

Literature Connection In a well-known quotation Mark Twain emphasizes the importance of precise word choice in writing.

> "The difference between the almost right word and the right word . . . is the difference between the lightning-bug and the lightning."
>
> —Mark Twain, Letter to George Bainton

Analyzing word choice is a kind of literary analysis—a close-up view of a literary work. When writing a literary analysis, first consider your immediate impression of the work. Then as you reread, you can look for themes and techniques that contributed to your impression. By analyzing these elements, you will clarify the deeper meanings and understand how they are revealed. Study the checklist below to learn the goals and strategies for writing a successful literary analysis.

Checklist: Features of Literary Analysis Writing

Goals	Strategies
To analyze one element or aspect of a short story	☑ Demonstrate an understanding of the story as a whole ☑ Show appreciation for the author's style ☑ Find a single, narrow aspect of the story to focus on ☑ Adopt and maintain a third-person point of view
To state and support a clear, insightful thesis	☑ Maintain a consistent focus on your thesis throughout your essay ☑ Quote directly from the story to support your main ideas ☑ Elaborate on main ideas with substantial, specific, and relevant details ☑ Establish a logical pattern of organization
To reflect a careful, thoughtful reading	☑ Make inferences; explain subtle details and complex ideas
To demonstrate a command of language	☑ Use action verbs and other precise or creative language ☑ Vary sentences

Workshop Resources

Print Materials

- Unit 4 Teaching Resources pp. 182-184
- Writing Kit
- Success in Writing: Research and Reports

Technology

- Literature Online: Writing Resources and Grammar Resources, www.glencoe.com
- Online Essay Grader, www.glencoe.com
- Student Presentation Builder on StudentWorks Plus CD-ROM
- Media Workshop DVD
- Online Student Edition

Assignment: Analyze a Short Story

Write a literary analysis of about 1,500 words from the unit. Show how the author's language, characters, plot, setting, themes, or other elements of the text contribute to the story's meaning. As you work, keep your audience and purpose in mind.

Audience: peers, classmates, and teachers who are familiar with the story

Purpose: to demonstrate an understanding of the author's style and appreciation of the effects created

Real-World Connection

Publish your response by reading it aloud to or exchanging it with members of your class who wrote about the same story. Discuss new insights you developed while writing about the story and listening to the work of others.

Analyze a Professional Model

In her literary analysis essay, Bettina L. Knapp analyzes the effects of terror on the crew in Stephen Crane's "The Open Boat." As you read the following passage, note how Knapp uses direct evidence from the story and explains the significance of that evidence. Pay close attention to the comments in the margin. They point out features to include in your own literary analysis.

From Stephen Crane: Tales of Adventure
by Bettina L. Knapp

"None of them knew the color of the sky," is perhaps one of the most celebrated opening lines of any short story. The opening line conveys the fierce struggle between finite man and the infinitude that engulfs him—as in Melville's Moby-Dick. The sea for Crane, as it is for Melville, is "the image of the ungraspable phantom of life."

The men's agony at not knowing their fate is underscored by the power of those surging waters—waves that could sweep the men under at any moment. "The horizon narrowed and widened, and dipped and rose, at all times its edge was jagged with waves that seemed thrust up in points like rocks."

Man, like the helpless survivors in the boat, is thrust here and there and floats about in utter helplessness. No matter how hard people try to fix and direct themselves, they are castaways. Salvation—if there is one—lies in the bonds between men that assuage their implacable solitude.

Thesis

Make a concise judgment that analyzes a literary element, such as theme, throughout the story.

Major Points

Make sure that your major points support your thesis.

Command of Language/ Point of View

Use action verbs and other precise words. Maintain the third-person point of view.

Literature Online

Writing and Research For prewriting, drafting, and revising tools, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Writing Workshop

Literary Analysis

Teach

Big Idea

Realism Have students make a connection between literary analysis and Realism. Explain that Realist writers focused on details, characters, and ideas that reflected real life.

Ask: What connection exists between literary analysis and Realism's emphasis on detail and character? (Students may say that Realist writers carefully analyzed the world around them in order to include details and behaviors that mirrored the way people and the world really were. A writer of a literary analysis must look closely at a work of literature to understand how its parts fit together.)

Literary History ☆

Bettina L. Knapp Bettina L. Knapp (1926–) is a respected literary critic, educator, and scholar. She is best known for her insights into French literature and world mythology. Knapp often considers how culture affects writers. Her study of modern writers suggests that they are deeply influenced by the world in which they live.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Writing an effective literary analysis requires a clear understanding of the literary elements in a work of literature. Make sure students understand the nature of the basic literary elements—character, plot, setting, theme, and conflict—before they begin preparing their analyses. Help students identify the elements of the model that they should include in their own analyses. Knapp's analysis, like any good composition, contains a clear thesis, ideas and evidence that develop the thesis, explanations of the evidence, and a conclusion.

Teach

Writing Skills

Literary Elements Have students identify the literary elements that Knapp addresses in her essay. Ask: What literary element of Crane's writing does Knapp illustrate with the first excerpt on this page? (the rhythm and vividness of his language) Which of Crane's words do you think convey the terror and utter senselessness that she refers to? (reared, plunged, outrageously high, mystic, problems in white water, racing down from the summit, a leap from the air)

Primary Source To support her point about Crane's use of irony and humor, Knapp includes a long quotation from "The Open Boat." This use of Crane's own words is a more effective way of showing his sense of humor than retelling or summarizing his writing would be. Ask: What is humorous in the passage Knapp quotes? (The speaker calls fate silly and insulting names.) Knapp allows readers to identify the humor themselves.

> The craft pranced and reared, and plunged like an animal. As each wave came, and she rose for it, she seemed like a horse making at a fence outrageously high. The manner of her scramble over these walls of water is a mystic thing, and moreover, at the top of them were ordinarily these problems in white water, the foam racing down from the summit of each wave, requiring a new leap, and a leap from the air.

Literary Elements

Analyze language, setting, character, and unique aspects of the text to show how these elements contribute to the story's meaning as a whole and to show appreciation for the author's style.

Primary Source

Support your analysis with direct evidence from the story.

Support

Make accurate and detailed references to the story.

Crane's use of changing rhythms throughout the tale points up the terror of the dinghy's passengers and exemplifies the utter senselessness of existence itself.

Crane suggests that if an observer were to look upon the events objectively, viewing them "from a balcony, the whole thing would doubtless have been weirdly picturesque. But the men in the boat had no time to see it, and even if they had had leisure, there were other things to occupy their minds." Values of virtue, bravery, integrity were once of importance, but now are meaningless in a godless universe where nature observes impassively human despair and frustration. Yet, the harrowing sea journey creates a new morality, which gives fresh meaning to life: "the brotherhood of men . . . was established on the seas. No one said that it was so. No one mentioned it. But it dwelt in the boat, and each man felt it warm him." Comfort and feelings of well-being emerge as each helps the other assuage his growing terror.

In the midst of fear and harrowing terror, there is also irony and humor:

> If I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned—if I am going to be drowned, why, in the name of the seven mad gods who rule the sea, was I allowed to come thus far and contemplate sand and trees? Was I brought here merely to have my nose dragged away as I was about to nibble the sacred cheese of life? It is preposterous. If this old ninny-woman, Fate, cannot do better than this, she should be deprived of the management of men's fortunes. She is an old hen who knows not her intention. If she has decided to drown me, why did she not do it in the beginning and save me all this trouble. The whole affair is absurd. . . . But, no, she cannot mean to drown me. Not after all this work.

Listening and Speaking Practice

SMALL GROUP

Oral Prewriting Students may find that an effective prewriting strategy is to explain the plan of their essays aloud to a partner. Pair students and have partners present their theses to each other before they put their ideas on paper. Encourage the listening partners to ask probing questions. Remind students that it is especially important to ask where in the text the writer finds evidence that supports his or her interpretation of the story.

Exposition

A mystical relationship exists between the men in the dinghy—and the sea and heavens. Crane feels compelled to point out man's smallness, to set him back into nature and reduce him to size.

Conversations between the oiler and the cook, seemingly trivial, since they revolve around food—"What kind of pie do you like best?"—serve in reality to point out the absurdity of humankind's preoccupations. They also act as a way of dispelling progressive terror. As for the captain, he is ridiculed; the men laugh at him, again distracting themselves from their great fear of death.

Explanation of Ambiguities

Identify and explain ambiguities, complexities, and nuances in the text to reveal additional layers of meaning.

The sight of a shark heightens the men's dreadful tension. Crane does not mention the shark by name, but the reader can almost hear the shark's fin cut the water's surface and see its phosphorescent gleaming body. Like the survivors of "Raft of the Medusa," whose harrowing episode is famous in French maritime history, the men in the dinghy do not know there is a lifesaving station twenty miles away.

When the ordeal is over, the men, safely on land, look back at the water: "white waves paced to and fro in the moonlight, and the wind brought the sound of the great sea's voice to the men on shore, and they felt that they could then be interpreters." The narrator's voice withdraws, as it were, from the chaotic drama, introducing a sense of spatial and temporal distance. Comfortable on land, the narrator can indulge in the luxury of waxing poetic and thus transform subjective emotions into a work of art.

Organization

Order your response in a logical, effective way, such as by chronological order.

Explanation of Evidence

Draw your own conclusions about your evidence, making sure to connect it to your thesis.

Its poetry and rhythmic schemes make "The Open Boat" the match of Melville's "White Jacket" and the best of Jack London and Joseph Conrad. This tale's unusually punctuated sentences of contrasting length simulate the heart beat of a man under extreme stress, producing an incantatory quality. Crane's sensual images of man struggling against the sea remain vivid long after the reading of "The Open Boat." The salt spray and deafening roar of the waves pounding against the dinghy can almost be tasted and heard.

Conclusion

Summarize your thesis and major points, and leave your reader with something to think about.

Reading-Writing Connection Think about the writing techniques that you just encountered and try them out in your own literary analysis.

Teach

Writing Skills

Explanation of Ambiguities In the second paragraph on this page, Knapp introduces her interpretation of the conversation about food. Remind students that in a literary analysis, the thesis must be supported with evidence from the literary work.

Ask: What is Knapp's interpretation, and how does she relate it to her thesis? (Her interpretation is that the talk of food, although absurd in these circumstances, provides a distraction that helps the men cope with their fears. Knapp's interpretation supports her idea that the men in the boat are insignificant in the natural world.)

Explanation of Evidence Point out to students that their first impressions of a story may change. They may discover new meanings as they analyze the language and literary elements. They should study the literary work carefully, and formulate an interpretation based on evidence in the text.

Literary History ☆

Word Origins The word analyze comes from an ancient Greek word meaning "to loosen or undo." An analysis "undoes" a piece of literature when the analyst takes it apart and examines how the different elements work together.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Have students work in small groups to analyze works of literature. Have each student select one literary element (language, setting, plot, character) and examine its use in and effect on the story. Students should share their findings and work together to develop a thesis.

Writing Workshop

Literary Analysis

Teach

Writing Process

Clarify Your Thesis Explain to students that their thesis is a summary of the point they intend to make in their essay. It is possible that they will write their thesis, and then, as they begin to gather evidence, they will want to revise their thesis. Say: Write down the basic idea of your thesis, but do not worry about the precise wording at this point. You may revise or rewrite it once you have begun to gather evidence. Explain that it is important not to become so attached to your thesis that you are unwilling to revise it as you learn and understand more during the writing process.

Prewrite Suggest that students organize material in order of importance, beginning with a discussion of the literary elements that best support the thesis and then going on to mention less important elements. They should restate the thesis in the conclusion. A graphic organizer may help them put their evidence in order.

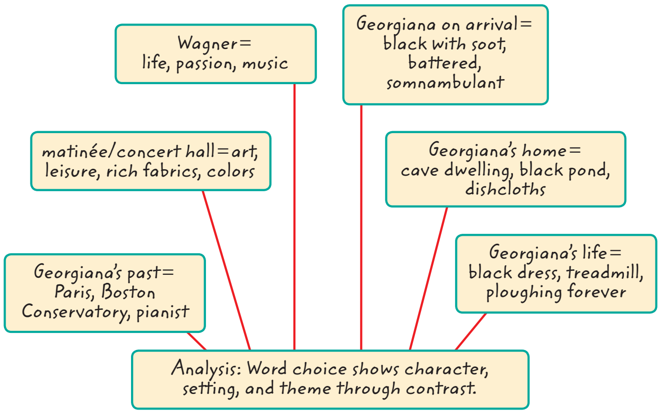
Prewrite

Choose a Story to Analyze First decide which story in the unit to analyze. It need not be the story you liked best or the one you understood the best. In fact, the best essays often analyze challenging stories that initially leave the reader with mixed feelings or unanswered questions. Choose a story that left you with a strong impression and will give you enough to talk about in your analysis.

Explore Your Story Once you select your story, review it to gain a comprehensive understanding of the text. Remember that analyzing a text means looking at its separate parts individually and then determining how the parts work together as a whole. Focus on a literary element—such as character, setting, plot, theme, point of view, or style—or another aspect of the work, such as language, to examine significant ideas apparent throughout the text. For example, think about how a character changes or how the setting or point of view influences the meaning of the story. As you explore your story, look for patterns and recurring themes that contribute to its overall meaning.

Clarify Your Thesis In a literary analysis essay, your thesis should be a concise judgment that interprets, analyzes, and evaluates a specific element throughout the entire story. Your one- to two-sentence thesis statement should include the element you will analyze and the conclusion you reached about the story.

Gather Evidence As you develop your major points, remember to support your ideas and viewpoints with evidence—accurate, detailed references to the story. The story will be your primary source, but you can use secondary sources such as dictionaries and literary criticism to reinforce your claims. A strong argument depends on the ability to make



Avoid Plagiarism

To complete this assignment, it is not necessary to consult outside sources. If you do, however, remember that both honesty and the law require you to cite them.

Multiple Interpretations

Keep in mind that great stories usually have many valid interpretations. In your literary analysis, briefly address other interpretations or counterarguments but keep your analysis focused. Use words such as suggests in your analysis to acknowledge that there may be other valid interpretations.

Assessment Practice

Formulate a Plan Standardized tests may call for students to analyze works of literature. Tell students that after reading a selection, they should identify some of its literary elements. Then they can develop a thesis about the work's theme, or message. This thesis must be supported by evidence in the text. Finally, they should locate in the work specific passages that support the thesis and incorporate these as quotations in an analysis. Have students write down the steps to follow in a test.

clear to the reader connections between such evidence and the thesis. After giving evidence, explain its significance to your argument, noting other possible interpretations.

Organize Your Major Points In the body of your essay, organize your major points in an effective, logical order. If you are analyzing a change that occurs in the story, use chronological order. In other analyses, you may prefer to use order of importance. Adjust the order to maximize the impact of your points.

Draft

Present and Expand Your Points Present your major points in a straightforward, logical way and back them up with direct evidence from the story. Maintain the present tense throughout your literary analysis. Use direct quotations where appropriate, especially to emphasize a point. As you discuss more complex interpretations and connections, explain the significance of your evidence to the reader and clarify how it supports your thesis. Using your thesis as a guide, revise your writing as necessary.

Analyze a Workshop Model

Here is a final draft of a literary analysis essay. Read the essay and answer the questions in the margin. Use the answers to these questions to guide you as you write your own essay.

Word Choice in "A Wagner Matinée"

Not much happens in "A Wagner Matinée" by Willa Cather. A summary of the action might read, "A woman arrives in Boston after a long train trip from Nebraska. She is so worn out she goes straight to bed. The next day, her nephew takes her to an afternoon concert. She listens as the orchestra plays the music of Wagner, and she cries a lot. She says she does not want to go home." Yet, "A Wagner Matinée" is a great story. One of the aspects of Cather's craft that transforms the story from a bare-bones sequence of humdrum events into a compelling work of literature is word choice. Word choice sheds light on the characters and settings of the story, and also develops its themes, primarily through contrast.

Writing Frames

As you read the workshop model, think about the writer's use of the following frames:

- ______ sheds light on the ______ of the story, and also ______.
- In contrast, <the main character> ______.
- ______ also helps illuminate ______.

Consider using frames like these in your own literary analysis.

Point of View/Thesis

What aspect of the story will the writer focus on? What insight do you find in the thesis? What is the writer's point of view?

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate Students' analytical writing will be more effective if they can distinguish among words with different connotations. When students have completed their drafts, pair them with students who can serve as peer readers to help them understand the connotations of key words.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Students may benefit from creating essay outlines based on the model. Have students work with partners to create the outlines, filling them in with key sentences and ideas from the model. Then ask them to identify the organizational pattern the writer used.

Teach

Writing Process

Draft Point out that in the first paragraph, the writer tells the reader what Cather's story is not, and by extension, what the thesis is not. Say: Summarize what the writer thinks is not remarkable about Cather's story. (the plot, the action)

Ask: What is the thesis, or main idea, of the paragraph? (The thesis is stated in the final sentence.)

Writing Skills

Writing Frames Model for students how they might use the writing frames suggested on the page. Say: If I were to analyze the point of view in "A Wagner Matinée," I might say, "Cather's choice of Clark as the storyteller sheds light on the contrast between the past and the present in the story. " Have volunteers complete the remaining frames.

Point of View/Thesis

Answer: The writer will focus on specific word choices that contribute to a reader's understanding of the characters and theme. The thesis points out how the use of contrasting words can convey the stark contrast between the prairie and the city, and therefore about different aspects of Georgiana. The writer's point of view is that Cather's word choice is responsible for making the story compelling.

Teach

Writing Process

Support

Answer: The reference to her black dusty clothing supports the thesis because the words shed light on Georgiana's state of mind. The rest of the paragraph points out the contrast between her state of mind and the vibrant opera that she is about to attend.

Consistent Focus

Answer: After examining the significance of the word Wagner in the title, the writer examines another word choice, matinée.

Command of Language

Answer: Parallel elements: people of leisure, ladies of leisure; the means and time on their hands. The active verbs contains, comes, says, have, attend, causes, seek, and enjoy are all used in sentences in the active voice. The paragraph contains simple, compound, and complex sentences.

The most powerful and important word choices of all may lie in the title. First, there's the name Wagner. Wagner was a great composer whose music is full of emotional intensity and passion. He is not just any composer, nor a composer of tuneful, orderly delights as, for example, Bach was. Instead, he is composer of operas, great emotional works for the stage, and his work is full of ideas about freedom. At the time when Cather wrote, few people could have been further from the American prairie than Wagner was.

Support

How does the quoted evidence support the thesis? What other references to the text also support the thesis?

In contrast, Georgiana has become the human embodiment of the American prairie, at least in the eyes of the author. She has come to Boston because someone has died, and she arrives in a nearly dead state. Her long coat, a duster that seems a lot like a shroud, has become "black with soot," and her black bonnet has turned grey with dust. She is so sick from her journey or even deathly looking that the narrator's landlady experiences "shock at her appearance" and puts her "to bed at once." The narrator's assessment of his aunt when he first sees her in Boston is that she is a "battered figure," the opposite of a bright, bold figure out of a Wagner opera, alive with emotion and intensity. The next morning she remains in "a semi-somnambulant state." She says almost nothing and does almost nothing. When she does speak, it is to show her concern for details of farm life. Everything the reader learns about her at the beginning of the story is in stark contrast to the bold intensity associated with the word Wagner.

Consistent Focus

How does the writer demonstrate a consistent focus?

Command of Language

Where do you find parallel elements, active verbs, the active voice, and varied sentences in this paragraph?

The title also contains the word matinée. A matinée is an afternoon performance. This word, which comes from French, is often associated with people of leisure, and perhaps especially in Cather's time, with ladies of leisure. In fact, the narrator says that the "matinée audience was chiefly made up of women." This audience of members of the leisure class have the means and time on their hands to attend an afternoon arts event.

People who attend matinées also have the appreciation of music, theater, or another performing art that causes them to seek and enjoy the diversion of an afternoon performance. The word choices Cather

Writing Practice

Use Precise Language Students sometimes have difficulty using precise language. They can deploy a more extensive and specific vocabulary by replacing general terms with more specific ones. Draw a T-bar diagram or a two-column chart on the board with the headings General and Specific. Write the word sad under the first heading. Have students supply more specific synonyms, such as depressed, blue, and melancholy. Then have students repeat this exercise with other words, such as angry, big, and said. Explain that specific terms make a writer's meaning clearer and a work more engaging.

Exposition

uses to describe the matinée audience further this impression of rich women at leisure. She refers to the "color of bodices past counting." She evokes the "fabrics soft and firm, silky and sheer," as well as the rainbow of colors that include "red, mauve, pink, blue, lilac, purple, écru, rose, yellow, cream, and white." In this audience are life, color, exuberance, frills, and luxury. In contrast, Georgiana is dressed once again in black. Furthermore, details of her farm life suggest anything but silk and sheer, or pink and écru, fabrics. Instead, the details paint a picture of Georgiana doing the backbreaking work of drawing water from the dirty "lagoons where the buffalo drank." Instead of associating Georgiana with the matinée in the concert hall, the reader associates her with the "cave dwelling," a word choice Cather selects to rename Georgiana's sod home on the prairie.

Word choice also helps illuminate who Georgiana became in Nebraska—in stark contrast with the woman she might have become. Cather uses only a few words to describe Howard Carpenter, the man Georgiana married, but two of them are "shiftless, idle." When the narrator reflects on his own past in Nebraska, the reader learns that Carpenter had "spoken sharply" to him. These two words also speak volumes, for if Carpenter had "spoken sharply" to a young boy, what might he have said over the years of hard work to his wife? The narrator also reflects on what his days on the farm were like; his words no doubt describe the texture, if not the exact activities, of Georgiana's days, too. The narrator recalls "ploughing forever and forever between green aisles of corn, where, as in a treadmill, one might walk from daybreak to dusk without perceiving a shadow of change." Grim word choices like treadmill contrast starkly with the words Wagner and matinée. Word choices also give clues to who or what Georgiana might have become if she had never gone to Nebraska with Howard Carpenter. For example, there is the word Paris, the place Georgiana visited as a youth, and the place where she saw opera; there are the words Boston Conservatory, the place where she taught; and there is the word pianist, her great talent. All of these words evoke associations with a world of privilege, culture, music, society, and art.

Author's Style

How does the writer show appreciation for the author's style?

Writing Workshop

Literary Analysis

Teach

Writing Skills

Author's Style

Answer: The author analyzes Cather's word choices in detail, showing an appreciation for the impact that each word has on the reader. The quotes chosen as examples are clear examples of words that evoke associations and feelings. The author also uses descriptive precise words in the essay: "grim word choices," "contrast starkly."

Cultural History ☆

Role of Critics Literary critics help define and maintain artistic standards, and they reflect the culture of their time. Critics have biases, so readers should be sensitive to underlying reasons for a critic's like or dislike of a particular work.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Reading Literary Criticism Encourage students to use the Internet and other resources to find critical essays that discuss the stories and authors they are analyzing. Students may find it helpful to see what others have observed about particular writers or works.

Advanced students may be interested in developing a class literary magazine. The staff should choose an editor, a designer, and a technical expert. Encourage the staff to decide on the magazine's focus and to include an introductory essay that identifies a theme in the essays included in the issue.

Teach

Writing Process

Shades of Meaning

Answer: The writer understands that the way Georgiana's voice sounds is not just a descriptive detail, but an indication of the emotion she feels. The writer associates words such as "primitive" and "inmate" with the barrenness of Georgiana's life in Nebraska.

Organization

Answer: The essay is organized as a series of contrasts between words, starting with the title of the essay and ending with an analysis of the final section of the essay.

Revise Have students meet in small groups and circulate their essays among group members. Each student should make comments and suggestions on self-stick notes or an attached page. These notes should be as specific as possible.

Writer's Technique ☆

Voice Point out to students that the voice of their essays should be more formal than that which appears in their other writing. They are offering their interpretations of another person's work, so they should use language that is respectful and appropriate.

Shades of Meaning

How does the reader reflect a careful reading? In what ways does the writer find meaning in subtle details?

Organization

How is this essay organized?

Near the end of the story, one word choice, huskily, speaks volumes about Georgiana. This word describes the tone of voice in which Georgiana relates to the narrator the story of the young German who briefly brought music back into her life in Nebraska. As Georgiana tells her nephew Clark about the man, her voice is husky with emotion, with the thrill of music relived, of "divine melody." Yet, in the grim "primitive" land of Nebraska, where Georgiana lives like an "inmate," nothing so grand, so full of life and passion, so uplifting and romantic, can survive.

Cather's story tells the story of a pioneer woman who has had her life drained by a life of toil on the frontier. The story does not rely on plot to convey its theme of the harsh reality of pioneer life and the life-giving powers of music, however. Instead, through a careful selection of detail, apt characterization, details about setting, as well as compelling word choice, Cather conveys all the reader wants to know—and perhaps far more—about a life without music on the Nebraska plains.

Traits of Strong Writing

Include these traits of strong writing to express your ideas effectively.

Ideas
Organization
Voice
Word Choice
Sentence Fluency
Conventions
Presentation

For more information on using the Traits of Strong Writing, see pages R30–R32.

Revise

Peer Review Exchange drafts with a partner to help you identify areas of your essay that can be improved. Use the checklist below to evaluate and strengthen each other's writing.

Checklist: Writing an Effective Literary Analysis Essay

☑ Do you present a clear, insightful thesis about one aspect of the story in your introduction?
☑ Do you use substantial, specific, and relevant details to support your thesis?
☑ Do you maintain a consistent point of view and focus?
☑ Do you establish a logical pattern of organization?
☑ Do you show a command of language through precise word choice and varied sentences?
☑ Do you demonstrate a careful, thoughtful reading and an appreciation for the author's style?

Writer's Portfolio

Place a copy of your literary analysis in your portfolio to review later.

Literature Online

Writing and Research For editing and publishing tools, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Writing Practice

Conclusions Emphasize that a conclusion should be more than a simple restatement of the main idea. Refer students to the final paragraph of Bettina L. Knapp's analysis of "The Open Boat," on page 627. Then give students the following suggestions for creating an effective conclusion:

- End with an overarching comment about the text or the writer. (Knapp says that Crane is as good as the other literary giants of his day.)
- End with an image from the story that illustrates your idea. (Knapp says that readers can almost taste the salt and hear the roar of the ocean.)

Edit and Proofread

Get It Right When you have completed the final draft of your essay, proofread for errors in grammar, usage, mechanics, and spelling. Refer to the Language Handbook, pages R42–R61, as a guide.

Focus Lesson

Subject-Verb Agreement

A collective noun names a group. Common collective nouns are team, audience, class, jury, army, club, committee, crowd, group, flock, and orchestra. Usually, a collective noun that refers to a group as a whole is considered singular. If the collective noun is the subject of the sentence or clause, the verb must agree.

Problem: A collective-noun subject is treated as a plural and the verb does not agree.

She watches as the orchestra play the music of Wagner.

Solution: Make the verb agree with the singular subject.

She watches as the orchestra plays the music of Wagner.

Problem: A collective noun is incorrectly identified as the subject and the verb does not agree.

Members of the leisure class has the means and time to attend afternoon arts events.

Solution: Correctly identify the subject of the sentence.

Members of the leisure class have the means and time to attend afternoon arts events.

Present

Make It Legible If you are writing your essay by hand, be sure to use blue or black ink and extremely neat, legible handwriting. If you have torn the pages from a spiral-bound notebook, trim them with scissors to create a perfectly even edge. If you are word-processing, follow your teacher's manuscript or format guidelines.

Exposition

Word Choice

This academic vocabulary word appears in the student model:

sequence (se' kwən(t)s) n. 1. a related series; 2. related shots or scenes in a film or story that create a distinct episode or part; Cather's craft transforms the story from a barebones sequence of humdrum events into a compelling work of literature.

Using academic vocabulary may help strengthen your writing. Try to use one or two academic vocabulary words in your literary analysis. See the complete list on pages R89–R91.

Peer Review Tips

Take your time and jot down notes as you read so you can give constructive feedback. Use the following questions to get started:

- Does the writer prove the thesis? Where is the support most detailed, thoughtful, and convincing?
- How does the writer increase your understanding of the story and/or your appreciation for the writer's style?

Word-Processing Tips

Headers and footers give you choices for pagination, as well as for other elements that might appear at the top or bottom of each page.

Teach

Writing Process

Edit Explain that subject-verb agreement problems are often hard to pinpoint. Suggest that students go through their essays and circle all the subjects in the sentences and underline the corresponding verbs. Students should consult a usage handbook to learn which collective nouns are always considered plural.

Remind students of the rules for capitalizing the titles of short stories, book, and articles. They should demonstrate correct capitalization when referencing works of literature in their papers. For additional support, see the Language Handbook, pages R55 and R58.

Proofread Discuss with students the reasons for careful proofreading.

Ask: What happens when mechanical errors appear in the final copy of an essay? (Students may say that these distract readers from the ideas in the essay.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Students may have trouble mastering the formal tone of critical writing. You may help them by reading aloud sections of the models on pages 625–627 and 629–632. After you read, discuss the writers' tone and word choices. Encourage students to reflect that tone in their own writing. Point out to students that neither literary analysis attempts to explain every aspect of a story. Remind students of the literary elements that they might choose to focus on.

Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop

Oral Response to Literature

Focus

Summary

In this workshop, students will learn techniques for organizing, preparing for, contributing to, participating in, and evaluating an oral response to literature.

Teach

Speaking Skills

Improve Delivery Help students hone their speaking skills by discussing these tips and having each student rehearse with a partner.

- Organize in your mind the main idea you wish to state. Plan how to build on small points to convey the main idea.
- Speak clearly and slowly.
- Establish eye contact with your listeners.
- Be expressive and show interest in the subject. The audience will react to your enthusiasm.

Learning Objectives

For pages 634–635

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objectives:

Listening and Speaking:
Delivering an oral response to literature.
Listening to and evaluating a presentation.

Setting Time Limits

Set time limits for your group to ensure that enough time is allowed for discussion of each idea or topic.

Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop

Oral Response to Literature

Literature Connection After reading thought-provoking literature such as "To Build a Fire," readers often enjoy expressing their opinions and interpretations. Participating in group discussion is a useful way for people to express their responses to literature and enhance their understanding of a piece of writing. Discussion helps people solve problems, explore ideas, and exchange information.

Assignment Working in groups, discuss and respond to the major themes in "To Build a Fire" or another literary work.

Organizing a Discussion Group

When you participate in a group discussion, each member contributes ideas. Assign roles, such as facilitator and recorder, to members of your group. Each group member is to be equally responsible for discussion.

This chart will help you understand these roles.

Facilitator

☑ Introduces the discussion topic
☑ Invites each participant to speak
☑ Keeps the discussion focused and interactive
☑ Keeps track of the time
☑ Helps participants arrive at a consensus

Group Participants (All)

☑ Form ideas and questions about the literature before discussion
☑ Contribute throughout the discussion
☑ Avoid repeating what has been said earlier
☑ Support any opinions with detailed references to the work
☑ Listen carefully to other group members
☑ Evaluate and respect the opinions of others

Recorder

☑ Helps the group leader form conclusions based on the discussion
☑ Keeps track of the most important points
☑ Helps summarize the discussion

Listening and Speaking Practice

Set a Purpose Review the purpose of the group discussion: to share responses and form conclusions. This will help each participant stay focused. Point out that each student may respond differently to the literature and that it is important to listen to the contributions of all members of the group. Encourage students to listen carefully to others' points of view and to extend, agree, or disagree with these points in their follow-up comments.

Prepare for Discussion

- Reread. Jot down one or more themes that you find in the work.
- Think about ways to narrate, explain, or describe how the author expressed the themes. List details about characters, setting, or events of the plot that help show the theme. Also, list stylistic choices, such as imagery and word choice, that help express the theme.
- Consider the ways in which the theme arises out of associations you bring to the text and judgments you make. For example, which word choices convey a broad range of connotations or nuances? Where do you find ambiguous details or events to interpret in more than one way? How does that affect your understanding of the work and your appreciation of it?

The more you think through your own ideas before the discussion starts, the better prepared you will be to make insightful, well-supported contributions and to respond thoughtfully to the ideas of others.

Participate

Taking part in a discussion is more than just presenting. You must also listen effectively and evaluate what you hear. Follow these guidelines.

- Direct your attention on the group member who is speaking.
- Respond to comments you do not understand by asking for elaboration or clarification. If you agree, say or show it.
- If you disagree, do so respectfully. Politely state your own ideas, providing evidence for them from the text.
- Engage with others in keeping the discussion focused and on track or by responding right away to any signal that you are moving off track.

Techniques for Discussing Oral Responses to Literature

☑ Pacing Allow each group member time to voice his or her opinion.

☑ Discussion Ask open-ended questions to promote discussion.

☑ Evaluation Set aside some time after discussion to evaluate the group's ability to work together.

☑ Listening Remain quiet until it is your turn to speak.

☑ Poise Use nonverbal communication to show you understand what the speaker is saying.

☑ Gestures Avoid nervous habits and other movements that may distract the speaker.

☆

Speaking Frames

Consider using the following frames in the group discussion:

- One reason for my opinion is found in the part of the story when ______.
- I see your point, but doesn't the passage/story/character say ______?
- Yes, I know what you mean. The part of the story in which ______ also demonstrates ______.

Presentation Tips

Use the following checklist to evaluate your group discussion.

- Did everyone participate, both by presenting and by responding to the ideas of others?
- Did everyone both listen and respond respectfully?
- What would you do differently if the group met again?

Literature Online

Speaking, Listening, and Viewing For project ideas, templates, and presentation tips, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

Teach

Speaking Skills

Vary the Tone As students respond to literature, remind them to vary their tone as they speak. Explain that speaking in a monotone makes for a boring presentation. Students should deliberately vary their volume and intonation to hold their listeners' attention.

Listening Skills

Show Politeness Emphasize that students should listen to a classmate until he or she is finished—they should not interrupt a speaker. Suggest that they raise a hand if they have a question or comment to make while someone is speaking. Every student should have the opportunity to contribute to the discussion.

Cultural History ☆

Ways of Listening Explain that people in different countries have different rules about how to listen. In some cultures, it is impolite for a child to look at an adult who is speaking. In other cultures, it is considered rude to look away as an adult speaks. In the United States, it is considered acceptable for people of any age to look attentively at a speaker.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate English learners may use one of these techniques to improve their oral response to literature: work with a partner to formulate an oral response, practice speaking before a full-length mirror, or use a tape recorder to improve their ability to express their ideas.

Focus

Summary

The purpose of Independent Reading is to encourage students to read novels from the time period they have learned about in this unit, as well as current novels that have been influenced by the period.

Teach

Literary History ☆

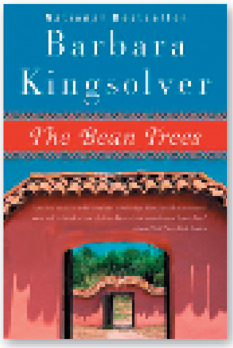
Compare Novels Have students who have read novels written in the early 1900s recall the subject matter of those works.

Ask: What were the authors' views of human nature and society? Were the characters real and believable? Point out that gradual changes occurred in writing during this time period. Guide students to a realization that these novels focus on believable characters living in a realistic society.

Independent Reading

Regionalist and Realist Fiction

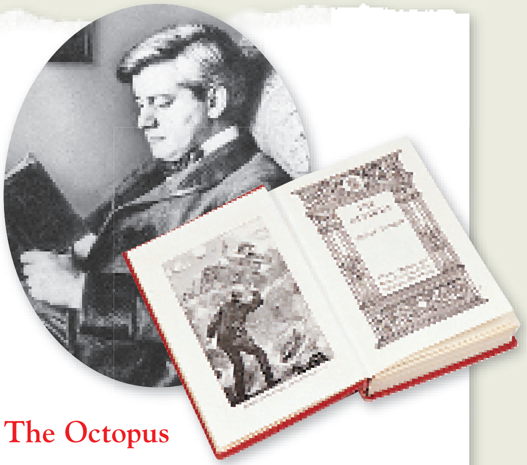
THE LATE 1800S AND EARLY 1900S SAW GREAT DEVELOPMENTS IN TECHNOLOGY, ☆ industry, and science. As the world changed, novelists found inspiration in various places. Some, like Henry James, turned inward. These writers used insights from the developing field of psychology and focused on the thoughts and perceptions of their characters. Other writers, like Frank Norris, were struck by the turmoil of rapid industrialization and portrayed the vast, impersonal economic forces that were overwhelming individuals. Still others, such as Mark Twain, focused on reflecting the regional lifestyles in the United States, using humor to portray greater truths about human nature and U.S. culture. The themes, styles, and techniques of these authors continue to influence writers today.



The Bean Trees

Barbara Kingsolver

Like the Regionalist writer Mark Twain, Barbara Kingsolver evokes a strong sense of place in her work. Her first novel, The Bean Trees, is set in Tucson, Arizona, where Kingsolver herself lived for more than 25 years. The book centers on Taylor Greer, who escapes rural Kentucky life for the freedom and anonymity of the Southwest. But when Greer unexpectedly acquires a three-year-old girl named Turtle, Greer must face the very issues she was running from—motherhood, love, abandonment, and finding a place to belong.



The Octopus

Frank Norris

Frank Norris was the first notable Naturalist writer in the United States. The Octopus was the opening novel in an unfinished trilogy—he died before the final book was written—that examines the social forces that drive agriculture and industry. In The Octopus, Norris describes the struggle between the railroad companies and California wheat farmers. The railroads have become a multi-tentacled monster, dominating every aspect of life, from the state legislature to the very land the farmers work. Farmers fight back, only to learn that the railroads have become the masters of those they were intended to serve.

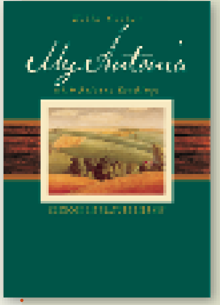
Reading Practice

Plot Have students, as they read novels independently, examine the plots of the works. Remind them that a plot is the sequence of events in a dramatic or narrative work of fiction. The plot begins with exposition, which introduces the story's characters, setting, and situation. The rising action builds to a climax, or the point of highest emotional pitch. The falling action is the logical result of the climax. The resolution, or denouement, presents the final outcome.

Have each student create a plot diagram for the novel he or she reads. Tell students to note the following events in a plot:

- exposition
- rising action
- climax
- falling action
- resolution

GLENCOE LITERATURE LIBRARY



My Ántonia

Willa Cather

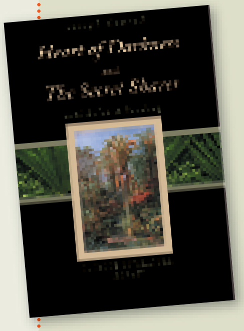
A young boy moves west from Virginia to the Nebraska plains and must adjust to life on the American frontier.

The Jungle

Upton Sinclair

This shocking story of an immigrant family working in Chicago's meatpacking industry led to the establishment of the Food and Drug Administration.

Upton Sinclair
The Jungle
with Related Readings



Heart of Darkness

Joseph Conrad

In this symbolic tale, a man describes a dark and dangerous trip he took to investigate a Belgian trader in the Congo.

CRITICS' CORNER

"The Concord, Mass. Public Library committee has decided to exclude Mark Twain's latest book from the library. One member of the committee says that, while he does not wish to call it immoral, he thinks [it] contains but little humor, and that of a very coarse type. He regards it as the veriest trash. The librarian and the other members of the committee entertain similar views, characterizing it as rough, coarse and inelegant, dealing with a series of experiences not elevating, the whole book being more suited to the slums than to intelligent, respectable people."

—The Boston Transcript, March 17, 1885

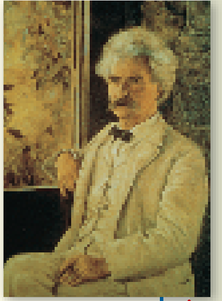
The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn ☆

Mark Twain



Mark Twain, 1903. Isaac Radu.

In his novel The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, Mark Twain describes the travels of the runaway orphan Huck and his new friend Jim, an African American fleeing slavery and the South. The episodic story moves between satire, slapstick, and touching portrayals of the relationship between Huck and Jim.

Keep a Journal

Read one of the books listed here and record your responses and questions in a journal. After you finish the book and your journal, type up your notes and share them with your class.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established To help less proficient readers understand the novels they read, have them look for the authors' purposes and the novels' themes. Often an author's reason for writing will help reveal the theme of a literary work. Remind them that a theme is the central message of a work of literature.

Teach

Cultural History ☆

Censorship Point out that the response to Huckleberry Finn described in the Critics' Corner was not unique. This novel has been the subject of censorship attempts since its publication. Invite students to research why there have been efforts to censor Huckleberry Finn, whether the reasons have changed since the novel was first published, and how successful the efforts have been. Ask students to present their findings in a panel discussion.

Journal

Evaluate students' journals by considering the following:

- clearly stated responses to literature
- effective use of questions
- attention to grammar and spelling conventions

Glencoe Literature Library

Glencoe Literature Library offers an extensive collection of hardcover books that help you encourage your students to read independently. Choose among the more than 120 full-length literary works—novels, novellas, plays, and nonfiction. Each book includes related readings from a broad range of genres. Go to www.glencoe.com for more information.

For access to all study guides for the Glencoe Literature Library, see the Literature Library Teacher Resources CD-ROM.

Focus

Bellringer Options

Say: A part of the practice test you will take today is a multiple-choice test. Your job as the test-taker is to choose each correct answer from the choices provided. Have students name other types of tests (essay, true or false, short answer) and describe the characteristics of each test.

Teach

Assessment Tell students that this assessment will provide reinforcement in general test-taking strategies and will test the skills and vocabulary taught in this unit. Students will first be asked to read a selection and answer comprehension, context-clue, and inference questions. Then they will be asked to answer sentence-improvement questions. Finally they will write an explanatory essay in answer to a prompt.

Assessment

Literature Online

Assessment For additional test practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u4.

English–Language Arts

Reading: Fiction

Carefully read the following passage. Use context clues to help you define any words with which you are unfamiliar. In each selection, pay close attention to the author's purpose, main idea, and use of literary or rhetorical devices. Then, on a separate sheet of paper, answer the questions on pages 639–640.

from The Jungle by Upton Sinclair ☆

When he opened his eyes again it was to the clanging of the bell of an ambulance. He was lying in it, covered by a blanket, and it was threading its way slowly through the holiday-shopping crowds. They took him to the county hospital, where a young surgeon set his arm; then he was washed and laid upon a bed in a ward with a score or two more of maimed and mangled men.

Jurgis spent his Christmas in this hospital, and it was the pleasantest Christmas he had had in America. Every year there were scandals and investigations in this institution, the newspapers charging that doctors were allowed to try fantastic experiments upon the patients; but Jurgis knew nothing of this—his only complaint was that they used to feed him upon tinned meat, which no man who had ever worked in Packingtown would feed to his dog. Jurgis had often wondered just who ate the canned corned beef and "roast beef" of the stockyards; now he began to understand—that it was what you might call "graft meat," put up to be sold to public officials and contractors, and eaten by soldiers and sailors, prisoners and inmates of institutions, "shantymen" and gangs of railroad laborers.

Jurgis was ready to leave the hospital at the end of two weeks. This did not mean that his arm

Writing Practice

Use Context to Discover Meaning When students look for clues to an unfamiliar word's meaning, they are using context. Tell students to connect what they know about the surrounding words with what the author has written.

Suggest these strategies.

- Look for a synonym or antonym nearby.
- Notice whether the text relates the word's meaning to another word.
- Check for a description of an action associated with the word.
- Look for an idea related to the word.

was strong and that he was able to go back to work, but simply that he could get along without further attention, and that his place was needed for some one worse off than he. That he was utterly helpless, and had no means of keeping himself alive in the meantime, was something which did not concern the hospital authorities, nor any one else in the city.

As it chanced, he had been hurt on a Monday, and had just paid for his last week's board and his room rent, and spent nearly all the balance of his Saturday's pay. He had less than seventy-five cents in his pockets, and a dollar and a half due him for the day's work he had done before he was hurt. He might possibly have sued the company, and got some damages for his injuries, but he did not know this, and it was not the company's business to tell him. He went and got his pay and his tools, which he left in a pawnshop for fifty cents. Then he went to his landlady, who had rented his place and had no other for him; and then to his boardinghouse keeper, who looked him over and questioned him. As he must certainly be helpless for a couple of months, and had boarded there only six weeks, she decided very quickly that it would not be worth the risk to keep him on trust.

So Jurgis went out into the streets, in a most dreadful plight. It was bitterly cold, and a heavy snow was falling, beating into his face. He had no overcoat, and no place to go, and two dollars and sixty-five cents in his pocket, with the certainty that he could not earn another cent for months.

1. In the context of line 3, what does the word threading mean?
   - A. sewing
   - B. winding
   - C. whirling
   - D. racing

2. What can you infer about Jurgis from the sentence that begins the second paragraph?
   - F. He does not enjoy Christmas.
   - G. He is a new arrival to the United States.
   - H. He has never celebrated Christmas.
   - J. He is surprised to learn that Christmas is celebrated in the United States.

Teach

Literary History

Upton Sinclair Sinclair (1878–1968) was an American novelist, journalist, and social reformer. He was a pioneer in a kind of investigative journalism called muckraking, which sought to expose social injustice. He received a Pulitzer Prize for a novel about Hitler's rise to power in Germany.

Assess

Reading

1. B is the correct answer because threading in this context means "passing through and between." DOK 1

2. G is the correct answer because the sentence clearly implies that Jurgis is a new arrival. DOK 4

To create custom assessments online, go to Progress Reporter Online Assessment.

To create custom assessments using software, use ExamView Assessment Suite.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established When confronted with a reading selection on a test, students may use the following tips:

- Read slowly and carefully.
- Reread difficult passages.
- Take careful notes or construct a graphic as an aid to recalling main ideas and details.

Emphasize that students must pace themselves whenever they need to read a selection and answer questions within a limited time frame.

Assessment

Assess

3. D is the correct answer because fantastic in this context means "bizarre" or "grotesque." DOK 1

4. F is the correct answer because the narrator states in lines 20–24 that "graft meat" is produced to make a profit for public officials and contractors who feed the meat to members of the armed forces, inmates of institutions, and impoverished laborers. DOK 1

5. C is the correct answer because the narrator states in lines 28–29 that Jurgis was released because "he could get along without further attention." DOK 1

6. F is the correct answer because the narrator states in lines 30–31 that Jurgis was "utterly helpless, and had no means of keeping himself alive." DOK 1

7. B is the correct answer because the narrator states in lines 37–39 that Jurgis had "less than seventy-five cents in his pockets and a dollar and a half due him for the day's work he had done before he was hurt." DOK 1

8. J is the correct answer because there is no information in the selection to indicate that Jurgis was untrustworthy or dangerous or wanted to live rent-free. DOK 4

9. D is the correct answer because the selection focuses on social injustice. DOK 2

10. G is the correct answer because the narrator reveals Jurgis's personality through Jurgis's actions and other people's reactions to him. DOK 2

11. D is the correct answer because although the narrator adheres closely to Jurgis's thought processes, the narrator knows things about the hospital that Jurgis does not know. DOK 2

12. F is the correct answer because, despite the trenchant social criticism implied in the excerpt, the narrator maintains an objective tone. DOK 4

13. D is the correct answer because Jurgis's dire plight is due to the exploitation of workers under industrial capitalism. DOK 4

14. F is the correct answer because the setting in the hospital is the focal point of Jurgis's predicament. DOK 4

15. B is the correct answer because Sinclair's purpose is to expose a social problem and, by implication, to persuade people to do something about it. DOK 4

3. In the context of line 13, what does the word fantastic mean?
A. wonderful
B. amazing
C. zealous
D. strange

4. What is Jurgis's only complaint about the hospital?
F. The quality of the tinned meat is poor.
G. The doctors perform experiments.
H. Scandals are reported.
J. The young doctor is a poor surgeon.

5. Why does Jurgis leave the hospital after two weeks?
A. He is completely healed.
B. He is eager to return to his work.
C. He can get along without further attention.
D. He needs to speak with the boardinghouse keeper.

6. Which of the following is an effect of Jurgis's injury?
F. He loses his ability to work.
G. He is released too soon from the hospital.
H. He sues the company.
J. He spends all his Saturday pay.

7. Why did Jurgis leave his tools in the pawnshop?
A. He didn't need them any longer.
B. He needed the money the pawnbroker paid for them.
C. They had been damaged in the accident.
D. They were a painful reminder of his misfortune.

8. What can you infer from the phrase ". . . [his boardinghouse keeper] decided very quickly that it would not be worth the risk to keep him on trust"?
F. Jurgis was untrustworthy.
G. Jurgis was a dangerous man.
H. Jurgis wanted to live at the boardinghouse free of charge.
J. Jurgis was not likely to earn enough money for his rent any time soon.

9. What is the central conflict presented in this passage?
A. man versus nature
B. man versus man
C. man versus fate
D. man versus society

10. In this passage, how does Sinclair reveal the personality of Jurgis?
F. direct characterization
G. indirect characterization
H. metaphor
J. symbol

11. From what point of view is this passage written?
A. first person
B. second person
C. third-person limited
D. third-person omniscient

12. What is the overall tone of this passage?
F. reportorial
G. comic
H. ironic
J. angry

13. What does this passage strongly suggest?
A. Industrialization had overwhelmingly positive results.
B. Packing houses had stringent standards of quality.
C. The poor received inferior health care.
D. The economic system was often brutal and unforgiving.

14. Which story element in this passage affects all the others?
F. the setting
G. the plot
H. the characters
J. the dialogue

15. Which of the following do you think best describes Sinclair's purpose in The Jungle?
A. to entertain
B. to persuade
C. to describe
D. to explain

640 UNIT 4 REGIONALISM AND REALISM

Vocabulary Skills: Sentence Completion

For each question in the Vocabulary Skills section, choose the best word to complete the sentence.

1. In his novel The Jungle, Upton Sinclair exposed the _______ conditions in the meat-packing industry.
   A. palpable
   B. wallowing
   C. degenerate
   D. venerable

2. He wanted to change public _______ and arouse empathy for the workers' plight to inspire concrete action.
   F. poise
   G. perception
   H. valedictory
   J. reverence

3. The meat-packers often would _______ processes that would have protected the health of the workers and wholesomeness of their products.
   A. covet
   B. vindicate
   C. stipulate
   D. scorn

4. Many _______ and inappropriate products often found their way into the meat processed in the plants.
   F. transformed
   G. vile
   H. perennial
   J. vivid

5. Hundreds of people refused _______ to eat meat again after reading The Jungle.
   A. doggedly
   B. abjectly
   C. sluggishly
   D. exclusively

6. Across the country, disgust, wariness, and mistrust of many processed foods became _______.
   F. arduous
   G. tactful
   H. incessant
   J. occult

7. Many normally _______ people became militant in their condemnation of the meat-packing industry.
   A. exalted
   B. subverting
   C. presumptuous
   D. apathetic

8. There was remarkable _______ among those responding to the urgency of Sinclair's message.
   F. disposition
   G. repose
   H. persistence
   J. depravity

9. Public outrage grew as people became _______ in their support of change.
   A. misanthropic
   B. emphatic
   C. elusive
   D. premeditated

10. The uproar incited by Sinclair's book eventually caused the government to _______ and pass the Pure Food and Drug Act.
    F. intervene
    G. interpose
    H. reprieve
    J. tarnish

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Tell students to use context clues and etymology to narrow down the meaning of difficult words. Students should begin by reading a sentence and thinking of a familiar word that could complete the sentence. Next students should compare that word with the answer choices. If any are similar in meaning, they should be seriously considered. Students can also look at word roots for clues to meaning. For example, the word zealous contains the root zeal, meaning "fervor" or "passion." This links zealous to the context clue outrage because both relate to extreme emotions.

Assess

Vocabulary

1. B is the correct answer because it is the only option that describes conditions. DOK 1
2. G is the correct answer because is the only option that goes with public. DOK 1
3. D is the correct answer because the context clue that would have prevented implies that the missing word means "did not take seriously." DOK 1
4. G is the correct answer because it is the only option that fits with the context clue inappropriate. DOK 1
5. A is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1
6. H is the correct answer because it is the only option that fits with the context clue across the country. DOK 1
7. D is the correct answer because the missing word must be an antonym of militant. DOK 1
8. H is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1
9. B is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1
10. F is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1

Assess

Grammar and Writing

1. 1. C is the correct answer because it is the only option that corrects the sentence fragment without introducing other errors. DOK 1
2. 2. H is the correct answer because the writer needs to define the unfamiliar term muckraking for readers. DOK 4
3. 3. D is the correct answer because the adverbial clause when he was a boy should be next to began, the verb it modifies. DOK 2
4. 4. J is the correct answer because the selfishness of other people is irrelevant to the essay about Jacob Riis. DOK 4

Grammar and Writing Skills: Paragraph Improvement

Read carefully through the following passage from the first draft of a student's essay. Pay close attention to verb tense, the use of modifying phrases, and sentence fragments. Then, on a separate sheet of paper, answer the questions below.

(1) During the early 1900s, many authors began focusing on social problems. (2) The reformer, journalist, and photographer Jacob Riis was influential to initiate. (3) The tradition called muckraking.

(4) Riis immigrated to the United States from Denmark in 1870. (5) His concern began when he was a boy with those less fortunate than himself. (6) According to legend, one Christmas, he gave all his money to a family that had even less than the Riis's. (7) In contrast, there are many people who are terribly selfish and only look out for themselves.

(8) Once in America, Riis lived for many years in extreme poverty, unable to find work. (9) Ultimately becoming a reporter for a New York newspaper, he used his skills to investigate and educate people about the fix of the poor. (10) One of Riis most influential books was How the Other Half Lives. (11) In this work, he exposed in the city the deplorable living conditions of the poor. (12) These slums included lodging-houses that often offered no more than a rat-infested mattress. (13) Many people could not even afford the few cents for a bed, though. (14) They slept in alleys wrapped up in newspapers or blankets. (15) Riis continued to write on the problems of the poor; and also gave lectures. (16) His photographs and magic-lantern shows added immeasurably to the effect of his words.

1. Which of the following is the best way to combine sentences 2 and 3?
   A. To initiate the tradition, called muckraking, the reformer, journalist, and photographer Jacob Riis was influential.
   B. The tradition called muckraking, was what the reformer, journalist, and photographer Jacob Riis was influential to initiate.
   C. The reformer, journalist, and photographer Jacob Riis was influential in initiating the tradition called muckraking.
   D. Initiating the tradition called muckraking, was what the reformer, journalist, and photographer Jacob Riis influenced.

2. What details should be inserted after sentence 3 to make the essay more informative?
   F. other traditions of the time
   G. Riis's specific influence on muckraking
   H. a definition of "muckraking"
   J. a list of other muckrakers

3. Which of the following errors appears in sentence 5?
   A. sentence fragment
   B. incorrect verb tense
   C. incorrect parallelism
   D. misplaced modifier

4. Which sentence in the second paragraph is not relevant to this essay?
   F. 4
   G. 5
   H. 6
   J. 7

Writing Practice

Paragraph Improvement Explain to students that questions that ask how best to revise a sentence typically refer to one error in that sentence. They should read the sentence to identify the place that sounds awkward or wrong. Tell them to rewrite the sentence in their minds and then look at the answer choices to find the one that revises the error without introducing another error. If a sentence revises some part of the sentence that was not incorrect, they should quickly skip that choice.

5. Which of the following is the best replacement for the word “fix” in sentence 9?
   - A. plight
   - B. case
   - C. matter
   - D. mode

6. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 10?
   - F. One of Riis most influential books, was How the Other Half Lives.
   - G. One of Riis’s most influential books was How the Other Half Lives.
   - H. One of Riis’ most influential books was, How the Other Half Lives.
   - J. One of Riis’ most influential, books was, How the Other Half Lives.

7. In sentence 11, which of the following is the best position for the phrase “in the city”?
   - A. after “work”
   - B. between “living” and “conditions”
   - C. between “the” and “poor”
   - D. after “poor”

8. Between which sentences should the writer begin a new paragraph?
   - F. 10 and 11.
   - G. 11 and 12.
   - H. 12 and 13.
   - J. 14 and 15.

9. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 15?
   - A. Riis continued to write and lecture on the problems of the poor.
   - B. Continuing to write on the problems of the poor, Riis also was giving lectures.
   - C. The problems of the poor continued to occupy Riis in both writing and lecturing.
   - D. Continuously, also giving lectures, Riis wrote on the problems of the poor.

10. Which of the following is the best title for this essay?
   - F. “The Muckrakers”
   - G. “Jacob Riis: Reformer”
   - H. “The Problems of the Poor”
   - J. “Nineteenth-Century Danish Immigration”

Essay

Injustice has been an ongoing characteristic of human society. The authors featured in this unit used their works to inform readers of the realities of injustices such as war, racism, and poverty. Write an essay in which you explain what it means to struggle against injustice. Support your explanation with examples and details from the works in the unit as well as your own experiences. As you write, keep in mind that your essay will be checked for ideas, organization, voice, word choice, sentence fluency, conventions, and presentation.

Assess

5. A is the correct answer because the negative connotations of plight most vividly capture the difficult situation of the poor. DOK 1

6. G is the correct answer because it is the only option that correctly spells the possessive of Riis without introducing other errors. DOK 1

7. D is the correct answer because it places the prepositional phrase in the city next to the collective noun that it modifies, poor. DOK 1

8. J is the correct answer because sentence 15 begins the concluding paragraph. DOK 4

9. A is the correct answer because it is the most economical way of stating the idea while correcting the misuse of the semicolon. DOK 1

10. G is the correct answer because it is the only option that focuses on Jacob Riis, the subject of the essay. DOK 2

Essay

Evaluate essays for the following:

- a clearly stated explanation of what the struggle against injustice means to the writer, well-organized and supported by relevant examples and details from literary works in the unit and from the writer’s experiences
- effective voice, word choice, and sentence variety
- effective presentation, with attention to grammar and spelling conventions

DOK 3

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Remind students about the response to literature they wrote in the Writing Workshop and explain that that was an example of one kind of explanatory writing. Suggest that they include the same elements they used in their analyses—a thesis, an organized series of major points, supporting evidence, and an effective conclusion—in their explanatory essays here. Tell them to remember to vary their sentence structure and to proofread their essays for mechanical errors.

Skills Scope and Sequence

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 1: Modern Poetry

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Unit Introduction pp. 644–658
Literary Periods Symbolist and Imagist Poetry pp. 660–661	Symbolism TE p. 660
Poems In a Station of the Metro and A Pact, by Ezra Pound pp. 662–665	Imagery SE p. 663
Poem The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock, by T. S. Eliot pp. 666–675	Allusion SE p. 667 Dramatic Monologue (review) SE p. 674
Poems The Red Wheelbarrow and This is Just to Say, by William Carlos Williams pp. 676–680	Form SE p. 677
Vocabulary Workshop p. 681
Poems Summer Rain and Fireworks, by Amy Lowell pp. 682–686	Structure SE p. 683
Comparing Literature Ars Poetica (poem), by Archibald MacLeish from Letters to a Young Poet (letter), by Rainer Maria Rilke 8.3/59/860 Eating Poetry (poem), by Mark Strand beware: do not read this poem (poem), by Ishmael Reed pp. 687–698	Theme SE pp. 689–691 Simile TE p. 690
Poems Study of Two Pears and from The Man with the Blue Guitar, by Wallace Stevens pp. 699–703	Tone SE p. 700

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Analyze Graphic Information SE pp. 647, 649 Summarize SE p. 653 Analyze Cause and Effect SE pp. 655, 657	Context Clues TE p. 656	Create a Graph TE p. 648 Note Taking TE p. 650 Create Graphic Organizers TE p. 652	Analyze Art TE p. 645 Oral Interpretation SE p. 658
		Connect to Poetry TE p. 660	Analyze Art TE p. 660; SE p. 661
Question SE p. 663 Visualize TE p. 664	Multiple-Meaning Words TE p. 663 Context Clues SE p. 665	Paraphrase TE p. 664 Write a Poem SE p. 665
Connect to Cultural Context SE p. 667 Identify Sequence TE p. 668	Analogies TE p. 667 Antonyms SE p. 674	Write a Short Story SE p. 675 Run-on Sentences SE p. 675	Analyze Art SE p. 673
Recognize Author's Purpose SE p. 677 Activate Prior Knowledge TE p. 678	Synonyms SE p. 677 Word Parts TE p. 677	Write a List SE p. 680	Analyze Art TE p. 679
	Compound Words SE p. 681
Interpret Imagery SE p. 683	Synonyms TE p. 683 Context Clues SE p. 686	Voice TE p. 684 Write a Dialogue SE p. 686
Analyze Style SE p. 689 Reread TE p. 694	Word Roots TE p. 689 Analogies SE p. 691	Verbs as Adjectives TE p. 688 Author's Purpose TE p. 692 Identify a Literary Trend SE p. 698
Recognize Author's Purpose SE p. 700 Interpret TE p. 702	Word Origins SE p. 703 Synonyms TE p. 700	Write a Journal Entry SE p. 703	Analyze Art TE p. 701

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 1: Modern Poetry (continued)

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Poems somewhere I have never travelled, gladly beyond and anyone lived in a pretty how town, by e. e. cummings pp. 704–708	Rhythm SE p. 705
Poems Chicago and Grass, by Carl Sandburg pp. 709–713	Apostrophe SE p. 710
Poems Mending Wall, Birches, Stopping By Woods on a Snowy Evening, Acquainted with the Night, and The Death of the Hired Man, by Robert Frost pp. 714–734	Blank Verse SE p. 715 Rhyme Scheme SE pp. 722, 724
Political Perspective Remarks at Amherst College, by President John F. Kennedy 9.7/65/1270 pp. 735–738

PART 2: Modern Fiction

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Literary Periods The Modern American Short Story pp. 740–741	Antihero TE p. 741
Short Story In Another Country, by Ernest Hemingway 4.7/54/1050 pp. 742–750	Style SE p. 743
Grammar Workshop p. 751
Short Story Winter Dreams, by F. Scott Fitzgerald 7.9/60/1080 pp. 752–772	Motivation SE p. 753 Conflict (review) SE p. 771
Short Story The Jilting of Granny Weatherall, by Katherine Anne Porter 4.6/50/820 pp. 773–784	Stream of Consciousness SE p. 774 Characterization (review) SE p. 783

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Analyze Style SE p. 705	Multiple-Meaning Words TE p. 705 Analogies SE p. 708	Write a Character Sketch SE p. 708	Analyze Art TE p. 706
Make Inferences About Theme SE p. 710 Recognize Author's Purpose TE p. 712	Denotation and Connotation SE p. 713 Adjectives TE p. 710	Write a Poem SE p. 713	Analyze Art TE p. 712
Compare and Contrast Speakers SE p. 715	Concrete and Abstract Nouns TE p. 715 Synonyms SE p. 720 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 724	Write a Dialogue SE p. 722 Write a List SE p. 724 Write a Poem SE p. 734	Analyze Art SE p. 716 Choral Reading TE p. 718
Analyze Philosophical Assumptions TE p. 738		Research Statistics TE p. 736

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
			Analyze Art TE p. 740
Recognize Author's Purpose SE p. 743 Identify Writer's Technique TE p. 744	Parts of Speech TE p. 743 Antonyms SE p. 750 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 750	Research and Report TE p. 746 Write a Personal Response TE p. 748 Apply Diction SE p. 750	Analyze Art TE p. 744; SE p. 746
		Coordinating Conjunctions SE p. 751
Evaluate Sensory Details SE p. 753 Preview TE p. 754	Synonyms SE p. 771 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 771	Dramatize a Scene TE p. 756 Write a College Application Essay TE p. 764 Write a Short Story SE p. 772	Discussion TE p. 762
Monitor Comprehension TE p. 774 Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist SE p. 77	Suffixes TE p. 774 Context Clues SE p. 784	Write a Eulogy TE p. 776 Make a Timeline TE p. 778 Write a Monologue SE p. 784	Analyze Art SE p. 779 Discussion TE p. 780 Perform a Monologue SE p. 784

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 3: The Harlem Renaissance

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Poem My City, by James Weldon Johnson pp. 786–789	Sonnet SE p. 787
Autobiography from Dust Tracks on a Road, by Zora Neale Hurston 5.1/53/920 pp. 790–799	Voice SE p. 791 Allusion (review) SE p. 798
Vocabulary Workshop p. 800
Poems If We Must Die and The Tropics of New York, by Claude McKay pp. 801–805	Meter SE p. 802
Informational Text TIME: Stanzas from a Black Epic, by Robert Hughes 9.8/68/1240 pp. 806–809
Poems I, Too and The Negro Speaks of Rivers, by Langston Hughes pp. 810–814	Repetition SE p. 811
Autobiography When the Negro Was in Vogue, by Langston Hughes 6.1/64/1290 pp. 815–823	Juxtaposition SE p. 816 Historical Narrative (review) SE p. 822
Poem A black man talks of reaping, by Arna Bontemps pp. 824–827	Metaphor SE p. 825 Allusion TE p. 826
Poem Any Human to Another, by Countee Cullen pp. 828–831	Stanza SE p. 829
Writing Workshop pp. 832–839
Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop pp. 840–841
Independent Reading p. 842–843
Assessment pp. 844–849

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Interpret Imagery SE p. 787	Antonyms SE p. 787	Write a Brochure SE p. 789	Analyze Art TE p. 788
Analyze Language SE p. 791 Predict TE p. 792 Connect TE p. 796	Synonyms and Antonyms TE p. 791 Analogies SE p. 791	Point of View TE p. 794 Apply Allusion SE p. 799	Analyze Art TE p. 792; SE p. 795
	Homonyms SE p. 800
Identify Author's Purpose TE p. 802 Analyze Tone SE p. 802	Synonyms TE p. 802 Word Origins SE p. 805	Write a Poem SE p. 805	Analyze Art TE p. 804
Preview TE p. 806		Write a List TE p. 806	Analyze Art TE p. 808
Make Predictions About Theme SE p. 811	Analogies SE pp. 811, 814	Write a Poem TE p. 812 Write an Essay SE p. 814
Analyze Concrete Details SE p. 815	Word Roots TE p. 818 Synonyms SE p. 822	Write an Essay TE p. 820 Write an Essay SE p. 823 Ellipses SE p. 823	Design a Poster TE p. 816 Analyze Art TE p. 818
Connect to Personal Experience SE p. 825	Context Clues SE p. 825		Analyze Art TE p. 826
Connect to Contemporary Issues SE p. 829 Analyze Text Structure TE p. 830	Antonyms SE p. 829	Write a Journal Entry SE p. 831	Analyze Art TE p. 830
	Multiple-Meaning Words TE p. 836	Abstract vs. Concrete Nouns TE p. 838 Write an Essay SE pp. 839
Scan TE p. 840			Oral Interpretation SE p. 840
			Discussion TE p. 842 Create a Book Jacket SE p. 843
		Write an Essay SE p. 849

Focus

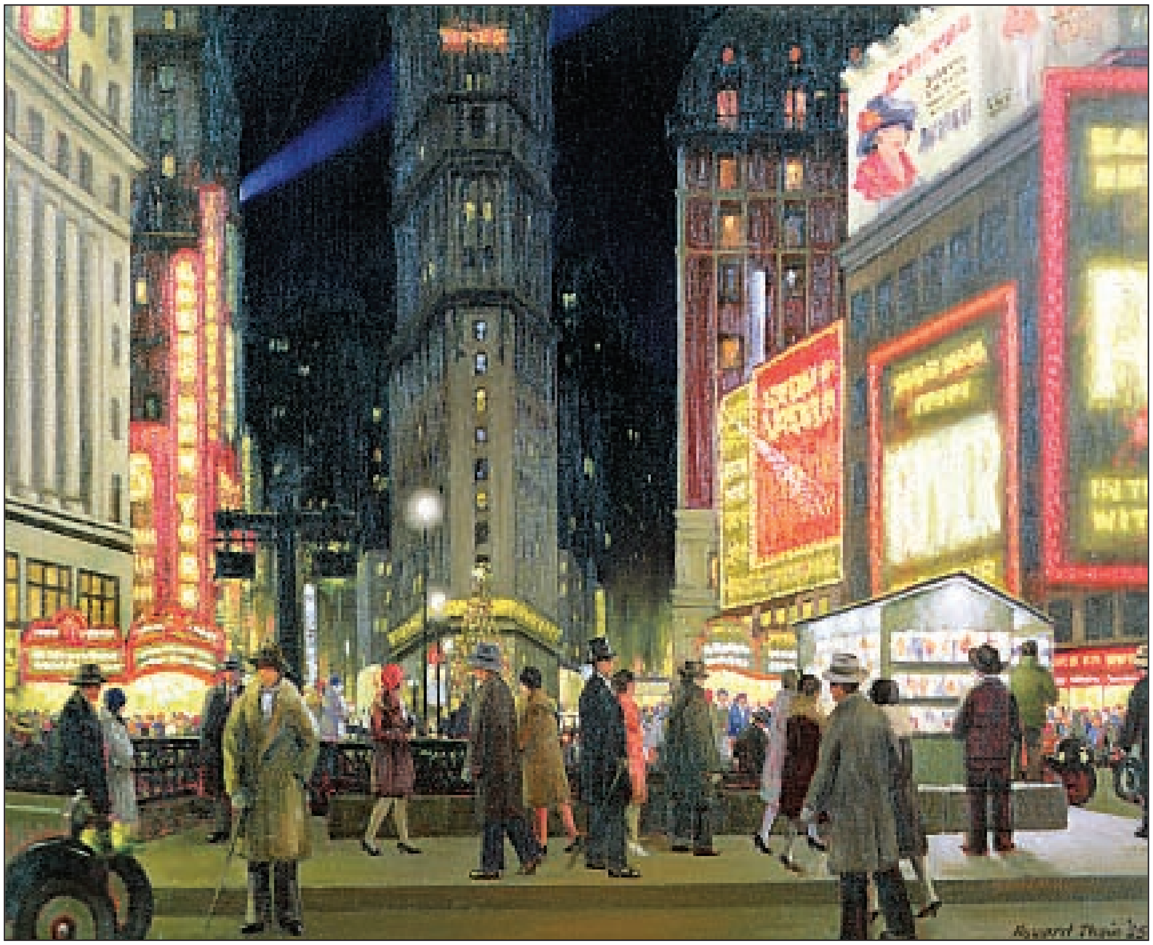
Bellringer Options

Literature Launcher
Pre-Reading Video: Unit 5

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 55

Or say: Contrast how people live during hard times and during prosperous times. (Students may say that in hard times people cannot find work, so they they have less money. In prosperous times, people spend money more freely.) From 1910 to 1930, people in the United States experienced both hard times because of World War I and good times with a booming economy, rapid industrialization, advances in technology, and social change.

For school-to-home activities, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 5–11.



The Great White Way, Times Square, c. 1925. Howard A. Thain. Oil on canvas, New York Historical Society.

View the Art In 1925, the year Howard Thain painted this night scene of Times Square, New York surpassed London as the most populous city in the world. What does Thain seem to suggest about city life during this era? ★

Unit Introduction Skills

Beginnings of the Modern Age

Reading Skills
- Analyze Graphic Information (SE pp. 647, 649)
- Summarize (SE p. 653)
- Analyze Cause and Effect (SE pp. 655, 657)
- Use Graphic Organizers (TE p. 646)
- Outline (TE p. 654)

Study Skills/Research/Assessment
- Note Taking (TE p. 650)
- Create Graphic Organizers (TE p. 652)

Vocabulary Skills
- Use Context Clues (TE p. 656)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Create a Graph (TE p. 648)
- Organize Information (TE p. 658)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Give an Oral Interpretation (SE p. 658)
- Analyze Art (TE pp. 645, 651, 655, 657)

UNIT FIVE

BEGINNINGS OF THE MODERN AGE

1910–1930s

Looking Ahead

Modern American literature developed in a turbulent era characterized by extremes—both despair and exuberance. The violence of World War I caused many people to lose faith in traditional values. Following the war, an economic boom ushered in an age of prosperity and confidence. Writers of the time created new literary works that mirrored this period of rapid change and clashing values.

Keep the following questions in mind as you read:

- How did World War I change Americans' view of the world?
- How was Modernism a departure from the American literary tradition?
- What social and cultural forces shaped the Harlem Renaissance?

UNIT FIVE

Focus

Summary

This introduction begins with an overview of the historical, social, and cultural forces in the United States from 1910 to 1930. It focuses on the effects of World War I, the Roaring Twenties, women's rights, the Great Depression, and the major features of the modern age in American literature: the new poetics, modern fiction, and the Harlem Renaissance.

View the Art ★

Answer: The scene suggests prosperity: bright lights, people in formal clothing, and crowds entering theatres.

The Modernist painter Howard A. Thain (1891–1959) was born in Dallas, Texas, but later lived in New York City, where he studied art at the Art Students League. He is best known for his New York cityscapes. Explain that "The Great White Way" is a nickname for Broadway, the home of many theaters.

For students who would profit from independent novel study, see Novel Companion pp. 207–251.

Unit Resources

Print Materials

- Unit 5 Teaching Resources, pp. 1–310
- Interactive Read and Write (On Level, Approaching, EL), pp. 179–212
- Novel Companion, pp. 207–251
- Bellringer Option Transparencies: Selection Focus 40–52; Daily Language Practice 55–77
- Assessment Resources, Selection Assessment, pp. 187–234

Technology

- TeacherWorks Plus CD
- StudentWorks Plus CD
- Literature Launchers: Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Unit 5
- Literature Online
- Visual Vocabulary CD-ROM
- Listening Library CD-ROM
- ExamView CD-ROM
- Skill Level Up! CD-ROM

UNIT FIVE

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Use the Timeline Have students examine the timeline and relate key events in American literature to events in the United States and around the world.

Say: During this time period, World War I occurred, along with other historic events, such as the sinking of the Titanic, the ratification of the Nineteenth Amendment, and the stock market crash.

Ask: What other events of this time have you heard about? (Answers will vary. Students may say that they know about Henry Ford's assembly lines, Prohibition, or Babe Ruth.)

Political History ☆

Women Get the Vote In 1920, the states ratified the Nineteenth Amendment, which granted women the right to vote. For Carrie Chapman Catt, a feminist leader, the amendment was the result of 25 years of work. Before her marriage to George Catt in 1890, she demanded a prenuptial agreement guaranteeing that for four months each year she could devote herself to women's suffrage.

TIMELINE 1910–1930s

AMERICAN LITERATURE 1

1910

1910
Twenty Years at Hull-House by Jane Addams

1912
Harriet Monroe founds Poetry: A Magazine of Verse

1913
A Boy's Will poetry collection by Robert Frost

1914
Tender Buttons by Gertrude Stein

1916
Chicago Poems by Carl Sandburg

1919
Winesburg, Ohio by Sherwood Anderson published

1920

1920
The Age of Innocence by Edith Wharton

1920
Main Street by Sinclair Lewis

1921
American Indian Stories by Zitkala-Sa

UNITED STATES EVENTS

1910

1910
W. E. B. Du Bois founds the Crisis magazine

1911
National Urban League formed

1911
The Nestor Company builds the first Hollywood film studio

1913
Henry Ford introduces assembly-line productivity

1913
U.S. mint issues first "buffalo," or "Indian head," nickel

1914
Marcus Garvey founds Universal Negro Improvement Association

1916
Great Migration begins

1917
United States declares war on Germany

1919
Black Sox Scandal rocks American baseball

1920

1920
Prohibition Amendment outlaws the sale of alcohol

1920
Nineteenth Amendment gives women the right to vote ☆

1920
The nation's first commercial radio station, KDKA, begins broadcasting in Pittsburgh

WORLD EVENTS

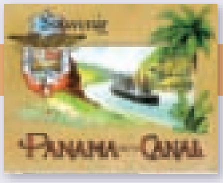
1910

1910
Mexican Revolution begins

1912
Native American Jim Thorpe stars at the Olympic games

1912
Titanic sinks after striking an iceberg near Newfoundland

1913
The Rite of Spring by Russian composer Igor Stravinsky heralds Modernism in music



1914 ▲
Panama Canal opens

1914
World War I begins

1918
Armistice signed in France, ending WW I

1920

1920
First meeting of the League of Nations in Geneva, Switzerland

1921
Diego Rivera begins his first mural in Mexico

1921
Mongolia gains independence from China

Literature Online

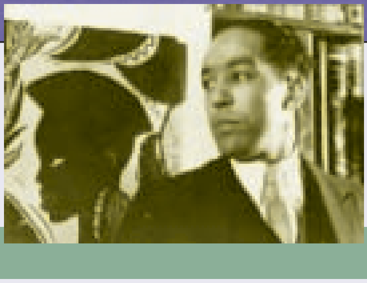
Literature and Reading To explore the Interactive Timeline, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Reading Practice

Use Graphic Organizers Explain that graphic organizers provide an opportunity to see information at a glance. Charts allow students to analyze and compare information. Give students the following tips for reading a chart:

- Examine the title, labels, and other explanatory features.
- Study how the labels clarify the information in the chart.

Guide students through a discussion of the timeline, using the steps listed above. Have students choose one event from the timeline and write one or two sentences about the event. Have them share their writing with the class.



Langston Hughes, 1932. Carl van Vechten. Photograph, gelatin silver print, 14.1 x 21.4 cm. Gift of Prentiss Taylor. National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC.

1930

1921
All–African American musical Shuffle Along opens on Broadway

1922
The Waste Land by T. S. Eliot

1922
The Enormous Room by E. E. Cummings

1923
Edna St. Vincent Millay wins Pulitzer Prize in poetry

1925
The New Yorker magazine established

1925
The Great Gatsby by F. Scott Fitzgerald

1926
The Weary Blues by Langston Hughes ▲

1926
The Sun Also Rises by Ernest Hemingway

1928
Home to Harlem by Claude McKay

1930
Flowering Judas by Katherine Anne Porter

1936
Eugene O'Neill wins Nobel Prize in Literature

1930

☆ 1924
Immigration Act bars nearly all Asians

1925
Schoolteacher John Scopes goes on trial for teaching evolution in Tennessee

1926
Jelly Roll Morton and his Red Hot Peppers begin a series of jazz recordings

1927
Conclusion of Sacco-Vanzetti murder trial draws world attention

1927 ▲
Charles Lindbergh flies the first nonstop solo flight across the Atlantic Ocean

1927
Babe Ruth hits 60 home runs, a record until 1961

1927
First feature-length talking motion picture, or "talkie," The Jazz Singer, is released

1929
League of United Latin American Citizens founded

1929
The stock market crashes; Great Depression begins

1931
"The Star-Spangled Banner" becomes national anthem

1935
George H. Gallup begins the Gallup Poll

1938
Minimum wage is established in the Fair Labor Standards Act

2

1930

1922
Irish writer James Joyce publishes Ulysses

1922
Insulin isolated and used to save a life, first successful diabetes treatment

1926
Economic turmoil leads to a general strike in Britain

1928
Fifteen countries sign the Kellogg-Briand Pact, condemning war

1928
Joseph Stalin starts eliminating private businesses in Soviet Union

▲ Mohandas K. Gandhi

1930
Mohandas K. Gandhi leads protest against British salt monopoly in India

Reading Check

Analyze Graphic Information How many changes of government throughout the world are shown on this timeline?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: Two: Mexico and Mongolia

Reading Strategy 2

Draw Conclusions

Ask: What conclusion can you draw about the women of the time based on the information provided in the timeline? (Students may say that women's roles were changing, perhaps due to women's rights activists.) What information in the timeline led you to your conclusion? (Many female writers are being published; women are given the right to vote.)

Cultural History ☆

Closing the Door Congress continued to close the celebrated "open door" to the United States during the 1920s by passing the Immigration Act. Immigration restrictions in 1921 and 1924 targeted Asians and southern and eastern Europeans.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Established Explain some timeline events that students may not recognize. For example, explain that the "Gallup Poll" is a public opinion poll. Have small groups research and share information about one unfamiliar event with the class.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Assembly Line Production Have students research the effect of Henry Ford's use of the assembly line in the manufacture of automobiles. Ask students to focus on one topic: effect on labor, effect on where people lived, or effect on streetcar and train transportation. Students must consult at least two reputable sources.

Have students write a report that identifies a main idea and supporting examples. Then have them report their results to the class.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Make Inferences In the chart "World War I Military Deaths," have students compare the number of deaths of United States military personnel with the number of deaths of personnel from other countries.

Ask: Why do you think there were fewer American deaths than German, French, and Russian deaths? (Students may say that the United States entered the war at a later date than these countries; the major battles were fought in Europe, while no battles took place in the United States.)

Cultural History ☆

Car Culture In 1910 there were about 500,000 cars in the United States. By 1920 there were more than 8 million. By 1925 nearly 20 million cars traveled on the nation's roads. Before World War I, almost no one borrowed money to buy a car. By 1925, 75 percent of all cars were purchased on the installment plan.

BY THE NUMBERS

☆ COST OF A MODEL T, 1908–1924

Source American Vision

WORLD WAR I MILITARY DEATHS

1

Back in My Day

The value of a dollar and the cost of goods changed dramatically in the twentieth century. Here are some statistics from 1915:

Average Yearly Income

Workers in finance, insurance, and real estate	$1,040
Industrial workers	$687
Retail trade workers	$510
Farm laborers	$355
Domestic servants	$342
Public school teachers	$328

Price of Goods

Bicycle	$11.95
Baseball	$1.15
Dozen eggs	.39
Glass of cola	.50

HERO'S WELCOME

Charles Lindbergh thrilled people in the United States and abroad in 1927 with his nonstop, 33½-hour flight from New York to Paris.

GREAT MIGRATION

- In 1910, 75 percent of African Americans lived on farms, and 90 percent lived in the South.
- In the late 1910s and the 1920s, 1.5 million Southern blacks moved to cities—a movement called the "Great Migration."
- During this period, Chicago's black population increased by 148%, Cleveland's by 307%, and Detroit's by 611%.

IMMIGRATION

- More than 17 million immigrants entered the United States in the first quarter of the twentieth century.
- In 1921 the Emergency Quota Act restricted newcomers from Europe to 3% of a nationality's U.S. population in the 1910 census.

THE SHORTENING SKIRT

- In 1919, the average skirt hem height above the ground in proportion to a woman's height was 10%.
- In 1924, it was 15%.
- In 1925, it was 20%.
- In 1927, it surpassed 25%, reaching the knee.

Skills Practice

Make a Graph

SMALL GROUP

Refer students to the "Price of Goods" list under "Back in My Day." Ask students to estimate today's average price for the goods listed. Then have students create a bar graph of 1915 and 2007 prices using their estimates or the following data:

Goods	1915 Price	Today's Price
Bicycle	$11.95	$90.00
Baseball	$1.15	$14.00
Hotel room	$1.00	$80.00
Dozen eggs	$.39	$4.00
Glass of cola	$.50	$2.00

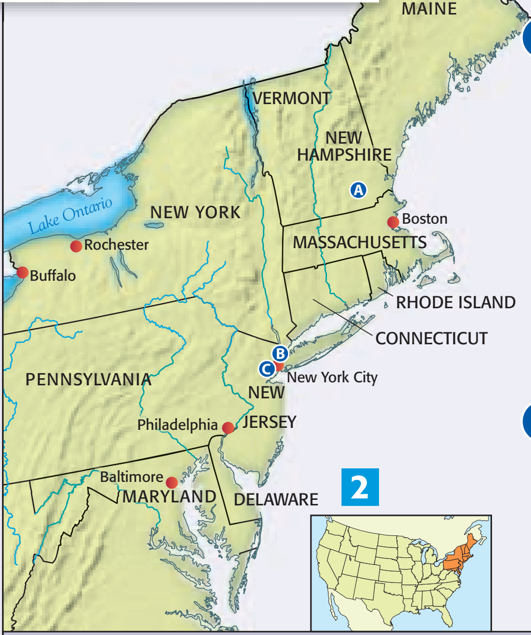
Students' graphs should include a descriptive title, clear labels, and any other necessary explanatory features. Tell students to make their graphs accurate and easy to read. Have partners write a conclusion paragraph based on their observations of the data and share what they learned about the changing value of the dollar.

BEING THERE

At the beginnings of the modern era there was war, economic boom and collapse, and the rise of an international culture. These images show the East Coast of the United States, an area strongly affected by these developments.

A A 1910s farmhouse in rural New England, similar to the one in Derry, New Hampshire, in which Robert Frost lived and wrote.

B Women Walking with Girls in Harlem, ca. 1920. Underwood & Underwood. Black and white photograph.



C Fifth Avenue at 42nd Street in New York City, 1924. Photograph. In 1920, for the first time a majority of U.S. citizens lived in cities instead of in rural areas.

Literature Online

Literature and Reading For more about the history and literature of this period, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Reading Check

Analyze Graphic Information

1. Which nation had the greatest number of military deaths during World War I?
2. How much less did a Model T cost in 1920 than in 1910?
3. What can you infer about the literature in this unit from the images of Harlem and a rural farmhouse in New Hampshire?

Teach

Reading Check

Answers:

1. Germany, with 1,773,000 military deaths
2. About $400 less
3. Harlem was a vibrant, inspiring area. Rural life inspired Robert Frost.

Reading Strategy 2

Make Generalizations

Point out that the map shows the northeastern United States, home to almost all of the authors in this unit.

Ask: How did World War I affect the businesses and industry of this area? (Students may say that the war increased industrial production and provided more jobs.) Why did people move to the cities from rural areas? (Students may say that people moved to the city for job opportunities.)

View the Photograph ★

A. Robert Frost often referred to everyday activities in rural settings.

B. The changing roles of women were reflected in fashions. Hemlines rose to just below the knee.

C. New York City was an economic and cultural center of the country. Its population of almost 6 million people included many immigrants.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP Intermediate Have students work in pairs to answer the Reading Check questions. Have them read the questions carefully and identify where on the page they can find the answers to the questions. Remind students that to understand the pie chart that shows deaths in World War I, they can start by finding the largest pieces of pie, but then they will need to look at the key to distinguish between pieces that are about the same size. To help them answer the question about a Model T, remind them to identify the car prices in 1910 and 1920 before trying to figure out the difference between the two prices.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Make Predictions Have students read only the red headings on these two pages.

Say: Describe what you think changed during the Roaring Twenties. (Students may say that "roaring" might indicate a lot of action or noise, and so life may have become more exciting.)

Ask: What might have happened during the Great Migration? (Students may say that many people moved from one place to another.)

Cultural History

Three Tragedies In 1911 a fire at New York City's Triangle Shirtwaist Company killed 146 employees—most of them young women—who had been working in unsafe conditions. The next year the Titanic, a luxury ship on its first voyage, hit an iceberg and sank. About 1,500 of its 2,200 passengers died. In 1918 a deadly influenza epidemic killed about 500,000 people in the United States, and an estimated 30 million people worldwide—about three times the number killed in World War I.

Learning Objectives

For pages 650–658

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing literary periods.
Analyzing literary genres.
Evaluating historical influences.
Connecting to the literature.

BEGINNINGS OF THE MODERN AGE

1910–1930s

Historical, Social, and Cultural Forces

1 World War I

Europe exploded into war after the assassination of Austria-Hungary's Archduke Franz Ferdinand in 1914. Complex military alliances and national rivalries quickly divided European countries into two opposing forces: the Allies (Britain, France, Russia, and Italy) and the Central Powers (Germany, Austria-Hungary, and the Ottoman Empire). For three years, massive armies fought each other all over Europe. The U.S. joined the war in 1917, in part because a German submarine had sunk an unarmed British ship, the Lusitania, in the Atlantic in 1915. On November 11, 1918, the Allies emerged victorious. Ten million soldiers died in World War I; more lives were lost than in all wars during the century before. The staggering rate of casualties is attributed to the introduction of tanks, warplanes, machine guns, and poison gas.

The Roaring Twenties

After the war, the U.S. entered the Roaring Twenties, a decade marked by a booming economy, jazz, and late-night parties where people danced the Charleston. Many were unsettled by what they saw as society's loosening morals. Congress had passed the National Prohibition Act in 1919. It did little to limit drinking, but contributed to the rise of gangsters such as Al Capone, who secretly transported liquor and ran "speakeasies," nightclubs where people could drink illegally.

Women's Rights

The push for women's right to vote, or suffrage, grew stronger in the early twentieth century. The work of reformer Carrie Chapman Catt led to some states in the Midwest and West granting women the right to vote. However, the move toward a nationwide amendment to the Constitution stalled. In 1917, suffragist leaders such as Alice Paul picketed the White House and went on hunger strikes when they were jailed for their protests. Women finally got the vote when the Nineteenth Amendment became law in 1920.

The Great Migration

African Americans left the rural South for northern cities in huge numbers during the 1910s and 1920s. A labor shortage caused by men's leaving to fight in World War I and new limits on immigration from Europe opened up many well-paying jobs for African Americans in cities and industrial areas. Brutal southern segregation policies and widespread crop failure also drove blacks north. With its affordable housing and thriving cultural life, New York City's Harlem was an especially good place to relocate. This largely African American neighborhood was the center of an explosion of creativity in the 1920s, which became a cultural movement known as the Harlem Renaissance.

Study Skills Practice

Study Questions Guide students in creating study questions that will help them take notes on the material presented on these pages. Before students read about the modern age, have them scan the red headings and write study questions based on the headings. For example, for the heading "World War I," a student might write, "What effect did World War I have on the beginning of the modern age?" After students have written their questions, have them read the material silently to find the answers. They may revise any questions for which they cannot find answers. After students have answered their questions, divide them into groups to share what they have learned about the modern age.

Suzette Dewey, daughter of Charles Dewey, posed beside roadster, c. 1926. Herbert E. French. Photographic print, Library of Congress.

2

Popular Culture

In the 1920s, U.S. popular culture was tranformed by the automobile, radio, movies, advertising, and other innovations. Henry Ford's introduction of the assembly line in 1913 enabled factories to produce cars at prices the average person could afford. During the 1920s, radios became a fixture in U.S. homes, allowing people across the country to tune in to soap operas, comedies, sports, and music. People in the U.S. became fascinated with the exploits of popular heroes such as baseball star Babe Ruth, tennis champion Bill Tilden, and aviator Charles Lindbergh—who flew the first solo, nonstop transatlantic flight from New York to Paris. Even before the first feature-length "talking" picture in 1927, movies were essential to U.S. life. Attendance continued to rise in the 1930s, as movies provided a temporary escape from the hard times of the Depression.

The Great Depression

The stock market crash on October 29, 1929, ended the prosperity of the Roaring Twenties. Market conditions were ripe for a collapse, as investors bought stock on credit, and banks did not have enough money in reserve to cover all their customers' deposits. In 1929, investors became worried that their stocks were overvalued and began selling at a frantic pace. Disastrously, no one was buying. By 1933, about a quarter of the population was unemployed, and many families became homeless, depending on soup kitchens and migrant camps for food and shelter.

PREVIEW Big Ideas of the Modern Age

1 New Poetics

In the first part of the twentieth century, American poetry pushed the boundaries of subject matter, form, and style. Poets in this era found inspiration in a wide range of sources and created new ways to capture individual experience.

See pages 652–653.

2 Modern Fiction

World War I created a generation of writers who questioned traditional values. As a result, many of them focused on social problems, a loss of belief in the old truths, and human despair.

See pages 654–655.

3 The Harlem Renaissance

African Americans who flocked to New York City's Harlem turned it into a center of creativity. Out of this cultural whirlwind came literature that both celebrated African American culture and emphasized the struggle against racial prejudice.

See pages 656–657.

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Preread Discussion Before students read the section "Popular Culture," have them describe today's popular culture. Ask: What inventions or innovations have transformed our culture in the past three decades? (Students may answer that computers, cell phones, the Internet, and satellite technology have transformed our culture.) Who are the most popular people in our culture? (Students may mention movie stars, athletes, musicians, or spiritual leaders.) After the discussion, have students read the section "Popular Culture" to discover some of the inventions and people who transformed the 1920s.

View the Photograph ★

The photo of Suzette Dewey was taken in 1926. She illustrates the appearance of a "flapper" in the 1920s. Her father, Charles Dewey, was assistant secretary of the treasury in the federal government.

Ask: What details stand out in this photo? (Students may say that the clothing and the cars stand out.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced Students may be confused by the meaning of the word depression in the phrase The Great Depression. Tell students that depression is the noun form of the verb depress, which has multiple meanings. Have student volunteers use a dictionary to look up the definitions for depress and read them aloud to the class. Elicit from students the fact that the different meanings of depress all involve making something lower. Explain that the term depression as used here refers to a low level of business and trade activity along with high unemployment. Say: Words used to describe economic conditions are often easier to remember if you understand the physical phenomenon that they also describe. Have students look up the words inflation, recession, boom, and bust in a dictionary.

Beginning Choose difficult words such as attributed, exploits, and overvalued from the essay. Have each student look up two words in a dictionary and define them for the class.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Write Summaries Guide students in summarizing the section titled “New Directions.”

Ask: What is the main idea of this section? (Poets of the modern age sought to make their work different and new.) What details support this main idea? (Poets found inspiration in new places and did not use the same sources as those of traditional poetry.)

Cultural History ☆

A New Art With their belief in human reason shaken by a horrible war, artists looked for new ways to portray the world. Pablo Picasso, instead of reproducing what he saw from a single perspective, showed multiple perspectives in one painting. The composer Arnold Schoenberg abandoned the traditional 8-note scale and created music using a 12-tone scale. Writers such as James Joyce, T. S. Eliot, and E. E. Cummings also discarded traditional conventions to create new and different styles of writing.

Big Idea 1

New Poetics

Shortly before the turn of the twentieth century, many U.S. poets tried new ways to express their feelings and observations. Their new, experimental ways of writing became known as Modernism. Some people thought the new poetics, or methods for writing poetry, were an assault on literature. To others, modern poetry spoke eloquently about the mind and the heart of the individual, doing so in new ways linked to the groundbreaking work of earlier poets Walt Whitman and Emily Dickinson (see pages 408–454). ☆

1 New Directions

Writers in this period believed that American poetry had become stagnant. As Ezra Pound (see pages 662–665) said, the modern poets sought to “Make it new!” Modern poets found inspiration in a wide range of sources beyond the traditional lyric and Romantic poetry of England. The French Symbolist poets, avant-garde, or experimental, painters such as Pablo Picasso, traditional Chinese and Japanese poetry, and everyday life all influenced the new poets.

> “A classic is classic not because it conforms to certain structural rules, or fits certain definitions (of which its author had quite probably never heard). It is classic because of a certain external and irrepressible freshness.
>
> —Ezra Pound
> from ABC of Reading

The Imagists

The Imagist movement (see pages 660–661), largely founded by Ezra Pound, flourished after 1910. Imagist poets believed that traditional poetry wasted energy by describing, generalizing, and rhyming. To reform poetry, they insisted on direct presentation of images. “An ‘Image’ is that which presents an intellectual and emotional complex in an instant of time,” Pound wrote. He and other Imagist poets, such as Amy Lowell (see pages 682–686) and H.D. (Hilda Doolittle), also wrote manifestos, statements explaining their artistic philosophy. Imagism strongly influenced William Carlos Williams (see pages 676–680), among others, to expand the subject matter of poetry to include visual impressions that capture the mysterious power of ordinary experience.

Eliot’s Perspective

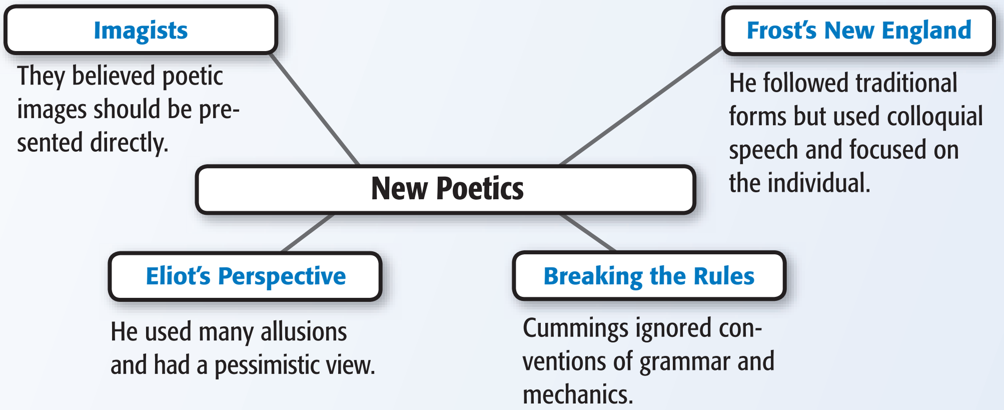
Modernism took a different form in the poetry of T. S. Eliot (see pages 666–675). Wide-ranging allusions—references to history, art, and literature—are a fundamental part of his poetic method. Eliot said: “The poet must become more and more comprehensive, more allusive, more indirect, in order to force, to dislocate if necessary, language into its meaning.” Eliot believed that war and industry had shattered the human spirit. The Waste Land (1922), which takes a pessimistic view of civilization, is considered the most influential poem of this period.

Breaking the Rules

E. E. Cummings (see pages 704–708) didn’t care for the literary conventions that govern the arrangement of words, punctuation, and capitalization—or for the increasing conformity of individuals in U.S. society. He insisted on an irregular use of capital and lowercase letters, creating poems that looked ungrammatical, and celebrating the individual—especially the artist.

Study Skills Practice

Create Graphic Organizers Help students take notes on pages 652–653 in a concept map similar to this one:



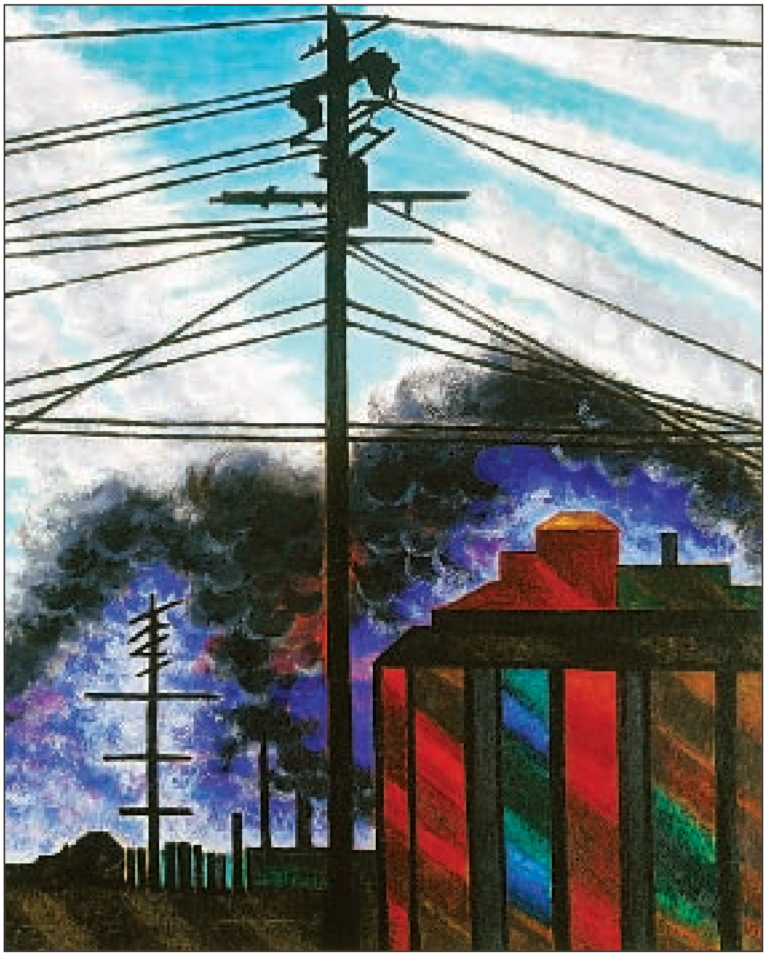
New Poetics

Imagists
They believed poetic images should be presented directly.

Frost’s New England
He followed traditional forms but used colloquial speech and focused on the individual.

Eliot’s Perspective
He used many allusions and had a pessimistic view.

Breaking the Rules
Cummings ignored conventions of grammar and mechanics.



Telegraph Poles with Buildings, 1917. Joseph Stella. Oil on canvas, 36¼ x 30¼ in. Daniel J. Terra Collection, Terra Foundation for American Art, Chicago, IL. ★

Frost's New England

One major poet of this period, Robert Frost (see pages 714–734), did not follow Modernist poetics. He held firm to traditional New England settings for inspiration, and his lyric poetry is often traditional in form as well. Frost relied largely on rhyme and regular meter, and his language is frequently colloquial. Several of his poems are written as dialogue between two people. Frost often wrote of the loneliness and isolation of the individual, a typical theme in modern poetry.

from I: Six Nonlectures
by E. E. Cummings

Poetry is being, not doing. If you wish to follow, even at a distance, the poet's calling (and here, as always, I speak from my own totally biased and entirely personal point of view) you've got to come out of the measurable doing universe into the immeasurable house of being. I am quite aware that, wherever our socalled civilization has slithered, there's every reward and no punishment for unbeing. But if poetry is your goal, you've got to forget all about punishments and all about rewards and all about selfstyled obligations and duties and responsibilities etcetera ad infinitum and remember one thing only: that it's you—nobody else—who determine your destiny and decide your fate. Nobody else can be alive for you; nor can you be alive for anybody else. Toms can be Dicks and Dicks can be Harrys, but none of them can ever be you. There's the artist's responsibility; and the most awful responsibility on earth. If you can take it, take it—and be. 2

Reading Check

Summarize How were the goals of the Modernist poets different from those of more traditional American poetry?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: The Modernist poets wanted to "make it new." These poets developed their own styles while creating a distinctive voice for American poetry.

Literary Element 2

Tone and Mood Ask students to examine the passage by E. E. Cummings with a partner.

Say: Each of you will practice reading aloud the excerpt from I: Six Nonlectures to your partner. You and your partner should decide what the author's tone and mood are in this passage and express these in your reading.

When everyone has had time to practice the reading, invite volunteers to read a few lines from the piece to the class.

Say: Cummings's first sentence sets up a contrast between being and doing. Ask: Where else in the poem does he compare being with doing? (the measurable doing universe versus the immeasurable house of being; doing is referred to as unbeing)

View the Art ★

Joseph Stella (1877–1946) was born in Italy. He came to the United States in 1896. He studied medicine and pharmacology, and then attended the Art Students League. He was an illustrator from 1900 to 1909 and later became a painter.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Research World and national events during the period 1910–1930 contributed to an outpouring of innovative work in literature, music, and art. Invite students to examine the effects that this work had on later generations of artists. For example, they can collect information about the influence of Schoenberg's 12-tone scale or Picasso's cubist paintings or Joyce's stream-of-consciousness writing. Have students prepare brief reports to share with the class. Encourage them to include audio-visual materials with their reports.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Determine Main Ideas

Have students read "The Jazz Age" on page 654.

Ask: Who or what is this paragraph about? (F. Scott Fitzgerald and the period 1918–1929) Why is Fitzgerald a focus of the paragraph? ("Fitzgerald embodied the frantic pace and social ambitions typical of the Jazz Age.")

Literary History ☆

A Common Theme A theme common in literature of this period was high society and how to succeed within it. Writers brought different perspectives to this theme. In The Great Gatsby, Fitzgerald paints an intriguing picture of wealth and deception. In contrast, Edith Wharton, in novels like The Age of Innocence, depicts the suffocating effects of society, social climbing, and wealth in the 19th century. In such Hemingway novels as The Sun Also Rises, the characters are outside the mainstream of society, in search of an identity.

Big Idea 2

Modern Fiction

What is the best way to tell a story? Modernist fiction writers broke from tradition, as they omitted standard beginnings, transitions, and endings in order to tell stories that reproduced the complex ways in which people think. ☆

The Shadow of War

World War I prompted many writers to question cultural traditions and the meaning of life, turning quite a few youthful optimists into premature cynics. One of them, John F. Carter, wrote in the Atlantic Monthly, "The older generation had certainly pretty well ruined this world before passing it on to us. They give us this thing, knocked to pieces, leaky, red-hot, threatening to blow up; and then they are surprised that we don't accept it with the same attitude of pretty, decorous enthusiasm with which they received it." With this shattered world in view, modern fiction writers probed the complex inner workings of the mind and the breakdown of traditional values in their era.

The Lost Generation

Many writers left the U.S. during this period and established lives in Europe, leading to a international perspective very different from post-Civil War regionalism. American poet Gertrude Stein, a longtime resident of Paris, remarked to a new American expatriate, Ernest Hemingway (see pages 742–750), that young people of the time were a "lost generation." This description became famous as a label for those who had lost faith in U.S. society and didn't know where to turn. The main character in Hemingway's The Sun Also Rises comments: "You can't get away from yourself by moving from one place to another. There's nothing to that." In modern fiction, themes of change, indecision, and broken attachments often replace those of stability, heroism, and love.

The Jazz Age 1

F. Scott Fitzgerald (pages 752–772) gave the label "the Jazz Age" to the period between World War I and the Great Depression. Fitzgerald embodied the frantic pace and social ambitions typical of the Jazz Age. Yet he believed that the United States was fundamentally in disarray. He said there was a new "generation grown up to find all Gods dead, all wars fought, all faiths in man shaken." Desire for consumer goods soared after the war, and symbols of success, such as cars, were everywhere. But many writers were disgusted by what they viewed as shallow materialism. In The Great Gatsby, Fitzgerald created glamorous and wealthy characters who dash from one party to the next, yet cannot find happiness.

> "It seemed only a question of a few years before the older people would step aside and let the world be run by those who saw things as they were."
>
> —F. Scott Fitzgerald
> from Echoes of the Jazz Age

Hemingway's Prose

Ernest Hemingway's spare style was markedly different from the elaborate prose that short-story writers and novelists had often used in the 1800s. Through understatement and irony, Hemingway's fiction suggests connections that the reader is left to infer. "I always try to write on the principle of the iceberg," he said. "There is seven-eighths of it underwater for every part that shows." His first novel, The Sun Also Rises, is about the lost generation. It is told by Jake Barnes, an American newspaperman who has been wounded in World War I.

Reading Practice

Outline To help students take notes and study the material on pages 654 and 655, have them write outlines using the title and headings on the pages. A partial example follows.

Modern Fiction

- I. The Shadow of War
  - A. World War I made writers question traditional beliefs.
  - B. Writers looked at the workings of the mind and the breakdown of values.
- II. The Lost Generation
  - A. Writers left for Europe.
  - B. They developed international perspectives.
- III. The Jazz Age
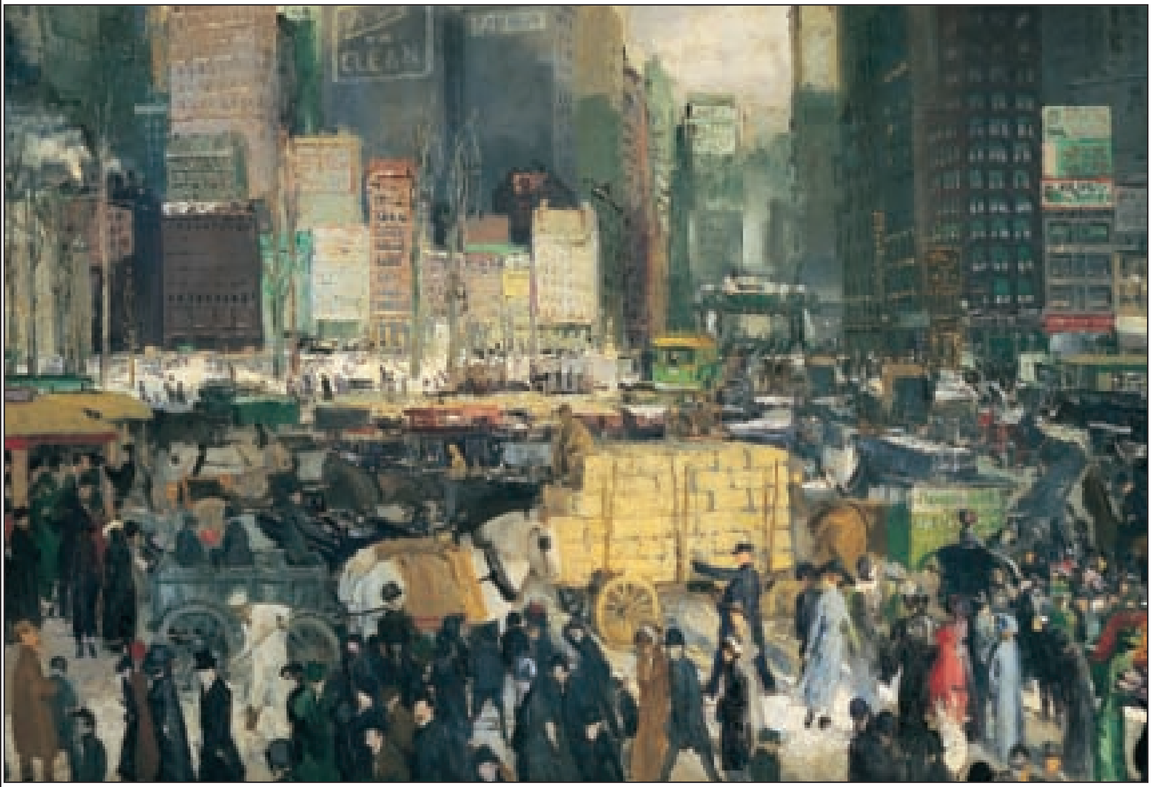
  - A. Like many others of his time, Fitzgerald lived at a hectic pace.
  - B. Many people were disgusted with the shallow materialism of the time.



New York, 1911. George Bellows. Oil on canvas, 42 x 60 in. National Gallery of Art, Washington, DC. Collection of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mellon. ★ from The Sun Also Rises by Ernest Hemingway

Enjoying living was learning to get your money's worth and knowing when you had it. You could get your money's worth. The world was a good place to buy in. It seemed like a fine philosophy. In five years, I thought, it will seem just as silly as all the other fine philosophies I've had.

Perhaps that wasn't true, though. Perhaps as you went along you did learn something. I did not care what it was all about. All I wanted to know was how to live in it. Maybe if you found out how to live in it you learned from that what it was all about.

2

Reading Check

Analyze Cause and Effect How did World War I affect fiction writing?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: Writers turned their dismay with society into works that broke with tradition and explored the inner lives of their characters.

Literary Element 2

Style, Form, and Impact

Read the excerpt from The Sun Also Rises. Ask: What is the author's style of writing? (Hemingway's writing is concise and direct.) Which sentence shows irony? ("In five years, I thought, it will seem just as silly as all the other fine philosophies I've had.")

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask: What is an author's style? (the unique way an author expresses himself or herself)

View the Art ★

George Bellows (1882–1925) was born in Columbus, Ohio, and became a major American artist of the early 20th century. He was an instructor at the Art Students League in New York and at the Art Institute of Chicago.

Ask: What mood does this painting of New York City portray? (Students may say that the city is crowded with many people, and much of the painting seems dark. This gives the painting a somber mood.)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Have a student volunteer read aloud the excerpt from The Sun Also Rises. Have students paraphrase the first sentence. Ask: What is important about this sentence? (The sentence acts as a thesis statement: it announces what Hemingway is talking about in the following paragraph. It also sets the tone.) Ask: What is the speaker—Jake Barnes—talking about when he refers to "it"? ("Knowing when you had it" means knowing that you have gotten your money's worth. In the second paragraph, it refers to life.)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Preview and Brainstorm

Before students read pages 656 and 657, have them preview and brainstorm questions that they may have about the essay.

APPROACHING Say: Look at the title, the headings, and the painting; then read the first sentence in each section. List ideas about what the text might be about. Have volunteers share their lists.

Political History ☆

Moving to Harlem The Harlem Renaissance was a result of several issues that arose after the Civil War. Reconstruction increased tension between freed African Americans and white Southerners. Hate groups committed acts of violence against African Americans.

Restrictions on immigrants created worker shortages in the North, and factory owners became willing to hire African Americans. Low prices, floods, and insect infestations created hardship for Southern sharecroppers. Thousands of Southern African Americans moved north to find a better life; many settled in Harlem.

Big Idea 3
The Harlem Renaissance

1 Music inspires many of today's writers and artists, just as it did during the Harlem Renaissance. ☆ Artists fed off the energy of jazz and their community and changed American art. The Harlem Renaissance represented the coming-of-age of African American culture and the flowering of the community's creative impulses, especially for southern blacks, who had been exploited for generations.

Good morning, daddy!
Ain't you heard
The boogie-woogie rumble
Of a dream deferred?

—Langston Hughes
from Montage of a Dream Deferred

Blues to Jazz

Out of the African American tradition of spirituals and work songs came blues music. Influenced by blues, jazz later developed in New Orleans as a type of music that combined West African rhythms, ragtime, and some European instruments, such as the string bass. Jazz was largely improvisational, or spontaneous, within a rhythmic framework. Langston Hughes (see pages 810–823) transposed themes and rhythms from blues and jazz into poems that celebrated the everyday life of African Americans and their strength in the face of oppression. Hughes said, "I tried to write poems like the songs they sang on Seventh Street." Jazz inspired an energetic social life and filled clubs. Hughes reported that at one Harlem party thrown by black socialite A'Lelia Walker, it was so crowded that even a Scandinavian prince couldn't get in; he could only have a beverage delivered to his car idling outside the apartment building.

The Neighborhood

Harlem became a main destination during the Great Migration. Word about the vibrant community life and affordable rents in this New York neighborhood quickly spread, attracting writers, artists, and musicians. It was a haven where African Americans could escape the restrictions they faced in the rest of society. In 1929, when the whole country felt the economic shock of the stock market crash, there was less money available to spend on the arts—and as a result, the Harlem Renaissance was over. However, writers in the 1930s and 1940s such as Richard Wright (see pages 899–908) and Ralph Ellison continued the artistic coming-of-age that this movement had begun.

The Deferred Dream

W. E. B. Du Bois's magazine of the NAACP, the Crisis, brought racial issues to the forefront of U.S. culture. He wrote that the "problem of the twentieth century is the problem of the color-line." Racial segregation was widespread, and Du Bois said this created a veil of perception that forced African Americans to see themselves through the eyes of whites. The African American "simply wishes to make it possible for a man to be both a Negro and an American, . . . without having the doors of Opportunity closed roughly in his face," Du Bois said. Racial identity became a pivotal issue for writers in this period. For example, Countee Cullen (see pages 828–831) believed that race was a huge issue, but that a poet's race should not determine how he or she writes or how readers and critics understand him or her. Other writers, such as Arna Bontemps (see pages 824–827), believed that a writer's work could not be separated from his or her racial identity.

Vocabulary Practice

Context Clues Remind students that they use context clues to find the meaning of an unknown word when they look at the surrounding words and sentences. In definition clues, writers provide the meaning of the word. Inference clues enable readers to deduce the meaning from the context. Contrast clues show what the word does not mean. Ask students to figure out the type of clue and definition for each of these words, found in the essay above.

1. exploited (contrast: taken advantage of contrasts with coming-of-age and flowering community)
2. improvisational (definition: spontaneous)
3. perception (inference: "to see themselves" implies the word means how a person views something)

The Janitor Who Paints, ca. 1937. Palmer Hayden. Oil on canvas, 39⅛ x 32⅞ in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC. ★

Hurston's Folklore

Zora Neale Hurston (see pages 790–799) explored the folklore of African Americans and the building of community in the South during Reconstruction. A student of anthropology, she applied her training to her own experiences growing up in southern African American communities in works such as Dust Tracks on a Road. Hurston first went to Harlem at sixteen when she was traveling as a member of a theater group. Although her work became associated with the Harlem Renaissance, she resisted being classified by any artistic movement. "All clumps of people turn out to be individuals on close inspection," she said.

from "The Negro Artist and the Racial Mountain" by Langston Hughes

Most of my own poems are racial in theme and treatment, derived from the life I know. In many of them I try to grasp and hold some of the meanings and rhythms of jazz. I am as sincere as I know how to be in these poems and yet after every reading I answer questions like these from my own people: Do you think Negroes should always write about Negroes? I wish you wouldn't read some of your poems to white folks. How do you find anything interesting in a place like a cabaret? Why do you write about black people? You aren't black. What makes you do so many jazz poems?

But jazz to me is one of the inherent expressions of Negro life in America; the eternal tom-tom beating in the Negro soul—the tom-tom of revolt against weariness in a white world, a world of subway trains, and work, work, work; the tom-tom of joy and laughter, and pain swallowed in a smile. . . .

We younger Negro artists who create now intend to express our individual dark-skinned selves without fear or shame. If white people are pleased we are glad. If they are not, it doesn't matter. We know we are beautiful. And ugly too. The tom-tom cries and the tom-tom laughs. If colored people are pleased we are glad. If they are not, their displeasure doesn't matter either. We build our temples for tomorrow, strong as we know how, and we stand on top of the mountain, free within ourselves. 2

Reading Check

Analyze Cause and Effect How did the Harlem Renaissance contribute to the beginnings of the modern age in literature?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: The writers of the Harlem Renaissance created bold, experimental works that captured the psychology of their subjects and used new, freer, and everyday language in ways that contrasted with traditional literature.

Reading Strategy 2

Make Connections

Ask: How does music affect and inspire you? (Students may say that music affects their moods or that it inspires them to be more creative.) Say: Describe a time when you felt you were treated unfairly. (Students may describe an incident in which a peer, their parents, or a stranger treated them unfairly.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Hughes describes jazz as "the eternal tom-tom beating in the Negro soul." Have students guess the meaning of tom-tom, and then use a dictionary to define it. (a drum or steady beat)

View the Art ★

Palmer Hayden (1890–1973) lived in New York and painted many scenes of Harlem. He studied art abroad and won awards for his paintings.

Ask: Why do you think the painter portrayed here is a janitor? (Students may say that the painter could not support himself through his artwork, or that people from all walks of life could be artists.)

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Jazz Artists Tell students to read a Langston Hughes jazz poem such as "Jam Session," "The Weary Blues," or "Juke Box Love Song." Then have students research jazz or jazz artists of the Harlem Renaissance. Students must consult at least two reputable sources. Have students write a report that provides a clearly stated main idea and supporting examples. Then have them report their results to the class.

Assess/Close

Legacy of the Period

Read the third paragraph.

Ask: How has the fight for civil rights affected our culture? (Job discrimination and segregation are illegal now.)

Cultural and Literary Links

Suggest students look for ways unit authors have influenced today's writers.

Activities

1. Follow Up To help answer the questions, have students list some of the changes that came about in this period.
2. Contrast Literary Periods Responses should include specific examples of creative work in each period.
3. Visual Literacy Remind students of the types of graphic organizers that they might create.
4. Take Notes Remind students that they can go back and skim the introduction to make notes.

FOLDABLES® Study Organizer

Have students make and label the Three-Pocket Foldable. They can put note cards about each Big Idea in the three pockets.

WRAP-UP

Legacy of the Period

The writers who created Modernism challenged the traditional values of society and forms of literature. They believed their innovations brought literature closer to capturing human experience. Today, writers such as Dave Eggers, Jhumpa Lahiri, and Sherman Alexie take on the challenge of portraying reality in the twenty-first century.

Modern poets' use of imagery and everyday speech further convinced people that a poem could be about any subject. The poetry and manifestos of the Imagist movement provided inspiration for many groundbreaking poets of the 1950s and 1960s, including Anne Sexton (see pages 1208–1212) and Sylvia Plath (see pages 1226–1231).

The Harlem Renaissance was an influential time in African American and United States history. The leading figures in the movement blazed a trail for later African American writers, such as James Baldwin and Ralph Ellison, and helped to push forward the battle for civil rights in the 1960s.

Cultural and Literary Links

- The "little magazines" such as Poetry that sprouted up during the period championed modern Imagism and other Modernist experimentation. Poetry's founder, Harriet Monroe, wrote, "The Open Door will be the policy of this magazine—may the great poet we are looking for never find it shut, or half-shut, against his ample genius!" Today, Poetry receives about 90,000 submissions per year.
- William Carlos Williams influenced the Beat Generation writers of the 1950s with his accessible language and experimentation with form.
- The Harlem Renaissance has influenced modern African American poets and hip-hop artists who strive to be leaders for the black community.

Literature Online

Unit Resources For additional skills practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Activities

Choose one of the following activities to explore and develop as you read this unit.

1. Follow Up Go back to the Looking Ahead section on page 645 and answer the questions.
2. Contrast Literary Periods Working with a partner, create a brief presentation for your class comparing and contrasting the Harlem Renaissance era with contemporary hip-hop culture.
3. Visual Literacy Create an illustrated graphic organizer that shows the influences of World War I on American literature and culture. You might show how writers responded to the effects of war, as well as to the postwar economic boom.
4. Take Notes Use this study organizer to keep track of the big ideas in this unit.

FOLDABLES® Study Organizer THREE-TAB BOOK

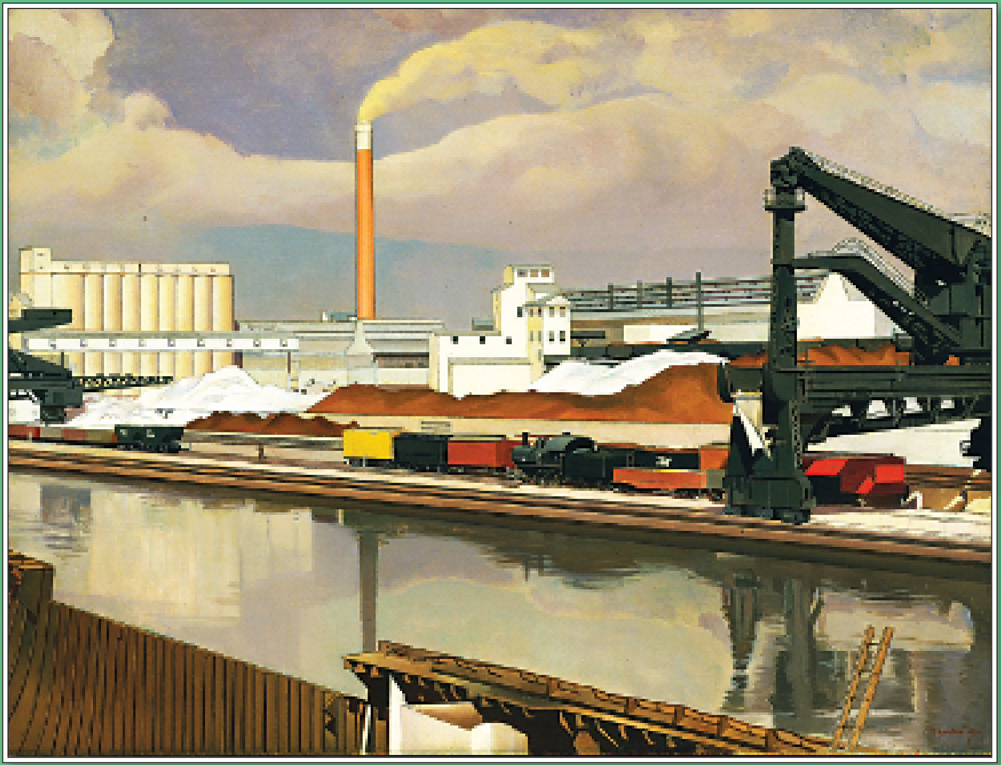
Writing Practice

Organizing Information If students are not sure which activity to choose, discuss with them some of the organizational work that they will need to do for each activity. If they choose one of the follow-up questions, they will need to gather their notes about World War I, Modernism, or the Harlem Renaissance, propose how this event or movement contrasted with the period that preceded it, and how it influenced the period after it.

To compare literary periods, they will need to research examples from hip-hop culture for comparison. For the graphic organizer, they will need to find the right level of detail so that their organizer is useful and readable. For taking notes, they will need to determine the most important points on each page of the introduction.

PART 1

MODERN POETRY



American Landscape, c. 1930. Charles Sheeler. Oil on canvas, 24 x 31 in. The Museum of Modern Art, New York.

View the Art One hallmark of Charles Sheeler's paintings is his use of precise, geometric forms and lines. What do you think he was trying to achieve with this technique? Explain. ★

> "Poetry is the opening and closing of a door, leaving those who look through to guess about what is seen during a moment." 1
>
> —Carl Sandburg, "Poetry Considered"

UNIT FIVE

PART 1

Analyze and Extend

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Direct students to read the Carl Sandburg quotation. Ask: When a door opens and closes, will all viewers see the same items in the moment that the door is open? Why or why not? (No; different viewers will focus on different items.) Ask: What is Sandburg saying about the experience of reading poetry? (Sandburg is saying that the experience of reading poetry is different for each reader; each reader will see something different.)

View the Art ★

Answer: The lines are moving up and to the left, which suggests the landscape is shrinking. The lines are harsh and severe.

Charles Sheeler (1883–1965) often used photographs of industrial subjects to plan his paintings.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate On the board, write: In the 1900s, the United States experienced a growth in factories, technology, and cities. There were also many social changes and significant political events such as World Wars I and II. Have students orally restate the main ideas in their own words. Then lead students to predict how such changes and events may have affected the way that people viewed the world and the subjects that writers chose to address. Provide sentence starters such as the following: When people began working in factories, they may have felt _____. Technology such as subways may have caused people to _____. Because there were more cities, people may have faced problems such as _____. Political events such as the World Wars may have caused people to _____. These changes and events may have caused writers to address subjects such as _____.

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 56

Or tell students that Symbolist poets focused on the mind, whereas Imagist poets focused on sensory experience. Ask: How would a Symbolist's poem about Steichen's photograph differ from an Imagist's poem? (A Symbolist poem would explore the meaning of the image. An Imagist poem would describe the photo with sensory details.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Symbolism Ask: What style elements did Symbolist poets use in their poems? (suggestion, metaphor, symbols)

View the Photograph ★

Edward Steichen (1879–1973) helped gain recognition for photography as an art form.

Learning Objectives

For pages 660–661

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing literary periods.
Analyzing literary genres.
Evaluating historical influences.

Reading: Connecting to the literature.

Symbolist and Imagist Poetry

PHOTOGRAPHERS CAPTURE MOMENTS in time. Painters depict visual ideas through arrangements of colors and shapes. What methods allow writers to use words as someone else might use a camera or a paintbrush? In the beginning of the modern age, a group of poets called the Imagists developed new, influential techniques for presenting visual impressions. Much of their inspiration came from the Symbolists, across the Atlantic Ocean, in France.

The Symbolist Foundation

The avant-garde, or experimental, Symbolist movement in Paris dominated French poetry and art in the late 1800s and inspired the Imagists. Symbolist poets such as Charles Baudelaire, Stéphane Mallarmé, Arthur Rimbaud, and Paul Verlaine reacted against Realism by focusing their attention inward on moods and sensations. These poets believed that direct explanation could not capture emotion. They sought access to the inner workings of the mind through suggestion, metaphor, 1 and symbols. The Symbolists took inspiration from Edgar Allan Poe, whose work is rich in symbolism.

The American Imagists

Contrasting with the Symbolists' abstract poetry, the Imagists presented a concrete, tangible image that appeared frozen in time. "Essentially, it is a moment of revealed truth," wrote critic William Pratt.

"In a Station of the Metro" by Ezra Pound (see page 664) is a classic Imagist poem. Responding to the sight of faces in a train station, Pound condensed a first draft of thirty lines into two lines of fourteen words and two striking images. He believed that the poet should "use no superfluous word, no adjective which does not reveal something." He found a model for this intense compression in Asian poetry, such as in this haiku by Japanese poet Basho:

The Flatiron Building, Evening, from Camera Work, April, 1906. Edward Steichen. ★

On a dead limb squats a crow—
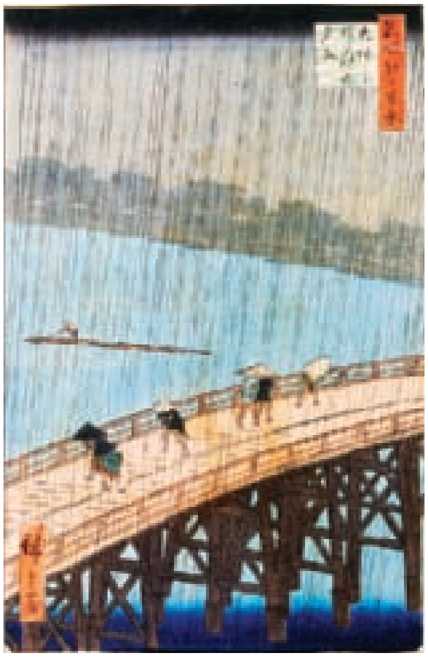
Autumn night.
(Lucien Stryk translation)

In 1912 Pound submitted three poems by H.D. (Hilda Doolittle) to Poetry: A Magazine of Verse.

Study Skills Practice

Connect to Poetry Explain that readers can connect to poetry in several ways. They can draw on personal knowledge and experiences that the details or images of a poem bring to mind. Forming mental images based on the writer's words is another helpful way to understand a poem. Students may also use idea webs and other graphic organizers to decode figurative language and make emotional associations. Have students use these strategies as they study the poems throughout Part 1.



Sudden Rain Shower on Ohashi Bridge, from One Hundred Views of Famous Places in Edo, 1850. Ando Hiroshige. Woodblock print. Musée des Arts Asiatiques-Guimet, Paris.

View the Art This wood-block print recalls the style of Japanese haiku masters such as Basho. What does this print have in common with Imagism? ★

One of the published poems was "Oread" (following). In Greek mythology, the Oreads were nymphs, minor female divinities of nature, from the mountains. Notice the irregular, jagged look of the lines and how the line breaks are determined by the poet's sense of imagery.

Whirl up, sea—
Whirl your pointed pines,
Splash your great pines
On our rocks.
Hurl your green over us—
Cover us with your pools of fir.

H.D. and Amy Lowell were central figures in the Imagist movement. At a poetry reading, Lowell reportedly said to her audience, "Well, clap or hiss, I don't care which, but . . . do something!" Such bold statements energized American poetry, which often displays the Imagist method of compressing an emotion or idea into a sharply observed image.

Imagist Principles 2

The Imagists issued manifestos, or public declarations on their poetic principles. The following are sample manifestos in the style of those issued:

- The image is the essence, the raw material, of poetry.
- Poetry should be expressed in brief, clear, concrete language that forms precise images.
- These images should instantly convey to the reader the poem's meaning and emotion.
- The language of these poetic images should sound like simple speech—not be made up of predictable rhythms and rhymes.
- Topics for poems need not be high-minded or "poetic." No topic is unsuitable for a poem.

Literature Online

Literature and Reading For more about Symbolist and Imagist Poetry, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Respond and Think Critically

1. Who were some of the French poets who formed the Symbolist movement in reaction to Realism?
2. Why did the Symbolist poets refrain from directly explaining their themes?
3. What did the Imagists want to eliminate from poetry? Why?
4. Compare and contrast the ways in which the poems on these two pages reflect the themes of Imagist poets. Which do you find most interesting?

Teach

Big Idea 2

New Poetics Explain that early 20th-century poets experimented with new forms as a way to express feelings and make observations.

View the Art ★

Answer: It depicts a moment frozen in time.

Ando Hiroshige (1797–1858) was a Japanese painter and printmaker.

Assess

1. Baudelaire, Mallarmé, Rimbaud, Verlaine
2. They believed poetry should suggest emotions through creative use of language.
3. They wanted to eliminate sentimentality. They wrote poetry that used simple speech.
4. Each poem captures a moment in time. The haiku captures a still image; H.D.'s poem captures movement.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 20–21.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Explain to students that when they are asked to analyze imagery in a poem, they may want to use a graphic organizer to create associative word lists. For example, help them identify the three natural elements used in the poem on this page: water, pine trees, and rocks. Make sure that students understand the comparison H.D. makes. Have students write these elements as headings in three-column charts. Below each heading, tell students to list every word in the poem that is associated with each element. For example, in the Water column, students might list whirl, sea, splash, and pools. At the bottom of each column, have them note the associations that the word grouping evokes.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus Transparency 40

Daily Language Practice Transparency 57

Or display several images that capture moments in time that students can relate to on subjective and emotional levels (such as the climactic moment of an athletic contest or a dramatic scene from an important current event).

Ask: How can these images be compared with Imagist poetry? Have students consider the similarities and differences between the images and Ezra Pound's poetry, focusing on his directness, exactness, emotion, and the reinvention of the past.

Before You Read

In a Station of the Metro and A Pact

Meet Ezra Pound

(1885–1972)

Ezra Pound's friend and protégé William Carlos Williams once wrote, "Pound is a fine fellow, but not one person in a thousand likes him, and a great many people detest him." Nevertheless, T. S. Eliot claimed Pound was "more responsible for the twentieth-century revolution in poetry than [was] any other individual."

Imagism Pound was born in a small town in Idaho. When he was still young, he determined that "at thirty [he] would know more about poetry than any living man." Pound entered the University of Pennsylvania at age fifteen but completed his undergraduate education at Hamilton College. As a student, he immersed himself in the Latin, Greek, and French classics.

> "I have weathered the storm,
> I have beaten out my exile."
>
> —Ezra Pound, "The Rest"

After receiving his master's degree in 1906, Pound briefly taught languages at a small Presbyterian college in Indiana. His eccentric manner did not fit well with the school's character, and, at 23, Pound left for Europe. He settled first in London, then Paris, and finally in Italy. There he wrote poetry and criticism and translated verse from nine languages. He also served as an overseas editor for Poetry magazine—a position he used to nurture the careers of Robert Frost and T. S. Eliot, among others. In 1912, Pound helped establish Imagism's manifesto. It called for "direct treatment of the 'thing'" and the use of "the language of common speech, but . . . always the exact word."

A Complex Writer Though Pound declared that writers should "Make it new!" he did not believe in newness for its own sake and relied heavily on the literature of the past. In The Cantos, his longest and best-known work, Pound combined materials from different cultures and languages, historical texts, and newspaper articles. The Cantos is an extremely complex work, notorious for its difficulty and uneven quality.

Politics, Prison, and Exile During World War II, Pound supported Fascist Italian dictator Benito Mussolini and made radio broadcasts openly criticizing the United States and the efforts of the Allies in the war. After Italy fell, Pound spent six months as a prisoner of war near Pisa. Here he wrote The Pisan Cantos, generally considered the greatest section of his long work.

After being declared mentally unfit to stand trial for treason, Pound was sent to St. Elizabeth's Hospital for the criminally insane in Washington, D.C. He spent the next twelve years at the hospital, after which the charges against him were dropped. Pound then left the United States, returning to Italy, where he stayed until his death in Venice in 1972.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Ezra Pound, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

In a Station of the Metro and A Pact

Literary Elements
- Imagery (SE pp. 663, 665)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Poem (SE p. 665)

Reading Skills
- Question (SE pp. 663, 665)
- Visualize (TE p. 664)

Vocabulary Skills
- Context Clues (SE p. 665)
- Multiple-Meaning Words (TE p. 663)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

Have you ever looked at something that you see every day as if for the first time? Explore this question in a brief journal entry.

Build Background

"In a Station of the Metro" and "A Pact" were originally published together in Poetry in 1916. Pound was impressed with the brief but evocative Japanese haiku form (see Literary Terms Handbook, p. R9). After experiencing the moment that inspired "In a Station of the Metro," Pound composed a thirty-line poem. He destroyed this first attempt, calling it a work "of second intensity." After two other tries, he created a short, haiku-like poem with a single powerful image.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

As you read, ask yourself, How does Pound employ free verse and the rules of Imagism in his work?

Literary Element Imagery

Imagery is the "word pictures" that writers create to make their subject more vivid or to evoke an emotional response in the reader. In creating effective images, writers use sensory details, or descriptions that appeal to one or more of the five sense: sight, hearing, touch, taste, and smell. As you read, ask yourself, How does Pound use imagery to heighten the effect of his words?

Reading Strategy Question

Questioning is asking yourself regularly whether you've understood what you have read. In an Imagist poem such as "In a Station of the Metro," it is important to use questioning to slow down your reading in order to fully understand the poet's meaning.

Tip: Take Notes As you read "In a Station of the Metro" and "A Pact," note in a double-entry journal any questions that occur to you.

Questions	Answers
How does Pound feel about Walt Whitman?

Learning Objectives

For pages 662–665

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing imagery.

Reading: Questioning.

Writing: Writing a poem.

Vocabulary

detest (di test´) v. to greatly dislike or loathe; p. 664 I have detested television ever since my favorite show was canceled.

sap (sap) n. a watery source of nutrients that flows through a plant's circulatory system; p. 664 I decided never to park under a tree again after finding my car covered in sap.

commerce (kom´ ərs) n. exchange of ideas and opinions; p. 664 Through lively debate and commerce, the two opposing political sides were able to reach an agreement.

apparition (ap´ ə rish´ ən) n. a ghostlike or nearly invisible appearance; p. 664 Those who saw the shadowy apparition in the cemetery believed it was a ghost.

bough (bou) n. tree branch; p. 664 The baby bird clung to the bough as it waited for food.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Using the following headings, create a three-column chart on the board: Word/phrase, Sense(s), Emotion(s). Write the phrase "broke the new wood" from the poem "A Pact" in the first column. Explain that this phrase appeals to the sense of touch as people must use their hands to break wood. Explain that the idea of cutting new wood represents the excitement of starting a new project. Record these ideas in the sense and emotion columns. Have students record their ideas in the appropriate columns.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In "A Pact," Ezra Pound comes to terms with Walt Whitman's legacy. "In a Station of the Metro" presents a momentary vision in a Paris subway—an instant when a familiar sight captures Pound's attention in a new way.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 23–28.

Vocabulary

Multiple-Meaning Words

Tell students that many English words have more than one meaning. For example, the word sap may refer to the nutrient system of a plant or to a foolish or gullible person. Readers must use context to determine which meaning of a word an author intends.

Ask: What does the word commerce mean in each of the following sentences?

- The commerce at the political convention was lively and insightful. (exchange of ideas and opinions)
- The decline in commerce led to an economic depression. (the buying and selling of goods between cities, states, or nations)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 31.

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Answer: It suggests Pound believes that Whitman laid the groundwork for Modernism.

Reading Strategy 2

Visualize After students read the poem "In a Station of the Metro," have them describe the image they visualize and the emotions they associate with it. (Possible answers: the faces of people speeding by in subway cars; isolation, loneliness.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 30.

Writer's Technique ☆

Apostrophe Tell students that apostrophe is a writer addressing a dead person or an object as if it could respond. Ask: How does Pound use apostrophe in "A Pact" and to what effect? (Possible answer: to address Walt Whitman as though speaking directly to him; Walt Whitman comes alive for readers)

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

A Pact

Ezra Pound

I make a pact with you, Walt Whitman— ☆
I have detested you long enough.
I come to you as a grown child
Who has had a pig-headed father;
I am old enough now to make friends.
It was you that broke the new wood,
Now is a time for carving.
We have one sap and one root—
Let there be commerce between us.

Vocabulary

detest (di test´) v. to greatly dislike or loathe sap (sap) n. a watery source of nutrients that flows through a plant's circulatory system commerce (kom´ ərs) n. exchange of ideas and opinions

1 New Poetics What does line 6 suggest about Pound's understanding of Walt Whitman's relationship to modern poetry?

In a Station of the Metro[1]

Ezra Pound

The apparition of these faces in the crowd; 2
Petals on a wet, black bough.

---

[1] The Metro refers to the Paris subway.

Vocabulary

apparition (ap´ ə rish´ ən) n. a ghostlike or nearly invisible appearance bough (bou) n. tree branch

Study Skills Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Paraphrase Tell students that paraphrasing is a useful way to study and understand poetry. Remind them that when they paraphrase, they restate the writer's ideas in their own words. For example, a paraphrase of "In a Station of the Metro" might be as follows: The ghostly faces of people in the crowd look like flower petals blown against a tree branch.

Have students reread "A Pact," clarifying the meaning of any lines or phrases that might not be clear. Then have them write a paraphrase of it. Students can then form small groups in which they read and critique each other's paraphrases.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. (a)In the first line of "In a Station of the Metro," what word does the speaker use to describe how the faces look to him? (b)What might that word suggest about the faces?
2. (a)In the second line, to what image does the speaker compare the faces? (b)From this image, what can you infer about the speaker's feelings?
3. (a)In "A Pact," to whom is the poem addressed? In what way have the speaker's feelings changed about that person? (b)What might be the reason?
4. (a)What is the extended metaphor used in the last four lines of "A Pact"? (b)What idea do you think the speaker expresses in these lines?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Pound once wrote, "The image is the poet's pigment." How is "In a Station of the Metro" like a painting? Explain.
6. (a)Briefly describe the most important differences in tone, form, and content of these two poems. (b)Which poem seems more compelling? Explain.

Connect

7. Big Idea New Poetics How do these poems embody the values and stylistic goals of Modernism and Imagism?
8. Connect to the Author Which of these poems do you think reveals more about the poet? Explain.

Literary Element Imagery

While most imagery appeals to the sense of sight, images can appeal to all five senses. The same image may also involve more than a single sense.

1. Which senses does Pound appeal to in "In a Station of the Metro"?
2. Identify one image from "A Pact" that appeals to the sense of sight.

Reading Strategy Question

Questioning To understand an author's purpose, ask yourself questions as you read:

1. What do you think was Pound's purpose for writing "A Pact"?
2. Write and answer two questions about the poem that could help you determine Pound's purpose.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Context Clues Identify context clues to the meaning of each vocabulary word.

1. We need commerce, or an exchange of ideas and opinions, to solve the problem.
2. I highly doubt that some ghostly apparition stole your homework.
3. The heavy storm caused the bough of a tree to fall and crash into my windshield.
4. I have never enjoyed travel in an airplane; in fact, I have always detested it.
5. Parked under the tree, my car was covered in sap that had dripped from its branches.

Writing

Write a Poem Review the journal entry you were asked to complete on page 663 under Connect to the Poems. Using "In a Station of the Metro" as an example, write a short, descriptive poem about the experience you described.

After You Read

Assess

1. (a) Apparition (b) They are ghostlike and hazy.
2. (a) Petals on a wet branch (b) He sees them as a contrast to their surroundings.
3. (a) Walt Whitman, whom the speaker no longer detests (b) Pound's development as a poet and reader has allowed him to accept Whitman.
4. (a) Poetry as wood (b) Whitman developed a new form of poetry, which the speaker will now refine.
5. It presents the poet's idea in visual terms.
6. (a) "In a Station . . ." evokes an emotional response with images. "A Pact" is longer and contains more explicit content. (b) Students' answers will vary.
7. "In a Station . . ." epitomizes the Imagist aesthetic, and the tone, content, and open form of "A Pact" reflect Modernist tendencies.
8. Students might choose "A Pact" because the speaker is more defined, though "Metro" creates a strong tone which could be revealing.

Literary Element

1. Sight
2. Possible answer: the "new wood"

Progress Check

Can students analyze imagery?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 29.

Writing

Students' poems should be short but include strong descriptive images.

Reading Strategy

1. To define himself as a Modernist poet in relation to Walt Whitman
2. What does Pound think of Whitman? Why is Pound making a pact?

Vocabulary

1. The definition of commerce is provided in the phrase, "exchange of ideas and opinions."
2. Apparition is modified by "ghostly," giving a clue that an apparition has a ghostlike appearance.
3. During storms, tree branches, a synonym of bough, tend to fall.
4. The sentence indicates that detested, has an opposite meaning to the word "enjoyed."
5. Based on the context, sap is a sticky liquid that a tree produces.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Literature Launchers:
Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Selection Launcher

Selection Focus Transparency 41

Daily Language Practice Transparency 58

Or have students discuss what they know about love songs. Ask: What are some common characteristics of love songs? What are some different themes in love songs?

Have students consider, as they read, to what extent those characteristics appear in "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock."

Literary History ☆

Poetry Founded in 1912, Poetry magazine was devoted entirely to the publication and criticism of new poetry. Many poets of the early twentieth century were first published in this magazine.

Before You Read

The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock

Meet T. S. Eliot
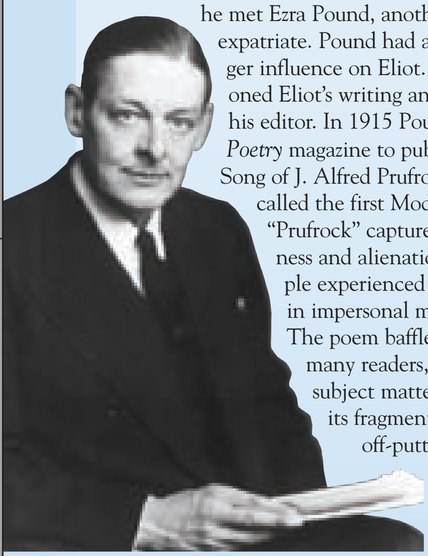
(1888–1965)

T. S. Eliot revolutionized poetry more than any other twentieth-century writer. His experiments in language and form and his introduction of the scenes and concerns of everyday life into poetry changed literary tastes and influenced future poets.

Eliot was born in St. Louis, Missouri, into a distinguished family that provided him with the best education available. In 1906 he matriculated at Harvard, where he steeped himself in literature and published his first poems. At Harvard, he studied under Irving Babbitt, the New Humanist critic of Romanticism, who helped Eliot develop his taste for classicism in literature. Eliot then studied philosophy at the Sorbonne in Paris, at Harvard, and at Oxford. He eventually settled in England.



The First Modernist Poet In his youth, Eliot was influenced by the French Symbolists. In England, he met Ezra Pound, another American expatriate. Pound had an even stronger influence on Eliot. He championed Eliot's writing and served as his editor. In 1915 Pound persuaded ☆ Poetry magazine to publish "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock." Often called the first Modernist poem, "Prufrock" captures the emptiness and alienation many people experienced while living in impersonal modern cities. The poem baffled and angered many readers, who found its subject matter "unpoetic," its fragmented structure off-putting, and its allusions difficult to understand.

The outbreak of World War I prevented Eliot's return to Harvard for his final doctoral examinations. He remained in England, where he married Vivien Haigh-Wood, taught school, and worked for Lloyds Bank. He also continued to write poetry and literary essays. His best-known work, The Waste Land, was published in 1922; in it he expresses the disillusionment that many people felt after World War I and decries the inability to find meaning and purpose in life. The work brought him international acclaim, but not happiness. Eliot was facing great strain in his marriage and in his job.

> "Genuine poetry can communicate before it is understood."
>
> —T. S. Eliot

Finding a Purpose Eventually, Eliot began a new, more satisfying career as a book editor and joined the Church of England. In Christianity he found a purpose in life, and in his poems, such as "The Hollow Men," "Ash Wednesday," and Four Quartets, he described the importance and difficulty of belief in a spiritually impoverished world.

Eliot received the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1948. His poetry has been praised for the power of its symbolism, its precise language, and its mastery of form. At the time of his death in 1965, Eliot was considered by many to be the most important and influential poet and critic writing in the English language.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about T. S. Eliot, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock

Literary Elements
- Allusion (SE pp. 667, 671, 672, 674)
- Dramatic Monologue (SE p. 674)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Short Story (SE p. 675)
- Run-on Sentences (SE p. 675)
- Mood of Verbs (TE p. 670)

Vocabulary Skills
- Antonyms (SE p. 674)
- Analogies (TE p. 667)

Reading Skills
- Connect to Cultural Context (SE pp. 667, 669–671, 674)
- Sequence (TE p. 668)
- Personal Response (TE p. 672)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 673; TE pp. 668, 671)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poem

In Eliot's poem, the speaker asks himself, "Do I dare?" about several things. Do you ever ask yourself that same question? How do you answer? Discuss this subject with a partner or small group.

Build Background

When Eliot wrote "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock," cities were growing at a rapid rate. In many countries, city dwellers outnumbered those inhabiting rural areas. Factories overran residential neighborhoods, and people crowded into huge tenement buildings. Factory owners amassed great wealth at the expense of workers who toiled under miserable conditions. In his poems, Eliot expressed the feelings of loneliness, alienation, and frustration that came with these changes.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

As you read, ask yourself, In what ways does Eliot reject some of the conventions of traditional poetry?

Literary Element Allusion

An allusion is an indirect reference to a character, a place, or a situation from history, art, music, or literature. For example, "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" can be seen as an extended allusion to Dante's Inferno. By quoting Dante in the epigraph, Eliot suggests that Prufrock's journey with a companion through the streets of London to "the room" is similar to the journey that Dante and Virgil make through the underworld to the center of hell. As you read, ask yourself, What purpose do Eliot's allusions serve?

Reading Strategy Connect to Cultural Context

A piece of writing is more meaningful to you when you place it in its cultural context. Think about the society in which the writer lived, the technologies that surrounded the writer, and the historical forces that influenced the writer's choice of subject matter, point of view, and tone. "Prufrock," like much of Eliot's work, is set in the cultural context of England's upper-middle-class society in London before, during, and after World War I.

Learning Objectives

For pages 666–674

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing allusion.

Reading: Connecting to cultural context.

Vocabulary

tedious (tē´ dē əs) adj. tiresome because of length; boring; p. 668 After an hour, my uncle's talk on fly fishing became tedious.

presume (pri zo͞om´) v. to expect something without justification; to take for granted; p. 670 The employee presumed she would be promoted because her boss liked her.

digress (dī gres´) v. to depart from the main subject; to ramble; p. 670 The teacher digressed by telling the class amusing anecdotes.

malinger (mə ling´ gər) v. to pretend incapacity or illness to avoid work; p. 670 To avoid Eva, John malingered, staying home.

deferential (def´ ə ren´ shəl) adj. yielding to someone else's opinions or wishes; p. 672 Sam was always deferential toward his father.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

As the character of J. Alfred Prufrock is developed, he is revealed to be a person of low self-esteem who is an observer of life rather than an active participant in it.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 35–40.

Vocabulary

Analogies Tell students that antonyms often appear in word analogies, or groups of words that are related in the same ways. For example: cold : hot :: insidious : honest. Ask: Which vocabulary word best completes this analogy: up : down :: disrespectful : _____? (deferential) Which vocabulary word best completes this analogy: back : forward :: focus : _____? (digress)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 43.

Interactive Read and Write

Other options for teaching this selection can be found in

- Interactive Read and Write for EL Students, pp. 179–188
- Interactive Read and Write for Approaching-Level Students, pp. 179–188
- Interactive Read and Write for On-Level Students, pp. 179–188

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Explain to students that when writers make allusions, they expect the readers to recognize these references. To prepare students to read the poem, write the following references in idea webs on the board: Dante's Inferno, Michelangelo, John the Baptist, Lazarus, and Hamlet. Ask students to tell what they already know about each term, and record the information in the radiating circles.

As students read, they can use the side column notes and information from class discussions to add to these webs.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Connect to Cultural Context Explain that Dante's epigraph prepares readers for a literary journey to hell. Remind students that World War I was fought between 1914 and 1918. Eliot's poem was published in 1919. Ask: What might Eliot be saying about the effect of World War I on modern life? (Possible answer: World War I created a kind of hell on Earth because people felt disenchanted, spiritually dead, and isolated.)

Big Idea 2

New Poetics Answer: It captures the emptiness and sense of isolation many people feel in an impersonal modern city.

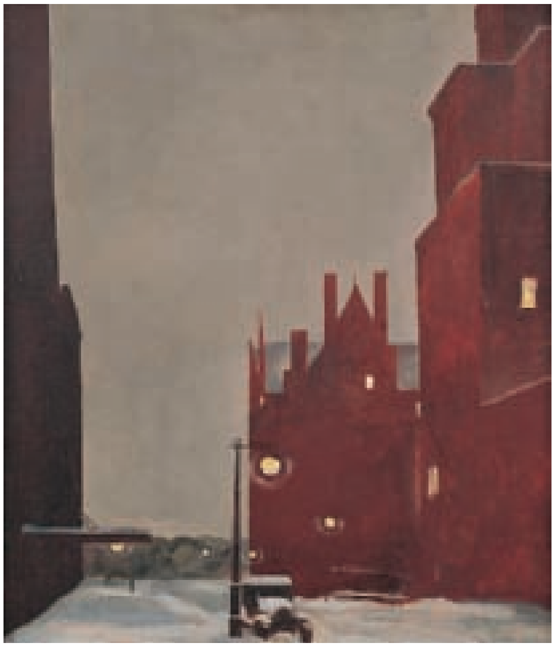
View the Art

Although born in Nuremberg, Germany, Stefan Hirsch (1899–1964) was considered an American artist. Ask: How does Hirsch's painting capture the mood of the opening lines of the poem? (Possible answer: The dark colors and shadows capture the ominous feelings expressed in the opening lines.)

The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock

T. S. Eliot



Winter Night, 1928. Stefan Hirsch. Oil on panel, 22½ x 19¾ in. Collection of the Newark Museum.

1

S'io credessi che mia resposta fosse
a persona che mai tornasse al mondo, questa fiamma staria senza più scosse.
Ma per ciò che giammai di questo fondo non tornò vivo alcun, s'i'odo il vero, senza tema d'infamia ti respondo.[1]

Let us go then, you and I,
When the evening is spread out against the sky
Like a patient etherised[2] upon a table;
Let us go, through certain half-deserted streets,
The muttering retreats
Of restless nights in one-night cheap hotels
And sawdust restaurants with oyster-shells:
Streets that follow like a tedious argument
Of insidious intent

2 New Poetics How is this simile an example of Modernism in poetry?

Vocabulary

tedious (tē´ dē əs) adj. tiresome because of length; boring

---

[1] The epigraph is from Dante's Inferno, Canto XXVII, in which a condemned spirit in hell confesses his sins. He says, "If I thought that I was speaking / to someone who would go back to the world, / this flame would shake no more. / But since nobody has ever / gone back alive from this place, if what I hear is true, / I answer you without fear of infamy."

[2] Etherised (etherized) (ē´ thə rīzd´) means "anesthetized with ether, as before an operation"; in other words, "made insensitive to pain."

Reading Practice

SMALL GROUP

Sequence Point out some ways in which Eliot links the seemingly disparate stanzas in this poem. Examples: the words "In the room" (line 13) answer the question of where the speaker intends to visit (line 12). Lines 15–22 extend the description of evening in lines 2–3. Line 37 picks up the idea of time, repeating line 23. Tell students that understanding the links will help them understand the structure of the poem. Have students work in pairs to identify other links between phrases and lines in the poem. Encourage them to create sequence chains that show how the phrases and lines connect.

To lead you to an overwhelming question . . .
Oh, do not ask, 'What is it?'
Let us go and make our visit.
In the room the women come and go
Talking of Michelangelo.[3]

The yellow fog that rubs its back upon the window-panes,
The yellow smoke that rubs its muzzle on the window-panes,
Licked its tongue into the corners of the evening,
Lingered upon the pools that stand in drains,
Let fall upon its back the soot that falls from chimneys,
Slipped by the terrace, made a sudden leap,
And seeing that it was a soft October night,
Curled once about the house, and fell asleep.
And indeed there will be time
For the yellow smoke that slides along the street
Rubbing its back upon the window-panes;
There will be time, there will be time
To prepare a face to meet the faces that you meet;
There will be time to murder and create,
And time for all the works and days of hands
That lift and drop a question on your plate;
Time for you and time for me,
And time yet for a hundred indecisions,
And for a hundred visions and revisions,
Before the taking of a toast and tea.

In the room the women come and go
Talking of Michelangelo.

And indeed there will be time
To wonder, 'Do I dare?' and, 'Do I dare?'
Time to turn back and descend the stair,
With a bald spot in the middle of my hair—
(They will say: 'How his hair is growing thin!')
My morning coat,[4] my collar mounting firmly to the chin,
My necktie rich and modest, but asserted[5] by a simple pin—
(They will say: 'But how his arms and legs are thin!')
Do I dare
Disturb the universe?

Connect to Cultural Context What is the cultural difference between this room and the streets through which Prufrock has traveled? 4

New Poetics How does Eliot disregard traditional poetic elements in these lines? What traditional element does he keep? 5

---

[3] Michelangelo Buonarroti (mī′ kəl an′ jə lō bwô nä rô′ tē) (1475–1564) was a gifted Italian sculptor and painter.

[4] A morning coat is a man's jacket that slopes away from a front button at the waist to tails at the back. It was worn for formal daytime dress.

[5] Here, asserted means "made more bold" or "enhanced."

Teach

Literary Element 3

Metaphor Discuss the metaphor developed in lines 15–22. Ask: What animal is the fog and smoke compared to? (a cat) How does this metaphor compare with the simile of the "tedious argument of insidious intent" in lines 8–9? (Both imply stealth and furtiveness.) What emotion does this metaphor evoke? (fear)

For additional literary element practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 41.

Reading Strategy 4

Connect to Cultural Context Answer: The room is filled with cultured conversation, unlike the seedy "cheap hotels" and "sawdust restaurants."

APPROACHING Ask: What is the difference between the people who attend a tea party to talk about art and the people who go to "one-night cheap hotels" and "sawdust restaurants"?

Big Idea 5

New Poetics Answer: The lines are of irregular length and rhythm; the phrase "there will be time" is repeated not as a refrain but as a nagging reminder. The use of rhyme (street/meet) is traditional but is not part of a conventional rhyme scheme.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Provide student pairs with two-column charts. Make the first column heading "What do we know about . . . " and the second column "Answers." Fill in these completions for the question in the first row:

. . . the streets?

. . . Prufrock—both physically and emotionally?

. . . Prufrock's companion?

. . . the room?

. . . the people in the room?

Have the students reread the poem and record the answers to these questions in the second column using textual support. Have each pair share their information aloud with the class.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Draw Conclusions Have students discuss the meaning of lines 73–74. Ask: What is Prufrock's opinion of himself? What image reveals that opinion? (The image of a "scuttling" ocean creature reveals that Prufrock has low self-esteem.) Ask: What emotion does this image evoke in readers toward Prufrock? (pity)

Reading Strategy 2

Connect to Cultural Context Answer: The people in the society that Prufrock inhabits are consumed by tedious and trivial rituals.

In a minute there is time
For decisions and revisions which a minute will reverse.

For I have known them all already, known them all—
Have known the evenings, mornings, afternoons,
I have measured out my life with coffee spoons;
I know the voices dying with a dying fall
Beneath the music from a farther room.
So how should I presume?

And I have known the eyes already, known them all—
The eyes that fix you in a formulated[6] phrase,
And when I am formulated, sprawling on a pin,
When I am pinned and wriggling on the wall,
Then how should I begin
To spit out all the butt-ends of my days and ways?
And how should I presume?
And I have known the arms already, known them all—
Arms that are braceleted and white and bare
(But in the lamplight, downed with light brown hair!)?
Is it perfume from a dress
That makes me so digress?
Arms that lie along a table, or wrap about a shawl.
And should I then presume?
And how should I begin?
Shall I say, I have gone at dusk through narrow streets
And watched the smoke that rises from the pipes
Of lonely men in shirt-sleeves, leaning out of windows? . . . 1
I should have been a pair of ragged claws
Scuttling across the floors of silent seas.
And the afternoon, the evening, sleeps so peacefully!
Smoothed by long fingers,
Asleep . . . tired . . . or it malingers,
Stretched on the floor, here beside you and me.
Should I, after tea and cakes and ices,
Have the strength to force the moment to its crisis?
But though I have wept and fasted, wept and prayed,

---

[6] Formulated means "reduced to or expressed as a formula," thereby losing individuality.

2 Connect to Cultural Context What does this metaphor tell the reader about the society that Prufrock inhabits?

Vocabulary

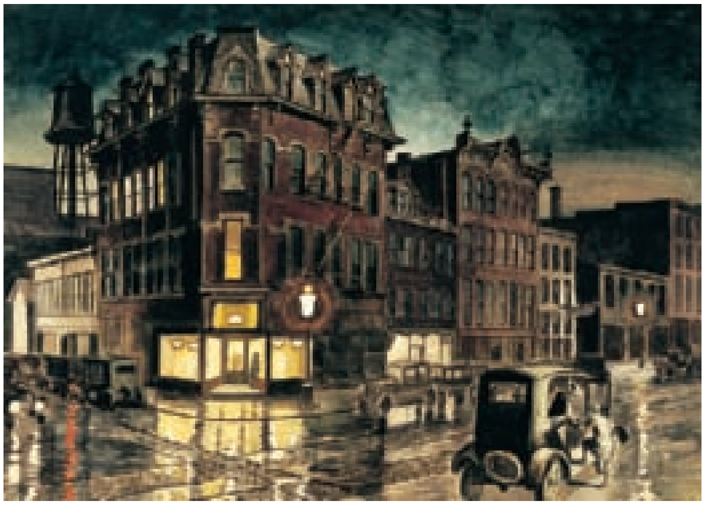
presume (pri zo͞om´) v. to expect something without justification; to take for granted digress (dī gres´) v. to depart from the main subject; to ramble malinger (mə ling´ gər) v. to pretend incapacity or illness to avoid work

Grammar Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Mood of Verbs Point out that in addition to tense and voice, verbs also express mood. The two most common are the indicative mood and the imperative mood. The indicative makes a statement or asks a question. The imperative gives a command. Write these examples on the board:

Indicative: "So how should I presume?"
Imperative: "Oh, do not ask, 'What is it?'"

Have students list other examples of indicative and imperative verbs in "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock."



Rainy Night, 1929–1930. Charles Burchfield. Watercolor, 30 x 42 in. San Diego Museum of Art, CA. Gift of Anne R. and Amy Putnam.

Though I have seen my head (grown slightly bald) brought in upon a platter[7]
I am no prophet[8]—and here's no great matter;
I have seen the moment of my greatness flicker,
And I have seen the eternal Footman[9] hold my coat, and snicker,
And in short, I was afraid.

And would it have been worth it, after all,
After the cups, the marmalade, the tea,
Among the porcelain, among some talk of you and me,
Would it have been worth while,
To have bitten off the matter with a smile,
To have squeezed the universe into a ball

To roll it towards some overwhelming question,
To say: 'I am Lazarus, come from the dead,[10]
Come back to tell you all, I shall tell you all'—
If one, settling a pillow by her head,
Should say: 'That is not what I meant at all.
That is not it, at all.'
And would it have been worth it, after all,
Would it have been worth while,
After the sunsets and the dooryards and the sprinkled streets,

---

[7] [head . . . platter] This biblical reference is to the beheading of the prophet John the Baptist (Matthew 14:1–11). King Herod was so pleased with the dancing of Salome, his stepdaughter, that he promised her anything she desired. Prompted by her mother, Salome asked for the head of John on a platter. Herod granted her request.

[8] A prophet is a person who predicts the future or who speaks by divine inspiration.

[9] The eternal Footman is Death.

[10] [I am Lazarus . . . dead] This biblical reference is to John 11:1–44 in which Jesus restores his friend Lazarus to life after he has been dead for four days.

Allusion Although he claims not to be a prophet, Prufrock compares himself to John the Baptist. In what sense does Prufrock envision his head "brought in upon a platter"? 3

Connect to Cultural Context How does this symbol characterize the cultural context of the poem? 4

Teach

Literary Element 3

Allusion Answer: In his morbid self-consciousness, Prufrock imagines his bald head being displayed for the amusement of the guests at the tea party. Perhaps he feels as vulnerable to a woman's scorn as John the Baptist turned out to be.

Reading Strategy 4

Connect to Cultural Context Answer: The snickering "eternal Footman" is Eliot's symbol for death. Prufrock imagines that, in the shallow culture of upper class London, even the servants would be amused by his inconsequential death.

View the Art

The American painter Charles Burchfield (1893–1967) used his paintings to express his feelings about his surroundings.

Ask: How does the artist reveal his feelings about the setting? (The dark colors and shadows reveal a gloomy, uneasy setting.)

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Dramatic Monologue Tell students that this poem is a dramatic monologue. The speaker reveals his own character through his speech. Throughout the monologue, the listener remains silent. Ask: Is the listener the reader or a character? Is the listener real or imagined? Tell students to answer the questions using evidence from the poem. Then, have students write and deliver an original dramatic monologue in prose or verse from the point of view of Prufrock's listener.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Allusion Answer: Prufrock does not see himself as a heroic figure like Hamlet but as a foolish and ridiculous figure.

APPROACHING Explain that Prufrock understands life to be similar to a stage play. Some people such as Hamlet are heroes; some people such as Polonius are needless advisors; and some people such as Prufrock are fools.

Big Idea 2

New Poetics Answer: The line undercuts any sense of romance in the image of the mermaids. Although it is a perfect example of iambic pentameter, it is not part of any overall metrical pattern; it stands alone.

Ask: How is the form of this poem different from the forms of poems from earlier time periods? (Possible answer: The stanzas are of unequal length, and rhyme and meter are used irregularly.)

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 45.

After the novels, after the teacups, after the skirts that trail along the floor—
And this, and so much more?—
It is impossible to say just what I mean!

But as if a magic lantern[11] threw the nerves in patterns on a screen:
Would it have been worth while
If one, settling a pillow or throwing off a shawl,
And turning toward the window, should say:
  'That is not it at all,
  That is not what I meant, at all.'

No! I am not Prince Hamlet,[12] nor was meant to be;
Am an attendant lord, one that will do
To swell a progress,[13] start a scene or two,
Advise the prince; no doubt, an easy tool,
Deferential, glad to be of use,
Politic,[14] cautious, and meticulous;
Full of high sentence, but a bit obtuse;[15]
At times, indeed, almost ridiculous—
Almost, at times, the Fool.

I grow old . . . I grow old . . .
I shall wear the bottoms of my trousers rolled.

Shall I part my hair behind? Do I dare to eat a peach?
I shall wear white flannel trousers, and walk upon the beach.
I have heard the mermaids singing, each to each.

I do not think that they will sing to me.

I have seen them riding seaward on the waves
Combing the white hair of the waves blown back
When the wind blows the water white and black.

We have lingered in the chambers of the sea
By sea-girls wreathed with seaweed red and brown
Till human voices wake us, and we drown.

1 Allusion What does this allusion tell the reader about how Prufrock sees himself?

2 New Poetics How is this line an example of the new poetics of Modernism?

Vocabulary

deferential (def′ ə ren′ shəl) adj. yielding to someone else's opinions or wishes

---

[11] The magic lantern, a forerunner of the modern slide projector, was a device for projecting enlarged images.

[12] Prince Hamlet is the Prince of Denmark, the tragic hero of Shakespeare's play Hamlet.

[13] To swell a progress is to participate in, and thereby increase (swell) the number of people in a royal procession or a play.

[14] Politic (po′ lə tik) means "characterized by prudence or shrewdness in managing, dealing, or promoting a policy."

[15] High sentence is fancy, pompous speech full of advice, like that of the old counselor Polonius in Hamlet. Obtuse (əb to͞os′) means "slow in understanding" or "dull."

Reading Practice

Personal Response Participants are active readers who interact with texts; spectators are passive readers. When asked to write a personal response, a participant has difficulty choosing among various responses, and a spectator has difficulty finding something to say.

- Ask students to write personal responses to the poem, using at least one of the following active-reading strategies: listen, imagine, clarify, interpret.
- Encourage students to develop a question related to each strategy to guide them as they write.

Have student volunteers share their personal responses to the poem with the class.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What image does the name J. Alfred Prufrock conjure up for you? How does Prufrock, as his character and personality are expressed throughout the poem, illustrate this image?
2. (a)In lines 1–9, what do the images Prufrock uses to describe the evening and the places he will travel through evoke? (b)What do the images suggest about his state of mind?
3. (a)What kinds of activities does Prufrock say he will have time for in lines 26–48? (b)What does he mean by "Do I dare/Disturb the universe"?
4. (a)How does Prufrock describe himself and his life in lines 49–74? (b)What does Prufrock's description of his life suggest about his personal self-assessment?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. In lines 26–27, what does Prufrock mean when he says that there will be time "To prepare a face to meet the faces that you meet"?
6. What, in your opinion, is Prufrock's "overwhelming question" (lines 10, 93)?
7. (a)What do the mermaids (124–130) suggest about Prufrock's state of mind? (b)What is the function of the final line of the poem?

Connect

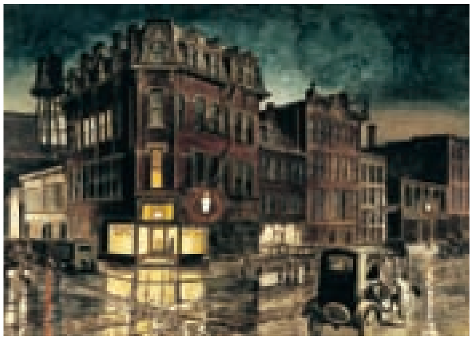
8. Big Idea New Poetics (a)How does this "love song" differ from traditional love poetry? (b)How is the title of the poem ironic?
9. Connect to Today What aspects of life cause alienation and frustration today? Explain.

Visual Literacy

Fine Art

Study the painting Rainy Night at right. (A larger version appears on page 671.) Charles Burchfield (1893–1967) painted this work in 1930. It is representative of the second phase of the artist's career, when he painted scenes depicting the bleakness of city life.

1. What is your overall impression of the painting? Cite details in the painting that contribute to your impression.
2. Which images or lines from "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" might you use to describe this painting? Explain.



Rainy Night, 1929–1930. Charles Burchfield. Watercolor, 30 x 42 in. San Diego Museum of Art, CA. Gift of Anne R. and Amy Putnam.

After You Read

Assess

1. The name is stuffy and comical. Prufrock is indecisive, insecure, afraid of aging.
2. (a) Sickliness, loneliness, and sordidness (b) He sees himself as a helpless "patient," traveling hopelessly through life.
3. (a) Preparing a face; murdering and creating; indecisions, visions, and revisions; wondering "Do I dare?"; turning back and descending the stair (b) Any expression of truth or strong emotion would disturb the shallow inhabitants of his social "universe."
4. (a) He cannot "begin" or "presume" to express himself or declare love, and fears becoming one of the "lonely men in shirt-sleeves." (b) He is unable to improve his dreary life.
5. He means that there will be time to create a superficial "face" to make a good impression.
6. A question about life's meaning
7. (a) He has an erotic fantasy about the mermaids, but he fears they will not sing to him. (b) It sums up Prufrock's life view—we live trivial, purposeless lives, and then we die.
8. (a)The poem is not traditional because the speaker cannot make a declaration of love. (b) His "love song" is actually a lament that expresses his inability to express his feelings.
9. Students may say people in cities are isolated from their neighbors and that the intrusion of technology into daily life causes frustration for some people.

Fine Art

1. Possible answer: It is sad and depressing. Students may cite the rainy street, the gloomy colors, and the lack of much human activity.
2. Possible answers: "the evening is spread out against the sky"; "half-deserted streets"

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 189–190.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Element

1. Prufrock feels that he is not the "hero" of his own life. He does not have the rank of a prince, and although Hamlet eventually acts, Prufrock does not.
2. John, Lazarus, and Hamlet are impressive figures who are taken seriously. They contrast with Prufrock, who is unable to rise above mediocrity.
3. The allusions add richness and complexity to the poem and enlarge its artistic compass.

Review: Dramatic Monologue

1. Possible answers: the reader of the poem; Prufrock's alter ego; an unidentified companion
2. The "you" in the epigraph refers to Dante and Virgil, to whom the speaker confides. The use of "you" in line 1 therefore implies that Prufrock will similarly confide in the reader.
3. Prufrock maintains a fairly even tone—one of quiet despair.

Vocabulary

1. e 2. g 3. a 4. b 5. f

Progress Check

Can students connect to a cultural context?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 42.

Literary Element Allusion

An allusion can add richness and depth to a work of literature through its association of ideas. For example, lines 92–93 contain an allusion to Andrew Marvell's poem "To His Coy Mistress," in which the speaker says, "Let us roll all our strength and all / Our sweetness into one ball, / And tear our pleasures with rough strife / Through the iron gates of life." This allusion is ironic because Prufrock, after squeezing "the universe into a ball," is unable to "roll it towards some overwhelming question."

1. In the allusion to Shakespeare in lines 111–119, why does Prufrock claim he is not Prince Hamlet?
2. In the poem, Prufrock makes allusions to John the Baptist, Lazarus, and Hamlet. What do these characters have in common? How do they relate to Prufrock?
3. In your opinion, what is the overall effect of Eliot's use of allusions in this poem?

Review: Dramatic Monologue

As you learned on page 515, a dramatic monologue is an extended speech by a literary character to a silent listener. When that silent listener is the reader, the speech takes the form of an interior monologue, also known as stream of consciousness, a term first used by the psychologist William James to describe the spontaneous flow of a person's random thoughts and feelings. Some readers have interpreted "Prufrock" as a stream-of-consciousness monologue in which Prufrock addresses his alter ego, or the opposite side of his personality.

Partner Activity Meet with a classmate and talk about the function of the dramatic monologue in "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock." Address these questions during your discussion:

1. Who is the "you" in line 1?
2. What is the relationship between the "you" in the poem and the "you" in the epigraph from Dante's Inferno?
3. Does Prufrock maintain the same tone throughout the poem? Explain.

Reading Strategy Connect to Cultural Context

The lines "In the room the women come and go/ Talking of Michelangelo" (lines 13–14, 35–36) refer to the great Italian Renaissance painter.

1. What can you infer about these women?
2. Why do you think that the lines are repeated? What can you infer from this repetition about the nature of the women's conversations?

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Antonyms An antonym is a word that has a meaning opposite to that of another word. With a partner, match each boldfaced vocabulary word below with its antonym. You will not use all the answer choices. Use a thesaurus or dictionary to check your answers.

1. tedious
2. presume
3. digress
4. malinger
5. deferential

a. focus
b. persevere
c. candid
d. pretend
e. interesting
f. disobedient
g. know

Academic Vocabulary

In "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock," Eliot comments on the hopelessness of modern life.

Comment is an academic word. A reporter looking for a quotation for a story might take notes as a politician comments on an election.

To further explore the meaning of this word, answer the following question: If you were to write a poem similar to this one about modern life, how would you comment on your world?

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Reading Strategy

1. B is the correct answer because the reference to Michelangelo suggests the women's familiarity with art, but their coming and going suggests a lack of serious concentration.

Academic Vocabulary

Students might mention greed or the sense of danger and claustrophobia in cities.

Respond Through Writing

Short Story

Apply Mood Write a short story narrated from the first-person point of view of a modern-day teen Prufrock. Decide whether you want your readers to feel sympathy for your character. Keep that purpose in mind as you write, selecting an appropriate tone, mood, and language.

Understand the Task Tone is the writer's attitude toward the subject or audience, as conveyed through elements such as word choice, punctuation, sentence structure, and figures of speech. Mood is the general emotional quality of a piece of writing.

Prewrite What kind of life would Prufrock live if he were a modern-day teenager? Brainstorm a list of events that might happen during a normal day in his life. Then choose the events you think would most strongly illustrate his character. Next, make a list of words and phrases that your character would use in reacting and responding to these events.

Draft As you draft your story, present events in a logical sequence. Make sure each event you describe contributes to the overall mood you want to create, and that each is consistent with the impression you want your audience to have of your character. Remember to also use concrete sensory details to describe the character's specific movements and thoughts. To plan your story, make a chart like the one below:

Events	Character's responses/thoughts	Effects on mood
Opportunity to audition for school play	It's pointless; I might embarrass myself	Creates feeling of bleakness

Revise Exchange stories with a classmate. After reading each other's work, discuss whether each of you was successful in your writing purpose. If not, discuss revisions you might make to strengthen your story.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your paper, correcting any errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Review the Grammar Tip in the side column for help avoiding run-on sentences.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing a short story.

Grammar: Correcting run-on sentences.

Grammar Tip

Run-on Sentences

I arrived at the test I did not want to go through with it.

This is a run-on sentence, because two sentences are joined without a transition. One solution: change one sentence to a subordinate clause: When I arrived at the test, I did not want to go through with it. You can also join the sentences using a coordinating conjunction: I arrived at the test, but I did not want to go through with it.

After You Read

Assess

Writing

Students' stories should develop a distinct tone and be organized in a logical sequence. Stories should also include concrete sensory details and be free of run-on sentences and other grammatical errors.

Scoring Guide

Assess students' performance in the following categories using the scoring guide at the bottom of the page:

- Addresses all parts of the writing task.
- Conveys a certain tone through use of word choice, punctuation, sentence structure and figures of speech.
- Describes and develops characters and events to communicate a consistent mood to readers.
- Employs concrete sensory details that illustrate characters' thoughts and actions.
- Provides a variety of sentence types; uses precise, descriptive language.
- Follows English language conventions.

Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Task addressed	fully	mostly	partially	barely
Tone	consistent and well conveyed	somewhat consistent and conveyed	partially conveyed	no particular tone
Character, events	well developed and described	somewhat developed and described	partially developed and described	not developed or described
Sensory details	well employed	employed	few employed	none
Language	varied, precise, descriptive	varied, somewhat descriptive	predictable, basic	not varied, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	some	many

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus Transparency 42

Daily Language Practice Transparency 59

Or have students scan the classroom for objects that catch their interest. Then have them discuss the relationship between what they observe and Williams's statement, "Eyes stand first in the poet's equipment."

Writer's Technique ☆

Form and Content During his writing career, Williams continually experimented with rhythm and line arrangement. Most of his poems are not written in traditional meters; they are more organic in their rhythms. Their forms are shaped by the impressions he received from everyday experiences and conversations.

Before You Read

The Red Wheelbarrow and This Is Just to Say

Meet William Carlos Williams

(1883–1963)

William Carlos Williams led a double life as a doctor and an award-winning poet. Often he would write between seeing patients, sometimes even jotting down poems on prescription pads. Despite the fact that his attention was divided, Williams managed to write some of the most memorable poems of the Imagist movement. In his poetry, he captured America's colloquial speech and presented everyday events in powerful, compact lines.

> "Eyes stand first in the poet's equipment."
>
> —William Carlos Williams

Doctor and Poet Williams was born in Rutherford, New Jersey, and came from a diverse background: his mother was born in Puerto Rico, and his father was British. Williams began writing poetry in high school and soon settled on the goal of becoming both a doctor and a writer.

While attending the University of Pennsylvania Medical School, Williams wrote many of the poems that would appear in his first book, Poems, published in 1909. At school he also met and befriended the poet Ezra Pound. Pound would become a great influence on the young Williams, even arranging for the publication of his second collection, The Tempers, in 1913.

After completing his internship in New York and further study in advanced pediatrics in Leipzig, Germany, Williams returned to Rutherford, where he began his medical practice and continued to write. In his next book, Al Que Quiere! (To Him Who Wants It!), published in 1917, Williams drew upon his Spanish and Puerto Rican heritage and established himself as a major voice in modern poetry. However, he soon began to drift away from Pound and Imagism. He felt that Pound's ideas were too rooted in the cultural values of Europe, not those of the United States, which Williams so adored. ☆

During the 1920s and 1930s, Williams published several books, including two collections of poetry, Kora in Hell and Spring and All; a book of essays, In the American Grain; and a novel, White Mule. From 1946 through 1958, Williams worked on his masterpiece, Paterson. This nine-volume epic poem mythologizes northern New Jersey. In 1963 Williams was awarded a posthumous Pulitzer Prize for his collection Pictures from Brueghel and Other Poems.

Visionary and Legacy Believing that poetry should be grounded in everyday things and scenes, Williams was famous for saying, "No ideas but in things." He explored the world around him, writing of New Jersey's gritty, industrial landscape and of his patients and neighbors, many of whom were impoverished immigrants struggling to succeed in the United States. Williams left an impressive legacy of work that had an enormous influence on the writers of the 1950s and 1960s and continues to be very important to poets today. Somehow, while accomplishing so much as a writer, he also managed to deliver more than two thousand babies.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about William Carlos Williams, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

The Red Wheelbarrow
and* This Is Just to Say

Reading Skills
- Recognize Author's Purpose (SE pp. 677, 679, 680)
- Activate Prior Knowledge (TE p. 678)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a List (SE p. 680)

Literary Elements
- Form (SE pp. 677, 678, 680)

Vocabulary Skills
- Synonyms (SE pp. 677, 680)
- Roots and Affixes (TE p. 677)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

What ordinary objects, sounds, or scenes inspire you? Freewrite for ten minutes about the first few items that come to mind.

Build Background

Imagism's influence is obvious in "The Red Wheelbarrow" and "This Is Just to Say." About writing in this style, Williams wrote, "Cut and cut again whatever you write—while you leave by your art no trace of your cutting—and the final utterance will remain packed with what you have to say."

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

As you read, ask yourself, How does Williams's spare style exemplify Imagism and evoke the American landscape?

Literary Element Form

The form of a poem is its prescribed pattern, usually involving meter, rhyme, rhyme scheme, and structure. Many contemporary writers use loosely structured poetic forms instead of following stricter, more traditional patterns. One way Williams creates a loose, informal structure is by using enjambment, the continuation of a sentence from one line of a poem to the next. As you read, ask yourself, How does Williams both use and break with traditional forms to add depth and complexity? What purpose does his use of enjambment serve?

Reading Strategy Recognize Author's Purpose

An author's purpose is the author's intent in writing a piece of literature. Authors typically write in order to persuade, inform, explain, entertain, or describe. While reading these poems, try to determine Williams's purpose for writing them.

Tip: Take Notes List questions to ask as you read. As you think about your answers, consider the author's purpose or argument.

Question	Answer	Evidence
What did I learn that I didn't already know?	I learned that simple things can leave a lasting impression.	The poem is about a simple red wheelbarrow in the rain.

Learning Objectives

For pages 676–680

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing form.

Reading: Recognizing author's purpose.

Writing: Writing a list.

Vocabulary

depend (di pend´) v. to rely on; p. 678 In football, the whole team depends on the quarterback to get the ball to the end zone.

glazed (glāzd) adj. covered with a smooth, glossy coating; p. 678 The cinnamon rolls were glazed with icing.

delicious (di lish´ əs) adj. having a very pleasing taste; p. 679 I love all kinds of ice cream flavors but I find chocolate to be the most delicious.

Tip: Synonyms Understanding words that are similar in meaning to an unfamiliar word, or synonyms, can help you learn the word. Example: Glazed and coated are synonyms; they both mean "to be covered with something."

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In "The Red Wheelbarrow," the speaker describes a red wheelbarrow in the rain next to white chickens. In the Imagist manner, Williams uses only a few words to create this image.

He takes a similar approach in "This Is Just to Say," in which the speaker apologizes for eating plums meant for breakfast.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 47–52.

Vocabulary

Roots and Affixes Ask: What suffixes can you add to the verb depend to form adjectives? What are the meanings of the words formed? (-able, dependable: "reliable"; -ent, dependent: "needing to rely on someone or something")

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask: What prefixes can you add to these words to make them opposites? (un-, in-; undependable, independent)

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Established Emphasize that the form of a poem is the way that the words and lines are arranged on a page.

Write the following words on separate note cards: depends, red, wheelbarrow, glazed, rain, water, white, and chickens. Have student pairs work together to create several different poems with these words by arranging and rearranging the words on desktops. Tell students that they may add words or change the forms of words as necessary for meaning.

When students have finished, lead them to discuss how they used form to create different poems even though they were working with a relatively constant word set.

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Ask: How does Williams use imagery and sensory details to turn an ordinary object into the subject of a poem? (Possible answer: He calls attention to an ordinary scene by emphasizing visual details. He contrasts the glistening, rain-covered wheelbarrow with the white chickens.) Ask: What is the effect of this image on readers? (Possible answer: Readers hope for a new beginning.)

Literary Element 2

Form Answer: Students may point out that the separation makes the pace more deliberate and forces readers to listen to each word and respond to the meaning of each word part.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Explain that wheelbarrow is a compound word that should be joined. Here, Williams splits the compound word into two words: wheel and barrow. Ask: How is the word wheelbarrow (a small cart with wheels, pushed by hand) different from the words wheel and barrow? (Possible answer: A wheelbarrow is a single object that viewers might observe as one thing. The words wheel and barrow describe two separate objects, forcing viewers to look at the parts of the whole.)

Wheelbarrow, 1934.
Morris Graves.
Oil on canvas, 31⅛ x 35⅛ in.
Smithsonian American Art Museum,
Washington, DC.

The Red Wheelbarrow

William Carlos Williams

so much depends upon

a red wheel barrow

glazed with rain water

beside the white chickens.

1

Form What effect does the break between the words wheel and barrow have? 2

Vocabulary

depend (di pend´) v. to rely on glazed (glāzd) adj. covered with a smooth, glossy coating

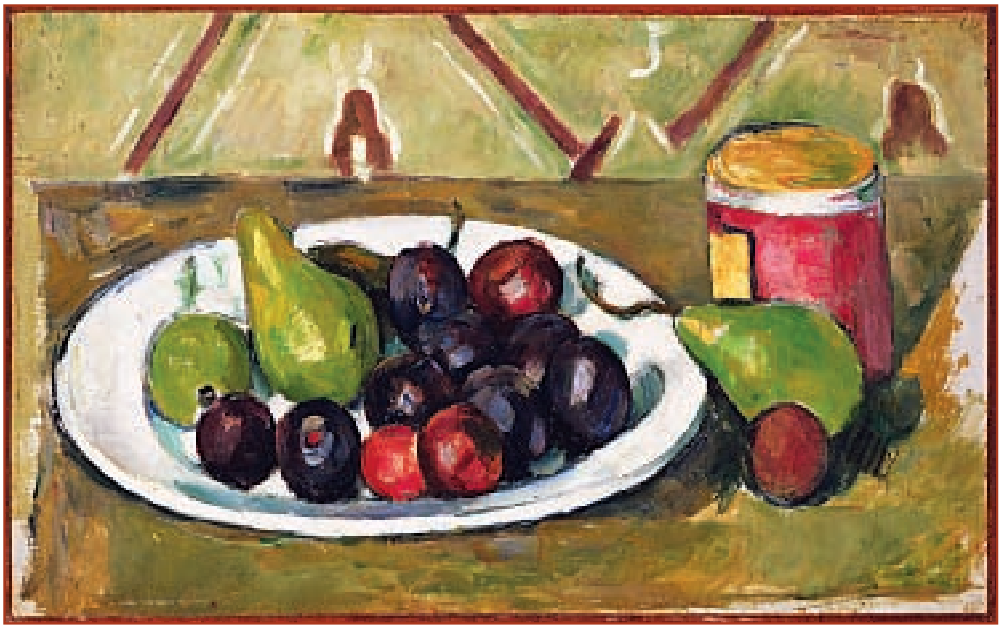
Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Activate Prior Knowledge What readers already know contributes to their understanding of literature. Although students may not have seen a red wheelbarrow and white chickens in the rain, you can create an experience that will help them understand the poem. Display a wet object such as an apple or a cup. Have students write descriptions of the object using concrete sensory details that appeal to the senses of sight, sound, smell, touch, and taste. Ask students to say how the wetness of the object changes its appearance and captures viewers' attention. Students should also include their emotional responses to the object and the significance of their observations.



Plums and Pears. Paul Cezanne. Oil on canvas, 7¾ x 14 in. The Barnes Foundation Collection, Merion Station, PA. ★

This Is Just to Say

William Carlos Williams

I have eaten
the plums that were in the icebox

and which you were probably saving for breakfast

Forgive me
they were delicious
so sweet and so cold

3

Recognize Author's Purpose What does line 9 suggest about the author's purpose? 4

Vocabulary

delicious (di lish´ əs) adj. having a very pleasing taste

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Connect Ask: How are Williams's two poems similar? (Possible answer: Both capture the beauty and uniqueness of ordinary objects.)

APPROACHING Draw a Venn diagram on the board. Label one circle "Wheelbarrow/chickens," and label the other circle "Plums." Ask students to identify similarities and differences between these objects. Students can use these notes to draw conclusions.

Reading Strategy 4

Recognize Author's Purpose Answer: The speaker's apology may indicate that he feels guilty for having eaten the plums.

View the Art ★

The French painter Paul Cézanne (1839–1906), like Williams, was inspired by everyday objects. Ask: How does Cézanne portray the subject of plums and pears? (Possible answer: The plums and pears are not realistic. Instead they appear as patches of color within a confined space.)

English Learners

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate English learners may find the sentence structures in poetry difficult to decode. The simple structures of Williams's poems provide students with an opportunity to apply their knowledge of English conventions as a way to understand how meaning is expressed in poetry.

Have students write the text of "This Is Just to Say" in sentence form, adding punctuation where appropriate. Have student pairs work together to identify subjects and predicates. Point out the conjunction and in the second stanza and explain that it connects two clauses. Lead students to discuss how the revised sentence structure and punctuation clarify the meaning of the poem.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students' answers should identify specific feelings evoked by the poems.
2. The speaker sees something important in the scene he is about to describe.
3. (a) Rainwater and chickens (b) He asks readers to see beauty in ordinary things.
4. (a) The speaker has eaten the plums belonging to "you." (b) The speaker is close to the person.
5. (a) Forgiveness (b) The pleasure that the speaker has in eating the plums is described. The description justifies eating the plums.
6. (a) It forces readers to respond to the meaning of each word part. (b) Most students will appreciate the technique.
7. (a) The tone is calm and honest. (b) The tone is appropriate to a speaker who is sincerely apologetic.
8. They focus on concrete objects rather than lofty ideals or abstract concepts.
9. Students may connect his appreciation for useful objects with an appreciation for the usefulness of the human body.

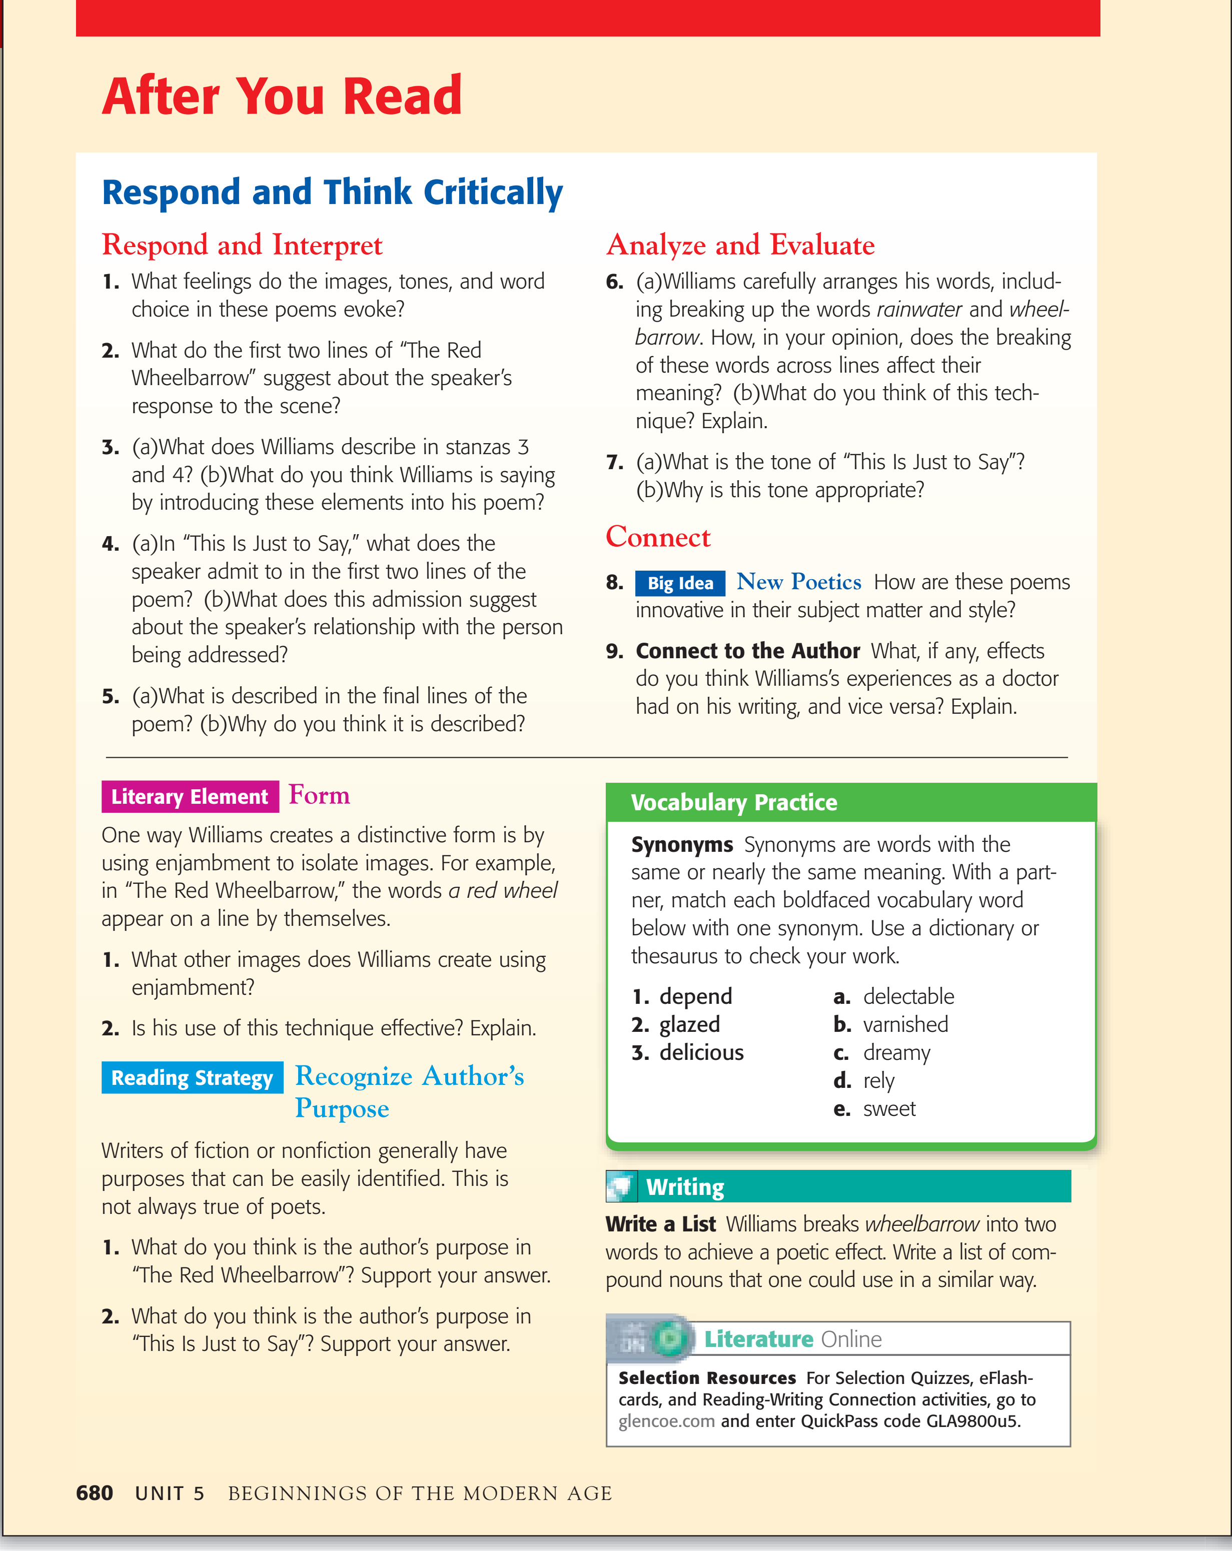
Writing

Students should list compound nouns that would make sense even when broken into two separate words.

Progress Check

Can students analyze form?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 53.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What feelings do the images, tones, and word choice in these poems evoke?
2. What do the first two lines of "The Red Wheelbarrow" suggest about the speaker's response to the scene?
3. (a)What does Williams describe in stanzas 3 and 4? (b)What do you think Williams is saying by introducing these elements into his poem?
4. (a)In "This Is Just to Say," what does the speaker admit to in the first two lines of the poem? (b)What does this admission suggest about the speaker's relationship with the person being addressed?
5. (a)What is described in the final lines of the poem? (b)Why do you think it is described?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. (a)Williams carefully arranges his words, including breaking up the words rainwater and wheelbarrow. How, in your opinion, does the breaking of these words across lines affect their meaning? (b)What do you think of this technique? Explain.
7. (a)What is the tone of "This Is Just to Say"? (b)Why is this tone appropriate?

Connect

8. Big Idea New Poetics How are these poems innovative in their subject matter and style?
9. Connect to the Author What, if any, effects do you think Williams's experiences as a doctor had on his writing, and vice versa? Explain.

Literary Element Form

One way Williams creates a distinctive form is by using enjambment to isolate images. For example, in "The Red Wheelbarrow," the words a red wheel appear on a line by themselves.

1. What other images does Williams create using enjambment?
2. Is his use of this technique effective? Explain.

Reading Strategy Recognize Author's Purpose

Writers of fiction or nonfiction generally have purposes that can be easily identified. This is not always true of poets.

1. What do you think is the author's purpose in "The Red Wheelbarrow"? Support your answer.
2. What do you think is the author's purpose in "This Is Just to Say"? Support your answer.

Vocabulary Practice

Synonyms Synonyms are words with the same or nearly the same meaning. With a partner, match each boldfaced vocabulary word below with one synonym. Use a dictionary or thesaurus to check your work.

1. depend
2. glazed
3. delicious

a. delectable
b. varnished
c. dreamy
d. rely
e. sweet

Writing

Write a List Williams breaks wheelbarrow into two words to achieve a poetic effect. Write a list of compound nouns that one could use in a similar way.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Literary Element

1. Answers will vary. Students may say that Williams isolates the images "glazed with rain," the white color of the chickens, and the three adjectives used to describe the taste of the plums.
2. Answers will vary. Students should identify and explain the effectiveness of the uses of enjambment.

Reading Strategy

1. He is demonstrating the beauty in the everyday.
2. He apologizes but explains how one gets pleasure from ordinary things.

Vocabulary

1. d 2. b 3. a

Vocabulary Workshop

Compound Words

Learning Objectives

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objectives:

Vocabulary:
Understanding compound words.
Understanding language resources.

Literature Connection In the quotation below, wheelbarrow is a compound word, a word made up of two words that together have a meaning different from the meaning of each word individually. Compound words may be spelled open (magic lantern), closed (sawdust), or hyphenated (half-deserted). A dictionary will give the correct form.

> so much depends > upon
>
> a red wheel
> barrow
>
> —William Carlos Williams, from "The Red Wheelbarrow"

Williams writes wheelbarrow as an open compound for poetic effect.

The meanings of many compound words are obvious from the parts that make up the word.

- What is sawdust?
  It is the dust created by sawing wood.
- What is a look-alike?
  It is something that looks just like something else.
- What is a natural resource?
  It is a naturally occurring material that is useful to humans.

To learn the meaning of less familiar compound words, consult a dictionary.

Practice

A. Match each compound word with its definition.

1. elbow room
2. seaweed
3. grillwork
4. swaybacked
5. ill-used

a. underwater plant
b. metal screen or grating
c. mistreated
d. adequate space
e. having a sagging spine

B. Use their parts to define the following compound words. Discuss your definitions with a partner. Check your work in a dictionary.

1. ivory tower
2. dark horse
3. icebox
4. green revolution

Grammar Tip

Compound Words

A compound word is made of two separate words that each have a different meaning standing alone.

Tip

If a compound word does not appear in a dictionary, it is most likely to be correctly spelled open.

Reading Handbook

For more about compound words, see Reading Handbook, p. R61.

Literature Online

Vocabulary For more vocabulary practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Workshop

Compound Words

Focus

Have students note how the definition of each example word contains the separate parts of the compound.

Teach

Define Compound Words Remind students that the meaning of a compound word cannot always be inferred from the meanings of its parts.

Assess

Practice

A. 1. d 2. a 3. b 4. e 5. c

B. Actual definitions:

1. A place or situation remote from practical concerns and considerations
2. An improbable winner
3. A refrigerator
4. A radical increase in environmental awareness

For additional vocabulary practice, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Many languages other than English use compound words, many of which have no equivalents in English. An example is the Chinese character for crisis, which is composed of the characters for danger and opportunity. Invite English learners to list examples of compound words from languages other than English. Have them check a dictionary to determine whether equivalent English compounds exist. Then point out to students that items 1, 2, and 4 in Exercise B on this page have figurative meanings. They will need to check a dictionary for the meanings of these terms.

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 60

Or display images with clear central focuses or themes, such as exploding fireworks, a fire, or a sleeping child. Ask: If these images were meant to depict feelings, what might those feelings be? Have students consider as they read how Amy Lowell uses imagery or word pictures to evoke emotional responses in readers.

Before You Read

Summer Rain and Fireworks

Meet Amy Lowell
(1874–1925)

Amy Lowell was a brash, controversial, uncompromising woman, and one of the most important and best-known poets of the Imagist movement and of her generation.

Lowell was born in Brookline, Massachusetts, of a wealthy and socially prominent family, which included Fireside poet James Russell Lowell (see pages 210–211). Lowell spent her first twenty-eight years like most women in her social set. She traveled, was educated in private schools in Boston, and considered prospects for marriage. However, in 1902, Lowell chose a new path and dedicated her life to poetry.

An Imagist Poet In 1913 Lowell read several poems by Imagist poet H.D. (Hilda Doolittle) in Poetry magazine. Lowell connected immediately to the Imagist style. She traveled to England that same year, met Ezra Pound (page 662), and joined his Imagist circle. The first anthology of Imagist poetry, Des Imagistes, edited by Pound, appeared the next year and included a poem by Lowell. Also in 1914, Lowell published her book Sword Blades and Poppy Seed.

Lowell also began to make friends with many literary figures, including Robert Frost (page 714) and D. H. Lawrence. In 1915 she helped launch Frost's career with a favorable review of his collection North of Boston in the New Republic.

Poetic Influence Lowell's growing influence within the Imagist movement caused Pound to remove himself from it. He would later sarcastically refer to the group as "Amygism" after it had fully come under Lowell's influence. Over the next several years, she edited three volumes of the annual anthology Some Imagist Poets. Before 1920 she published many more books of poetry and prose, including Can Grande's Castle, Tendencies in Modern American Poetry, and Men, Women, and Ghosts.

> "Why should one read Poetry? That seems to me a good deal like asking: Why should one eat?"
>
> —Amy Lowell

Inspired by a lecture she gave about John Keats in 1921 and by a lifelong fascination with the English Romantic poet, Lowell published a biography of Keats. This, unfortunately, would be her last publication during her life. In 1925 Lowell died of a cerebral hemorrhage. One volume of her poetry, What's O'Clock, appeared after her death and was awarded the Pulitzer Prize.

Lowell is important not just for her literary contributions, but also for her promotion of the poetic innovation of Imagism. Fellow Modernist T. S. Eliot called her "the demon saleswoman of poetry." Through her tenacity, her brilliant mind, and her poems, Lowell helped to define the texture of twentieth-century verse.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Amy Lowell, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

Summer Rain and Fireworks

Literary Elements
- Structure (SE pp. 683, 685, 686)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Dialogue (SE p. 686)
- Voice (TE p. 684)

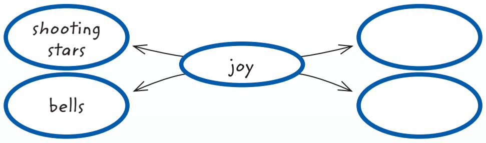
Reading Skills
- Interpret Imagery (SE pp. 683–686)

Vocabulary Skills
- Context Clues (SE p. 686)
- Synonyms (TE p. 683)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

How would you describe your strongest feelings using concrete images, sounds, or colors? Explore this question by making a word web like the one below.



Build Background

"Summer Rain" and "Fireworks" appeared in Pictures of the Floating World, a collection of imagistic free-verse poems. The poems in the first section, "Lacquer Prints," closely resemble haiku, a Japanese poetic form. "Summer Rain" and "Fireworks" are from the second section, "Planes of Personality," which celebrates intense emotions such as love, hate, and longing.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

As you read, ask yourself, How does Lowell use imagery to convey emotions and ideas?

Literary Element Structure

Poetic structure is created through the organization of images, ideas, words, and lines. As you read, ask, How does Lowell's use of structure enhance the meaning of the poems?

Reading Strategy Interpret Imagery

Imagery is the "word pictures" authors use to evoke emotional responses in the reader. Poets may create images using figures of speech, including metaphors, similes, and personification.

Tip: Take Notes Use a chart like the one below to record your interpretations of Lowell's imagery.

Imagery	Interpretation
p. 685: "It spits and sparkles in stars and balls, / Buds into roses—and flares, and falls."	The speaker is filled with intense emotion upon seeing this hated person.

Learning Objectives

For pages 682–686

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing structure.

Reading: Interpreting imagery.

Writing: Writing a dialogue.

Vocabulary

pepper (pe´ pər) v. to shower with small objects; p. 685 The crowd was peppered with candy from the passing parade floats.

crimson (krim´ zən) adj. a bright purplish red; p. 685 The girl's crimson coat caught the eye of many people.

azure (azh´ ər) adj. a light purplish blue; p. 685 The azure sky was a beautiful sight.

mount (mount) v. to ascend or to soar; p. 685 As the rocket mounted, the crowd began to cheer.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Lowell evokes different emotional responses in these poems. In "Summer Rain" she writes about "red-gold and crocus-colored brightness" against the backdrop of a rainstorm. In "Fireworks" she uses the metaphor of exploding fireworks to describe antagonism between two people.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 58–63.

Vocabulary

Synonyms Explain to students that there are three primary colors: red, blue, and yellow. However, there are many shades or variations in the intensities of these three colors. Point out that crimson and azure describe shades of red and blue. Ask: What other words describe shades of red? (scarlet, ruby, burgundy, cherry) What other words describe shades of blue? (cobalt, navy, sapphire, cerulean, indigo)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 66.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Display the following lines, and have students discuss the comparisons and sounds in each:

- The rain drops rang like little metal disks on the tin roof.
- The slats of the shutters danced.
- Ping! Ping!
- We are fireworks.

Then have students use detailed sentences to orally identify and explain the following elements of imagery in these lines: simile, metaphor, personification, and sound.

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Say: Keep this question in mind as you read. How do Lowell's poems exemplify the principles of Imagist poetry? (Possible answer: Both poems use clear, concrete language to convey their images. "Summer Rain" focuses on an ordinary event rather than a more abstract topic; "Fireworks" evokes intense emotions from its opening lines.)

Reading Strategy 2

Interpret Imagery Answer: The speaker's feelings for the person are passionate and intimate. The contrast between the dark, loud rain outside and the bright, whispering fire inside may suggest that the speaker is keeping these feelings hidden—as exposing them to the outside world might cause them to be extinguished.

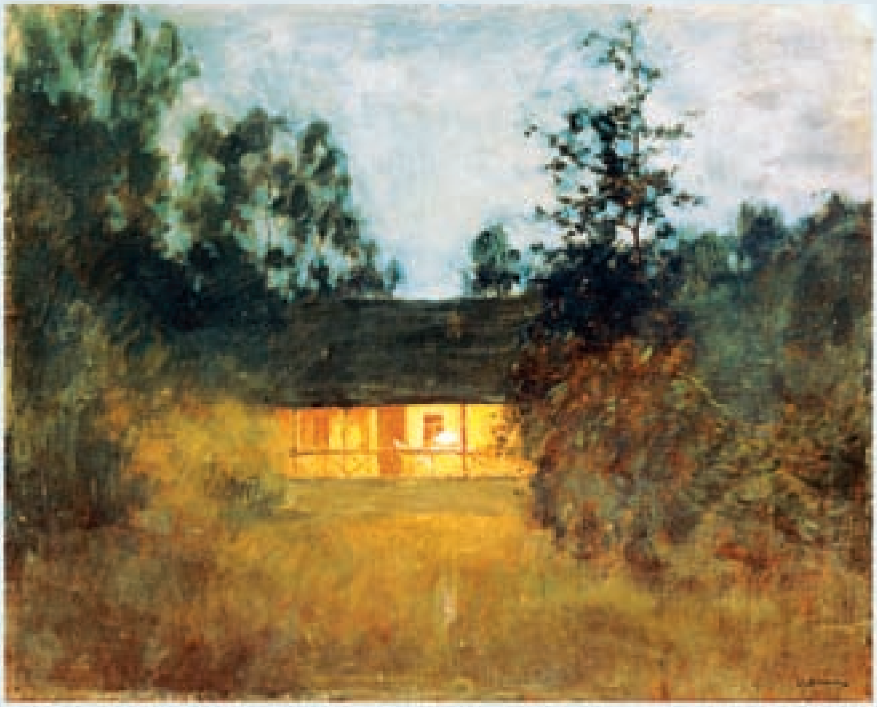
For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 65.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.



Dusk Outside the Town, 1885. Isaak Ilich Levitan. Oil on canvas, 49.5 x 61.5 cm.

Summer Rain

Amy Lowell

1

All night our room was outer-walled with rain.
Drops fell and flattened on the tin roof,
And rang like little disks of metal.
Ping!—Ping!—and there was not a pinpoint of silence between them.
The rain rattled and clashed,
And the slats of the shutters danced and glittered.
But to me the darkness was red-gold and crocus-coloured
With your brightness,
And the words you whispered to me
Sprang up and flamed—orange torches against the rain.
Torches against the wall of cool, silver rain!

Interpret Imagery What does this image tell you about how the speaker views the other occupant of the room? 2

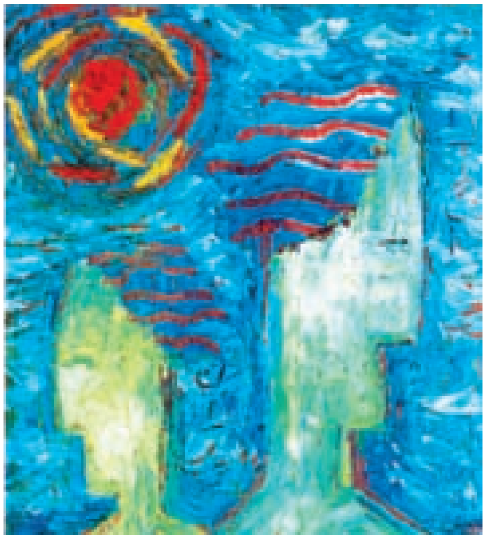
Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Voice Explain that a writer's "voice" is his or her distinctive use of language. To characterize a writer's voice, you would examine word choice, tone, sound devices, and even the vowel and consonant sounds of the words. Ask volunteers to locate examples of words and phrases that echo the speaker's emotions in each poem.

Have students freewrite for ten minutes on subjects that stir strong emotions in them. Then have them choose images and expressions they like best from their notes and draft poems that express their feelings.

Fireworks

Amy Lowell



Fighting Couple. Jami Jennings.

You hate me and I hate you,
And we are so polite, we two!

But whenever I see you, I burst apart
And scatter the sky with my blazing heart. 3
It spits and sparkles in stars and balls,
Buds into roses—and flares, and falls.

Scarlet buttons, and pale green disks,
Silver spirals and asterisks,
Shoot and tremble in a mist
Peppered with mauve and amethyst.

I shine in the windows and light up the trees,
And all because I hate you, if you please.

And when you meet me, you rend asunder[1]
And go up in a flaming wonder
Of saffron[2] cubes, and crimson moons,
And wheels all amaranths[3] and maroons.

Golden lozenges and spades,
Arrows of malachites[4] and jades,
Patens[5] of copper, azure sheaves.
As you mount, you flash in the glossy leaves.

Such fireworks as we make, we two!
Because you hate me and I hate you.

---

[1] Rend asunder means "to tear apart."
[2] Here, saffron refers to an orange-yellow color.
[3] Here, amaranth refers to a reddish purple color.
[4] Malachite is a deep green stone.
[5] Patens are small metal plates.

Interpret Imagery What do you think the imagery in these lines means? 4

Structure What structural elements can you identify in this poem? 5

Vocabulary

pepper (pe´ pər) v.	to shower with small objects
crimson (krim´ zən) adj.	a bright purplish red
azure (azh´ ər) adj.	a light purplish blue
mount (mount) v.	to ascend or to soar

Approaching Level

UNIVERSAL ACCESS

SMALL GROUP

Established Point out that the speaker makes a comparison between the way the two characters behave toward each other and the way the two characters really feel about each other in lines 1 through 4. Suggest that students draw two boxes, one for each character. Outside the boxes, tell students to write words and images that might illustrate this "polite" external behavior. Inside the boxes, have students use the words and images in the poem to illustrate what the two characters are feeling internally during these polite exchanges. Finally, have students present and explain their diagrams to partners.

Teach

Literary Element 3

Metaphor Have students discuss the effectiveness of Lowell's use of metaphor to create an image of the intense feelings that exist between the speaker and the person being addressed. (The metaphor of exploding fireworks creates a clear and precise image of the feelings described in the poem.)

APPROACHING Ask: What are the similarities between the relationship and the fireworks? (Both are fiery, passionate, dangerous, and beautiful.) Ask: What emotions does this metaphor evoke in readers? (Possible answer: Readers may feel that the couple does not appreciate the passion that exists between them.)

Reading Strategy 4

Interpret Imagery Answer: The imagery suggests strong emotion that is also somewhat ambiguous. The expressions "burst apart" and "blazing heart" are ambivalent in that they might suggest love cloaked in hatred.

Literary Element 5

Structure Answer: Lowell uses contrasting images and feelings (love/hate, spits/sparkles), stanzas to separate images, and consistent rhyme and rhythm patterns.

Progress Check

Can students analyze structure?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 64.

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) As ringing like "little disks of metal," making a "Ping!—Ping!" sound, and rattling and crashing (b) The speaker may not enjoy the sound.
3. (a) As "red-gold and crocus-colored" (b) The speaker loves the person.
4. (a) As polite (b) The fireworks may not symbolize anger.
5. (a) "Shine in the windows and light up the trees" (b) This image suggests that hate makes the speaker beautiful.
6. (a) The rhyming in "Fireworks" is regular. (b) Many students will prefer the regular rhymes.
7. (a) The quatrains are devoted to description and metaphor; the couplets to the speaker's feelings. (b) It effectively adds to the poem's complexity.
8. Modernism is seen in the bold imagery and use of free verse in "Summer Rain." The regular rhyme and stanza patterns in "Fireworks" is traditional poetry.
9. Students might say stories with an action-filled plot or graphic novels have similarities to video.

Literary Element

Students should discuss the structure of these poems.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. In your opinion, which poem expresses the speaker's emotion most effectively? Explain.
2. (a)In "Summer Rain," in what ways does the speaker describe the sound of the rain? (b)What do these descriptions suggest about the speaker's feelings for the rain?
3. (a)How does the speaker see "the darkness"? (b)What does this suggest about the speaker's feelings for the person addressed?
4. (a)In the first couplet of "Fireworks," besides hate, how does the speaker characterize the relationship described in the poem? (b)What does this description suggest about the poem's "fireworks"?
5. (a)What does the speaker claim to do in the window and to the trees? (b)In your opinion, how does this image affect the following line?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. (a)How does the rhyme scheme in "Fireworks" differ from that in "Summer Rain"? (b)Which poem's rhyme scheme do you prefer? Explain.
7. (a)In what way does the content of the couplets in "Fireworks" differ from that in the quatrains? (b)Is the variation in stanza length effective?

Connect

8. Big Idea New Poetics In your opinion, how are the ideals of Modernism reflected in these poems? How are the more classical ideas and techniques reflected?
9. Connect to Today In Lowell's day, photography was the visual sister of literature's Imagism; both offered their audiences a vivid picture of a moment frozen in time. Can you imagine a literary parallel to the contemporary visual art of video? What would it look like?

Literary Element Structure

In each of these poems, Lowell uses poetic structure—the organization of images, ideas, words, and lines—to contribute to the poem's meaning.

Partner Activity Jot down notes on the structure of each poem. Then meet with a classmate to discuss how Lowell's use of structure affects meaning in the two poems.

Reading Strategy Interpret Imagery

The imagery in a poem can contribute to its tone. Refer to the imagery chart you created on page 683. How would you describe the tone in each of these poems? Support your opinion with examples.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Context Clues Identify context clues to the meaning of each boldfaced vocabulary word.

1. After the party, my sweater was peppered with the confetti that had been released.
2. I knew he was guilty, because when I asked him about it, he blushed a bright crimson.
3. Meredith's eyes are such a beautiful shade of azure that her family calls her "Bluebell."
4. At dawn the sun begins to mount the sky.

Writing

Write a Dialogue In "Fireworks," Lowell uses vivid imagery to describe the intensity of her feelings toward another person. Imagine that Lowell and this person meet. Write a dialogue detailing what they might say to each other. Use your imagery interpretation chart from page 683 to help you get started.

Reading Strategy

The tone of "Summer Rain" is loving and passionate (slats dancing, red-gold and crocus-colored darkness, words springing up as torches). The tone of "Fireworks" is both humorous and angry (heart bursting into roses and flares, hated person being torn apart, speaker lighting up trees and windows).

Vocabulary

1. The context of the sentence shows that the sweater was sprinkled randomly with small pieces of paper.
2. Crimson is a bright shade of red, the color of a blush.
3. A synonym for azure, "blue," is included in the sentence. The description "beautiful shade" provides further context.
4. At dawn, the sun rises, so mount must mean "to ascend."

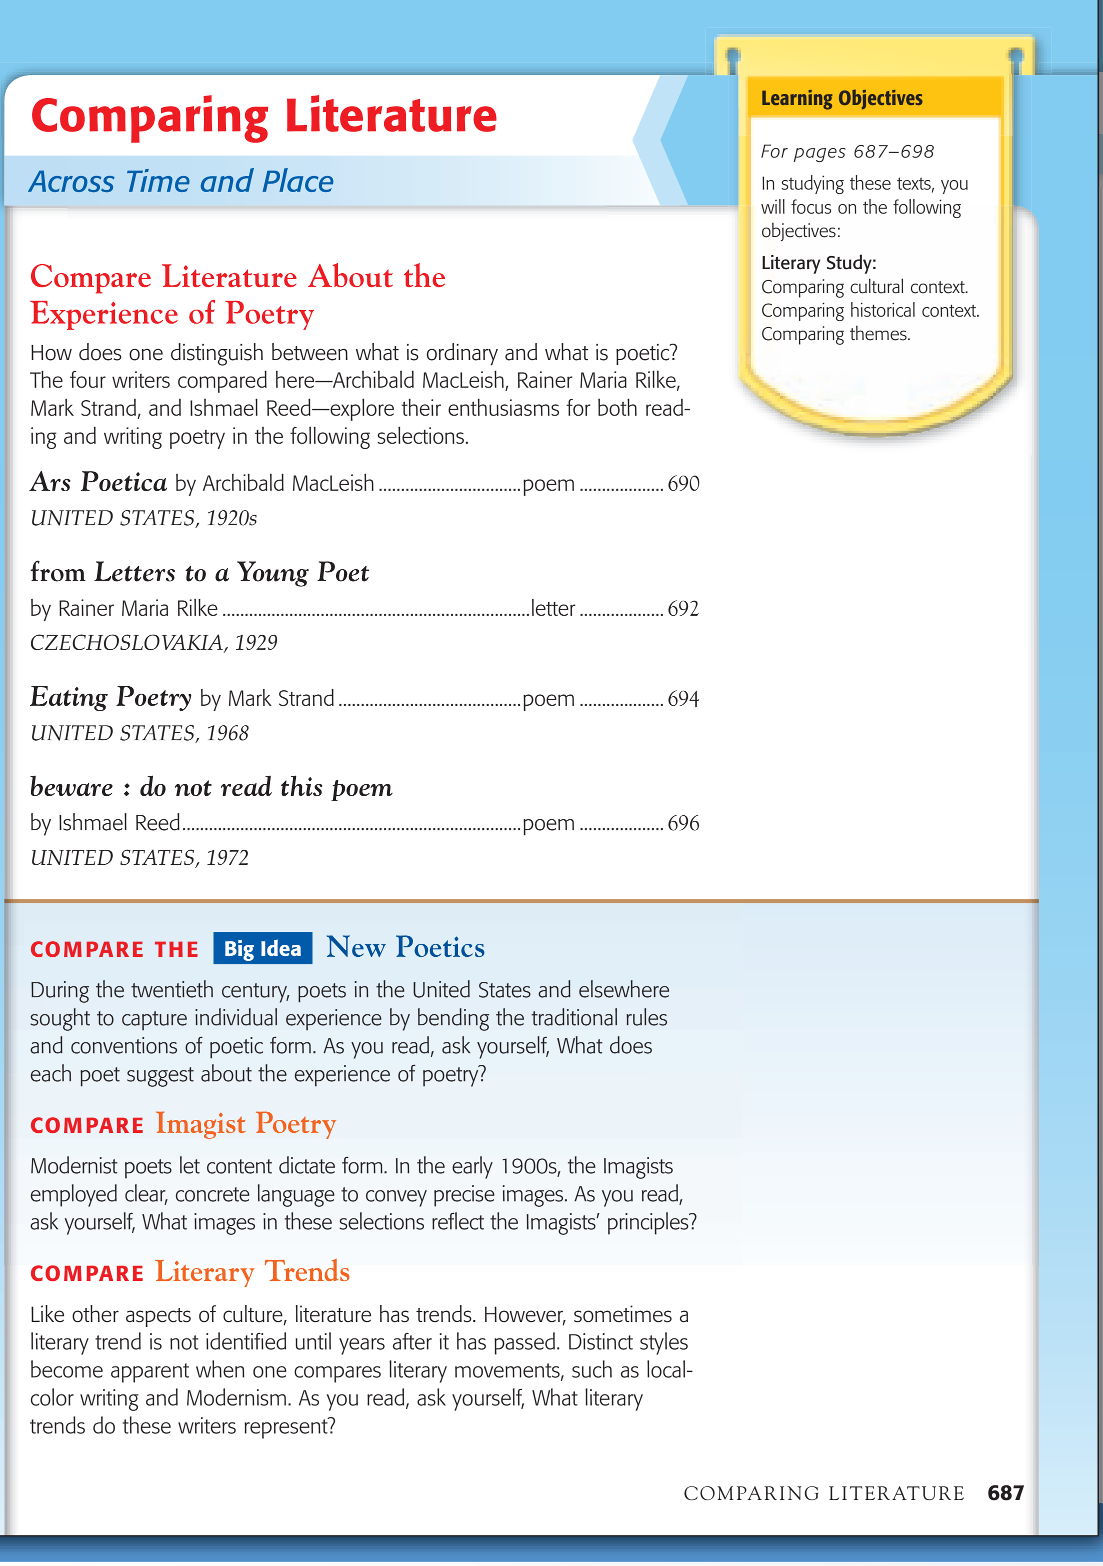
Writing

Students' dialogues should describe Lowell's relationship with the person in the poem and use imagery and sensory details to illustrate their feelings.



Comparing Literature

Across Time and Place

Learning Objectives

For pages 687–698

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Comparing cultural context.
Comparing historical context.
Comparing themes.

Compare Literature About the Experience of Poetry

How does one distinguish between what is ordinary and what is poetic? The four writers compared here—Archibald MacLeish, Rainer Maria Rilke, Mark Strand, and Ishmael Reed—explore their enthusiasms for both reading and writing poetry in the following selections.

Ars Poetica by Archibald MacLeish .... poem 690
UNITED STATES, 1920s

from Letters to a Young Poet
by Rainer Maria Rilke .... letter 692
CZECHOSLOVAKIA, 1929

Eating Poetry by Mark Strand .... poem 694
UNITED STATES, 1968

beware : do not read this poem
by Ishmael Reed .... poem 696
UNITED STATES, 1972

COMPARE THE Big Idea New Poetics

During the twentieth century, poets in the United States and elsewhere sought to capture individual experience by bending the traditional rules and conventions of poetic form. As you read, ask yourself, What does each poet suggest about the experience of poetry?

COMPARE Imagist Poetry

Modernist poets let content dictate form. In the early 1900s, the Imagists employed clear, concrete language to convey precise images. As you read, ask yourself, What images in these selections reflect the Imagists' principles?

COMPARE Literary Trends

Like other aspects of culture, literature has trends. However, sometimes a literary trend is not identified until years after it has passed. Distinct styles become apparent when one compares literary movements, such as local-color writing and Modernism. As you read, ask yourself, What literary trends do these writers represent?

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 43
Daily Language Practice
Transparency 61

Or display images of things that might be considered ordinary (for example, a telephone) and things that might be considered exhilarating (for example, an athlete in a moment of victory). Ask: Would you classify each image as exhilarating or as ordinary? What characteristics affected your classification? Was your classification based on objective or subjective reactions to the images?

Compare Literature About the Experience of Poetry

Allow students to share their responses to the opening question. Then have students discuss what they know about images, ideas, and emotions in poetry.

Selection Skills

Comparing Literature

Literary Elements
- Theme (SE pp. 689–691)
- Simile (TE p. 690)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Literary Trend (SE p. 698)
- Verbs as Adjectives (TE p. 688)
- Author's Purpose (TE p. 692)

Reading Skills
- Analyze Style (SE pp. 689, 691)
- Reread (TE p. 694)

Vocabulary Skills
- Analogies (SE p. 691)
- Word Roots (TE p. 689)

Study Skills/Research/Assessment
- Short Response (TE p. 696)

Before You Read

Focus

Cultural History ☆

The New Deal One of Franklin Delano Roosevelt's campaign promises in 1932 was to create a "new deal," a plan for getting the country out of the Depression. Once elected, he kept his promise by creating a variety of programs to give people work, promote social reform, and prevent future economic recessions. Archibald MacLeish was active in supporting and promoting Roosevelt's reforms.

Before You Read

Ars Poetica

Meet Archibald MacLeish
(1892–1982)

Archibald MacLeish was a poet with a purpose. He believed that, through love and awareness, U.S. citizens could achieve the goals of freedom and equality set down in the Declaration of Independence. MacLeish's idealism is evident both in his poetry and in his public life.

> "But what, then, is the business of poetry? Precisely to make sense of the chaos of our lives."
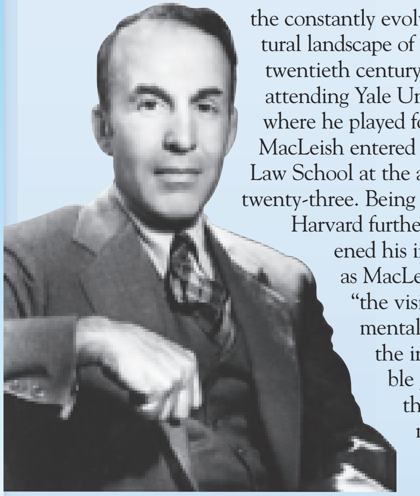
>
> —Archibald MacLeish

Creative Echoes Born in the late 1800s in Glencoe, Illinois, MacLeish was keenly aware of both the traditional world and the constantly evolving cultural landscape of the early twentieth century. After attending Yale University, where he played football, MacLeish entered Harvard Law School at the age of twenty-three. Being at Harvard further enlivened his interest in, as MacLeish put it, "the vision of mental time, of the interminable journey of the human mind, the great tradition of the intellectual past which knows the bearings of the future." Within two years, he married singer Ada Hitchcock and enlisted in the army. After World War I, he became a successful lawyer, but he soon quit his job to move with his wife and two small children to Paris. There he pursued his writing and published four poetry collections in five years. In 1928 he returned with his family to the U.S., where he continued writing poetry. In 1933 he won a Pulitzer Prize for Conquistador, an epic poem about the conquest of Mexico.



Public Interests Concerned about the nation's social problems, MacLeish also wrote journalistic articles and supported President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal economic reforms and anti-Hitler stance. ☆ In the 1940s, MacLeish served as director of a wartime office of propaganda, as assistant secretary of state, and as a librarian of Congress. He was also chairman of the U.S. delegation for the founding conference of UNESCO (the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization) in 1945. During this time, he continued to write poetry as well as drama. MacLeish, who was also on the editorial board of the business magazine Fortune, lamented the hardship and despair brought on by the Depression.

In the 1950s, MacLeish won two more Pulitzer Prizes: one for poetry and one for drama. Between 1944 and 1954 he published more than eighty poems. MacLeish's later works continued to explore both the poet's inner world and the core meaning of U.S. citizenship. Critic Hayden Carruth said, "MacLeish wrote not as a personal crusader, never as a political crank or lonely visionary, but instead as the spokesman of the people."

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Archibald MacLeish, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Grammar Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Verbs as Adjectives In "Ars Poetica," MacLeish uses several verb forms as adjectives: entangled trees, leaning grasses, worn stone. As students read the poem, point out these examples, and tell them that present and past participles of verbs can function as adjectives. Remind students that present participles end in -ing, and past participles of regular verbs end in -d or -ed, but the past participles of irregular verbs have different endings. In the following pairs of sentences, have students identify the participle as part of the verb or as an adjective.

1. a. An ambulance was speeding down the street. (verb)
   b. A speeding ambulance came around the corner. (adjective)
2. a. The crackled surface made an interesting pattern. (adjective)
   b. The ice cubes crackled in the glass. (verb)

Have students look for other examples of participles as adjectives as they read.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poem

How do you judge a work of art, be it literary, musical, or visual? Make a list of criteria you think would be helpful in evaluating the quality of a composition.

Build Background

Ars poetica, a Latin phrase meaning "the art of poetry," is the title of a work written around 13 B.C. by the Roman poet Horace. In this text, Horace laid down his own rules for writing poetry.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

As you read, ask yourself, How does MacLeish's unique pattern of lines and creative, startling imagery add to his purpose?

Literary Element Theme

A theme is a central idea presented in a literary work. In some works the theme is stated directly, but in most works the theme is implied and revealed gradually. A literary work may have more than one theme. As you read "Ars Poetica," ask yourself, What events, dialogue, and description help develop the poem's theme?

Reading Strategy Analyze Style

Writers' style includes the expressive qualities that distinguish their work, such as word choice, the length and arrangement of sentences, and the use of figurative language and imagery. As you read "Ars Poetica," analyze MacLeish's style. Consider why he chose to break the lines the way he did and how the imagery and word choice contribute to the overall effect of the poem.

Tip: Take Notes Record the effects of MacLeish's style in a chart like the one below.

Author's Style	Overall Effect
Irregular line length	Helps emphasize certain words

Vocabulary

palpable (pal′ pə bəl) adj. tangible; able to be touched or felt; p. 690 The tension was palpable in the team's locker room before the big game.

mute (mūt) adj. silent; p. 690 James hit the mute button on the television and decided to focus on his homework.

entangled (en tan′ gəld) adj. twisted together; caught; p. 690 The fish was entangled in the fisherman's net.

Tip: Analogies An analogy is a type of comparison that is based on the relationships between things or ideas. To solve an analogy question, identify the relationship in the first pair of words.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

"Ars Poetica" specifies what a poem should be. MacLeish expresses his definition in the form of a poem, using a series of images to illustrate his conclusion that "A poem should not mean / But be."

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 71–76.

Vocabulary

Word Roots Draw students' attention to palpable. Explain that it derives from the Latin verb palpare, meaning "to touch or stroke." Ask students to determine the meanings of these words from the same root:

- palpate ("to examine medically by touch")
- palpitation ("throbbing or trembling, usually of the heart")

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Guide students through "Ars Poetica" with the following procedure: Point out that MacLeish uses a repetitive sentence structure to define a poem: "A poem should be . . . ." Form three groups of students and assign the following lines for analysis, one set per group: 1–6; 7–8; and 9–16. Ask each group to identify the adjectives and the sensory images. Have someone from each group paraphrase each line grouping for the class. Point out that at lines 18 and 23, MacLeish introduces the word not. Instead of telling readers what a poem should be, he explores what a poem should not be. Ask students to identify the two things that a poem should not be. Discuss how the images in lines 20 and 22 could convey grief and love, respectively. Finally, ask groups to write statements of theme in which they explain MacLeish's ideas about poetry, citing examples from the poem to support their statements.

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Ask: What does MacLeish rely on to get his message across? (Possible answer: He relies on imagery.) How does the final stanza summarize the poet's theme? (Possible answer: It makes clear that a poem should show, not tell, its ideas.)

Literary Element 2

Theme Answer: He compares poetry with a flight of birds.

APPROACHING Write lines 7–8 on the board. Circle the two items the poet compares: a poem and the flight of birds. Underline the common descriptor, wordless. Ask: How is a flight of birds wordless? (The flight of birds is a visual image or a physical action. It exists outside of language.) Ask: If a poem is composed of words, how can it be wordless? (If the imagery is powerful, readers will feel or experience the image and the words will become unnecessary.)

Ars Poetica

Archibald MacLeish

A poem should be palpable and mute
As a globed fruit

Dumb[1]
As old medallions to the thumb

Silent as the sleeve-worn stone
Of casement[2] ledges where the moss has grown—

A poem should be wordless
As the flight of birds

A poem should be motionless in time
As the moon climbs

Leaving, as the moon releases
Twig by twig the night-entangled trees,

Leaving, as the moon behind the winter leaves,
Memory by memory the mind—

A poem should be motionless in time
As the moon climbs

A poem should be equal to:
Not true

For all the history of grief
An empty doorway and a maple leaf

For love
The leaning grasses and two lights above the sea—

A poem should not mean
But be

1

---

[1] Dumb: here, unable to speak.

[2] casement: a window that opens on hinges.

Theme How does MacLeish develop the idea that a poem can be "wordless"? 2

Vocabulary

palpable (pal´ pə bəl) adj. tangible; able to be touched or felt mute (mūt) adj. silent entangled (en tan´ gəld) adj. twisted together; caught

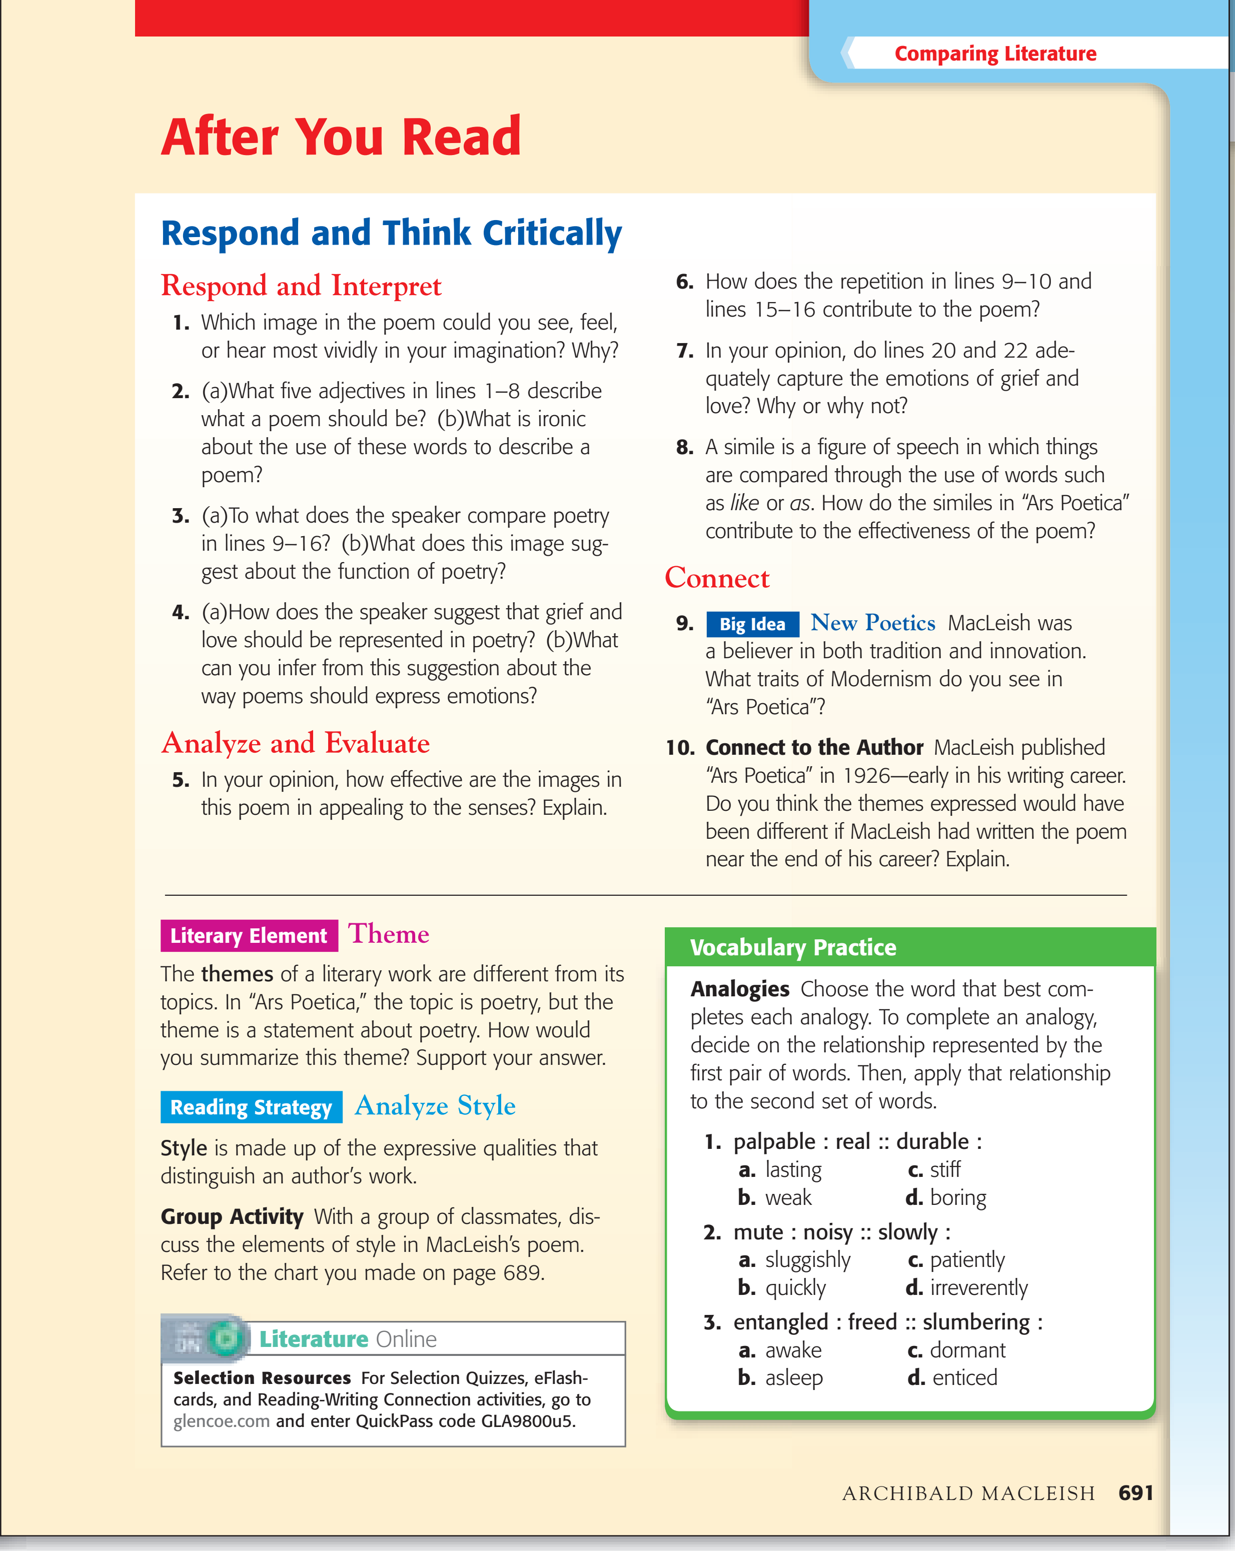
Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Simile MacLeish uses similes to describe what a poem should be. Remind students that a simile is a comparison using the word like or as. One element of the comparison is usually familiar to the reader. The comparison to something familiar provides insight into the less familiar thing or idea.

Have students find the similes used in the poem. Then have them describe the images and feelings that are evoked by each simile.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which image in the poem could you see, feel, or hear most vividly in your imagination? Why?
2. (a)What five adjectives in lines 1–8 describe what a poem should be? (b)What is ironic about the use of these words to describe a poem?
3. (a)To what does the speaker compare poetry in lines 9–16? (b)What does this image suggest about the function of poetry?
4. (a)How does the speaker suggest that grief and love should be represented in poetry? (b)What can you infer from this suggestion about the way poems should express emotions?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. In your opinion, how effective are the images in this poem in appealing to the senses? Explain.
6. How does the repetition in lines 9–10 and lines 15–16 contribute to the poem?
7. In your opinion, do lines 20 and 22 adequately capture the emotions of grief and love? Why or why not?
8. A simile is a figure of speech in which things are compared through the use of words such as like or as. How do the similes in "Ars Poetica" contribute to the effectiveness of the poem?

Connect

9. Big Idea New Poetics MacLeish was a believer in both tradition and innovation. What traits of Modernism do you see in "Ars Poetica"?
10. Connect to the Author MacLeish published "Ars Poetica" in 1926—early in his writing career. Do you think the themes expressed would have been different if MacLeish had written the poem near the end of his career? Explain.

Literary Element Theme

The themes of a literary work are different from its topics. In "Ars Poetica," the topic is poetry, but the theme is a statement about poetry. How would you summarize this theme? Support your answer.

Reading Strategy Analyze Style

Style is made up of the expressive qualities that distinguish an author's work.

Group Activity With a group of classmates, discuss the elements of style in MacLeish's poem. Refer to the chart you made on page 689.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Analogies Choose the word that best completes each analogy. To complete an analogy, decide on the relationship represented by the first pair of words. Then, apply that relationship to the second set of words.

1. palpable : real :: durable :
   - a. lasting
   - b. weak
   - c. stiff
   - d. boring
2. mute : noisy :: slowly :
   - a. sluggishly
   - b. quickly
   - c. patiently
   - d. irreverently
3. entangled : freed :: slumbering :
   - a. awake
   - b. asleep
   - c. dormant
   - d. enticed

After You Read

Assess

1. "flight of birds"; "leaning grasses"
2. (a) Palpable, mute, dumb, silent, and wordless (b) They suggest that a poem should be silent, even though poetry is intended to be heard.
3. (a) The moon (b) Poetry should be unobtrusive while slowly illuminating its subject.
4. (a) They should be represented by images. (b) Emotions are best expressed through images.
5. Students may rate them highly for their evocative power.
6. It reinforces the concept of imperceptible motion and unifies the middle section of the poem.
7. Yes, the empty doorway and the lone leaf convey grief, and the two lights convey love; no, these images do not convey these powerful emotions.
8. They clarify the statements—for example, "as old medallions to the thumb" clarifies "dumb."
9. A desire to express private thoughts in a new way, irregular line length and meter, and a focus on imagery
10. Students might say that MacLeish would have a more defined sense of what a poem is and his tone may have changed later in his career.

Literary Element

Poetry takes on the form of its subject; a poem is an artifact, not a narrative. MacLeish directly states "A poem should not mean / But be" and also expresses the theme through imagery.

Reading Strategy

Students should cite evidence from the poem in their discussions.

Vocabulary

1. a 2. b 3. a

Progress Check

Can students analyze theme?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 77.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

When Kappus asks whether he should write poetry, Rilke advises him to become introspective and to look toward nature and his everyday life, emotions, and thoughts for subject matter. Rilke tells him that in the poetry that arises he will find his answer. Rilke discourages Kappus from allowing outside opinions to influence him.

Literary History

Franz Xaver Kappus At the time his correspondence with Rilke began, Kappus was a nineteen-year-old student at a military academy. An admirer of Rilke's poetry, he decided to send his attempts at poetry to Rilke after a professor told him that Rilke was a former student. Kappus thought that Rilke would respond to a young aspiring poet, and he did.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 8.3
DRP: 59
Lexile: 860

Build Background

Rainer Maria Rilke was born in 1875 in Prague, which was then part of Austria-Hungary and is now the capital of the Czech Republic. In 1902 Rilke went to Paris to write a book about Auguste Rodin, the great French sculptor. Rodin quickly became Rilke's friend and mentor, sharing with the young poet a creative methodology based on an ethic of hard work and dedication to minute detail.

The following selection is from a collection of letters Rilke wrote to Franz Xaver Kappus, an aspiring poet, during a five-year period that started in 1903, when Rilke was in Paris.

from Letters to a Young Poet

Rainer Maria Rilke

The Heart Called Rancho Pastel, Jim Dine. Private collection.

You ask whether your poems are good. You send them to publishers; you compare them with other poems; you are disturbed when certain publishers reject your attempts. Well now, since you have given me permission to advise you, I suggest that you give all that up. You are looking outward and, above all else, that you must not do now. No one can advise and help you, no one.

There is only one way: Go within. Search for the cause, find the impetus[1] that bids you write. Put it to this test: Does it stretch out its roots in the deepest place of your heart? Can you avow[2] that you would die if you were forbidden to write? Above all, in the most silent hour of your night, ask yourself this: Must I write? Dig deep into yourself for a true answer. And if it should ring its assent, if you can confidently meet this serious question with a simple, "I must," then build your life upon it. It has become your necessity. Your life, in even the most mundane and least significant hour, must become a sign, a testimony to this urge.

Then draw near to nature. Pretend you are the very first man and then write what you see

---

[1] An impetus is a something that encourages or stimulates activity.

[2] To avow is to declare openly.

Writing Practice

Author's Purpose Point out that looking at an author's subject matter, word choice, and sentence structure can help readers identify the author's purpose. Ask: What was Rilke's purpose in writing this letter? (Possible answers: to persuade Kappus to have confidence in his own abilities; to warn him about the dangers of being influenced by others; to express his ideas about the creative process)

Have students write a statement of Rilke's purpose in this letter and cite specific passages that helped them determine his purpose. Guide them to locate evidence of tone, sentence structure, and choice of words.

and experience, what you love and lose. Do not write love poems, at least at first; they present the greatest challenge. It requires great, fully ripened power to produce something personal, something unique, when there are so many good and sometimes even brilliant renditions[3] in great numbers. Beware of general themes. Cling to those that your everyday life offers you. Write about your sorrows, your wishes, your passing thoughts, your belief in anything beautiful. Describe all that with fervent,[4] quiet, and humble sincerity. In order to express yourself, use things in your surroundings, the scenes of your dreams, and the subjects of your memory.

If your everyday life appears to be unworthy subject matter, do not complain to life. Complain to yourself. Lament that you are not poet enough to call up its wealth. For the creative artist there is no poverty—nothing is insignificant or unimportant. Even if you were in a prison whose walls would shut out from your senses the sounds of the outer world, would you not then still have your childhood, this precious wealth, this treasure house of memories? Direct your attention to that. Attempt to resurrect these sunken sensations of a distant past. You will gain assuredness. Your aloneness will expand and will become your home, greeting you like the quiet dawn. Outer tumult will pass it by from afar.

If, as a result of this turning inward, of this sinking into your own world, poetry should emerge, you will not think to ask someone whether it is good poetry. And you will not try to interest publishers of magazines in these works. For you will hear in them your own voice; you will see in them a piece of your life, a natural possession of yours. A piece of art is good if it is born of necessity. This, its source, is its criterion; there is no other.

Therefore, my dear friend, I know of no
1 other advice than this: Go within and scale the depths of your being from which your very life springs forth. At its source you will find the answer to the question, whether you must write. Accept it, however it sounds to you, without analyzing. Perhaps it will become apparent to you that you are indeed called to be a writer. Then accept that fate; 1 bear its burden, and its grandeur, without asking for the reward, which might possibly come from without. For the creative artist must be a world of his own and must find everything within himself and in nature, to which he has betrothed[5] himself.

It is possible that, even after your descent into your inner self and into your secret place of solitude, you might find that you must give up becoming a poet. As I have said, to feel that one could live without writing is enough indication that, in fact, one should not. Even then this process of turning inward, upon which I beg you to embark, will not have been in vain. Your life will no doubt from then on find its own paths. That they will be good ones and rich and expansive—that I wish for you more than I can say.

What else shall I tell you? It seems to me everything has been said, with just the right emphasis. I wanted only to advise you to progress quietly and seriously in your evolvement.[6]
You could greatly interfere with that process 2 if you look outward and expect to obtain answers from the outside—answers which only your innermost feeling in your quietest hour can perhaps give you.

---

[3] Renditions are versions.

[4] Fervent means "with intense feeling."

[5] Betrothed means "engaged."

[6] Evolvement is growth.

Discussion Starter

In this letter, Rilke insists that the individual finds the most powerful means of expression by looking inward. He also says that a writer must write in order to express himself or herself, just as one must breathe in order to live. In what ways does Rilke's advice to the young poet apply to other aspirations people have in life?

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Style Ask: What does Rilke's writing style reveal about his personality? (Students may say Rilke is passionate about writing and is a supportive mentor.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Help students identify characteristics of Rilke's style: a serious tone, parallel sentence structure, rhetorical questions, formal language, and so on.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 78.

Literary Element 2

Theme Explain that the central message of a work of literature is its theme. Ask: What is the theme of this letter? (Possible answer: An individual must look within his or her heart to find the best, most honest, and most personal way to express his or her thoughts and desires.)

View the Art ★

The heart shape is a recurring image in the art of Jim Dine (1935–). Ask: How does the artwork relate to Rilke's letter? (It reflects the idea of going within to "the deepest place of [the] heart" to find the truth.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Advanced Have students identify words or phrases in "Ars Poetica" and Rilke's letter that reveal each writer's ideas about poetry. Form three student groups, assigning one writer (MacLeish, Kappus, Rilke) to each group. Tell students to use the following sentence starters to write explanations of each writer's ideas of poetry: MacLeish: A poem should offer readers an image rather than a theme because . . . ; Kappus: A poem should receive public recognition of its worth because . . . ; Rilke: A poem should be an outward expression of an inner thought or feeling because . . . .

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

The setting of this poem is a library; the characters are a man, a librarian, and dogs. The man is happy because he has eaten (filled himself with) poetry; the librarian is at first bewildered, and then frightened, by the man's behavior.

Writer's Technique ☆

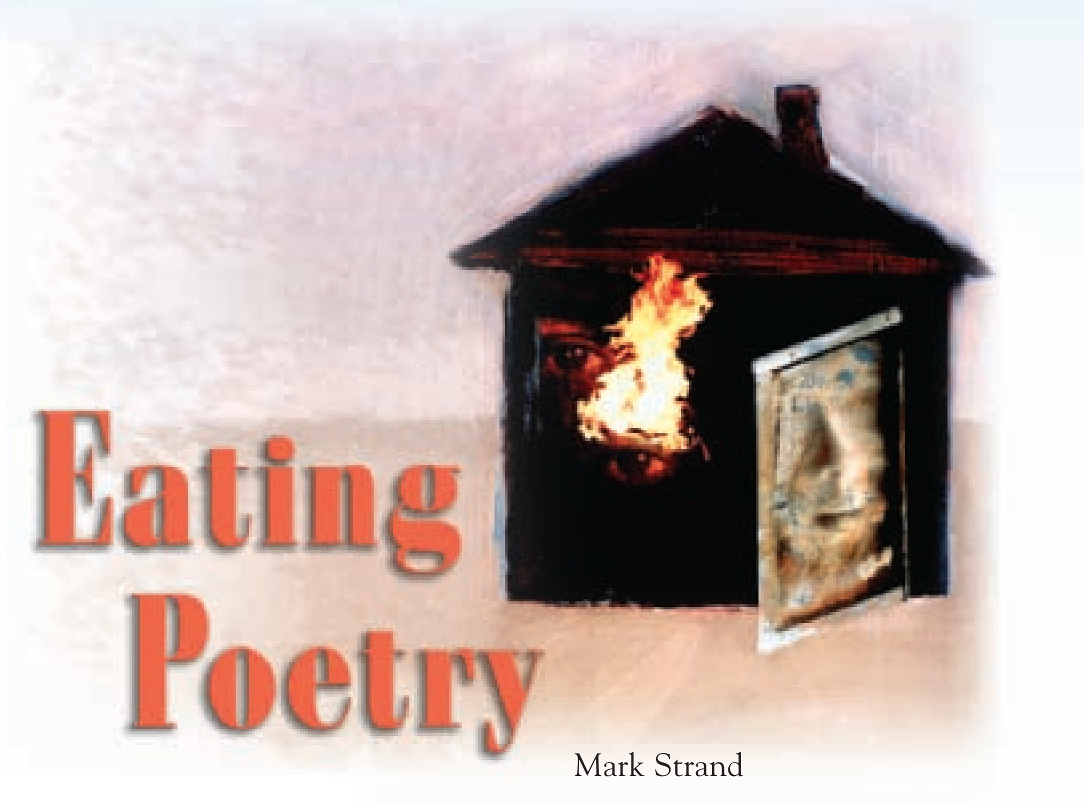
Ambiguity Ambiguity is a way of using language which is open to more than one interpretation. Poets like Mark Strand intentionally use ambiguity to express complex ideas and multiple levels of meaning. Readers should be aware that there is not one clear "right" explanation of a line or passage; various interpretations that can be supported by the text are acceptable.

Build Background

Mark Strand developed as a writer during the 1960s—a period when, he later noted, "Poets were underground pop stars."

Influenced by the work of Archibald MacLeish, Strand's poetry is noted for its surreal imagery and exploration of the power of presence and absence in life. Critic Jane Candia Coleman commented that although Strand's poetry can be abstract and difficult, "the reader who delves, who meets the poet halfway, will be rewarded by glimpses of a different world, that changeable one of dreams and the elusive beauty that haunts us all." ☆

House on Fire with People Inside. John Ritter.



Eating Poetry

Mark Strand

Reading Practice

Reread Tell students that rereading "Eating Poetry" will help them better understand the poem's imagery. Have students analyze the characters in the poem and consider whom or what each represents. Work with them to prepare a list of questions that will help focus their thinking. Say: Here is one question: Are the dogs distinct characters in the poem, or are they a manifestation of some part of the man's mind? (Students' answers will vary. Have them support their ideas with evidence from the poem.)

Small Ferocious Dog. John Ritter.

Ink runs from the corners of my mouth.
1 There is no happiness like mine.
I have been eating poetry.

The librarian does not believe what she sees.
Her eyes are sad
and she walks with her hands in her dress.

The poems are gone.
The light is dim.
The dogs are on the basement stairs and coming up.

Their eyeballs roll,
their blond legs burn like brush.
The poor librarian begins to stamp her feet and weep.

She does not understand.
When I get on my knees and lick her hand,
she screams.

I am a new man.
I snarl at her and bark.
I romp with joy in the bookish dark. 2

Quickwrite

Strand has said, "A poem may be the residue of an inner urgency, one through which the self wishes to register itself, write itself into being, and, finally, to charm another self, the reader, into belief." Strand's description of the speaker in "Eating Poetry" is purposefully ambiguous. Write a paragraph in which you interpret the character of the speaker. Cite evidence from the text to support your view.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Have student pairs work together to list on a T-chart what is happening inside the speaker's head and what is happening in the external setting of the library. If students wish, they can make an open-mind diagram to illustrate what is happening in the speaker's head. For example, they might draw words running from the corners of the speaker's mouth. Have each pair present its findings to the class. Then discuss the emotions that the poem evokes. Ask: Do you envy the speaker, or do you fear him? Why?

Comparing Literature

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Have students consider the quotation from Jane Candia Coleman in the Before You Read text. Ask: What different world do you glimpse in "Eating Poetry"? (Possible answer: The poem takes you inside the author's head, into a dream he is having.)

Literary Element 2

Figurative Language Explain that in "Eating Poetry" Strand uses figurative language to convey his ideas and emotions. Ask: What devices of figurative language does Strand use in the poem? (Possible answers: metaphor; personification) Have students support their answers with examples from the text.

APPROACHING Read the first stanza aloud for students. Ask: What is the poet comparing? (The poet compares reading with eating.) Point out that a metaphor forces readers to think about familiar topics such as reading in new ways. Ask: How is reading like eating? (Possible response: Both activities are forms of nourishment.)

Quickwrite

Students may say that the speaker is in fact a dog or that the speaker is a reader who is "a new man" after having an intense experience in reading poetry. They should support their views with evidence from the poem and address counterarguments.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

The speaker compares what happens to the tenants of a house in a 1960s television show to what happens to the reader of this poem. He ends the poem with statistical information about missing persons in 1968.

Writer's Technique ☆

Poetic License Poets feel free to use language in unconventional ways. They may invent words or break rules of grammar, spelling, or punctuation. John Dryden, an English poet, playwright and critic, claimed that this practice was to liberate poetry from the strictness and severity of prose. Ask students to point out examples of Ishmael Reed's poetic license.

Build Background

Ishmael Reed has described his eclectic writing style as "Neoamerican hoodooism," an expression that implies a melding of the magic healing in African folk culture and many other U.S. cultural elements. Reed's style blends European and African traditions and showcases his broad-ranging cultural and historical knowledge.

In his poems, Reed's innovative approach is obvious. He purposely omits vowels, uses ampersands instead of the word and, and inserts punctuation at unexpected places. One effect of his techniques is to quicken and vary the pace of his poetry. ☆

beware: do not read this poem

Ishmael Reed

Hallway, 1995. Mary Iverson.

tonite ,   thriller[1] was abt an ol woman   ,so vain she surrounded herself w/many mirrors

1

it got so bad that finally she locked herself indoors & her whole life became the mirrors

one day the villagers broke into her house ,   but she was too swift for them .   she disappeared into a mirror

each tenant who bought the house after that   ,   lost a loved one to

---

[1] Thriller was a television show hosted by horror-film actor Boris Karloff that ran from 1960 to 1962. The hour-long episodes were divided between mystery and horror genres.

Assessment Practice

Short Response Remind students that answers to short response questions are evaluated on the basis of their insightfulness and the evidence drawn from the text to support them. Ask: Which of the three poems in this lesson challenged you to think in a new way? Explain your response with examples of imagery, language, and theme. (Students may cite the surrealistic poetry of Strand, because the symbolic meanings of the poem's images had to be interpreted before the poem could be understood.)

the ol woman in the mirror :
first a little girl
then a young woman
then the young woman/s husband

the hunger of this poem is legendary it has taken in many victims back off from this poem
it has drawn in yr feet
back off from this poem
it has drawn in yr legs

back off from this poem
it is a greedy mirror you are into this poem .   from the waist down
nobody can hear you can they ?
this poem has had you up to here
belch
this poem aint got no manners you cant call out frm this poem relax now & go w/ this poem move & roll on to this poem do not resist this poem
this poem has yr eyes
this poem has his head
this poem has his arms
this poem has his fingers
this poem has his fingertips this poem is the reader & the reader this poem

statistic :   the us bureau of missing persons reports that in 1968 over 100,000 people disappeared leaving no solid clues nor trace   only a space   in the lives of their friends

2

Quickwrite

The title of this selection naturally attracts the reader's interest. Despite the fact that the title warns the reader not to continue reading, the poem focuses on the relationship that exists in poetry between the reader and the writer. Write a paragraph in which you discuss how this selection develops the idea that "this poem is the reader & the / reader this poem."

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate English learners may find Reed's idiosyncratic use of language and punctuation difficult to comprehend. To facilitate comprehension, work with students to rewrite the poem with conventional grammar, spelling, and punctuation. For example: Tonight, Thriller was about an old woman who was so vain that she surrounded herself with many mirrors. When students have completed rewriting the poem, have them compare the two versions, reading each aloud. Then lead them to discuss the effects of Reed's stylistic choices, focusing particularly on the sounds and rhythms of the language.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Author's Purpose Ask: What might be Reed's reasons for using unconventional spacing, grammar, spelling, and punctuation? (Possible answer: The poem is written as though the poet is conversing with the reader in everyday language. The odd spacing and punctuation control the reader's pace so that the poem is read at the author's intended pace.)

Reading Strategy 2

Compare Have students compare the author's purpose, form, and imagery of "Eating Poetry" with that of "beware: do not read this poem." (Students may say that both poems are written in free verse, both contain precise images, and both treat topics that are not highly intellectual.)

Quickwrite

Students should connect the anecdote in the first four stanzas and the "statistic" in the final stanza to Reed's comments in the middle of the poem about the way a poem draws in the reader.

Assess

Compare the Big Idea

Group Activity

1. Each student should discuss what he or she believes poetry is, should be, or can be, relating the idea to one of the four selections in this section.
2. Students may respond that "Ars Poetica" and "Eating Poetry" both lack consistent patterns of meter and rhyme and that "beware: do not read this poem," in addition to lacking those characteristics, has unconventional punctuation, spelling, and capitalization.
3. MacLeish provides similes to clarify and expand upon his statements about what poetry should be; Rilke provides a way of determining whether one should pursue writing poetry; Strand describes the exhilaration of reading a poem; Reed describes a symbolic transaction between the reader and poetry.

Compare Imagist Poetry

Visual Display

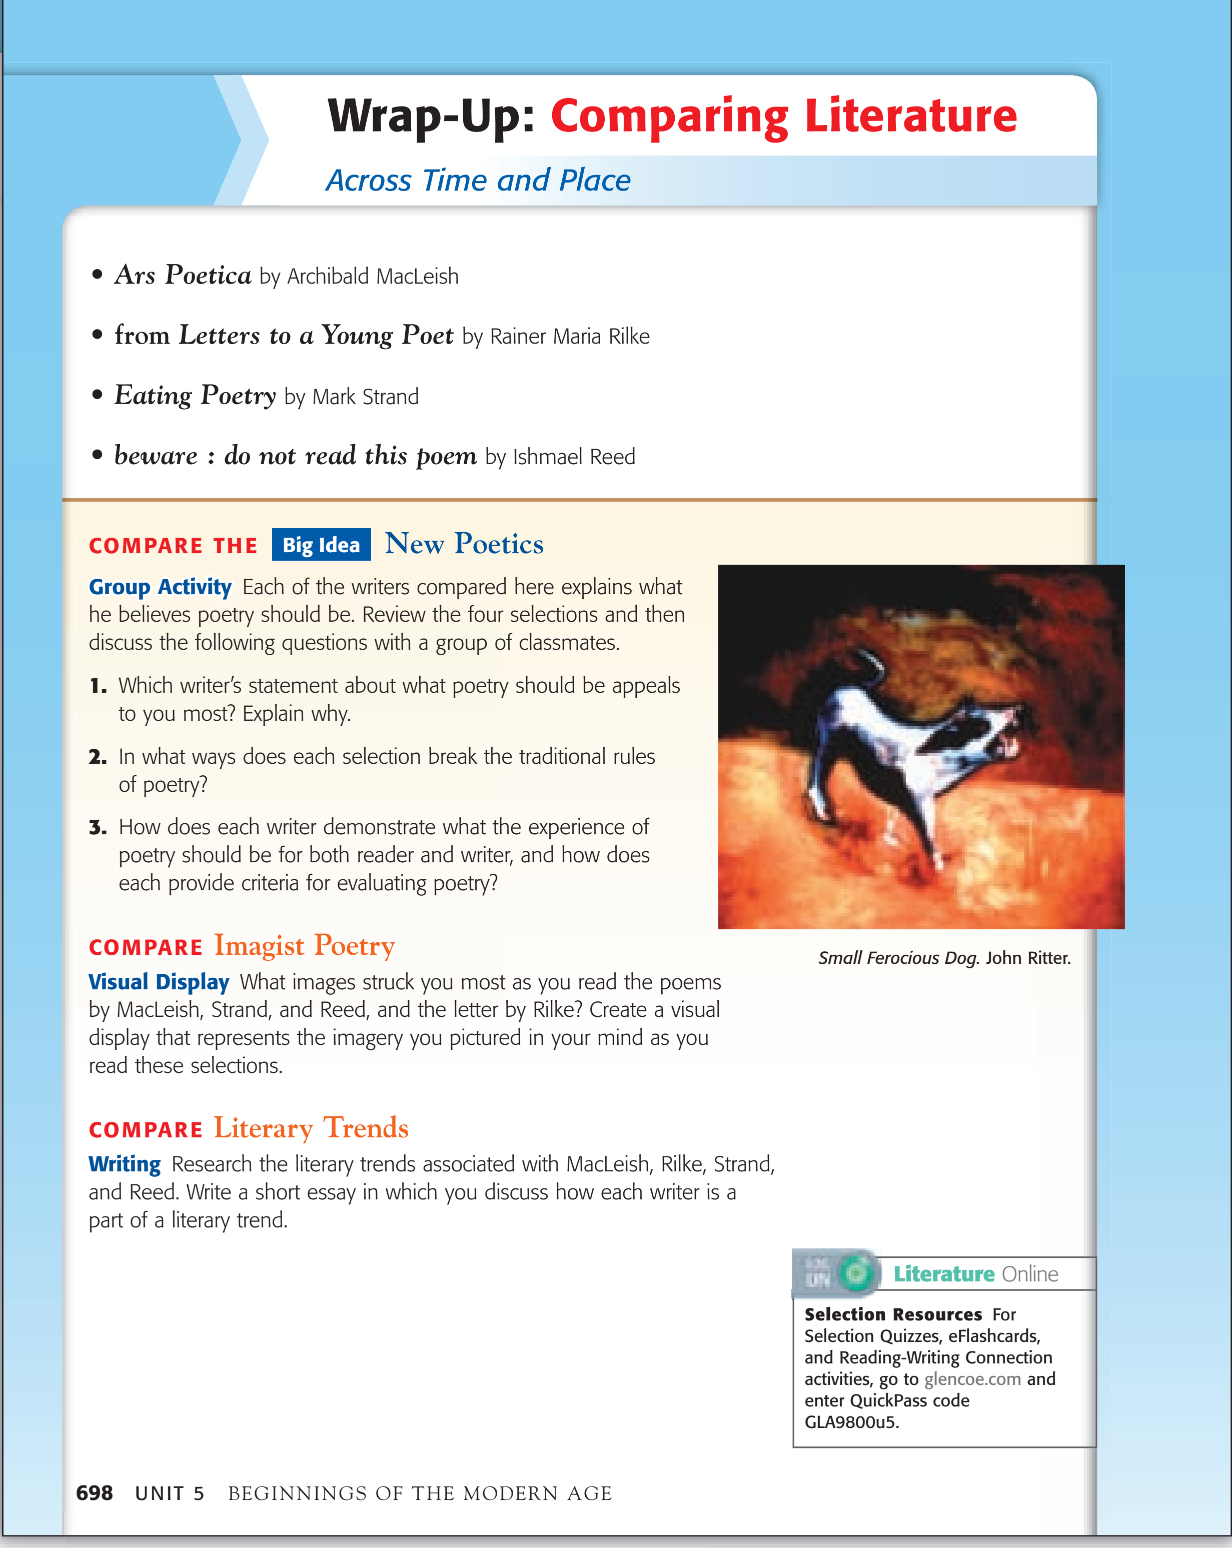
Students' displays should relate to specific images found in the four selections.

Compare Literary Trends

Writing

Use these criteria when evaluating students' writing:

- Does the essay connect trends in literature and culture to the styles and themes of the selections?
- In describing the connection of the writers to literary trends, does the essay analyze specific features of the four selections?
- Does the essay show a thorough understanding of the themes and imagery in the selections?



Wrap-Up: Comparing Literature

Across Time and Place

- Ars Poetica by Archibald MacLeish
- from Letters to a Young Poet by Rainer Maria Rilke
- Eating Poetry by Mark Strand
- beware : do not read this poem by Ishmael Reed

COMPARE THE Big Idea New Poetics

Group Activity Each of the writers compared here explains what he believes poetry should be. Review the four selections and then discuss the following questions with a group of classmates.

1. Which writer's statement about what poetry should be appeals to you most? Explain why.
2. In what ways does each selection break the traditional rules of poetry?
3. How does each writer demonstrate what the experience of poetry should be for both reader and writer, and how does each provide criteria for evaluating poetry?

Small Ferocious Dog. John Ritter.

COMPARE Imagist Poetry

Visual Display What images struck you most as you read the poems by MacLeish, Strand, and Reed, and the letter by Rilke? Create a visual display that represents the imagery you pictured in your mind as you read these selections.

COMPARE Literary Trends

Writing Research the literary trends associated with MacLeish, Rilke, Strand, and Reed. Write a short essay in which you discuss how each writer is a part of a literary trend.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Before You Read

Study of Two Pears and from The Man with the Blue Guitar

Meet Wallace Stevens

(1879–1955)

For a poet with such a powerful imagination, Wallace Stevens led an outwardly quiet and uneventful life. His entire professional career was spent as an employee of an insurance company. In his journals he expressed embarrassment about writing poems: "Keep all this a great secret. There is something absurd about all this writing of verses; but the truth is, it elates and satisfies me to do it."

> "How full of trifles everything is! It is only one's thoughts that fill a room with something more than furniture."
>
> —Wallace Stevens

Youth Stevens was born in Reading, Pennsylvania. His father was a country lawyer, and his mother was a teacher. Stevens enrolled at Harvard College in 1897, where he became friends with the philosopher George Santayana, who encouraged Stevens to publish his early poems in the Harvard Advocate. Stevens left school abruptly after only three years, failing to complete his degree. He moved to New York City and worked briefly as a reporter for the Herald Tribune. Then, after enrolling at the New York Law School, he acquired his degree and was admitted to the bar in 1904. Stevens worked for various law firms before moving to Connecticut where he worked for the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company until his death.

In 1914 Poetry magazine published four of Stevens's poems. They were eventually included in his first book, Harmonium (1923). It was well received by critics but sold only one hundred copies. However, Harmonium contains some of Stevens's most recognizable and important work. It shows the influence of the French Symbolists and the English Romantics, particularly Wordsworth and Coleridge. In this book, Stevens illustrates his belief that "the imagination is man's power over nature."

Maturity and Acceptance During the 1930s, Stevens published three more books, Ideas and Order, Owl's Clover, and The Man with the Blue Guitar, which reveal the progressive development of his poetic style. By the 1940s, Stevens had entered the most creatively fertile time in his life. He gradually abandoned the intricate forms and lavish imagery of his early work in favor of a more concise, abstract style. In 1954 Stevens's Collected Poems appeared. With this publication, shortly before his death, Stevens attracted widespread attention for the first time. The Collected Poems was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Poetry in 1955.

Poet of the Imagination Central to all of Stevens's poetry is the primacy of the creative imagination. According to Stevens, the role of the poet is to use the imagination to "become the light in the minds of others" by helping people to discover new ways of viewing reality and to experience a sense of order in a chaotic world devoid of a clear spiritual definition. His best work explored the complex relationship between the shaping power of the imagination and the physical world.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Wallace Stevens, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 62

Or display a common object, such as a cup or a flower, along with a painting and a photograph of a similar object. Ask: How does each of these three items represent "reality"? Which of the three is most "real"?

Tell students that the poet Wallace Stevens explores the nature of reality in many of his poems.

Selection Skills

Study of Two Pears and from The Man with the Blue Guitar

Literary Elements
- Tone (SE pp. 700, 702, 703)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 702; TE p. 701)

Reading Skills
- Recognize Author's Purpose (SE pp. 700, 701, 703)
- Interpret (TE p. 702)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Origins (SE pp. 700. 703)
- Synonyms (TE p. 700)

Writing Skill/Grammar
- Journal Entry (SE p. 703)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In “Study of Two Pears,” Wallace Stevens uses sensory details to describe a painting of pears. “The Man with the Blue Guitar” describes a man bent over a guitar who does not play “things exactly as they are.” Both poems examine the nature of reality.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 82–87.

Vocabulary

Synonyms and Word Choice Ask students which words on the vocabulary list belong with the following groups of synonyms:

- protrude, stick out (bulge)
- sparkle, glint (glisten)
- narrow, shrink (taper)

Ask students to comment on the connotations of the words in each group. Then explain that poets look for precisely the right word to convey a specific idea or image.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

When you view a physical object, how can you distinguish its appearance from its reality? Freewrite for ten minutes to explore this question.

Build Background

“The Man with the Blue Guitar” is the first stanza of a longer poem that appeared in 1937. It is tempting to connect the title of this poem to Pablo Picasso’s famous painting The Old Guitarist, but Stevens claimed to have no particular painting in mind. However, he was deeply affected by the artistic experiments of Cubist painters like Picasso who subverted traditional perspective. Stevens’s poetry, like Cubist painting, often mixes multiple points of view to create fresh perspectives on observed objects.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

As you read, ask yourself, How do Stevens’s poems encourage the reader to explore the way in which imagination can transform and deepen our perceptions of everyday experience?

Literary Element Tone

Tone is the author’s attitude toward subject matter or audience. Writers convey tone through word choice, punctuation, sentence structure, and figures of speech. As you read, ask, How does Stevens convey tone in these poems?

Reading Strategy Recognize Author’s Purpose

An author’s purpose is the author’s intent in writing a piece of literature. Authors typically write to persuade, to inform, to explain, to explore, to entertain, or to describe.

Tip: Double-Entry Journal Use a journal like the one started below to ask and answer questions about Stevens’s purpose.

Questions to Ask	Answers
What is the tone?
What kinds of details are there?
What are some descriptive words?

Learning Objectives

For pages 699–703

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing tone.

Reading: Recognizing author’s purpose.

Writing: Writing a journal entry.

Vocabulary

bulge (bulj) v. to swell or curve outward; p. 701 The shoplifter’s shirt was bulging with the goods he had taken.

taper (tā´ pər) v. to become progressively thinner or smaller; p. 701 The river slowly tapered out as it entered the dry gorge.

glisten (glis´ ən) v. to shine or to reflect light; p. 701 All morning the dew was glistening on the grass.

Tip: Word Origins Word origins, also called etymologies, are the history and development of words. They are often found in dictionary entries.

Vocabulary Practice

Word Origins Write the first line of “Study of Two Pears” on the board: Opusculum paedagogum. Point out the Latin meanings and roots of these words: Opusculum, meaning “small work,” has the root opus (plural opera). Paedagogum is an adjective form refering to instruction or teaching.

Tell students that a number of English words have come from these two Latin words. Have students explain the meanings of the following terms and connect the meanings to their origins.

1. pedagogy
2. pedagogue
3. pedant
4. pedantic
5. operate
6. opera
7. magnum opus

Study of Two Pears

Wallace Stevens

I

Opusculum paedagogum.[1]
The pears are not viols,[2]
Nudes or bottles.
They resemble nothing else.

II

They are yellow forms
Composed of curves
Bulging toward the base.
They are touched red.

III

They are not flat surfaces
Having curved outlines.
They are round
Tapering toward the top.

IV

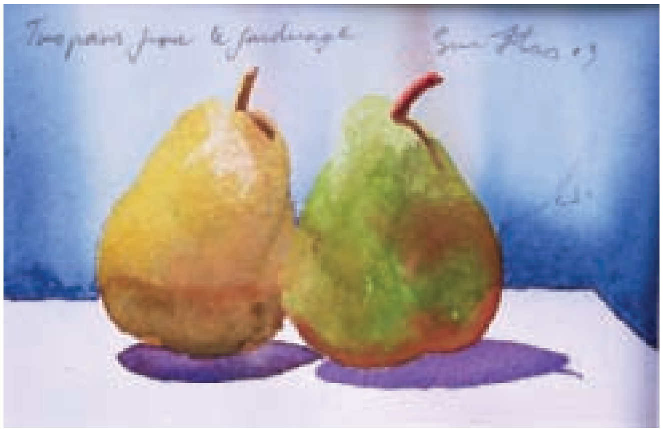
In the way they are modelled
There are bits of blue.
A hard dry leaf hangs
From the stem.

V

The yellow glistens.
It glistens with various yellows,
Citrons,[3] oranges and greens
Flowering over the skin.

VI

The shadows of the pears
Are blobs on the green cloth.
The pears are not seen
As the observer wills.



Two Pears from the Jardinage, 2003. Simon Fletcher. Watercolor on paper. Private collection. ★

1 New Poetics What is the speaker saying in this stanza about the difference between art and physical reality?

2 Recognize Author's Purpose What do these lines suggest about Stevens's purpose for composing this poem?

Vocabulary

bulge (bulj) v. to swell or curve outward taper (tā´ pər) v. to become progressively thinner or smaller glisten (glis´ ən) v. to shine or to reflect light

---

[1] Opusculum paedagogum is Latin for "a small instructional text."
[2] A viol is a bowed stringed instrument used chiefly in music of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.
[3] Citron is a shade of yellowish green.

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Answer: Students may suggest that the speaker is saying that art creates a new reality that does not necessarily coincide with physical reality.

Reading Strategy 2

Recognize Author's Purpose Answer: Students should realize that Stevens's purpose is to express the idea that a viewer's perspective cannot alter the object being viewed.

APPROACHING Explain that one purpose of the poem is to describe. Help students locate support for this purpose in the poem ("yellow," "curves," "bulging," "hard dry leaf hangs from the stem"). Suggest that another purpose is to explain that perspective does not change reality. Help students locate support for this purpose ("The pears are not seen / As the observer wills").

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 89.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Remind students to read Stevens's poems according to punctuation, not lines. Assist student pairs as they practice reading the poem aloud.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Descriptive Writing Have students use Stevens's technique of contrasting what something is not with what something is to describe other still life scenes. Students may choose to write in prose or verse.

View the Art ★

The English artist Simon Fletcher (1958–) began a career in landscape design and won an award for his work in 1980. In 1982, Fletcher moved to France, where he began to develop his skills as a painter. Say: Compare the way the poet and the artist use light, color, or language to convey their messages about the pears.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Tone Answer: These lines state that the guitar player is not presenting things as they are. The poem's theme is that "things as they are" are inevitably changed by art.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Discuss the meaning of the phrase "things as they are."

View the Art ★

Answer: Students may say that the guitarist in the painting is bent over his guitar, like the one in the poem. They may contrast the moods of the painting and the poem.

Pablo Picasso (1881–1973) was one of the most influential artists of the 20th century. Born in Spain, he moved to Paris, France, when he was 19. There, he experienced a period of melancholy (1901–1904), during which he used muted shades of blue in his work. He painted The Old Guitarist during this "blue period."

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 91.

from The Man with the Blue Guitar

Wallace Stevens

I

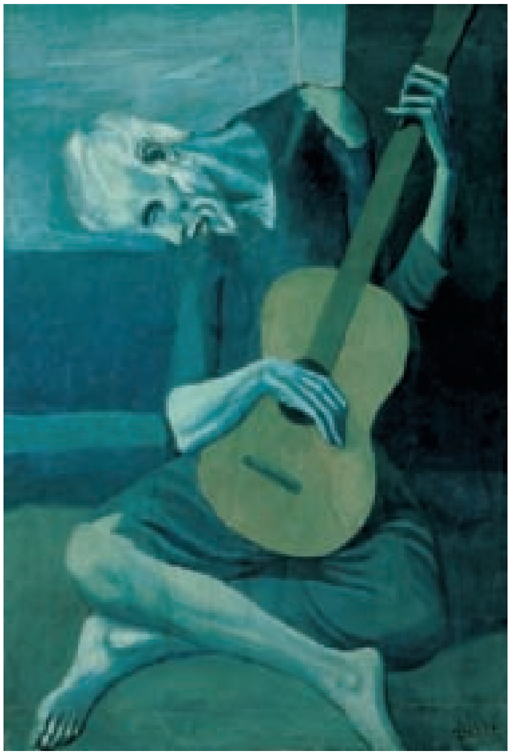
The man bent over his guitar,
A shearsman[1] of sorts. The day was green.

They said, "You have a blue guitar,
You do not play things as they are."

The man replied, "Things as they are
Are changed upon the blue guitar."

And they said then, "But play, you must,
A tune beyond us, yet ourselves,

A tune upon the blue guitar
Of things exactly as they are."



The Old Guitarist, 1903–1904. Pablo Picasso ©ARS, NY. Oil on panel, 48¾ x 32½. The Art Institute of Chicago, IL.

View the Art During his Blue Period, Pablo Picasso painted melancholic themes, restricting his palette almost exclusively to shades of blue. How does the guitarist in this painting compare with your mental picture of the one described in the poem? ★

---

[1] Shearsman refers to the posture of the guitarist, squatting like a tailor working on cloth.

1 Tone What does the guitarist's response suggest about his attitude toward reality and perception?

Reading Practice

SMALL GROUP

Interpret Explain to students that although this excerpt may seem simple, Stevens is attempting to explore an important philosophical issue. Have students work in small groups to discuss the following questions:

- How is the poem about the nature of reality? (Students may say that the poem shows that things are not always as they appear to be.)
- How is the poem a philosophical statement? (The poem implies that art can reveal a truth that transcends everyday notions of "things as they are.")

Have a spokesperson from each group report the group's conclusions to the class.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which of these poems do you prefer? Explain.
2. (a)In the final stanza of "Study of Two Pears," what does the speaker mean by saying that the pears are not seen as the observer wills? (b)How does this statement relate to the speaker's assertion in the first stanza?
3. (a)In "The Man with the Blue Guitar," what do the listeners accuse the guitarist of doing? How does the guitarist respond? (b)What does this exchange tell you about the guitar and the guitarist?
4. (a)What do the listeners tell the guitarist to do in the last two stanzas? (b)The guitarist does not reply. If he did reply, what do you think he would say?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Why do you think Stevens chose to divide "Study of Two Pears" into multiple sections? How does this structure affect the poem's meaning?
6. How does Stevens use rhyme in "The Man with the Blue Guitar"? Why do you think that Stevens chose to employ this rhyme scheme?
7. In "The Man with the Blue Guitar," the listeners demand that the guitarist play "a tune beyond us, yet ourselves." What do they mean?

Connect

8. Big Idea New Poetics How do these two poems illustrate Modernism in poetry?
9. Connect to the Author Why do you think he was so drawn to stirring the imagination and exploring new ways of perceiving reality?

Literary Element Tone

Tone is the author's attitude toward his or her subject matter. A writer's tone might convey a variety of attitudes such as sympathy, objectivity, or humor.

1. How would you describe the tone in each of these poems? Refer to the poems for support..
2. Compare and contrast the tone in these poems.

Reading Strategy Recognize Author's Purpose

An author's purpose and the theme of a literary work are often interrelated. How would you summarize the theme in each of these poems? What can you infer about Stevens's purpose in writing?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Word Origins The etymology, or origin, of a word can help you better understand its meaning. For each vocabulary word below, use a dictionary to look up the etymology, then write a sentence explaining the connection between the word's definition and its origin.

bulge taper glisten

Writing

Write a Journal Entry In "The Man with the Blue Guitar," Stevens suggests that music can have a meaning beyond literal lyrics and notes on a page. Think of a song that, for you, meets the listeners' demands of "A tune beyond us, yet ourselves." Write a journal entry about this song's significance to you.

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) The observer cannot change their essential nature. (b) The pears resemble nothing but themselves.
3. (a) Not playing things as they are. The guitarist claims that things "are changed upon the blue guitar." (b) Artists and art transform reality.
4. (a) To play a tune "beyond us," yet "of things exactly as they are" (b) That this is not the artist's role
5. Students may suggest that Stevens tried to "frame" each section like a still life. Each section provides a new perspective.
6. The rhymes reinforce the contrast between what "they" want and what the guitarist plays.
7. Listeners want an aesthetic experience, not divorced from reality.
8. Both poems present concrete images. Perspective, meaning, and the arts are Modernist concerns.
9. Students may say that he found a creative outlet in his poetry that he did not have in his career.

Progress Check

Can students analyze tone?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 88.

Literary Element

1. Students may describe the tone as challenging or provoking.
2. They are both challenging the way we see things.

Writing

Students' journal entries should relate a song to a personal experience.

Vocabulary

bulge Etymology: Old French bouge means "leather bag" taper Etymology: Old English tapur refers to the wick of a candle glisten Etymology: Old English glisian means "to glitter"

Students' sentences will vary.

Reading Strategy

The theme in "Study of Two Pears" is that perception does not change the essence of the thing perceived. Stevens wanted to show that essences are unchangeable. The theme in "The Man with the Blue Guitar" is that art can expose a truth that goes beyond our understanding of what is true. Stevens wanted to show that the imagination changes "things as they are."

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 63

Or display several images of ordinary-looking people.

Ask: What qualities make a person unique?

Tell students that the poet E. E. Cummings believed that expressing one's uniqueness is the most difficult task. Encourage them to consider, as they read, how Cummings expresses his uniqueness—and disdain for conformity—in these two poems.

Before You Read

somewhere i have never travelled, gladly beyond and anyone lived in a pretty how town

Meet E. E. Cummings
(1894–1962)

Edward Estlin Cummings coined the term "mostpeople" to describe conformists. Throughout his life, Cummings rebelled against the authoritarian forces that tend to suppress uniqueness. Challenging the social norms of the day, he married three times and only briefly held a regular job. Friends and family came to his rescue when he needed money. "I'm living so far beyond my income," he once wrote, "that we may almost be said to be living apart." His rebellion against authority took radical form in his poetry. People often view language as a fixed system. Cummings saw language as a flexible tool. In his poems, he combined words, playing with punctuation and syntax to create unique forms of poetic expression.

> "To be nobody-but-myself—in a world which is doing its best, night and day, to make me everybody else—means to fight the hardest battle which any human being can fight and never stop fighting."
>
> —E. E. Cummings

Cummings was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, the son of a Unitarian minister and a mother who encouraged him to write and keep a journal. A year after receiving a master's degree from Harvard University in 1916, Cummings volunteered to serve as an ambulance driver in World War I. He and a friend were wrongly arrested and imprisoned in France on charges of spying. A few months later, they were released, and Cummings wrote about his experiences there in The Enormous Room (1922).

Art and Poetry After the war, Cummings settled in New York City's Greenwich Village, studied art in Paris, and published his first book of poetry, Tulips and Chimneys (1923). In New York City, he continued his experiments with free verse and painted in the Cubist style. In 1925, two more volumes of his verse were published, and Cummings received a $2,000 award from Dial magazine. In 1928 the Provincetown Playhouse produced a Cummings play called Him, which ran for 27 performances. Most critics hated it, but audience response was more favorable.

Applause at Last Cummings continued to publish his poetry throughout the 1930s and 1940s. His Collected Poems (1938) received generally good reviews but sold poorly. He had won a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1933, but it was not until the 1950s that he received more recognition, winning the Harriet Monroe Prize in 1950, another Guggenheim Fellowship in 1951, and the Bollingen Prize in Poetry in 1958. He also began to read his poetry to enthusiastic audiences, and in 1952–1953 he lectured at Harvard. Biographer Richard S. Kennedy summed up Cummings's work by writing "What he produced will long amuse, titillate, thrill, provoke, or enthrall his readers."

Literature Online

Author Search For more about E. E. Cummings, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

somewhere i have . . . / anyone lived in a pretty how town

Literary Elements
- Rhythm (SE pp. 705, 707, 708)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 706)

Reading Skills
- Analyze Style (SE pp. 705–708)

Vocabulary Skills
- Analogies (SE p. 708; TE p. 706)
- Multiple Meanings (TE p. 705)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Character Sketch (SE p. 708)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

Do you think it is possible to convey emotions accurately through language? Discuss this question in a small group.

Build Background

Cummings's unusual arrangement of words, punctuation, and capitalization were his way of expressing his individuality and encouraging readers to look at the world in a new way.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

Cummings was influenced by Imagist ideas, but he soon developed his own unique style, which to a great extent depended on visual images. As you read, ask yourself, How does Cummings use visual images in his poems?

Literary Element Rhythm

Rhythm is the arrangement of stressed and unstressed syllables. Regular rhythm has a predictable pattern, whereas irregular rhythm does not. Although both of these Cummings poems have irregular rhythm, the particular arrangement of stressed and unstressed syllables in the second poem plays an especially important role. As you read, ask yourself, What purpose does rhythm have in these poems?

Reading Strategy Analyze Style

Style refers to the expressive qualities that distinguish an author's work. Such things as word choice, figurative language, and imagery all help determine an author's style. Cummings's instantly recognizable style results in part from his arrangement of words on a page: his sentence patterns, use of parentheses, division of words, and capitalization or lack thereof.

Tip: Ask Questions As you read, note for later discussion any questions you have about Cummings's style.

1. In the first poem, who is being addressed?
2.
3.
4.
5.

Learning Objectives

For pages 704–708

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing rhythm.

Reading: Analyzing style.

Writing: Writing a character sketch.

Vocabulary

render (ren´ dər) v. to reproduce or depict in verbal or artistic form; p. 706 The painting was the artist's attempt to render her emotional response to the tragedy.

apt (apt) adj. likely; having a tendency; p. 707 People's minds are apt to wander from doing homework on sunny days.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In "somewhere i have never travelled,gladly beyond," Cummings describes the experience of love. The speaker describes himself as a fragile flower, which his lover has the power to open or close. In "anyone lived in a pretty how town," Cummings contrasts the harmony in the lives of "anyone" and "noone" with the ignorance and hostility of the "someones" in a small town.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 93–98.

Vocabulary

Multiple Meanings Point out that words on this vocabulary list have more than one meaning:

- Render can also mean "to cause or make" and "to give or do."
- Apt can mean "exactly right for a particular purpose or situation" or "able to learn or understand quickly."

Ask students to explain the words' meanings in the following sentences.

1. The award rendered Tyler speechless, but he finally managed to render thanks. (made; give)
2. Marla is a very apt pupil. "Excellent" is an apt description of her work. (able to learn quickly; exactly right for the particular purpose)

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced Provide students with two-column charts. In the rows of the left column, record the following elements of style: unusual word choice; imagery; figures of speech such as similes, metaphors, or personification; and sounds. As they read the poems, have students record two examples of each style element in the corresponding rows in the right column. Then have students use detailed sentences to share aloud the entries in their charts.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Style Answer: You always open me petal by petal, as Spring opens her first rose with a skillful, mysterious touch.

APPROACHING Remind students having difficulty to examine and revise capitalization, word order, word form, and spelling. Tell students that they may also add or delete words as necessary. Suggest that students work with partners to rewrite the sentence in several different ways.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 100.

Big Idea 2

New Poetics Answer: Images of opening and closing recur. The images are connected in their reference to the beloved's ability to open or close the speaker's heart.

View the Art ★

In this 20th-century oil painting, Konstantine Rodko (1908–1995) contrasts the deep colors of the room with the brilliant white of the beach. The wide-open doors invite the viewer into the bright, seemingly limitless world outside. Ask: How does the artist use light, color, shape, or space to make the scene outside the door inviting? (Possible answer: The artist uses warm colors and open space to suggest that the painting extends beyond itself.)

Open Door on the Beach. Konstantine Rodko. Private collection. ★

somewhere i have never travelled, gladly beyond

E. E. Cummings

somewhere i have never travelled,gladly beyond any experience, your eyes have their silence:
in your most frail gesture are things which enclose me, or which i cannot touch because they are too near your slightest look easily will unclose me though i have closed myself as fingers, you open always petal by petal myself as Spring opens (touching skilfully,mysteriously) her first rose or if your wish be to close me,i and my life will shut very beautifully,suddenly, as when the heart of this flower imagines

the snow carefully everywhere descending;

nothing which we are to perceive in this world equals the power of your intense fragility:whose texture compels me with the colour of its countries, rendering death and forever with each breathing

(i do not know what it is about you that closes and opens;only something in me understands the voice of your eyes is deeper than all roses)
nobody,not even the rain,has such small hands

Analyze Style Cummings purposefully plays with sentence structure. How would you untangle the syntax in these lines? 1

New Poetics What images recur in this poem? How are these images connected? 2

Vocabulary

render (ren´ dər) v. to reproduce or depict in verbal or artistic form

Vocabulary Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Analogies Remind students that analogies show relationships between ideas or things. Some analogies are based on antonyms or on synonyms.

Write the following on the board:

render : ____ :: ____ : ____

apt : ____ :: ____ : ____

Have students use words from this poem to complete the second half of each analogy. (Possible answers: render : reproduce :: careful : cautious; apt : likely :: little : small) Then have students explain how Cummings uses analogies in his writing to explore what is familiar and unfamiliar.

anyone lived in a pretty how town

E. E. Cummings

anyone lived in a pretty how town
(with up so floating many bells down)
spring summer autumn winter
he sang his didn't he danced his did.

Women and men(both little and small) cared for anyone not at all they sowed their isn't they reaped their same sun moon stars rain

children guessed(but only a few and down they forgot as up they grew autumn winter spring summer) that noone loved him more by more when by now and tree by leaf she laughed his joy she cried his grief bird by snow and stir by still anyone's any was all to her someones married their everyones laughed their cryings and did their dance (sleep wake hope and then)they said their nevers they slept their dream

stars rain sun moon
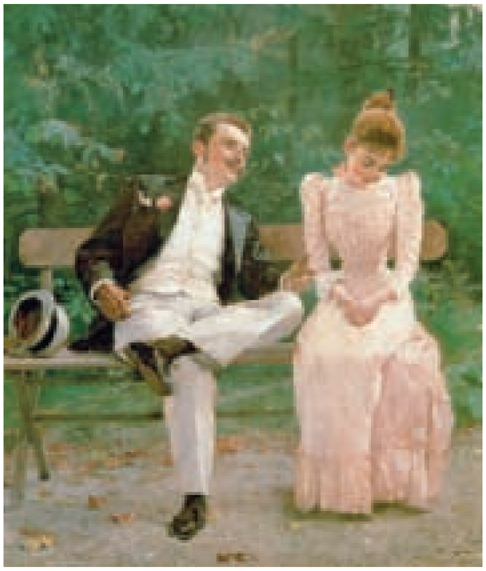
(and only the snow can begin to explain how children are apt to forget to remember
with up so floating many bells down)



Jealousy, 1892. Tihamer Margitay. National Gallery, Budapest, Hungary.

one day anyone died i guess
(and noone stooped to kiss his face) busy folk buried them side by side little by little and was by was all by all and deep by deep and more by more they dream their sleep noone and anyone earth by april wish by spirit and if by yes.

Women and men(both dong and ding) summer autumn winter spring reaped their sowing and went their came sun moon stars rain

3 Analyze Style Cummings uses familiar words in unfamiliar ways. What effect does this stylistic element have on your understanding of the poem?

4 Rhythm What effect does the rhythm have on the overall tone of the poem?

Vocabulary

apt (apt) adj. likely; having a tendency

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Analyze Style Answer: It forces the reader to notice the poet's emphasis on the ordinariness of most people's lives.

Ask: Do you think "anyone" and "noone" are actual people or literally anyone or no one? (Answers will vary.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Read the first few stanzas aloud. Clarify the meaning of the words, line by line, for students less proficient in English.

Literary Element 4

Rhythm Answer: Students may say that the singsong rhythm emphasizes the ordinariness of the lives being described, or the natural cycle of life.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 102.

Progress Check

Can students analyze rhythm?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 101.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Literary Criticism A number of writers have analyzed the meaning of "anyone lived in a pretty how town." Have pairs of advanced students identify and research the analyses of two writers, using texts or reputable Internet sites. Have each student pair paraphrase or summarize the information, and then present their findings to the class. Have the class discuss this information.

After You Read

Assess

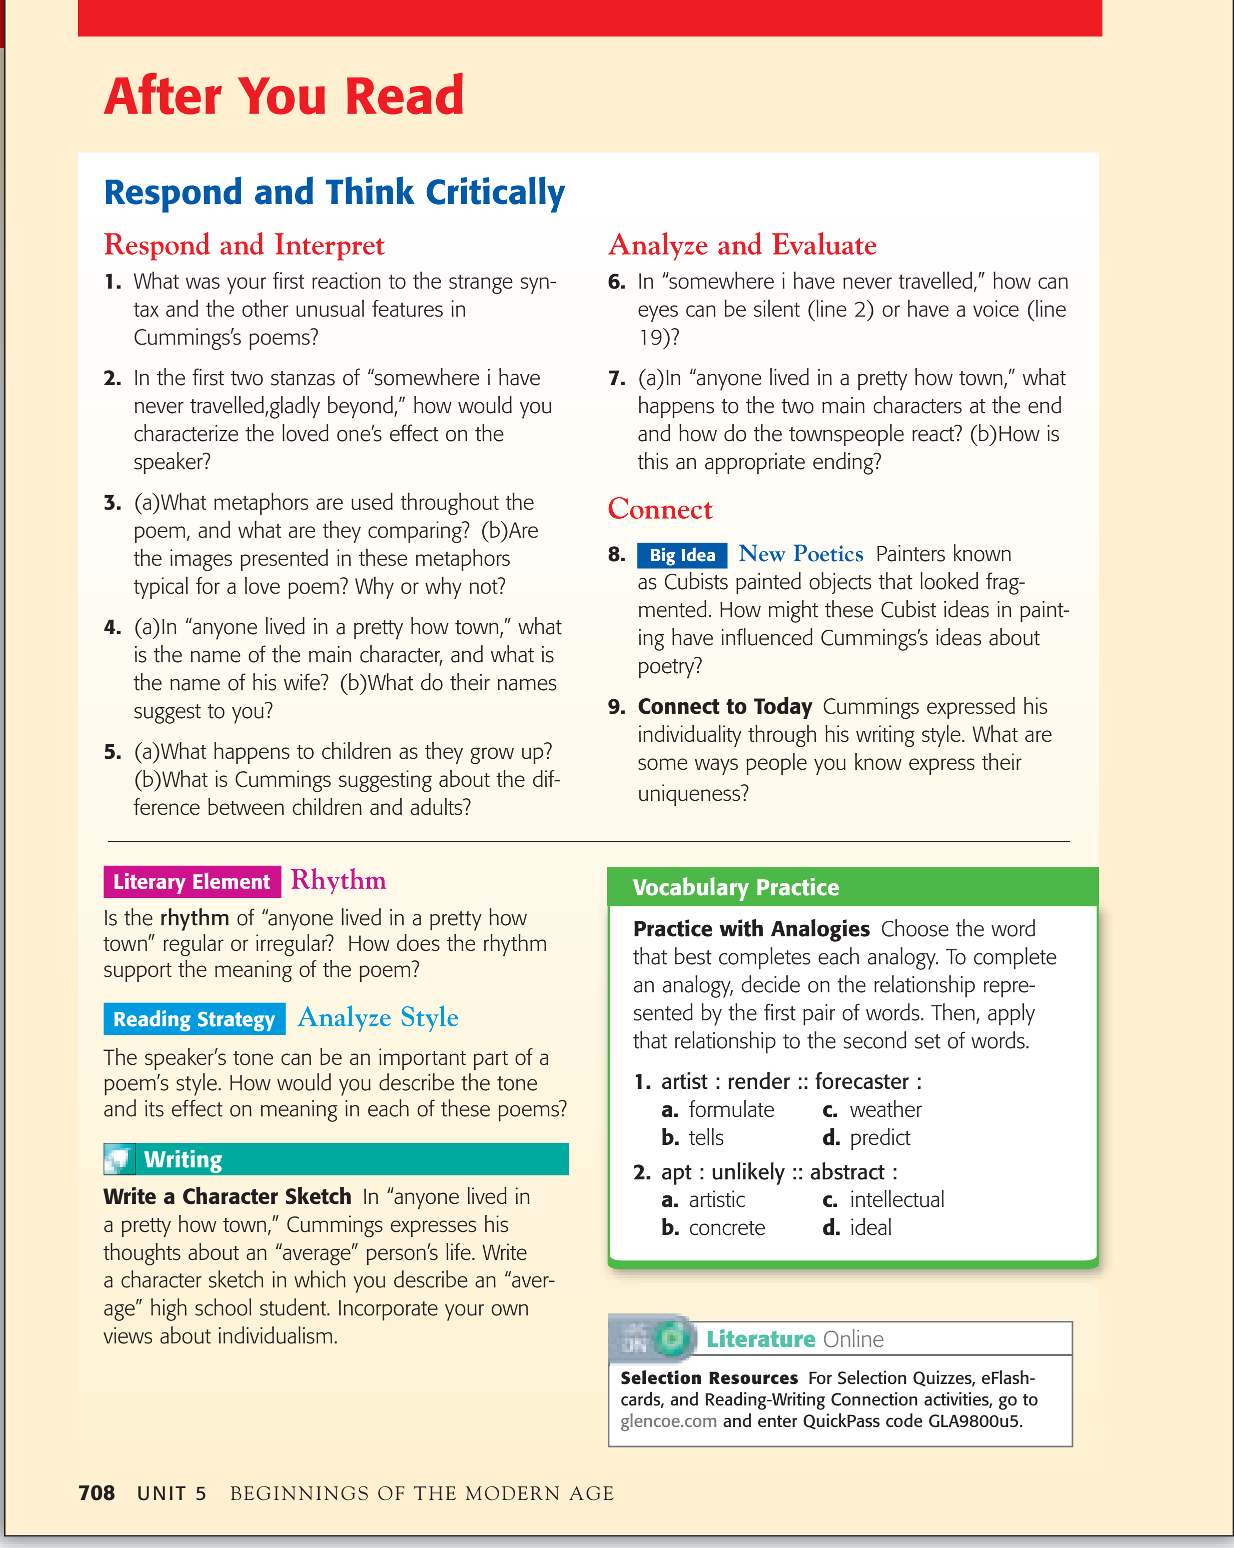
1. Answers will vary.
2. The speaker is deeply affected by a "frail gesture" and a "slightest look."
3. (a) The speaker's heart is compared to a flower, and his beloved is compared to the weather. (b) Possible answer: Yes, love poems often contain images of flowers.
4. (a) The main character is "anyone"; his wife is "noone". (b) They suggest both anonymity and universality.
5. (a) They forget that "noone" loved "anyone." (b) Children are more observant and less conformist than adults.
6. Eyes can "speak," or convey a message, or be "silent."
7. (a) "Anyone" dies and "noone" follows. The townspeople seem indifferent. (b) Appropriate because of their anonymity
8. His poems look fragmented. Images and words are arranged in unconventional ways.
9. Students might suggest that how people dress or the activities in which they participate reveal individualism.

Vocabulary

1. d
2. b

Writing

Students' sketches should integrate personal beliefs with specific details and description to create a realistic character.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What was your first reaction to the strange syntax and the other unusual features in Cummings's poems?
2. In the first two stanzas of "somewhere i have never travelled,gladly beyond," how would you characterize the loved one's effect on the speaker?
3. (a)What metaphors are used throughout the poem, and what are they comparing? (b)Are the images presented in these metaphors typical for a love poem? Why or why not?
4. (a)In "anyone lived in a pretty how town," what is the name of the main character, and what is the name of his wife? (b)What do their names suggest to you?
5. (a)What happens to children as they grow up? (b)What is Cummings suggesting about the difference between children and adults?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. In "somewhere i have never travelled," how can eyes can be silent (line 2) or have a voice (line 19)?
7. (a)In "anyone lived in a pretty how town," what happens to the two main characters at the end and how do the townspeople react? (b)How is this an appropriate ending?

Connect

8. Big Idea New Poetics Painters known as Cubists painted objects that looked fragmented. How might these Cubist ideas in painting have influenced Cummings's ideas about poetry?
9. Connect to Today Cummings expressed his individuality through his writing style. What are some ways people you know express their uniqueness?

Literary Element Rhythm

Is the rhythm of "anyone lived in a pretty how town" regular or irregular? How does the rhythm support the meaning of the poem?

Reading Strategy Analyze Style

The speaker's tone can be an important part of a poem's style. How would you describe the tone and its effect on meaning in each of these poems?

Writing

Write a Character Sketch In "anyone lived in a pretty how town," Cummings expresses his thoughts about an "average" person's life. Write a character sketch in which you describe an "average" high school student. Incorporate your own views about individualism.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Analogies Choose the word that best completes each analogy. To complete an analogy, decide on the relationship represented by the first pair of words. Then, apply that relationship to the second set of words.

1. artist : render :: forecaster :
   - a. formulate
   - b. tells
   - c. weather
   - d. predict
2. apt : unlikely :: abstract :
   - a. artistic
   - b. concrete
   - c. intellectual
   - d. ideal

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Literary Element

The rhythm is irregular: each line of the poem has four stresses, but the numbers of unstressed syllables differ. Students may say that the singsong rhythm reflects the ordinariness of the lives being described, or the natural cycle of life.

Reading Strategy

The tone of "somewhere I have never travelled,gladly beyond" is tender and vulnerable. The poem "anyone lived in a pretty how town" alternates between a positive and a negative tone, depending upon whether the poet is talking about "anyone" and "noone" or the "Women and men."

Before You Read

Chicago and Grass

Meet Carl Sandburg

(1878–1967)

Although influenced by Ezra Pound and the Imagists, Carl Sandburg sought to reach a wider audience—and he did. From the 1916 publication of Chicago Poems until his death, he was one of America's most popular and successful poets.

Carl Sandburg collected material for his poetry from his broad and varied life experience. Besides being a poet and biographer, he worked as a milk-truck driver, bricklayer, and traveling salesman.

Sandburg grew up in Galesburg, Illinois, the son of Swedish immigrants. He quit school after eighth grade and took odd jobs to help support his family. When he was nineteen, he set out to explore the United States, joining the many hoboes of the period who hitched rides on freight trains. Later he fought in the Spanish-American War, attended college, and then moved to Chicago. There he became a journalist, learning to write clearly and protesting social and racial injustices. He also began to contribute poems to Poetry magazine.

Literary Giant In the early twentieth century, Chicago was a vibrant place for a poet to live. It was home not only to the influential Poetry magazine, founded in 1912 by Harriet Monroe, but also to notable writers such as Sherwood Anderson, Theodore Dreiser, Vachel Lindsay, and Edgar Lee Masters. In 1914 Poetry magazine published six of Sandburg's poems, and with the publication of Chicago Poems two years later, Sandburg emerged as one of Chicago's literary giants. Dubbed "the Bard of the Midwest," he soon wrote three more volumes of poetry that established his national reputation: Cornhuskers (1918), Smoke and Steel (1920), and Slabs of the Sunburnt West (1922).

> "Time is the coin of your life. It is the only coin you have, and only you can determine how it will be spent. Be careful lest you let other people spend it for you."
>
> —Carl Sandburg

Critics, however, were divided over Sandburg's poetic merits. Supporters praised his original subject matter and voice, while detractors criticized his free-verse technique and focus on social issues.

The People's Poet A great admirer of Walt Whitman, Sandburg might be considered Whitman's successor in his enthusiasm for the common people. Sandburg's poems, like Whitman's, are noted for their use of the rhythms of everyday speech and for their democratic subjects and themes. They also include colorful use of sayings and anecdotes.

An extremely popular performer, Sandburg frequently traveled throughout the United States, lecturing on the lives of Whitman and Abraham Lincoln, reading his poems aloud, and singing folk songs while playing the guitar. Sandburg won the Pulitzer Prize for his biography of Lincoln in 1940 and for his Complete Poems in 1951. He continued to write throughout his final years.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Carl Sandburg, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 64

Or display several images of a bustling industrial city. Ask: If this city were a living being, what adjectives or phrases could you use to describe it? Encourage students to look for vivid images and adjectives in Carl Sandburg's poem describing Chicago.

Selection Skills

Chicago and Grass

Literary Elements
- Apostrophe (SE pp. 710, 713; TE p. 711)

Vocabulary Skills
- Denotation and Connotation (SE pp. 710, 713)
- Adjectives (TE p. 710)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Poem (SE p. 713)

Reading Skills
- Make Inferences About Theme (SE pp. 710, 711, 713)
- Recognize Author's Purpose (TE p. 712)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 712)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In “Chicago,” Carl Sandburg sings the praises of the vigorous city of Chicago and of its people. In “Grass,” Sandburg uses muted understatement to convey the terrible cost and meaninglessness of war.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 104–109.

Vocabulary

Adjectives Write the word husky in the center of a word web on the board. Ask students to fill the radiating circles with items that they might describe as husky, such as football players, bears, and so on. Encourage students to move beyond stereotypical associations to unusual associations. Repeat the activity with the word wanton.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

Are there situations or events in life that should never be forgotten? Are there things that are better forgotten? Discuss these questions with a partner.

Build Background

In 1896 Chicago’s waterways and railroads united the nation, linking the wealth of the East with the agriculture of the West, Midwest, and South. But the city’s rapid industrial growth also brought many labor disputes, including riots and a strike by railroad workers. During his years as a Chicago journalist, Sandburg saw firsthand the struggles and triumphs of the growing city.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

As you read, ask yourself, How does Sandburg break new ground in these poems?

Literary Element Apostrophe

Apostrophe is a figure of speech in which a writer directly addresses an inanimate object, an idea, or an absent person. For example, in “Chicago,” the speaker says to the city, “they tell me you are crooked.” As you read, ask yourself, What are other examples of apostrophe in Sandburg’s poems?

Reading Strategy Make Inferences About Theme

The theme is the central message of a work of literature. The theme of a poem is often implied rather than stated directly. You can infer the theme by analyzing elements such as diction, imagery, and figurative language. As you read, look for evidence in the poem that suggests the theme.

Tip: Take Notes Use a diagram to record direct statements, images, and examples of figurative language that support a theme in these poems.

Direct Statements
Images
Figurative Language
Theme

Learning Objectives

For pages 709–713

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing apostrophe.

Reading: Making inferences about theme.

Writing: Writing a poem.

Vocabulary

husky (hus´ kē) adj. strong; burly; p. 711 He has a short, husky build.

wanton (wont´ ən) adj. resulting from extreme cruelty or neglect; p. 711 The house is in a state of wanton disrepair.

sneer (snēr) v. to smile or laugh scornfully or critically; p. 711 The bully did nothing but sneer at the other children.

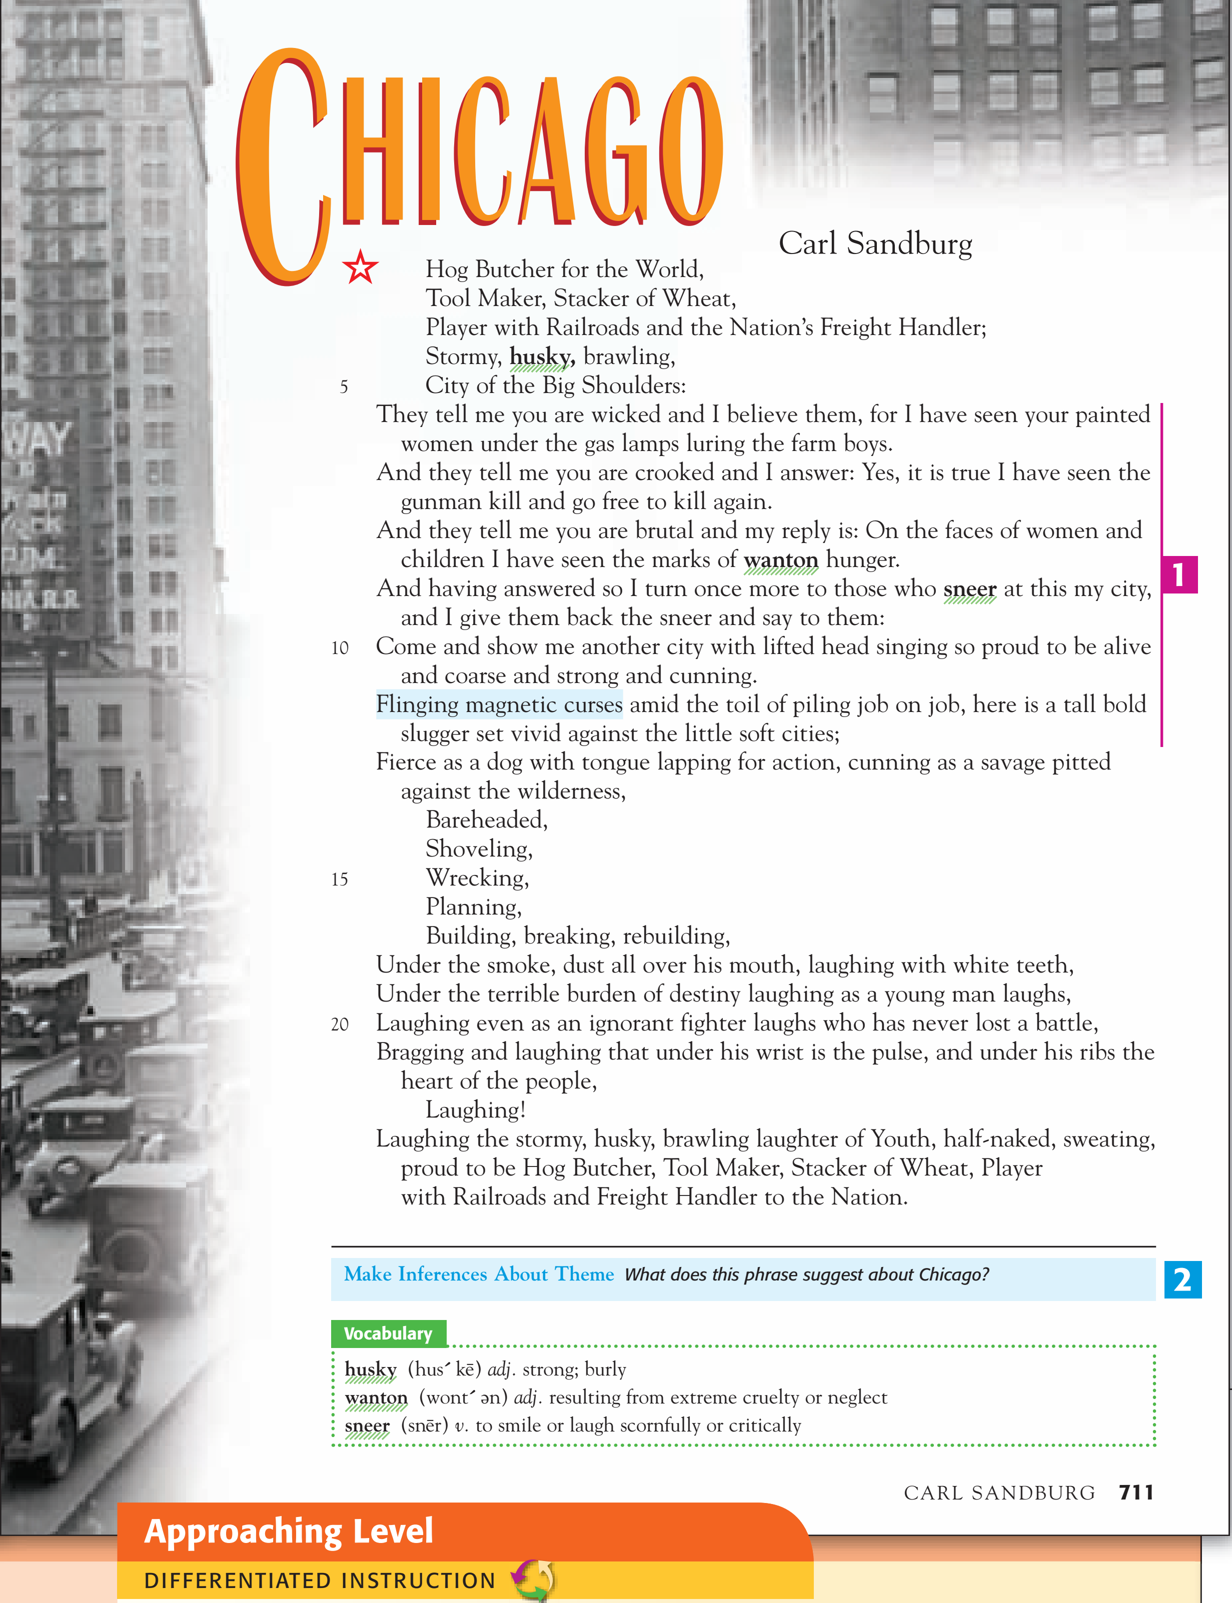
Tip: Denotation and Connotation Some words that have the same dictionary definition can have different cultural definitions. For example, husky and strong have similar meanings, but husky has a stronger connotation.

Speaking Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW

Epithets Read the first five lines of “Chicago” aloud. Have students respond to the meaning and images. Explain that Sandburg begins “Chicago” with a series of epithets, or short descriptive phrases that characterize a person or place. Sandburg uses these epithets to emphasize traits that he thinks are special to Chicago. Have students write a similar series of epithets about their town or city or another place they know. Invite them to share their epithets orally with the class and explain how these phrases express the special qualities of the places.



CHICAGO

Carl Sandburg

☆ Hog Butcher for the World,
Tool Maker, Stacker of Wheat,
Player with Railroads and the Nation's Freight Handler;
Stormy, husky, brawling,
City of the Big Shoulders:
They tell me you are wicked and I believe them, for I have seen your painted women under the gas lamps luring the farm boys.
And they tell me you are crooked and I answer: Yes, it is true I have seen the gunman kill and go free to kill again.
And they tell me you are brutal and my reply is: On the faces of women and children I have seen the marks of wanton hunger.
And having answered so I turn once more to those who sneer at this my city, and I give them back the sneer and say to them:
Come and show me another city with lifted head singing so proud to be alive and coarse and strong and cunning.
Flinging magnetic curses amid the toil of piling job on job, here is a tall bold slugger set vivid against the little soft cities;
Fierce as a dog with tongue lapping for action, cunning as a savage pitted against the wilderness,
Bareheaded,
Shoveling,
Wrecking,
Planning,
Building, breaking, rebuilding,
Under the smoke, dust all over his mouth, laughing with white teeth,
Under the terrible burden of destiny laughing as a young man laughs,
Laughing even as an ignorant fighter laughs who has never lost a battle,
Bragging and laughing that under his wrist is the pulse, and under his ribs the heart of the people, Laughing!
Laughing the stormy, husky, brawling laughter of Youth, half-naked, sweating, proud to be Hog Butcher, Tool Maker, Stacker of Wheat, Player with Railroads and Freight Handler to the Nation.

1

Make Inferences About Theme What does this phrase suggest about Chicago?

2

Vocabulary

husky (hus′ kē) adj.	strong; burly
wanton (wont′ ən) adj.	resulting from extreme cruelty or neglect
sneer (snēr) v.	to smile or laugh scornfully or critically

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Make sure that students understand that Sandburg describes what other people say about Chicago, and he acknowledges some truth in these claims. Then he goes on to describe the city in a positive way through action and sensory language. To help students analyze what Sandburg says about Chicago, have them work in pairs to identify the words and phrases that characterize the city. Remind them to look for verbs, such as sneer, and nouns, such as curses, as well as adjectives. When students have completed their lists, have them reread the lists to see how the words help focus a central idea, or theme.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Apostrophe Read the bracketed passage aloud. Ask: In which lines does the speaker directly address the city? (lines 6–8) Whom does the speaker say he is addressing in line 10? (those who sneer at the city) What do lines 10–11 reveal about the speaker's attitude toward the city? (that the speaker admires the city) How do readers come to feel about Chicago? (Readers may come to admire the city too.)

Reading Strategy 2

Make Inferences About Theme Answer: It suggests that Chicago is a noisy, energetic city.

APPROACHING Write the words noisy and energetic in the center of an idea web on the board. Have students fill the radiating circles with words, phrases, or images from the poem that suggest noise and energy.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 111.

Cultural History ☆

Chicago's Stockyards During the 19th and 20th centuries, Chicago was an important meat-packing center. Supported by nine railroads and several of Chicago's leading meat packers, Union Stock Yards opened on Christmas Day, 1865. Not until August 1971 did all meat-processing activities cease at that location.

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Answer: The speaker is bitter that the sacrifices made by the dead soldiers are so quickly obscured and forgotten.

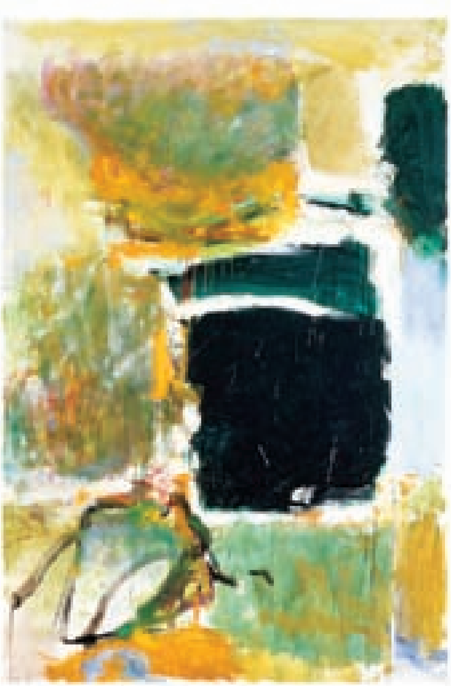
APPROACHING Remind students having difficulty that speakers reveal attitude through word choice. Write the following phrases on the board: "pile the bodies," "shovel them under," "pile them high." Ask: How do these phrases make you feel? (sad, bitter, angry) Why don't the passengers on the train recognize the graveyards? (They have forgotten about the soldiers and their sacrifices. The places no longer look like graveyards.)

View the Art ★

Joan Mitchell (1926–1992) used vivid colors on huge canvases. Her work presents highly stylized images of landscapes, many of which, like The Sky Is Blue, the Grass Is Green, include large blocks of color. Ask: What elements of this painting can you relate to the poem "Grass"? (The green and yellow-green blocks represent the grass, and the black block represents death.)

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 113.



The Sky Is Blue, the Grass Is Green, 1972. Joan Mitchell. Oil on canvas. Musee National d'Art Moderne, Centre Georges Pompidou, Paris. ★

Grass

Carl Sandburg

Pile the bodies high at Austerlitz and Waterloo.[1]
Shovel them under and let me work—
I am the grass; I cover all.

And pile them high at Gettysburg[2]
And pile them high at Ypres and Verdun.[3]

Shovel them under and let me work.
Two years, ten years, and passengers ask the conductor:
What place is this?
Where are we now?

I am the grass.
Let me work.

---

[1] Austerlitz and Waterloo refer to battle sites in Moravia (part of the present-day Czech Republic) and Belgium during the Napoleonic Wars in the early 1800s.

[2] Gettysburg refers to a battlefield in southern Pennsylvania where Union and Confederate forces fought a horrific battle in 1863 during the Civil War.

[3] Ypres and Verdun refer to battle sites in Belgium and northern France where well over a million soldiers were slain in World War I.

New Poetics How would you describe the speaker's attitude toward the dead? 1

Reading Practice

SMALL GROUP

Recognize Author's Purpose

Tell students that a poem's speaker may provide clues to an attitude or feeling that the poet wants readers to share. Have students explore these questions in small groups:

- Who is the speaker? (grass)
- What is shocking about the speaker's statements? (The statements "shovel them under" and "pile them high" show a disregard for human life.)
- How does the poet want readers to feel about war? (He wants readers to feel the waste and horror of war.)

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which images in these poems impress you the most? Explain.

Chicago

2. (a)What names does the speaker give Chicago in lines 1–5? (b)What do these names reveal?
3. (a)List positive adjectives the speaker uses to describe Chicago. (b)What do these words reveal about the city's inhabitants?

Analyze and Evaluate

4. How well does Sandburg's diction, or word choice, help create a vivid image of the city? Explain.

Grass

Recall and Interpret

5. (a)Who is the speaker in this poem? (b)What does the speaker want to do?
6. Why does the speaker mention famous battle sites from different wars?

Analyze and Evaluate

7. (a)Why does the speaker describe passengers on a train in lines 7–9? (b)How well does this image support the view of war presented?

Connect

8. Big Idea New Poetics Ezra Pound stated that modern poets should "Make it new!" What do you find new about Sandburg's poems?
9. Connect to the Author Sandburg once wrote that his goal as a poet was "to sing, blab, chortle, yodel, like people." Do you think he succeeded? Explain. Use examples from the text as support.

Literary Element Apostrophe

Poets often use apostrophe either to achieve a formal tone or to convey a sense of emotional immediacy.

1. In which lines in "Chicago" does the speaker address the city as "you"?
2. What effects do you think Sandburg's overall use of apostrophe creates? Explain.

Reading Strategy Make Inferences About Theme

On the basis of the evidence you listed in your diagram on page 710, how would you state the theme of "Chicago"?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Denotation and Connotation Denotation is the dictionary meaning of a word. Connotation is the implied, or cultural, meaning. For example, criticize and condemn have a similar denotation, "to disapprove," but very different connotations:

Negative	More Negative
criticize	condemn

Choose the word in each pair of synonyms below that that has the more negative connotation.

1. husky	beefy
2. wanton	abused
3. sneer	smirk

Writing

Write a Poem Using "Chicago" as a model, write a poem defending your own city, town, or neighborhood. Incorporate apostrophe in your poem.

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) Hog Butcher for the World; Tool Maker; Stacker of Wheat; Player with Railroads; Nation's Freight Handler; City of the Big Shoulders (b) The city is a commercial and industrial center.
3. (a) Proud; strong; tall; bold (b) They suggest that the people are energetic and vibrant and that the speaker admires them.
4. His choice of nouns and adjectives with powerful connotations helps create a vivid image of the city.
5. (a) The grass (b) It wants to cover the bodies from battlefields so that in the future people will have to ask what the places are.
6. The poet may want to emphasize that wars are recurrent.
7. (a) They are travelers who have forgotten the battles. (b) It supports the view that wars are forgotten and new wars are fought.
8. Students may say that Sandburg uses common, "unpoetic" language and images and irregular rhythms.
9. Students may say that Sandburg achieves his goal by varying his tone and word choice.

Reading Strategy

Answers will vary but students may say that celebrating the greatness of the city of Chicago is the theme of the poem.

Progress Check

Can students analyze apostrophe?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 110.

Literary Element

1. Lines 6–8
2. It creates a paradoxical effect: it entices the reader to share the speaker's feelings while distancing the reader with its artificiality.

Writing

Students' poems should incorporate different views of the city and use specific, vivid details.

Vocabulary

1. beefy
2. abused
3. sneer

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 44
Daily Language Practice
Transparency 65

Or display images of several types of walls, large and small, made of different materials. Tell students that in "Mending Wall," Robert Frost says, "Good fences make good neighbors." Ask students to explain whether they agree or disagree with this idea.

Literary History ☆

John F. Kennedy's Inauguration

President John F. Kennedy asked Robert Frost to read a poem at his inauguration on January 20, 1961. Frost, age 87, frail, and blinded by the strong sunlight that day, was unable to read the poem he had written for the occasion. Instead, he recited from memory his poem "The Gift Outright."

Before You Read

Robert Frost's Poetry

Meet Robert Frost
(1874–1963)

Robert Frost was one of the most honored poets of the twentieth century. A four-time winner of the Pulitzer Prize for Poetry, Frost received special recognition from Congress in 1960. The following January, at age eighty-six, he had the honor of reciting his poem "The Gift Outright" at President John F. Kennedy's inauguration.

☆ Although closely associated with New England, Frost spent his first eleven years in San Francisco. After his father died in 1885, his mother moved Frost and his sister to the gritty industrial city of Lawrence, Massachusetts. She taught school and wrote poetry, introducing Frost to the work of the English Romantic writers, the New England Transcendentalists, and the poets of her native Scotland. Frost graduated from high school and went off to Dartmouth College, but he left the school after less than a year.

Farming and Teaching Frost married Elinor White in 1895. (They had been co-valedictorians of their high school class.) They had six children, two of whom died young. Frost supported his family by farming and teaching school. At age twenty-six, Frost moved his family to a farm near Derry, New Hampshire. There, between farm chores, Frost wrote poems describing the region's often harsh conditions and the experiences of his fellow New Englanders. In 1912, unable to get his poems published in the United States, he sold his farm and moved his family to England.

Success and Enduring Acclaim In London, Frost became acquainted with Ezra Pound and other Modernist poets. He was able to publish his first volume of poetry, A Boy's Will, in 1913, and North of Boston soon after. Praised by poet Amy Lowell in a review, North of Boston was soon published in the United States and sold well. By the time Frost returned to New England in 1915, at the start of the First World War, he was well on the road to fame. Prominent publishers backed his work, and prestigious universities sought him to teach.

> "[A poem] begins in delight and ends in wisdom . . . in a clarification of life—not necessarily a great clarification, . . . but in a momentary stay against confusion."
>
> —Robert Frost

Frost's later years were filled with accolades. He received more awards than any other twentieth-century poet and was chosen as poetry consultant to the Library of Congress. By the time of his death, his poetry had deeply embedded itself in the American imagination, and it continues to live there today.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Robert Frost, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

Mending Wall/Birches/ Stopping by . . . / Acquainted . . .

Literary Elements
- Blank Verse (SE pp. 715, 717, 718, 720)
- Rhyme Scheme (SE pp. 722, 724)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Dialogue (SE p. 722)
- List (SE p. 724)

Vocabulary Skills
- Synonyms (SE pp. 715, 720; TE p. 718)
- Academic Vocabulary (SE pp. 722, 724)
- Concrete and Abstract Nouns (TE p. 715)

Listening/Speaking/ Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 716; TE pp. 718, 721, 723)
- Choral Reading (TE p. 718)

Reading Skills
- Compare and Contrast Speakers (SE pp. 715, 717, 719–724)
- Group Response (TE p. 716)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

How would you describe the sights, smells, and sounds of where you live? Write a descriptive journal entry about your neighborhood, city, or region. Include concrete and sensory details to evoke a strong sense of place.

Build Background

From 1900 to 1909, Frost tried to earn a living on a small family farm he had bought in Derry, New Hampshire. Although Frost loved the outdoors, he did not enjoy farm life. Three years before leaving for England, Frost abandoned farming and resumed his teaching career. Despite his lack of success as a farmer, Frost drew inspiration for many poems from his memories of New England farm life.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea New Poetics

Though Frost uses traditional forms for his poems, he often explores typical themes of modern poetry such as loneliness and isolation. As you read, ask yourself, How do "Mending Wall" and "Birches" reflect these themes?

Literary Element Blank Verse

Blank verse is poetry written in unrhymed iambic pentameter. Each line has a basic pattern of five pairs of syllables, with each pair made up of an unstressed syllable followed by a stressed syllable. As you read, ask yourself, What rhythms does Frost create by using blank verse?

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Speakers

The speaker is the voice of a poem, similar to the narrator in a work of prose. Sometimes the speaker's voice is that of the poet, and sometimes it is that of a fictional person or even a thing. The speaker's words communicate a particular tone, or attitude, toward the subject of a poem. As you read, ask yourself, How can comparing and contrasting the speakers of these poems help reveal the qualities that distinguish each one?

Tip: Use a Venn Diagram As you read, consider how the speakers of "Mending Wall" and "Birches" are similar and different. Use a Venn diagram to record your information.

Learning Objectives

For pages 714–733

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing blank verse.
Analyzing narrative poetry.

Reading:
Comparing and contrasting speakers.
Evaluating characterization.

Writing:
Writing a dialogue.
Writing a list.

Vocabulary

enamel (i nam′ əl) n. a cosmetic or paint that gives a smooth, glossy appearance; p. 718 The pot was covered in a dark blue enamel.

bracken (bra′ kən) n. a type of fern that grows in humid, temperate areas; p. 718 Bracken covered the forest floor in summer.

poise (poiz) n. a state of balance; p. 719 Her grace and poise made us think she must be a dancer.

coax (kōks) v. to persuade gently; p. 726 I tried to coax the cat out of the tree with a catnip toy.

kin (kin) n. relatives, or a group of people with common ancestry; p. 730 Sara had kin from four countries present at her wedding ceremony.

Tip: Synonyms Understanding words that are similar in meaning to an unfamiliar word, or synonyms, can help you learn the new word. Example: Poise and equilibrium are synonyms; they both refer to "a state of balance."

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Advanced Write on the board: "Something there is that doesn't love a wall." Use slash marks and tapping to show students that this line contains ten syllables. Then use slash marks to show students that there are five syllable pairs in the line. Point out that in each syllable pair, there is one unstressed syllable followed by a stressed syllable. Read the line aloud with exaggerated intonation so that students can hear the unstressed and stressed syllables. Invite students to echo your reading of the line several times. Then have pairs of students work together to mark syllables and stresses in the following line: "That sends the frozen-ground-swell under it."

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In "Mending Wall," the speaker discusses his and his neighbor's views of walls and the "something" that doesn't love them. The speaker of "Birches" recalls his happy childhood. On his way home in the evening, the speaker of "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" pauses to observe the beauty of the dark woods, although he must soon continue his journey. The speaker of "Acquainted with the Night" describes his isolation and loneliness, which he seems to accept as part of life.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 115–120.

Vocabulary

Concrete and Abstract Nouns Point out that some nouns name concrete objects while others (abstract nouns) describe states of being or qualities. Ask: Which nouns on this vocabulary list are concrete—can be seen or touched? (enamel, bracken, kin) Which noun is abstract, describing a state of being? (poise) Ask student pairs to generate lists of nouns that describe states of being or qualities. (Possible answers: beauty, happiness, sadness, goodness, honesty)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Blank Verse Remind students that blank verse has five stressed syllables in each line. Read lines 1–4 aloud, exaggerating the stresses so that students can hear the rhythm clearly. Point out that the poem is nevertheless not meant to be read in a singsong manner. Read the passage again, following the punctuation and the natural sentence stresses. Finally, have students echo your reading of each line.

View the Art ★

Answer: The wall resembles the one in the poem because it consists of a variety of boulders—“loaves” and “balls”—and appears to need repairing. It differs from the one in the poem because it includes a fence as well as the stones, making it an even more forbidding obstacle.

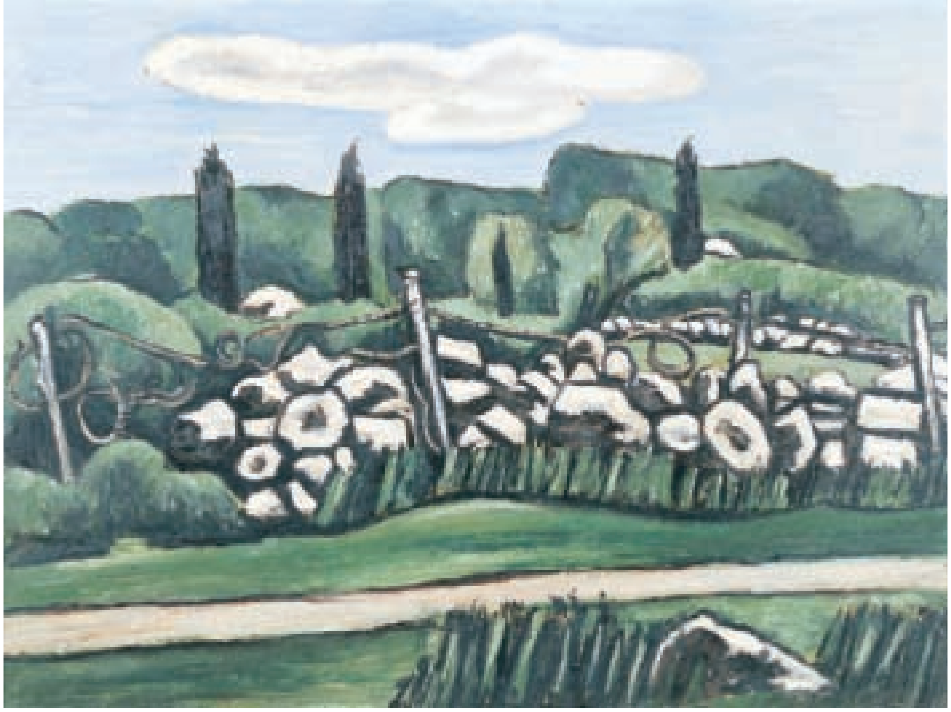
Marsden Hartley (1877–1943) had his first major exhibition in 1909 at a gallery owned by the photographer Alfred Stieglitz. The Dogtown of the painting’s title was an area of glacial boulders and deteriorating stone walls near Gloucester, Massachusetts.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.



The Last Stone Walls, Dogtown, 1936–37. Marsden Hartley. Oil on canvas, 17½ x 23½ in. Yale University Art Gallery, New Haven, CT. Gift of Walter Bareiss, B.A. 1940.

View the Art Attracted to the Transcendentalist ideas of Emerson and Thoreau, Marsden Hartley frequently painted New England landscapes like this one. In what ways might this wall be similar to or different from the one in “Mending Wall”? ★

Mending Wall

Robert Frost

Something there is that doesn’t love a wall,
That sends the frozen-ground-swell under it, 1
And spills the upper boulders in the sun;
And makes gaps even two can pass abreast.
The work of hunters is another thing:
I have come after them and made repair
Where they have left not one stone on a stone,
But they would have the rabbit out of hiding,
To please the yelping dogs. The gaps I mean,

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Group Response Many readers find Frost’s poems accessible because of their concrete language and vivid sensory details. Readers are able to visualize the characters and settings, and sense the moods Frost wishes to create.

Assign small groups to read “Mending Wall” and “Birches.” Before class discussions of the poems, have the groups give brief multimedia presentations about what the language of the poems enables them to visualize and understand. A presentation might combine text, graphics, and sound.

No one has seen them made or heard them made,
But at spring mending-time we find them there.
I let my neighbour know beyond the hill;
And on a day we meet to walk the line
And set the wall between us once again.
We keep the wall between us as we go.
To each the boulders that have fallen to each.
And some are loaves and some so nearly balls
We have to use a spell to make them balance:
'Stay where you are until our backs are turned!'
We wear our fingers rough with handling them.
Oh, just another kind of out-door game,
One on a side. It comes to little more:
There where it is we do not need the wall:
He is all pine and I am apple orchard.
My apple trees will never get across
And eat the cones under his pines, I tell him.
He only says, 'Good fences make good neighbours.'
Spring is the mischief in me, and I wonder
If I could put a notion in his head:
'Why do they make good neighbours? Isn't it
Where there are cows? But here there are no cows.
Before I built a wall I'd ask to know
What I was walling in or walling out,
And to whom I was like to give offence.
Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
That wants it down.' I could say 'Elves' to him,
But it's not elves exactly, and I'd rather
He said it for himself. I see him there
Bringing a stone grasped firmly by the top
In each hand, like an old-stone savage armed.
He moves in darkness as it seems to me,
Not of woods only and the shade of trees.
He will not go behind his father's saying,
And he likes having thought of it so well
He says again, 'Good fences make good neighbours.'

New Poetics What do these lines tell you about the relationship between the two neighbors? 2

Compare and Contrast Speakers What do these lines reveal about the speaker? 3

Blank Verse How does the rhythm of these lines help create a conversational tone? 4

Teach

Big Idea 2

New Poetics Answer: They are on good terms with each other but are not close friends.

Reading Strategy 3

Compare and Contrast Speakers Answer: The speaker does not see the need for a wall.

Ask: Why do you think the speaker's neighbor insists on maintaining the wall? (Some students may say he is doing what has always been done, probably at first to keep animals from straying.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 121.

Literary Element 4

Blank Verse Answer: It reflects the natural rhythm of relaxed, informal speech and makes the words sound like a conversation.

APPROACHING Students may benefit from listening to a recording or a reading of the poem while following along with the text. They will be able to hear how words are pronounced, which words are stressed, and where pauses occur. Afterwards, have them read the poem themselves.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Point that that "Good fences make good neighbors" is an aphorism—a short, pointed sentence expressing a wise or clever observation or general truth about life. This aphorism means that clearly established boundaries help neighbors avoid disputes and thus remain on good terms. Point out to students that this statement comes from the speaker's neighbor. Ask: Does the speaker agree or disagree with this statement? How do you know? (The speaker disagrees with this statement because he points out that nature works to bring down a wall.) Have students work with a partner to write an aphorism that expresses the speaker's philosophy regarding walls. Be sure that students can defend their statements with evidence from the poem.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Blank Verse Answer: swing-, does-, bend, down, stay, ice-, do Point out that Frost follows the rhythmic regularity of the first four lines with the irregular lines 5–11. Ask: What is the purpose of this shift? (The shift underscores a change in subject. The first four lines tell what the speaker imagines; the following lines report facts.)

Vocabulary 2

Synonyms After students read the definition of enamel at the bottom of the page, refer them to the use of the word in line 9. Ask: How does the poet use the word enamel in an unusual way? (He refers to ice metaphorically as enamel, because it coats the tree branches with a shiny brittle surface.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Compare enamel to paint or nail polish. Have students work in pairs to list the similarities between ice and enamel.

View the Photograph ★

Ask: What characteristics of birches are evident in this photograph? (They have whitish bark that breaks or peels. They are generally slender, not massive.)

★

Birches ☆

Robert Frost

When I see birches bend to left and right
Across the lines of straighter darker trees,
I like to think some boy's been swinging them.
But swinging doesn't bend them down to stay
As ice-storms do. Often you must have seen them
Loaded with ice a sunny winter morning
After a rain. They click upon themselves
As the breeze rises, and turn many-colored
As the stir cracks and crazes their enamel.
Soon the sun's warmth makes them shed crystal shells
Shattering and avalanching on the snow-crust—
Such heaps of broken glass to sweep away
You'd think the inner dome of heaven had fallen.
They are dragged to the withered bracken by the load,
And they seem not to break; though once they are bowed
So low for long, they never right themselves:
You may see their trunks arching in the woods
Years afterwards, trailing their leaves on the ground
Like girls on hands and knees that throw their hair

1 Blank Verse Which syllables are stressed in this sentence?

Vocabulary 2

enamel (i nam′ əl) n.	a cosmetic or paint that gives a smooth, glossy appearance
bracken (bra′ kən) n.	a type of fern that grows in humid, temperate areas

Listening and Speaking Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Choral Reading A choral reading provides a different way of experiencing a literary work. A "reading choir" can consist of many readers reading in unison, or it can be divided into high, medium, and low voices or into duets, trios, or quartets of balanced voices.

Organize students in groups and assign a part of "Birches" to each group. Have each group choose a director and separate its part into lines to be spoken by one or two individuals and lines to be spoken by the entire group. After students rehearse, have the groups present their choral readings.

Before them over their heads to dry in the sun.
But I was going to say when Truth broke in
With all her matter-of-fact about the ice-storm
I should prefer to have some boy bend them
As he went out and in to fetch the cows—
Some boy too far from town to learn baseball,
Whose only play was what he found himself,
Summer or winter, and could play alone.
One by one he subdued[1] his father's trees
By riding them down over and over again
Until he took the stiffness out of them,
And not one but hung limp, not one was left
For him to conquer. He learned all there was
To learn about not launching out too soon
And so not carrying the tree away
Clear to the ground. He always kept his poise
To the top branches, climbing carefully
With the same pains you use to fill a cup
Up to the brim, and even above the brim.
Then he flung outward, feet first, with a swish,
Kicking his way down through the air to the ground.
So was I once myself a swinger of birches.
And so I dream of going back to be.
It's when I'm weary of considerations,
And life is too much like a pathless wood
Where your face burns and tickles with the cobwebs
Broken across it, and one eye is weeping
From a twig's having lashed across it open.
I'd like to get away from earth awhile
And then come back to it and begin over.
May no fate willfully misunderstand me
And half grant what I wish and snatch me away
Not to return. Earth's the right place for love:
I don't know where it's likely to go better.
I'd like to go by climbing a birch tree,
And climb black branches up a snow-white trunk
Toward heaven, till the tree could bear no more,
But dipped its top and set me down again.
That would be good both going and coming back.
One could do worse than be a swinger of birches.

---

[1] Subdued means "brought under control" or "conquered."

3 New Poetics Why does the poet include these details about the boy?

Compare and Contrast Speakers What does the speaker admire about the boy who swings on birches? 4

Vocabulary

poise (poiz) n. a state of balance

Teach

Big Idea 3

New Poetics Answer: Some students may say that the poet includes these details because they remind him of his own rural childhood.

Reading Strategy 4

Compare and Contrast Speakers Answer: He admires the boy's grace, poise, and care.

Cultural History ☆

Birch Trees The white birch described in this poem is the state tree of New Hampshire, where Frost lived and farmed as a young man. The tree's chalky white bark can be peeled away in thin layers. At one time it was used as paper and, by Native Americans, to make canoes. For these reasons, the white birch is also known as the paper birch and the canoe birch.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Established Have student pairs write a summary of the events in one of the two poems. Then have each student add a connection between the poem and a personal experience. Provide a sentence starter like this: The farmers mending the wall remind me of ______.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Layers of Meaning Many of Frost's poems can be interpreted on more than one level. Mending a wall and climbing birch trees may be literal activities, but they also function as metaphors. Have students reread one poem to identify multiple levels of meaning. Then have students sketch stone walls or groves of birch trees, writing possible meanings of the poem on stones or tree trunks. Be sure that students support their interpretations with references to the texts.

After You Read

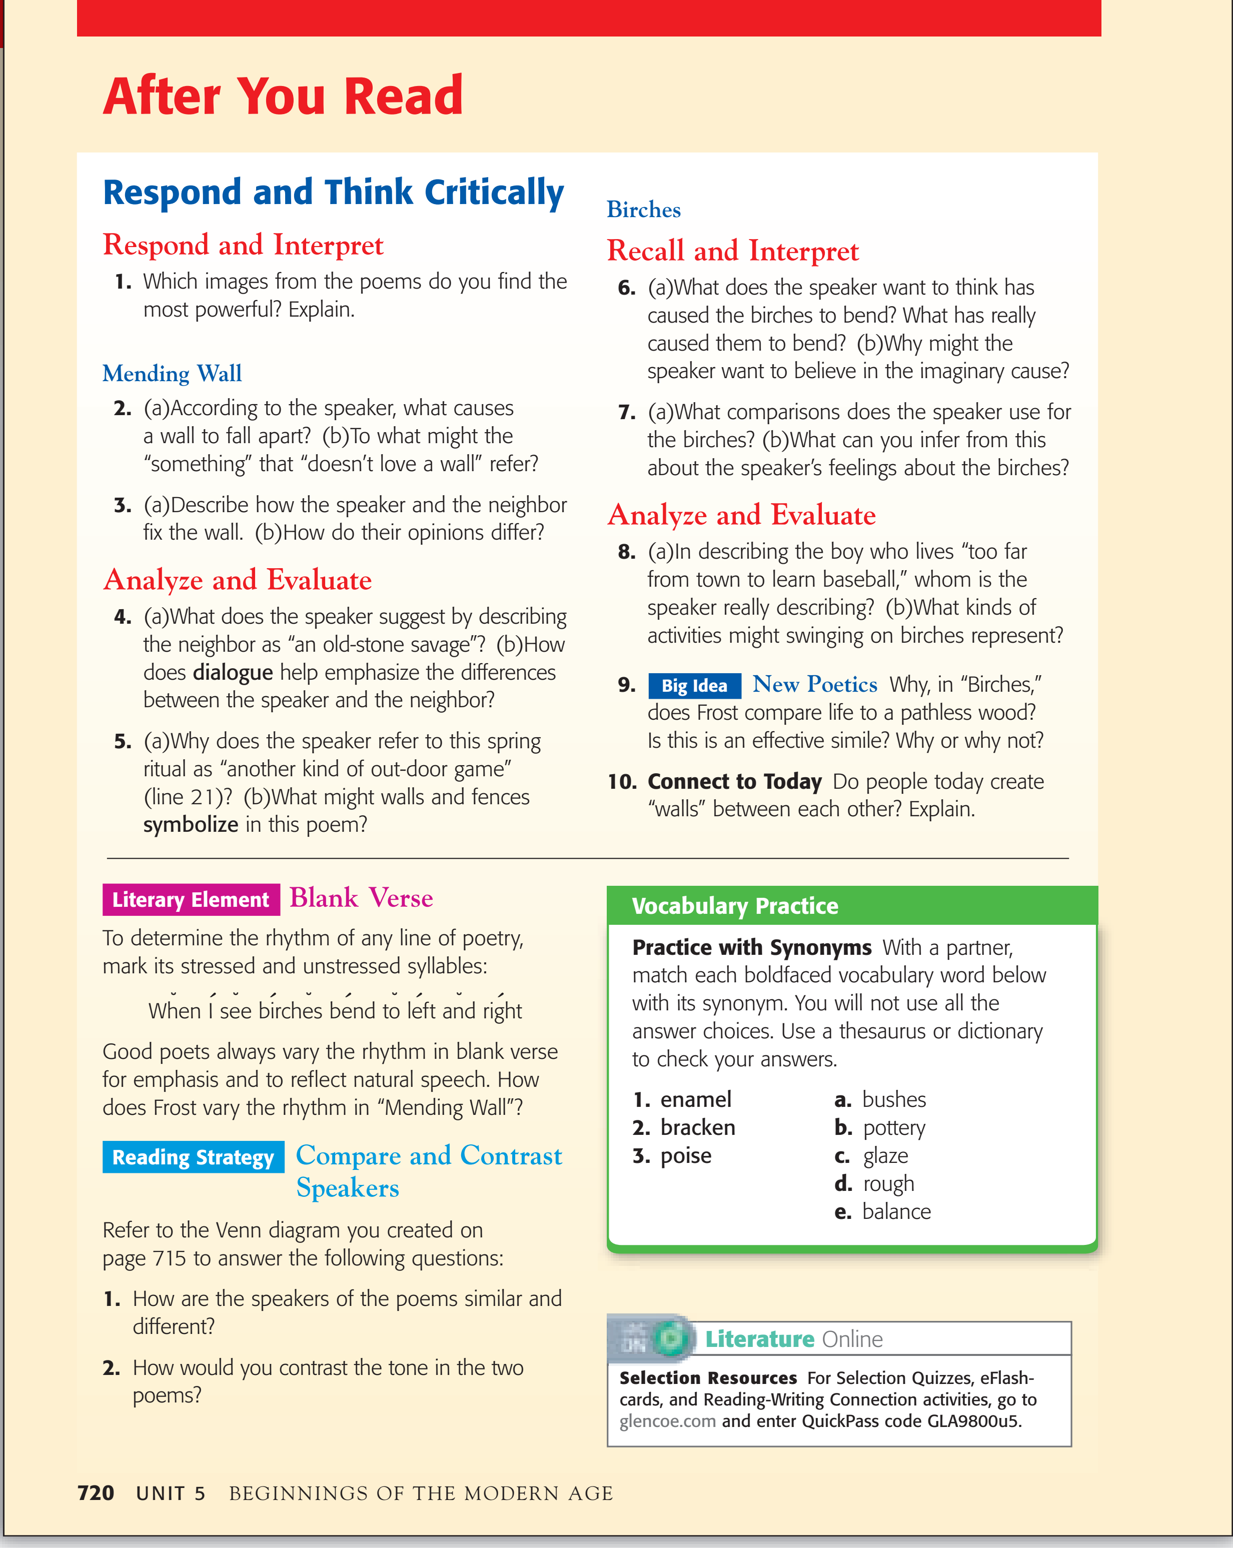
Assess

1. Students should give reasons for their choices.
2. (a) "Something" that doesn't like walls (b) It might refer to a force of nature.
3. (a) Each replaces stones that have fallen on his side. (b) The speaker thinks the wall is unnecessary; the neighbor thinks walls make good neighbors.
4. (a) The neighbor refuses to change. (b) The speaker's lines reveals mischief, logic, imagination. The neighbor's line suggests he is rigid.
5. (a) He does not take the job seriously. (b) Barriers between people
6. (a) He wants to think that boys caused them to bend. The cause was ice storms. (b) He may be nostalgic.
7. (a) He compares the trunks and leaves to girls who throw their hair over their head to dry. (b) He sees them as beautiful, living things.
8. (a) Himself (b) Taking chances; mastering problems
9. Students may say that the simile is apt as life offers many paths but no assurance of where they will lead.
10. Students may say that technology such as e-mail and text messaging prevent people from talking face-to-face and getting beyond superficial conversations.

Progress Check

Can students analyze blank verse?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 121.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which images from the poems do you find the most powerful? Explain.

Mending Wall

2. (a)According to the speaker, what causes a wall to fall apart? (b)To what might the "something" that "doesn't love a wall" refer?
3. (a)Describe how the speaker and the neighbor fix the wall. (b)How do their opinions differ?

Analyze and Evaluate

4. (a)What does the speaker suggest by describing the neighbor as "an old-stone savage"? (b)How does dialogue help emphasize the differences between the speaker and the neighbor?
5. (a)Why does the speaker refer to this spring ritual as "another kind of out-door game" (line 21)? (b)What might walls and fences symbolize in this poem?

Birches

Recall and Interpret

6. (a)What does the speaker want to think has caused the birches to bend? What has really caused them to bend? (b)Why might the speaker want to believe in the imaginary cause?
7. (a)What comparisons does the speaker use for the birches? (b)What can you infer from this about the speaker's feelings about the birches?

Analyze and Evaluate

8. (a)In describing the boy who lives "too far from town to learn baseball," whom is the speaker really describing? (b)What kinds of activities might swinging on birches represent?
9. Big Idea New Poetics Why, in "Birches," does Frost compare life to a pathless wood? Is this is an effective simile? Why or why not?
10. Connect to Today Do people today create "walls" between each other? Explain.

Literary Element Blank Verse

To determine the rhythm of any line of poetry, mark its stressed and unstressed syllables:

˘ ´ ˘ ´ ˘ ´ ˘ ´ ˘ ´
When I see birches bend to left and right

Good poets always vary the rhythm in blank verse for emphasis and to reflect natural speech. How does Frost vary the rhythm in "Mending Wall"?

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Speakers

Refer to the Venn diagram you created on page 715 to answer the following questions:

1. How are the speakers of the poems similar and different?
2. How would you contrast the tone in the two poems?

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Synonyms With a partner, match each boldfaced vocabulary word below with its synonym. You will not use all the answer choices. Use a thesaurus or dictionary to check your answers.

1. enamel	a. bushes
2. bracken	b. pottery
3. poise	c. glaze
	d. rough
	e. balance

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

720 UNIT 5 BEGINNINGS OF THE MODERN AGE

Literary Element

Frost imitates the rhythm of natural speech. He sometimes starts a line with a stressed syllable, and sometimes with an unstressed syllable.

Vocabulary

1. c 2. a 3. e

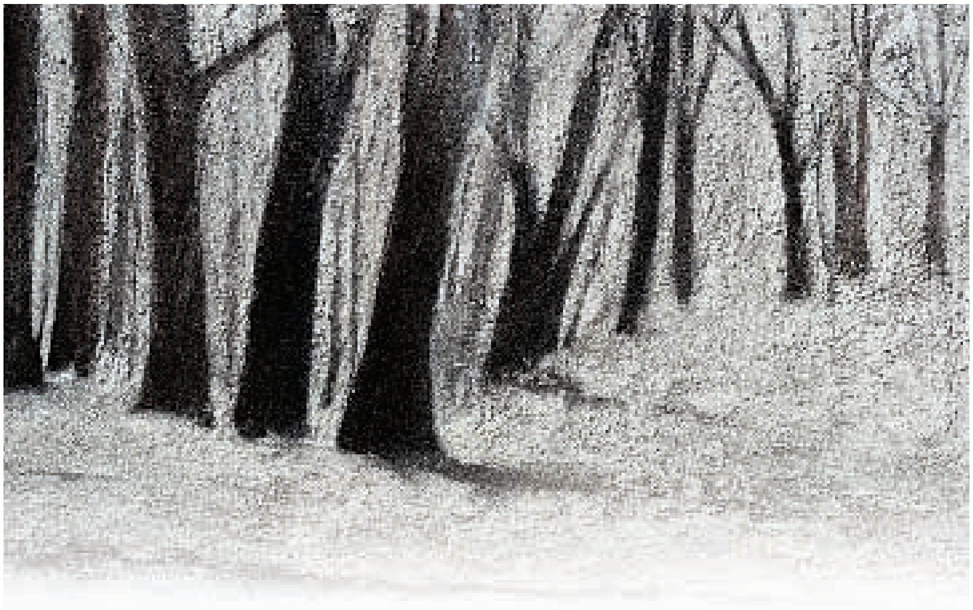
Reading Strategy

1. Both are farmers. The speaker of "Mending Wall" has a sense of humor; the speaker of "Birches" is nostalgic.
2. The tone of "Mending Wall" is lighthearted; that of "Birches" is thoughtful.



Winter Forest, 1991. Gerrit Greve. ★

Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening

Robert Frost

Whose woods these are I think I know.
His house is in the village though;
He will not see me stopping here
To watch his woods fill up with snow.

My little horse must think it queer
To stop without a farmhouse near
Between the woods and frozen lake
The darkest evening of the year.

He gives his harness bells a shake
To ask if there is some mistake.
The only other sound's the sweep
Of easy wind and downy flake.

The woods are lovely, dark and deep.
But I have promises to keep,
And miles to go before I sleep,
And miles to go before I sleep.

Compare and Contrast Speakers What might "sleep" mean to the speaker? 1

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Compare and Contrast Speakers Answer: "Sleep" might refer to the speaker's death.

Ask: What conflicting feelings does the speaker reveal in the last stanza of the poem? (He would like to stay and look at the woods, but he also feels he must meet his obligations.)

APPROACHING Ask: What does the speaker want to do? (stay in the woods and watch the snow fall) What does the speaker have to do? (keep a promise by traveling miles before bed time)

View the Art ★

This image captures the poem's setting of dim, snowy woods. Ask: How might a scene like this tempt a visitor to stay? (Its mystery and peacefulness draw the visitor in, tempting him or her to walk deep into the woods.)

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 125–134.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Students may be confused by the syntax in the first line. Explain that whose is not a question word as they may expect. For clarity, have them read the sentence in normal word order, starting with the words "I think . . . ." (I think I know whose woods these are.)

Intermediate Show students how to mark the rhyme scheme of the poem. For example, aaba, bbcb, ccdc, dddd. Additionally, point out that Frost uses repetition in the final two lines. Read the poem aloud for students. Then have students echo your reading of line groupings, using the punctuation as a guide to determine units of meaning. Ask: What do you think is the effect of the sounds in this poem?

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) The owner lives in the village, so he will not see the speaker stop to view the woods. (b) The speaker may think that the owner would consider his actions foolish.
3. (a) The horse must find it odd to stop away from a farmhouse. (b) The horse's instinct is for food and shelter; the speaker wants to pause and enjoy his surroundings.
4. (a) Lovely, dark, and deep (b) Mystery and calm
5. The setting of dark woods and "frozen lake" on a winter evening adds to a sense of isolation.
6. (a) The speaker has obligations to fulfill. (b) When one reads line 15, one interprets it literally—the speaker has miles to travel to get home. The repetition of the line prompts one to extend the interpretation—perhaps the speaker is referring to what he must do before his death.
7. Life's mystery and the isolation of the individual
8. He seems familiar with the surroundings described in the poem.

Academic Vocabulary

Design

Definition: the arrangement of elements or details in a product or work of art

Synonyms: plan, outline, motif, blueprint

Antonyms: disorganization, randomness

Sentence: The design for the proposed memorial was impressive, but expensive.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which lines from the poem did you find most powerful or meaningful? Explain.
2. (a)Where does the owner of the woods live, and what will he not see? (b)Why might the speaker care that the owner will not see this?
3. (a)According to the speaker, what must the horse think? (b)How might the horse's instincts differ from those of the speaker?
4. (a)What adjectives describe the woods in line 13? (b)What mood do these words create?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. How does the setting of the poem contribute to its meaning?
6. (a)Why does the speaker not embrace the peaceful escape offered by the woods? (b)How does the repetition in the final lines affect their meaning?

Connect

7. Big Idea New Poetics What themes of modern poetry does "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" reflect?
8. Connect to the Author Frost often used his own experiences and observations in his poems. What evidence of that do you see in "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening"?

Literary Element Rhyme Scheme

"Mending Wall" and "Birches" are written in blank verse, but "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" has end rhymes and a rhyme scheme.

1. What is the rhyme scheme in stanzas 1–3? What is the effect of repeating a sound from each stanza in the one that follows it?
2. How does the change in rhyme scheme in the last stanza reinforce the meaning of the poem?

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Speakers

The speaker in "Stopping by Woods" is different from the speaker in "Mending Wall." How would you describe this difference? Support your response with specific examples from the poems.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Academic Vocabulary

The design of "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" enhances the poem's meaning.

Design is an academic word. More familiar words that are similar in meaning are plan, outline, diagram, and blueprint.

To study this word further, fill out the graphic organizer below.

definition	synonyms
antonyms	sentence/image

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Writing

Write a Dialogue Imagine that the narrator and the owner of the woods cross paths. What would they say to each other? Write a dialogue in which you convey their respective attitudes toward the woods, and toward life. Use your interpretation of the poem's theme or themes to guide you.

Literary Element

1. The rhyme scheme is aaba bbcb ccdc. The effect is to tie the stanzas together and lead to the final stanza, which expresses the poem's theme.
2. The four rhymed lines of the last stanza signal that it sums up the poem's meaning.

Reading Strategy

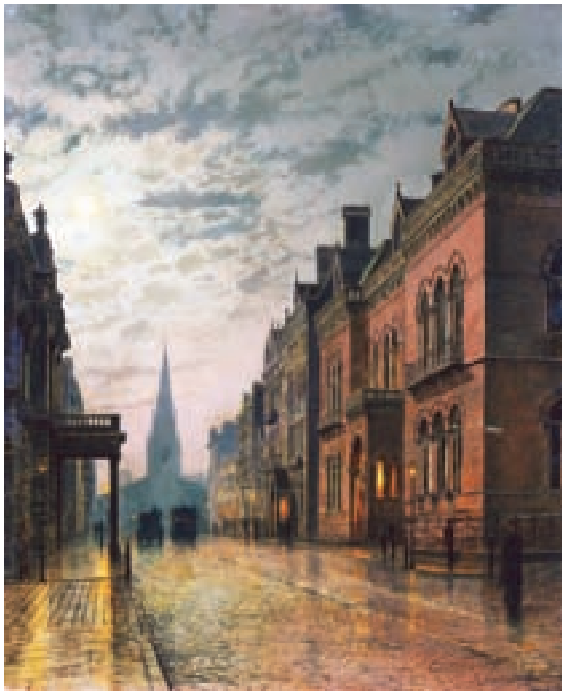
The speaker in "Mending Wall" has a light-hearted attitude toward life whereas the speaker in "Stopping by Woods" is more serious and weary.

Writing

Students' dialogues should include two characters with differing views and an interpretation of the poem.

Acquainted with the Night

Robert Frost



Park Row, Leeds, England, 1882. John Atkinson Grimshaw. Oil on canvas. Private collection. ★

I have been one acquainted with the night.
I have walked out in rain—and back in rain.
I have outwalked the furthest city light.

I have looked down the saddest city lane.
I have passed by the watchman on his beat
And dropped my eyes, unwilling to explain.

I have stood still and stopped the sound of feet
When far away an interrupted cry
Came over houses from another street, 1

But not to call me back or say good-bye;
And further still at an unearthly height,
One luminary[1] clock against the sky

Proclaimed[2] the time was neither wrong nor right.
I have been one acquainted with the night.

---

[1] Luminary means "giving light."
[2] Proclaimed means "declared publicly."

Compare and Contrast Speakers What does this line tell you about the speaker's mood? 2

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Compare and Contrast Speakers Ask: What is the speaker doing in lines 7–10? (stopping to listen to a cry in the distance—a cry not addressed to the speaker) What does this imply about the speaker's situation in life? (The speaker is alone.)

Reading Strategy 2

Compare and Contrast Speakers Answer: The speaker feels isolated, outside of time.

APPROACHING Write the following on the board: not to call me back, good-bye, unearthly, luminary clock, night. Ask: How do these words and phrases make you feel? (lonely, disconnected from reality)

View the Art ★

John Atkinson Grimshaw (1836–1893) was a self-taught artist undeterred by his parents' strong disapproval of his desire to paint. Ask: What is the mood of the painting, and how does Grimshaw achieve this mood? (Grimshaw contrasts warm colors with cool colors and uses light and shadow to create an ominous mood.)

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 135–144.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Remind students that the speaker in a poem is the "voice" that talks to readers. The speaker is not necessarily the writer. Ask students to work in small groups to characterize the speaker in this poem, referring to specific lines from the poem to support their ideas. Ask: What do you know about the speaker from what is stated directly? (The speaker has walked alone at night before.) What can you infer from what is not stated? (Students may infer that the speaker walks alone to clear his or her mind.) Have a student from each group share the group's findings with the class.

After You Read

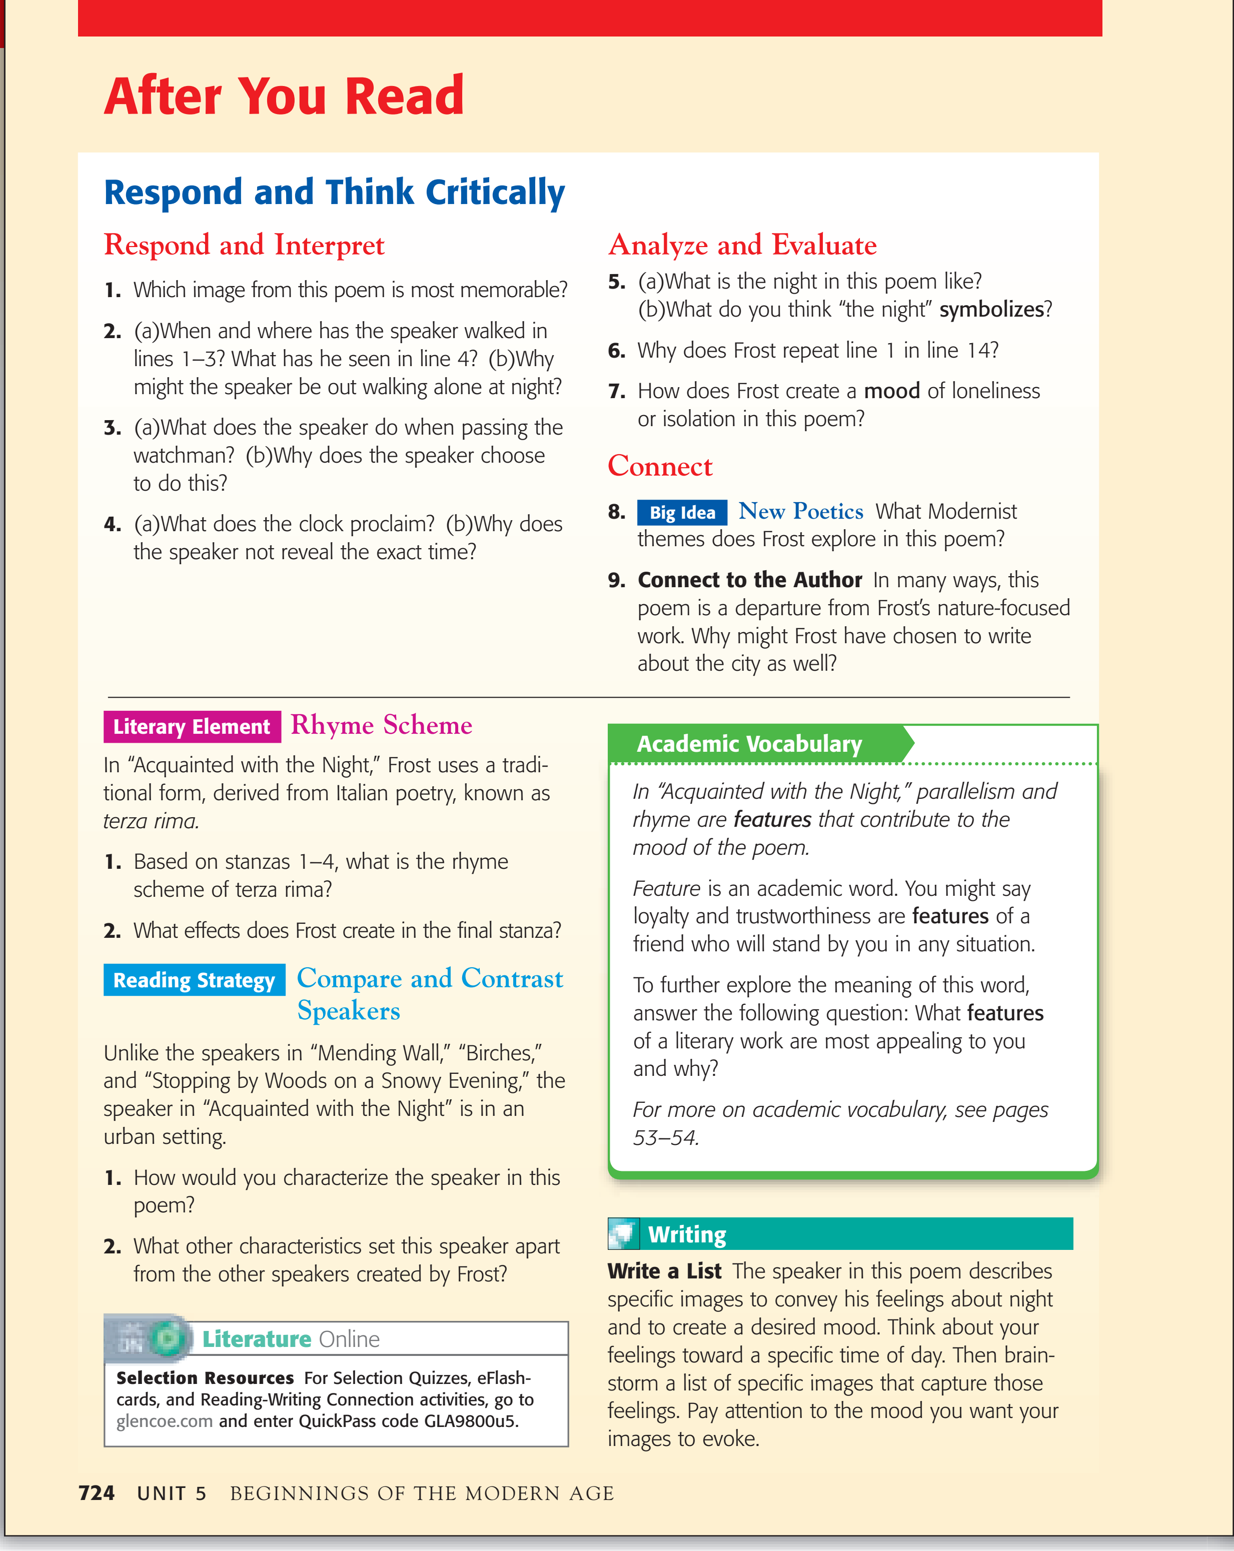
Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) The speaker has walked at night, in the rain, to the edge of the city. In line 4, he says he has seen "the saddest city lane." (b) Students may suggest that he has something on his mind and cannot sleep.
3. (a) Drops his eyes (b) Perhaps he doesn't want to have to explain why he is out alone at night.
4. (a) That the time is neither right nor wrong (b) The time doesn't matter; it will not change the speaker's circumstances.
5. (a) Empty and depressing (b) It might symbolize loneliness or despair.
6. He wants to emphasize the speaker's isolation and loneliness.
7. The images of darkness, sad city lanes, and a distant cry that no one but the speaker seems to notice create a mood of loneliness and isolation.
8. Frost explores the theme of the isolation and the loneliness of the individual.
9. Students may say Frost was contrasting his work on nature by writing a poem about city life.

Academic Vocabulary

Round characterizations and witty dialogue are the most appealing features in a literary work to me.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 207–208.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which image from this poem is most memorable?
2. (a)When and where has the speaker walked in lines 1–3? What has he seen in line 4? (b)Why might the speaker be out walking alone at night?
3. (a)What does the speaker do when passing the watchman? (b)Why does the speaker choose to do this?
4. (a)What does the clock proclaim? (b)Why does the speaker not reveal the exact time?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)What is the night in this poem like? (b)What do you think "the night" symbolizes?
6. Why does Frost repeat line 1 in line 14?
7. How does Frost create a mood of loneliness or isolation in this poem?

Connect

8. Big Idea New Poetics What Modernist themes does Frost explore in this poem?
9. Connect to the Author In many ways, this poem is a departure from Frost's nature-focused work. Why might Frost have chosen to write about the city as well?

Literary Element Rhyme Scheme

In "Acquainted with the Night," Frost uses a traditional form, derived from Italian poetry, known as terza rima.

1. Based on stanzas 1–4, what is the rhyme scheme of terza rima?
2. What effects does Frost create in the final stanza?

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Speakers

Unlike the speakers in "Mending Wall," "Birches," and "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening," the speaker in "Acquainted with the Night" is in an urban setting.

1. How would you characterize the speaker in this poem?
2. What other characteristics set this speaker apart from the other speakers created by Frost?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Academic Vocabulary

In "Acquainted with the Night," parallelism and rhyme are features that contribute to the mood of the poem.

Feature is an academic word. You might say loyalty and trustworthiness are features of a friend who will stand by you in any situation.

To further explore the meaning of this word, answer the following question: What features of a literary work are most appealing to you and why?

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Writing

Write a List The speaker in this poem describes specific images to convey his feelings about night and to create a desired mood. Think about your feelings toward a specific time of day. Then brainstorm a list of specific images that capture those feelings. Pay attention to the mood you want your images to evoke.

Literary Element

1. It is aba bcb cdc dad.
2. The final stanza's two lines rhyme with (and the second one repeats) the first line of the poem. This gives the poem a circular structure.

Reading Strategy

1. He is lonely and avoids human contact.
2. He is self-absorbed.

Writing

Students' lists should reveal a particular time of the day and include strong, specific images.

Literary Element Narrative Poetry

A narrative poem tells a story. Like fictional prose, narrative poems often include story elements such as dialogue, description, characterization, plot, and conflict. Narrative poems also contain poetic elements such as line breaks, stanzas, and rhyme. As you read, ask yourself, Why does Frost tell this story in verse form?

Reading Strategy Evaluate Characterization

Characterization is the techniques a writer uses to develop the personality of a character. In direct characterization, the narrator makes explicit statements about a character. In indirect characterization, the writer reveals a character through his or her words and actions and through those of other characters. As you read, ask yourself, What details does Frost use to convey the hired man's personality?

The Death of the Hired Man

Robert Frost

Mary sat musing[1] on the lamp-flame at the table
Waiting for Warren. When she heard his step,
She ran on tip-toe down the darkened passage
To meet him in the doorway with the news
And put him on his guard. "Silas is back."
She pushed him outward with her through the door
And shut it after her. "Be kind," she said.
She took the market things from Warren's arms
And set them on the porch, then drew him down
To sit beside her on the wooden steps.
"When was I ever anything but kind to him?
But I'll not have the fellow back," he said.
"I told him so last haying, didn't I?
If he left then, I said, that ended it.

---

[1] Musing means "meditating" or "pondering."

Narrative Poetry What does this line of dialogue suggest about Mary's values? 1

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Silas, an elderly man, has returned to the farm of Warren and Mary, who have hired him in the past. Warren is concerned because Silas has often been lured away by other employers when Warren most needs his help. He is not convinced that they should take Silas in. Mary is concerned about preserving Silas's dignity. She argues that Silas is sick and weak, has no place to go, and considers their farm his home.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 145–150.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Narrative Poetry Answer: It suggests that Mary is a kind person and believes people should be kind to one another. Ask: What do Mary's actions say about how she expects Warren to react to the news of Silas's return? (Mary pushes Warren out the door because she expects Warren to react badly to this news.)

Selection Skills

The Death of the Hired Man

Literary Elements
- Narrative Poetry (SE pp. 725, 729, 733; TE p. 726)
- Blank Verse (SE p. 733)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Biographical Narrative (SE p. 734)
- Misplaced Modifiers (SE p. 734)
- Build Background (TE p. 726)
- Analyze a Poem (TE p. 730)

Reading Skills
- Evaluate Characterization (SE pp. 725–727, 731, 733; TE pp. 728, 730)
- Analyze Persuasion (TE p. 728)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Usage (SE p. 733)
- Meaning in Context (TE pp. 727, 731)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 730; TE p. 726)
- Group Activity (SE p. 732)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Narrative Poetry Call students' attention to the single and double quotation marks in lines 15–30. Ask: Why is the poem punctuated like this? (The double quotation marks indicate that Warren is speaking. The single quotation marks enclose words that he is quoting from previous conversations.)

APPROACHING Have students mark the double and single quotation marks with sticky notes, then read the lines aloud with their partners. One student should read the lines within double quotation marks, and the other student the lines within single quotation marks.

Reading Strategy 2

Evaluate Characterization
Answer: Silas leaves during haying time, when he is needed most, and then comes back in winter, when the haying is done.

View the Photograph ★

Ask: How does this photograph relate to the poem? (It shows an elderly man who could represent the character Silas.) How would you describe the man in this photo? (He looks sad and alone.)

Meade Family (detail), 1941.
Jack Delano. Silver gelatin print. ★

What good is he? Who else will harbor[2] him
At his age for the little he can do?
What help he is there's no depending on.
Off he goes always when I need him most.
He thinks he ought to earn a little pay,
Enough at least to buy tobacco with,
So he won't have to beg and be beholden.[3]
'All right,' I say, 'I can't afford to pay Any fixed wages, though I wish I could.' 1
'Someone else can.' 'Then someone else will have to.'
I shouldn't mind his bettering himself
If that was what it was. You can be certain,
When he begins like that, there's someone at him
Trying to coax him off with pocket-money,—
In haying time, when any help is scarce.
In winter he comes back to us. I'm done."

---

[2] Harbor means "to give shelter or protection to."
[3] Beholden means "obligated" or "indebted."

Evaluate Characterization What are Warren's reasons for not wanting Silas back? 2

Vocabulary

coax (kōks) v. to persuade gently

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW

Build Background Say: This narrative poem tells the story of an elderly man who returns to his former employer's farm because he has nowhere else to go. The farmer and his wife disagree about taking the man in.

Have students write brief essays responding to these questions: How are the elderly in our society treated? What should happen to elderly people who cannot care for themselves? After students read the poem, have them compare their essays with Warren's and Mary's arguments about Silas.

"Sh! not so loud: he'll hear you," Mary said.

"I want him to: he'll have to soon or late."

"He's worn out. He's asleep beside the stove.
When I came up from Rowe's I found him here,
Huddled against the barn-door fast asleep,
A miserable sight, and frightening, too—
You needn't smile—I didn't recognize him—
I wasn't looking for him—and he's changed.
Wait till you see."

"Where did you say he'd been?"

"He didn't say. I dragged him to the house,
And gave him tea and tried to make him smoke.
I tried to make him talk about his travels.
Nothing would do: he just kept nodding off."
"What did he say? Did he say anything?"

"But little."

"Anything? Mary, confess
He said he'd come to ditch[4] the meadow for me."

"Warren!" 3

"But did he? I just want to know."

"Of course he did. What would you have him say?
Surely you wouldn't grudge the poor old man
Some humble way to save his self-respect.
He added, if you really care to know,
He meant to clear the upper pasture, too. 4
That sounds like something you have heard before?
Warren, I wish you could have heard the way
He jumbled everything. I stopped to look
Two or three times—he made me feel so queer[5]—
To see if he was talking in his sleep.
He ran on[6] Harold Wilson—you remember—

---

[4] Here, ditch means "to dig long, narrow channels." These channels, or ditches, are often used for drainage or irrigation.

[5] Queer means "odd" or "strange."

[6] Ran on means "talked continuously about."

Evaluate Characterization What is happening to Silas? 5

Teach

Literary Element 3

Narrative Poetry Ask: What emotion does Mary convey when she exclaims "Warren!" in line 49? (Possible answers: surprise; anger; reproof; warning; disappointment)

Vocabulary 4

Meaning in Context In line 55, Mary uses the verb clear. This word can refer to various farm activities, including the removal of trees, shrubs, and weeds or of the remains of harvested crops. In this case, it most likely refers to the removal of the rocks common in New England soil.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Have students write the word clear in the center of a word web and write the multiple meanings of it in the radiating circles, referring to a dictionary as necessary. Then help students determine the correct meaning for the word in line 55.

Reading Strategy 5

Evaluate Characterization Answer: Students may say that he is suffering from mental confusion associated with old age.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Musical Interpretation Musical students will find it interesting to analyze this poem in terms of musical moods. Have students find music to accompany excerpts of "The Death of the Hired Man." Encourage them to define and illustrate through music such elements as mood, tone, characters' thoughts and feelings, and plot. Then have them prepare multimedia presentations, combining text with sound, to explain their musical choices to the class.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Characterization

Read the bracketed passage aloud. Ask: What does Silas's concern about the past say about his state of mind? (Students may say that his fixation on the past shows that age is causing him to be confused.) Do you agree with Mary's statement in lines 79–80? (Many students will say that they too have had this experience.)

Reading Strategy 2

Evaluate Characterization

Ask: What is your opinion of Silas's "one accomplishment"? (Students may say the accomplishment is not very impressive and that it is sad that this is all Silas has to feel proud of and to teach.)

APPROACHING Have pairs use two-column charts to list the ways that creating a perfect load of hay is both a grand and a sad accomplishment.

The boy you had in haying four years since.
He's finished school, and teaching in his college.
Silas declares you'll have to get him back.
He says they two will make a team for work:
Between them they will lay this farm as smooth!
The way he mixed that in with other things.
He thinks young Wilson a likely lad, though daft[7]
On education—you know how they fought
All through July under the blazing sun,
Silas up on the cart to build the load,
Harold along beside to pitch it on."

"Yes, I took care to keep well out of earshot."

"Well, those days trouble Silas like a dream.
You wouldn't think they would. How some things linger![8]
Harold's young college boy's assurance piqued[9] him.
After so many years he still keeps finding 1
Good arguments he sees he might have used.
I sympathize.[10] I know just how it feels
To think of the right thing to say too late.
Harold's associated in his mind with Latin.
He asked me what I thought of Harold's saying
He studied Latin like the violin
Because he liked it—that an argument!
He said he couldn't make the boy believe
He could find water with a hazel prong[11]—
Which showed how much good school had ever done him.
He wanted to go over that. But most of all
He thinks if he could have another chance
To teach him how to build a load of hay—"

"I know, that's Silas' one accomplishment. 2
He bundles every forkful in its place,
And tags and numbers it for future reference,
So he can find and easily dislodge[12] it
In the unloading. Silas does that well.
He takes it out in bunches like big birds' nests.
You never see him standing on the hay
He's trying to lift, straining to lift himself."

---

[7] Daft means "foolish."
[8] Linger means "to continue to exist" or "to endure."
[9] Piqued means "aroused a feeling of anger or resentment in."
[10] Sympathize means "to share in or to agree with the feelings or ideas of another."
[11] A hazel prong is a stick believed to indicate the presence of underground water.
[12] Dislodge means "to move or to force from a position."

Reading Practice

SMALL GROUP

Analyze Persuasion Point out to students that Mary and Warren are each speaking to persuade the other of a point of view. Mary works to persuade Warren to show compassion for Silas. Warren works to persuade Mary that Silas needs to go. Have students work with partners to analyze the persuasive techniques used by each speaker. Tell students to consider diction, syntax, patterns of organization, evidence, and appeals to ethics, logic, and emotion. One student should focus on Mary and the other student should focus on Warren. Have students record the results of their analyses in two-column charts and present their charts to the class.

"He thinks if he could teach him that, he'd be
Some good perhaps to someone in the world.
He hates to see a boy the fool of books.
Poor Silas, so concerned for other folk,
And nothing to look backward to with pride,
And nothing to look forward to with hope,
So now and never any different."

Part of a moon was falling down the west,
Dragging the whole sky with it to the hills.
Its light poured softly in her lap. She saw it
And spread her apron to it. She put out her hand
Among the harp-like morning-glory[13] strings,
Taut[14] with the dew from garden bed to eaves,
As if she played unheard some tenderness
That wrought[15] on him beside her in the night.
"Warren," she said, "he has come home to die:
You needn't be afraid he'll leave you this time."

"Home," he mocked gently.

"Yes, what else but home?
It all depends on what you mean by home.
Of course he's nothing to us, any more
Than was the hound that came a stranger to us
Out of the woods, worn out upon the trail."

"Home is the place where, when you have to go there,
They have to take you in."

"I should have called it
Something you somehow haven't to deserve."

Warren leaned out and took a step or two,
Picked up a little stick, and brought it back

---

[13] A morning glory is a vine that produces trumpet-shaped flowers. Gardeners often position a lattice or strings for a vine to grow along.

[14] Taut means "stretched tight."

[15] Wrought means "worked."

New Poetics How is Silas depicted in these lines? 3

Narrative Poetry What does the description in these lines reveal about Mary? 4

Narrative Poetry What is the difference between Mary's view of a person's home and Warren's? 5

Teach

Big Idea 3

New Poetics Answer: Silas is depicted as a man who has achieved nothing of importance and who has no prospects for the future.

Literary Element 4

Narrative Poetry Answer: Mary is kind and tender-hearted, and she is able to influence Warren with her tenderness.

Literary Element 5

Narrative Poetry Answer: In Warren's view, "Home is the place where, when you have to go there, / They have to take you in." He implies a home only exists where there is a sense of obligation. Mary is more generous, arguing that home is "Something you somehow haven't to deserve."

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate Have students work in groups of three, with each student completing a character web. One student will focus on Mary, one on Warren, and one on Silas. Tell students to write the character's name in the center circle of the web. In the radiating circles, have students write what they know about the character. Remind students to examine the narration, dialogue, and action to glean information about each character. Then have students use the information in their character webs to orally describe the characters in complete sentences.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Characterization

Ask: Why do you think Silas has not asked his brother for help? (Possible answers: Silas is too proud to ask his brother; he may believe that his brother would refuse him.) What does Mary mean by her statement in line 140 that Silas's brother "may be better than appearances"? (She means that he may be kinder than he appears to be and he may take Silas in.)

APPROACHING Tell students that "appearances" refers to the way that Silas's brother appears or looks to other people. Ask: How might a wealthy bank director appear to people like Mary and Warren? (He may appear cold-hearted, removed, or arrogant.)

View the Art

Answer: The moods of both the painting and Mary reflect a sense that certain things, like the cosmos and death, are out of our control.

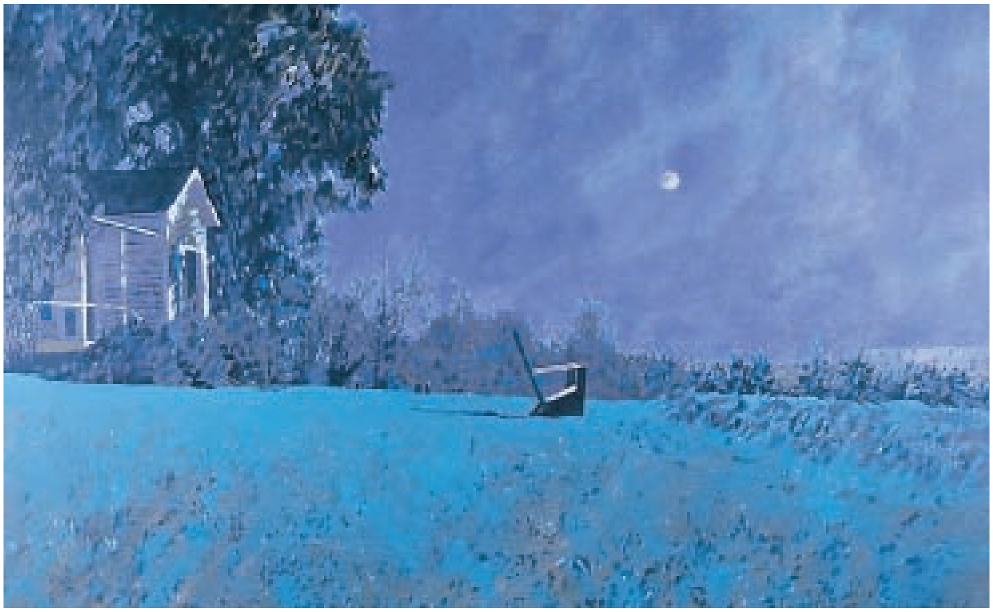
Daniel Lang (1935–) began his career as an etcher and draftsman. Many of his paintings are landscapes, which he has "invented" on the basis of sketches and photographs he has taken in his travels.



Moonlight in Vermont. 1982. Daniel Lang. Oil on canvas, 48 x 72 in. Collection of Harrison Young, Beijing, China. Reproduced in Spirit of Place by John Arthur.

View the Art An avid world traveler, Daniel Lang bases many of his landscapes on sketches and snapshots from his trips. How does the mood of this painting compare with Mary's in lines 170–171?

And broke it in his hand and tossed it by.
"Silas has better claim on us you think
Than on his brother? Thirteen little miles
As the road winds would bring him to his door.
Silas has walked that far no doubt to-day.
Why didn't he go there? His brother's rich,
A somebody—director in the bank."

"He never told us that."

"We know it though."

"I think his brother ought to help, of course.
I'll see to that if there is need. He ought of right
To take him in, and might be willing to—
He may be better than appearances.
But have some pity on Silas. Do you think
If he had any pride in claiming kin

Vocabulary

kin (kin) n. relatives, or a group of people with common ancestry

Writing Practice

Analyze a Poem Frost wrote a number of dramatic poems including "The Mountain," "A Hundred Collars," "Home Burial," "Blueberries," "The Generations of Men," "The Housekeeper," and "The Fear" that reveal characters' personalities through dialogue, monologue, and description. Have students read some dramatic poems by Frost and write analyses of them. Encourage students to compare and contrast the poems they select with "The Death of the Hired Man." Invite volunteers to read aloud the poems they selected and present their analyses.

Or anything he looked for from his brother,
He'd keep so still about him all this time?"

"I wonder what's between them."

"I can tell you.
Silas is what he is—we wouldn't mind him—
But just the kind that kinsfolk can't abide.[16]
He never did a thing so very bad.
He don't know why he isn't quite as good ☆
As anybody. Worthless though he is,
He won't be made ashamed to please his brother."

"I can't think Si ever hurt anyone."

"No, but he hurt my heart the way he lay
And rolled his old head on that sharp-edged chair-back.
He wouldn't let me put him on the lounge. 2
You must go in and see what you can do.
I made the bed up for him there to-night.
You'll be surprised at him—how much he's broken.
His working days are done; I'm sure of it."

"I'd not be in a hurry to say that."

"I haven't been. Go, look, see for yourself.
But, Warren, please remember how it is:
He's come to help you ditch the meadow.
He has a plan. You mustn't laugh at him.
He may not speak of it, and then he may.
I'll sit and see if that small sailing cloud
Will hit or miss the moon."

It hit the moon.
Then there were three there, making a dim row,
The moon, the little silver cloud, and she.

Warren returned—too soon, it seemed to her,
Slipped to her side, caught up her hand and waited.

"Warren?" she questioned.

"Dead," was all he answered.

---

[16] Abide means "to put up with" or "to tolerate."

Evaluate Characterization Is Mary a good judge of Silas's character? Explain. 3

Teach

Vocabulary 2

Meaning in Context The word lounge in line 156 refers to a sofa, often with a headrest and sometimes with no back. Consequently, it can be used as a bed.

Reading Strategy 3

Evaluate Characterization

Answer: Most students will probably say that Mary is a good judge of Silas's character. She realizes that even though he has never accomplished much, he still has enough pride to prevent his asking his brother for help.

Writer's Technique ☆

Diction By the words he chooses for her dialogue, Frost characterizes Mary as a woman who speaks in plain, often one-syllable, words. In line 150, the ungrammatical "He don't" achieves two purposes: It shows that Mary is a country woman who speaks nonstandard English, probably because she has not had much education, and it sustains the iambic rhythm of the poem. Ask: What other examples of diction characterize Mary as an uneducated country woman? (Possible answer: kinsfolk)

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 154.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Established Students may have difficulty keeping track of who is speaking in this poem. To help them identify speakers, create an annotated script of the poem, marking the text according to the speakers and the narrator. Cross out the dialogue tags such as "she questioned" and so on. Give each student a copy of the script, and form groups of three students each. Have group members take the parts of Mary, Warren, and the narrator and read the poem aloud two or three times. Invite volunteers to perform readings aloud for the whole class.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students may say that they admire Mary's kindhearted and generous nature; they may like Warren, who is sensible but not unkind; and they feel pity for Silas.
2. (a) She meets Warren at the door, tells him Silas is back, pushes him onto the porch steps, and says, "Be kind." (b) She knows what Warren will say when he hears about Silas.
3. (a) Worn out and miserable (b) He knows that Silas is undependable.
4. (a) Wilson once worked with Silas on Warren's farm. Silas dislikes his love of books and learning. (b) Silas feels he is not as good as others; Harold reminds him of his failings.
5. (a) He "has come home to die." (b) It would shame him.
6. Mary is kind and soft-hearted; Warren is practical and unwilling to let people use him.
7. Students' answers will vary but should include reasons for their opinions.
8. It suggests that Warren feels some sympathy for Silas and is concerned about Mary's reaction to his death.
9. His reading illustrates the theme of isolation and loneliness. Some students may agree that Silas has no roots; others may say he has ties to Mary and Warren.
10. Students' answers will vary, but they should state the attitude in the poem that they think reflects society's treatment of the elderly and support their answers with real life examples.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

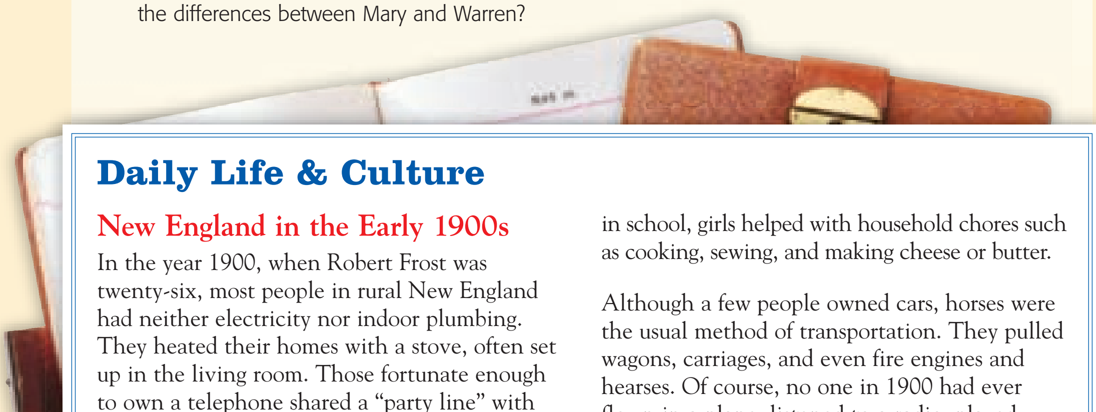
1. How do you feel about the poem's characters?
2. (a)What does Mary do and say upon Warren's return in lines 1–10? (b)Why does she feel the need to put Warren "on his guard"?
3. (a)How does Silas look when Mary first sees him? (b)Why does Warren refuse to believe that Silas will tackle the chores he says he will?
4. (a)Who is Harold Wilson, and why does Silas dislike him? (b)What do Silas's feelings about Harold reveal about Silas's personality?
5. (a)According to Mary, why has Silas come to the house? (b)Why does Silas avoid asking his brother for help?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. Based on lines 1–30, how would you describe the differences between Mary and Warren?
7. In this poem Frost gives two different definitions of home. Which one do you prefer? Why?
8. What does the end of the poem suggest about Warren's feelings toward Silas?

Connect

9. Big Idea New Poetics "The Death of the Hired Man," contends scholar C. M. Bowra, "is about the pathos of men who have no roots and no ties and no firm grip on life." Which of the themes of modern poetry does Bowra's reading illustrate?
10. Connect to Today Which of the attitudes in the poem best reflects how our society treats elderly people?



Daily Life & Culture

New England in the Early 1900s

In the year 1900, when Robert Frost was twenty-six, most people in rural New England had neither electricity nor indoor plumbing. They heated their homes with a stove, often set up in the living room. Those fortunate enough to own a telephone shared a "party line" with several others. To make a call, a person first had to dial the operator. If there was someone else already on the line, the caller had to wait.

Boys and girls in rural areas combined schooling with chores at home. After leaving school at about age fourteen, boys often worked as farm laborers. Some became apprentices and learned trades or worked in stores. When they were not in school, girls helped with household chores such as cooking, sewing, and making cheese or butter.

Although a few people owned cars, horses were the usual method of transportation. They pulled wagons, carriages, and even fire engines and hearses. Of course, no one in 1900 had ever flown in a plane, listened to a radio, played a video game, or visited a mall.

Group Activity Discuss the following questions with your classmates.

1. How has life changed since 1900, and why?
2. Is today's society a better place to live compared with the early 1900s? Support your opinion.

Daily Life & Culture

1. Students may focus on technological changes and on the broadening of educational opportunities.
2. Some students may agree, citing lower infant mortality, longer lives, and technology. Those who disagree may cite more pollution and less time with one's family.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 209–210.

Literary Element Narrative Poetry

In "The Death of the Hired Man," Frost tells the story of Silas, Mary, and Warren through dialogue, narration, and description.

1. How is this poem similar to a play?
2. Do you think this poem would have been as powerful if Frost had revealed Silas's personality through description only instead of dialogue and description together? Explain.
3. How does the language used in the dialogue between Mary and Warren differ from that used in the descriptive passages?

Review: Blank Verse

As you learned when studying the poems "Mending Wall" and "Birches," blank verse is unrhymed poetry that is written in a rhythmic pattern called iambic pentameter. In iambic pentameter, each line has five feet, or basic units of measurement of a line of metrical poetry; each foot contains an unstressed syllable followed by a stressed syllable. Pauses do not always come at the ends of lines but wherever they make sense.

Partner Activity With two classmates, read aloud the first fifty lines of "The Death of the Hired Man." One person should read the narrative or descriptive passages; the other two should read the lines of Mary and Warren. After your reading, discuss how iambic pentameter captures the cadences and rhythms of ordinary speech.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Reading Strategy Evaluate Characterization

In "The Death of the Hired Man," Frost uses indirect characterization. Simply put, he shows rather than tells, letting the reader draw his or her own inferences about the characters from the details provided in the poem. Remarkably, though Silas remains offstage, the reader learns much about this hired man. Seeing him through Warren's and Mary's eyes, the reader learns about Silas's physical condition, his work habits, his interaction with Harold Wilson, his estrangement from his brother, and his motivation for his final return to the farm. Through his choice of details, Frost attempts to bring Silas to life in the reader's imagination.

1. Is Silas a realistic, well-developed character? Support your answer.
2. What does Frost accomplish by keeping Silas offstage?

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Word Usage Respond to these statements to help you explore the meanings of vocabulary words from the selection.

1. Name people who make up your kin and describe their relation to you.
2. Describe an event in your life wherein you have coaxed someone or have been coaxed.

Academic Vocabulary

Silas has come to Mary and Warren's house seeking a task in which he could be useful.

Task is an academic word. More familiar words that are similar in meaning are job, chore, and duty.

To further explore the meaning of this word, complete this sentence: I enjoy tasks that ____________, such as ____________.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Analysis

1. Like a play, the poem has characters, dialogue, action, conflict, and a resolution.
2. Most students will say that the use of dialogue and description together is more powerful. The reader sees Silas through the eyes of Mary and Warren instead of learning about him from an impersonal narrator.
3. The dialogue is more informal and sometimes ungrammatical, reflecting the way two country people actually speak to each other.

Review: Blank Verse

Suggest that students record their reading and listen to the result before beginning the discussion.

You may wish to suggest that students tape-record readings of single paragraphs of prose works. (They might use "Remarks at Amherst College" on pages 735–738.) Have them compare the rhythm of the prose with the rhythm of Frost's blank verse.

Progress Check

Can students evaluate characterization?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 152.

Reading Strategy

1. Most students will say that Silas is a realistic and well-developed character. Frost reveals key details about his appearance and personality through his dealings with Mary, Warren, and others.
2. With Silas offstage, the reader gets the reactions of Mary and Warren.

Vocabulary

1. Students should name family members and identify how they are related to those people.
2. Students should mention a time they had to persuade someone to do something, or they were persuaded to do something.

Academic Vocabulary

Possible answer: I enjoy tasks that produce immediate results, such as cleaning my room and knitting.

After You Read

Assess

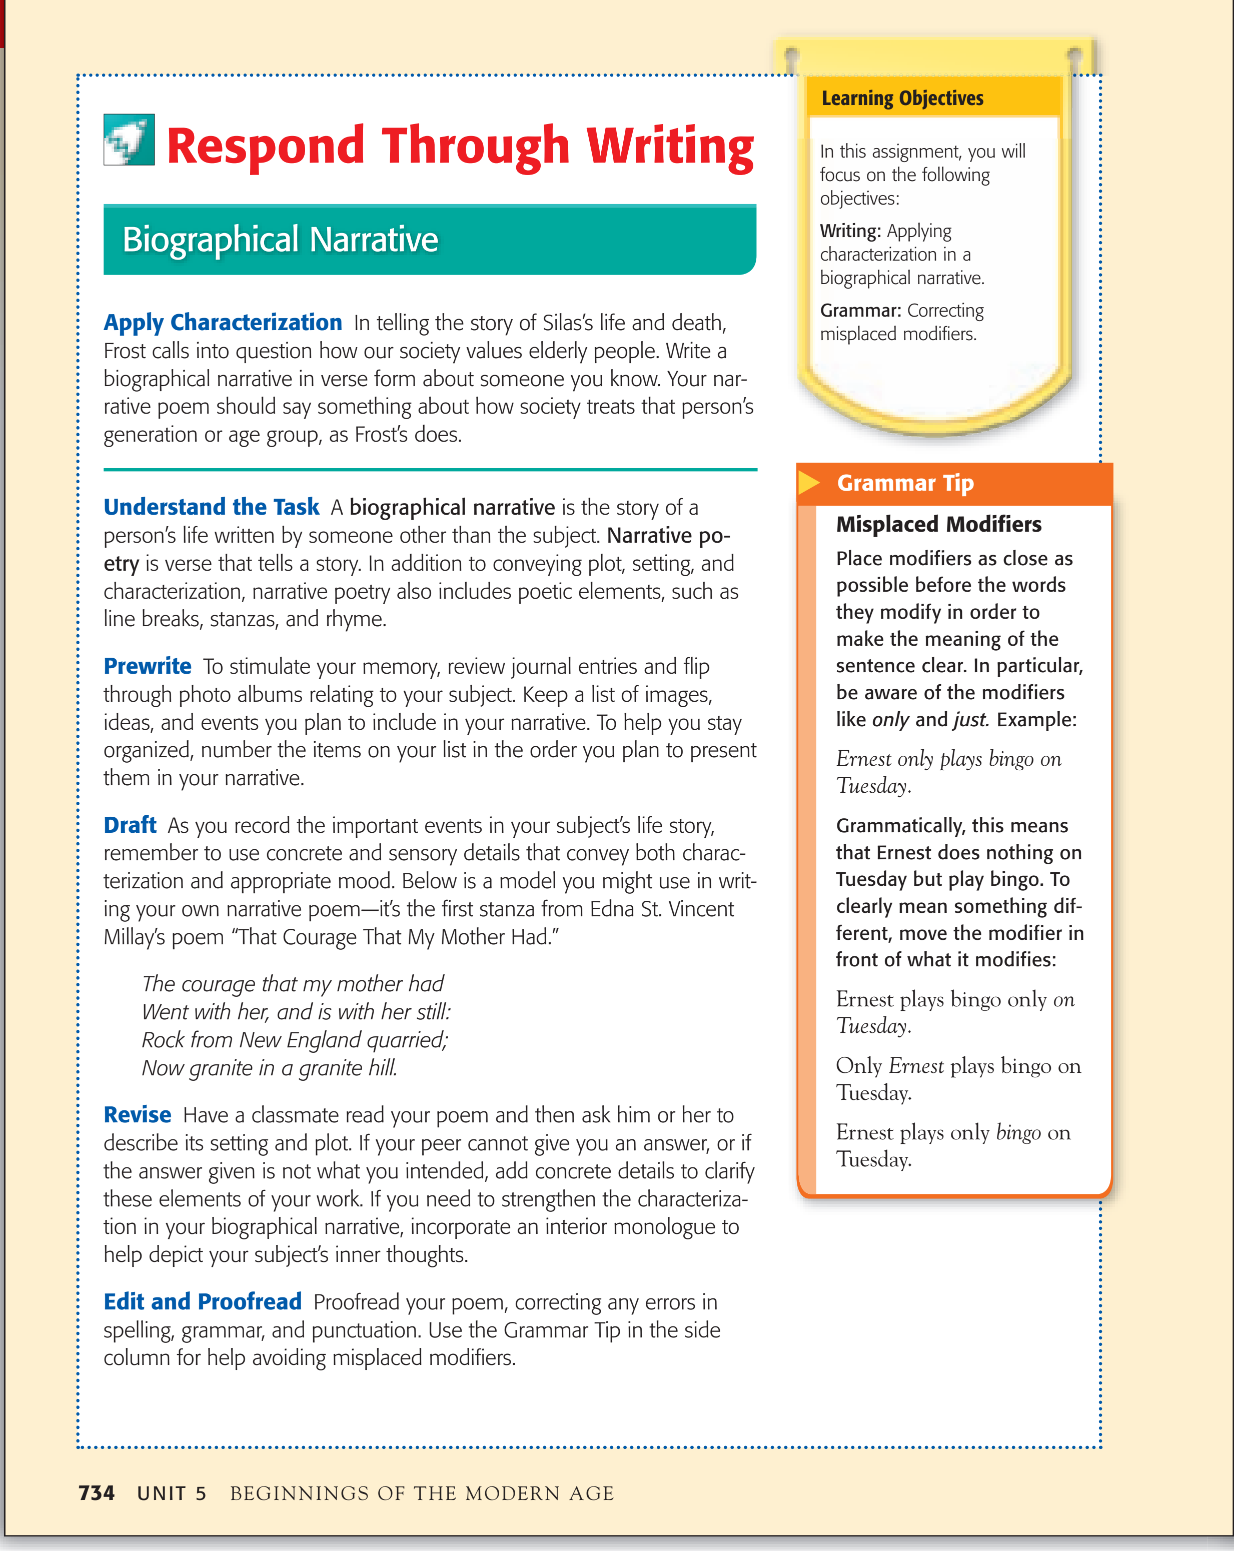
Writing

Students' poems should tell a story and include poetic elements such as line breaks, stanzas, and rhyme. Their poems should also incorporate strong, specific images.

Scoring Guide

Assess students' performance in the following categories using the scoring guide at the bottom of the page:

- Addresses all parts of the writing task.
- Character's life story is well narrated and characters are well fleshed out and developed.
- Describes setting and plot with concrete and sensory details.
- Employ sensory details and interior monologue to reinforce characterization.
- Provides a variety of sentence types; uses precise, descriptive language to convey certain moods.
- Follows English language conventions.



Respond Through Writing

Biographical Narrative

Apply Characterization In telling the story of Silas's life and death, Frost calls into question how our society values elderly people. Write a biographical narrative in verse form about someone you know. Your narrative poem should say something about how society treats that person's generation or age group, as Frost's does.

Understand the Task A biographical narrative is the story of a person's life written by someone other than the subject. Narrative poetry is verse that tells a story. In addition to conveying plot, setting, and characterization, narrative poetry also includes poetic elements, such as line breaks, stanzas, and rhyme.

Prewrite To stimulate your memory, review journal entries and flip through photo albums relating to your subject. Keep a list of images, ideas, and events you plan to include in your narrative. To help you stay organized, number the items on your list in the order you plan to present them in your narrative.

Draft As you record the important events in your subject's life story, remember to use concrete and sensory details that convey both characterization and appropriate mood. Below is a model you might use in writing your own narrative poem—it's the first stanza from Edna St. Vincent Millay's poem "That Courage That My Mother Had."

> The courage that my mother had
> Went with her, and is with her still:
> Rock from New England quarried;
> Now granite in a granite hill.

Revise Have a classmate read your poem and then ask him or her to describe its setting and plot. If your peer cannot give you an answer, or if the answer given is not what you intended, add concrete details to clarify these elements of your work. If you need to strengthen the characterization in your biographical narrative, incorporate an interior monologue to help depict your subject's inner thoughts.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your poem, correcting any errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Use the Grammar Tip in the side column for help avoiding misplaced modifiers.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Applying characterization in a biographical narrative.

Grammar: Correcting misplaced modifiers.

Grammar Tip

Misplaced Modifiers

Place modifiers as close as possible before the words they modify in order to make the meaning of the sentence clear. In particular, be aware of the modifiers like only and just. Example:

Ernest only plays bingo on Tuesday.

Grammatically, this means that Ernest does nothing on Tuesday but play bingo. To clearly mean something different, move the modifier in front of what it modifies:

Ernest plays bingo only on Tuesday.

Only Ernest plays bingo on Tuesday.

Ernest plays only bingo on Tuesday.

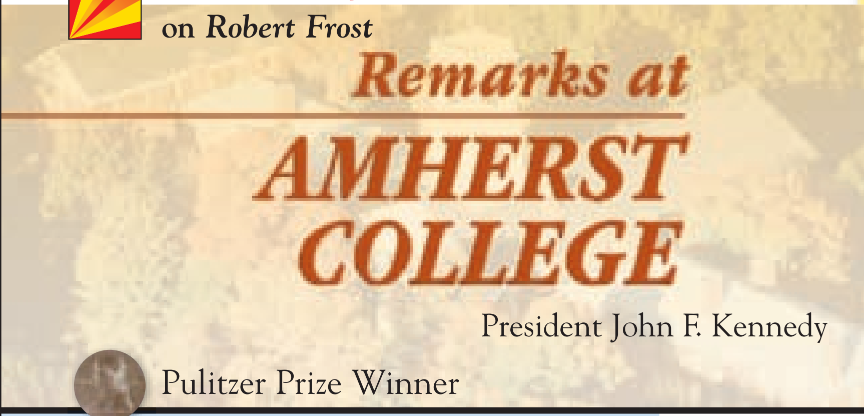
Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Task addressed	fully	mostly	partially	barely
Characterization	fully developed	somewhat developed	partially developed	not developed
Setting, Plot	well described with many details	somewhat described with some details	partially described with few details	not described
Sensory Details	well employed	employed	few employed	none
Language	varied, precise, thoughtful	varied, somewhat thoughtful	predictable, basic	not varied, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	some	many



Remarks at AMHERST COLLEGE

President John F. Kennedy

Pulitzer Prize Winner

Learning Objectives

For pages 735–738

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Making connections across literature.

Reading:
Analyzing informational text.
Analyzing philosophical assumptions.

Set Purposes for Reading

As you read, ask yourself, What were the social and historical impacts of Robert Frost's poetry?

Build Background

☆ In October 1963, President John F. Kennedy presented the following remarks at Amherst College, in Amherst, Massachusetts. The speech was given in honor of the groundbreaking of the Robert Frost Library, which was completed two years later. This would be one of Kennedy's last public appearances before his assassination less than a month later. Robert Frost, who died earlier in the year, had long been associated with Amherst College, having taught English there periodically throughout his career.

Reading Strategy Analyze Philosophical Assumptions

Analyzing philosophical assumptions involves gathering information to determine an author's implicit and explicit philosophical assumptions and beliefs about a subject. As you read, ask yourself, What does President Kennedy's speech reveal about his philosophical assumptions?

Mr. McCloy, President Plimpton, Mr. MacLeish,[1] distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen:

I am very honored to be here with you on this occasion which means so much to this college and also means so much to art and the progress of the United States. This college is part of the United States. It belongs to it. So did Mr. Frost, in a large sense. And, therefore, I was privileged to accept the invitation somewhat rendered to me in the same way that Franklin Roosevelt rendered his invitation to Mr. MacLeish, the invitation which I received from Mr. McCloy.[2] The powers of the Presidency are often described. Its limitations should occasionally be remembered. And therefore when the Chairman of our Disarmament Advisory Committee, who has labored so long and hard, Governor Stevenson's[3] assistant during the very

---

1. John Jay McCloy (1895–1989), a diplomat and lawyer, served as an adviser to every president from Franklin Delano Roosevelt to Ronald Reagan. Calvin Hastings Plimpton was the president of Amherst College from 1960 to 1971. Archibald MacLeish (1892–1982) was a famed poet and playwright. MacLeish also served as a librarian of Congress and briefly as an assistant secretary of state.
2. Kennedy is referring to President Franklin Roosevelt's invitation to MacLeish to become a librarian of Congress.
3. Adlai Stevenson (1900–1965) served as governor of Illinois from 1948 to 1952 and as the U.S. delegate to the United Nations during the Kennedy administration. John McCloy served as Stevenson's assistant during the Cuban missile crisis.

Focus

Summary

In this speech honoring Robert Frost, President Kennedy emphasizes the responsibility of those who are privileged—such as students and alumni of Amherst College—to engage in public service. He praises Robert Frost for his contribution to the American spirit and emphasizes the importance of art in our culture. Kennedy concludes by outlining his vision for America.

Teach

Cultural History ☆

"This College" Amherst College was established in 1821. One of its founders was Noah Webster, known for his American Dictionary of the English Language.

Originally Amherst was an all-male college, intended to train poor young men as ministers. Women were not admitted until 1975.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 9.7
DRP: 6.5
Lexile: 1270

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 156–164.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate Have students listen to a recording of the body of Kennedy's speech. Play the recording several times as students follow along with the text. Then have students work in pairs to identify and list the evidence that Kennedy presents to support the argument that those who lead a life of privilege have a responsibility to serve the national good.

Tell students to use simple sentences to orally critique or evaluate each of Kennedy's supporting points. Ask: Which points are convincing? Which points are not convincing? Why?

Political Perspective on Robert Frost

Teach

Big Idea 1

New Poetics Ask: How is this part of the speech by President Kennedy opposed to some characteristics of Modernism? (Kennedy says that people should not remain isolated and concerned with only their private interests, whereas Modernism focused on the individual.)

APPROACHING List attributes of Modernism on the board: individualism, disillusionment, and isolationism. Lead students to discuss how Kennedy speaks against these ideas.

Political History ☆

Cuban Missile Crisis On October 14, 1962, a U.S. spy plane photographed the building of nuclear-missile sites in communist Cuba by the Soviet Union. In response, President Kennedy set up a naval blockade to prevent more missiles from reaching Cuba and demanded that the Soviets remove the missiles already there.

For several days, the world seemed to be on the brink of nuclear war. Finally, on October 24, the Soviet ships headed for Cuba reversed their course. The Soviets agreed to withdraw the missiles if the United States promised never to invade Cuba.

Informational Text

President John F. Kennedy delivers a speech in 1962.

difficult days at the United Nations during the ☆ Cuban crisis, a public servant for so many years, asks or invites the President of the United States, there is only one response. So I am glad to be here.

Amherst has had many soldiers of the king since its first one, and some of them are here today: Mr. McCloy, who has long been a public servant; Jim Reed who is the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; President Cole, who is now our Ambassador to Chile; Mr. Ramey, who is a Commissioner of the Atomic Energy Commission; Dick Reuter, who is head of the Food for Peace. These and scores of others down through the years have recognized the 1 obligations of the advantages which the graduation from a college such as this places upon them to serve not only their private interest but the public interest as well.

Many years ago, Woodrow Wilson said, what good is a political party unless it is serving a great national purpose? And what good is a private college or university unless it is serving a great national purpose? The Library being constructed today, this college, itself—all of this, of course, was not done merely to give this school's graduates an advantage, an economic advantage, in the life struggle. It does do that. But in return for that, in return for the great opportunity which society gives the graduates of this and related schools, it seems to me incumbent[4] upon this and other schools' graduates to recognize their responsibility to the public interest.

Privilege is here, and with privilege goes responsibility. And I think, as your president said, that it must be a source of satisfaction to you that this school's graduates have recognized it. I hope that the students who are here now will also recognize it in the future. Although Amherst has been in the forefront of extending aid to needy and talented students, private colleges, taken as a whole, draw 50 percent of their students from the wealthiest 10 percent of our Nation. And even State universities and other public institutions derive 25 percent of their students from this group. In March 1962, persons of 18 years or older who had not completed high school made up 46 percent of the total labor force, and such persons comprised 64 percent of those who were unemployed. And in 1958, the lowest fifth of the families in the United States had 4½ percent of the total personal income, the highest fifth, 44½ percent. There is inherited wealth in this country and also inherited poverty. And unless the graduates of this college and other colleges like it who are given a running start in life—unless they are willing to put back into our society, those talents, the broad sympathy, the understanding, the compassion—unless they are willing to put those qualities back into the service of the Great Republic, then obviously the presuppositions upon which our democracy are based are bound to be fallible.

The problems which this country now faces are staggering, both at home and abroad. We

---

[4] Here, incumbent means "imposed."

Research Practice

Statistics Have groups of students research whether education and income statistics have changed since 1958 and 1962. They should research these questions: What percentage of students in private colleges come from low-income homes? What percentage of students in state colleges come from low-income homes? What percentage of workers lack a high school diploma? What percentage of the unemployed lack a high school diploma? What percentage of the nation's total personal income belongs to the lowest one-fifth of the people? What percentage of the nation's total personal income belongs to the highest one-fifth of the people?

Have students present their findings in the form of charts, diagrams, or graphs.

need the service, in the great sense, of every educated man or woman to find 10 million jobs in the next 2½ years, to govern our relations—a country which lived in isolation for 150 years, and is now suddenly the leader of the free world—to govern our relations with over 100 countries, to govern those relations with success so that the balance of power remains strong on the side of freedom, to make it possible for Americans of all different races and creeds to live together in harmony, to make it possible for a world to exist in diversity and freedom. All this requires the best of all of us.

2 Therefore, I am proud to come to this college, whose graduates have recognized this obligation and to say to those who are now here that the need is endless, and I am confident that you will respond.

Robert Frost said:

Two roads diverged in a wood, and I—☆ I took the one less traveled by,
And that has made all the difference.

I hope that road will not be the less traveled by, and I hope your commitment to the Great Republic's interest in the years to come will be worthy of your long inheritance since your beginning.

This day devoted to the memory of Robert Frost offers an opportunity for reflection which is prized by politicians as well as by others, and even by poets, for Robert Frost was one of the granite figures of our time in America. He was supremely two things: an artist and an American. A nation reveals itself not only by the men it produces but also by the men it honors, the men it remembers.

In America, our heroes have customarily run to men of large accomplishments. But today this college and country honors a man whose contribution was not to our size but to our spirit, not to our political beliefs but to our insight, not to our self-esteem, but to our self-comprehension. In honoring Robert Frost, we therefore can pay honor to the deepest sources of our national strength. That strength takes many forms, and the most obvious forms are not always the most significant. The men who create power make an indispensable contribution to the Nation's greatness, but the men who question power make a contribution just as indispensable, especially when that questioning is disinterested, for they determine whether we use power or power uses us.

Our national strength matters, but the spirit which informs and controls our strength matters just as much. This was the special significance of Robert Frost. He brought an unsparing instinct for reality to bear on the platitudes and pieties of society. His sense of the human tragedy fortified him against self-deception and easy consolation. "I have been" he wrote, "one acquainted with the night." And because he knew the midnight as well as the high noon, because he understood the ordeal as well as the triumph of the human spirit, he gave his age strength with which to overcome despair. At bottom, he held a deep faith in the spirit of man, and it is hardly an accident that Robert Frost coupled poetry and power, for he saw poetry as the means of saving power from itself. 3 When power leads man towards arrogance, poetry reminds him of his limitations. When power narrows the areas of man's concern, poetry reminds him of the richness and diversity of his existence. When power corrupts, poetry cleanses. For art establishes the basic human truth which must serve as the touchstone of our judgment.

The artist, however faithful to his personal vision of reality, becomes the last champion of the individual mind and sensibility against an intrusive society and an officious state. The great artist is thus a solitary figure. He has, as Frost said, a lover's quarrel with the world. In pursuing his perceptions of reality, he must often sail against the currents of his time. This is not a popular role. If Robert Frost was much honored in his lifetime, it was because a good many preferred to ignore his darker truths. Yet in retrospect, we see how the artist's fidelity has strengthened the fibre of our national life.

If sometimes our great artists have been the most critical of our society, it is because their sensitivity and their concern for justice, which

Political Perspective

on Robert Frost

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Philosophical Assumptions Ask: What is President Kennedy's philosophical assumption about those who are born into privilege? (He assumes that they have an obligation to give back to society with public service.)

Reading Strategy 3

Analyze Philosophical Assumptions Ask: What philosophical assumption about poetry underlies these statements? (Possible answer: Poetry is a powerful force for truth.)

ADVANCED Point out the parallel structure in these lines. Have students cite examples of Frost's poetry to support Kennedy's claims that poetry reminds men of their limitations, reminds men of the richness and diversity of existence, and cleanses.

Literary History ☆

Robert Frost Kennedy was a great admirer of Frost. Here he quotes the last three lines of Frost's poem "The Road Not Taken." Kennedy invited Frost to recite a poem at his presidential inauguration in 1961.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To help students identify assumptions, tell them that an assumption is what a person accepts to be true, without proof, for the sake of argument. Explain that, in this speech, President Kennedy assumes that college graduates have a responsibility to do their part to maintain a democratic society. There is no law that requires this, nor is there proof of its value, but Kennedy assumes that it is a good thing. Ask: What does Kennedy assume about the role of artists in a democratic society? (Artists have a responsibility to speak or show the truth.)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze Philosophical Assumptions Ask: What does President Kennedy mean by the phrase "our hold on this planet"? (people's connection to the world around them)

Assess

1. Students' summaries should include key points on responsibility and the American spirit.
2. Students' answers will vary but some may say that a society can only be truly democratic and free if artists are not censored and are allowed to follow their artistic visions freely. Others may say that there should be limits to artistic expression and that artists should not create art that deliberately insults and offends other people who live in this society.
3. (a) Of the individual mind against an intrusive society (b) The artist's critical and introspective stance allows him or her to serve truth and improve society.
4. Most students will agree that poems such as "The Death of the Hired Man" or the final lines of "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" contain "dark truths."
5. (a) Some students may say that Kennedy was simply beginning with a policy statement. Others will say the speech is about the advancement of the country through increasing cultural literacy and education. (b) Some will not find it interesting; others will like the ideas.

must motivate any true artist, makes him aware that our Nation falls short of its highest potential. I see little of more importance to the future of our country and our civilization than full recognition of the place of the artist.

If art is to nourish the roots of our culture, society must set the artist free to follow his vision wherever it takes him. We must never forget that art is not a form of propaganda; it is a form of truth. And as Mr. MacLeish once remarked of poets, there is nothing worse for our trade than to be in style. In free society art is not a weapon and it does not belong to the spheres of polemic and ideology. Artists are not engineers of the soul. It may be different elsewhere. But democratic society—in it, the highest duty of the writer, the composer, the artist is to remain true to himself and to let the chips fall where they may. In serving his vision of the truth, the artist best serves his nation. And the nation which disdains the mission of art invites the fate of Robert Frost's hired man, the fate of having "nothing to look backward to with pride, and nothing to look forward to with hope."

I look forward to a great future for America, a future in which our country will match its military strength with our moral restraint, its wealth with our wisdom, its power with our purpose. I look forward to an America which will not be afraid of grace and beauty, which will protect the beauty of our natural environment, which will preserve the great old American houses and squares and parks of our national past, and which will build handsome and balanced cities for our future.

I look forward to an America which will reward achievement in the arts as we reward achievement in business or statecraft. I look forward to an America which will steadily raise the standards of artistic accomplishment and which will steadily enlarge cultural opportunities for all of our citizens. And I look forward to an America which commands respect throughout the world not only for its strength but for its civilization as well. And I look forward to a world which will be safe not only for democracy and diversity but also for personal distinction.

Robert Frost was often skeptical about projects for human improvement, yet I do not think he would disdain this hope. As he wrote during the uncertain days of the Second War:

Take human nature altogether since time began . . .
And it must be a little more in favor of man,
Say a fraction of one percent at the very least . . .
Our hold on this planet wouldn't have so increased.

Because of Mr. Frost's life and work, because of the life and work of this college, our hold on this planet has increased. 1

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Write a brief summary of the main ideas in this excerpt before you answer the following questions. For help on writing a summary, see page 79.
2. What is your opinion of Kennedy's claim that "society must set the artist free to follow his vision wherever it takes him"? Are there limits to artistic expression? Explain.
3. (a)According to Kennedy, the artist becomes the last champion of what? (b)How might this championing help to bring about Kennedy's vision of America in the future?

Analyze and Evaluate

4. Do you agree with Kennedy that Frost's poems often hold "darker truths"? Why or why not?
5. (a)Why do you think Kennedy began his address by discussing economics and education? (b)What do you think of this portion of the address?

Connect

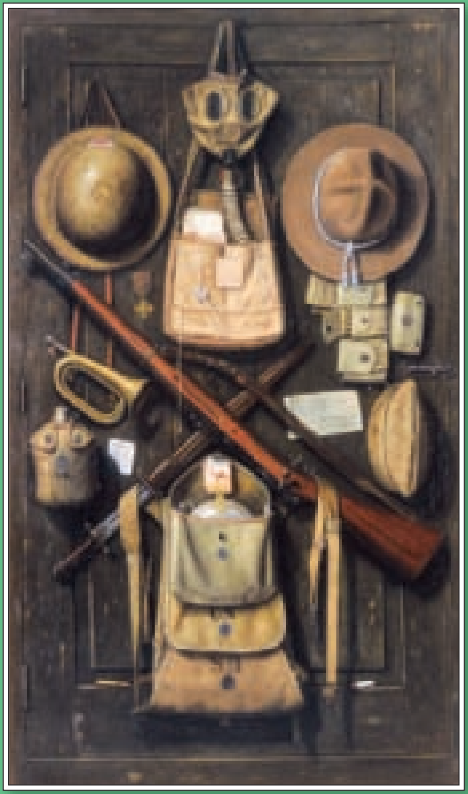
6. Briefly compare and contrast Kennedy's arguments about artists and society with the beliefs held by particular literary movements or with other arguments you've read by literary figures.

6. Some students will say Kennedy's ideas are like those of Ralph Waldo Emerson and the Transcendentalists, who believed the artist should be a "champion of the individual mind." Others will compare his idea that the arts should be critical of culture to Realism.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 211–212.

PART 2

MODERN FICTION



A Doughboy's Equipment, c. 1921. Charles A. Meurer. Oil on canvas, 68 x 40 in. Butler Institute of American Art, Youngstown, OH.

View the Art As a master of trompe l'œil—from the French for "trick of the eye"—Charles Meuer was known for creating art that aimed to blur the lines between Realism and reality. What details from this painting bring it to life? What do they tell you about a typical World War I soldier?

> "The hardest thing to do is to write straight honest prose on human beings." 1
>
> —Ernest Hemingway

Analyze and Extend

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Direct students to read the quotation by Hemingway. Remind students that prose is ordinary language that reflects the way people express themselves. As a former journalist, Hemingway used everyday language to tell stories.

Ask: Why do you think Hemingway says that writing "straight, honest prose on human beings" is the hardest thing to do? (Responses will vary. Students may say that people are complex and hard to write about simply, without embellishment.)

View the Art

Answer: The letter, other pieces of paper, and the medal show that the equipment belongs to a particular person. The soldier has taken care of his equipment; the medal shows courage; and the letter shows a connection with others. The static nature of the painting implies that the soldier is dead. Charles A. Meurer (1865–1955) used the trompe l'oeil (pronounced trohmp loi) technique to create a memorial to the American soldiers of World War I.

For additional support for English Learners, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 168.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Ask: What is the title of the painting? (A Doughboy's Equipment) Explain that the word doughboy in the painting's title is a name for a member of the infantry—soldiers on foot—in World War I, which lasted from 1914 to 1918. The term doughboy was used in previous wars to refer to soldiers. Some people think that the buttons on some uniforms resembled doughboys, which were round pieces of fried dough, similar to today's doughnuts. Say: Restate the information I just gave to you in order to explain the meaning of the painting's title.

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 66

Or ask: How does a story without a plot reflect real life better than a story with a beginning, middle, and end? (Students should understand that real lives do not have clear plots. Life is a series of episodes that may or may not be resolved.)

Teach

Big Idea 1

Modern Fiction Say: After World War I, American writers questioned traditional values. Ask: Why do you think the war affected writers this way? (Students may suggest that the war caused writers to become pessimistic and to look for different views of life.)

View the Art ★

Edward Hopper (1882–1967) painted modern, everyday life. He used shadow, straight lines, and deep colors to reveal the inner lives of his subjects and to convey the human condition.

Learning Objectives

For pages 740–741

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing literary periods.
Analyzing literary genres.
Evaluating historical influences.
Connecting to the literature.

The Modern American Short Story

Since the era of Poe, Hawthorne, and Irving, the short story has been one of the most popular genres among American writers. The early stories of American Romanticism featured supernatural plots and clear moral themes adapted from well-known European myths and tales. As literary styles and themes shifted in the 1800s during the movements of Realism and Naturalism, however, short story writers in the United States began to portray plots and characters that mirrored real life. Modernist writers continued this progression by experimenting with new ways of capturing the rich complexity of human life and by responding to a world that was just beginning to rise from the ashes of World War I. 1

> "There are no plot stories in life."
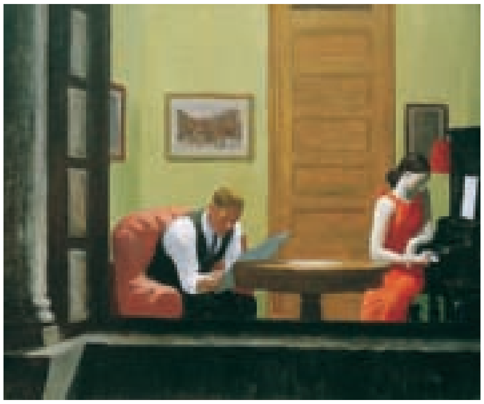
>
> —Sherwood Anderson

Literary Mavericks

Writers such as Sherwood Anderson, Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Henry James, and Katherine Anne Porter energized the short story in the early 1900s by peering into the private world of human thought. "The task of finding concrete ways to communicate emotional states becomes the central problem for most short story writers in the twentieth century," wrote critic Charles E. May. A representative example was Sherwood Anderson's Winesburg, Ohio, published in 1919. This groundbreaking collection of short stories explored the minds of characters that Anderson called "grotesque." Some of the stories, including "Hands," had previously appeared in a variety of journals that provided a forum for innovative stories. The characters in these stories are troubled by their difficult circumstances, yet endearing. Anderson's goal in portraying them was "to at last go out of myself, truly into others, the others I met constantly in the streets of the city, in the office where I then worked, and still others remembered out of my childhood in an American small town."



Room in New York, 1932. Edward Hopper. Oil on Canvas, 28½ x 35½ in. F.M. Hall Collection. ★

Stream of Consciousness

Many modernist short story writers in the early 1900s were influenced by the new psychological theories of the time, including those of Sigmund Freud, who sought unconscious causes for people's behavior. This interest in the mind spawned a new literary technique called stream of consciousness, an expression coined by American psychologist William James in 1890. He believed thought was a constant stream flowing through the minds without clear logic or order.

Listening and Speaking Practice

Oral Interpretation Ask volunteers to read aloud the first paragraph from "The Open Boat" (p. 580) and the first paragraph from "In Another Country" (p. 745). Tell students to listen for differences in the style and technique of each writer. (Crane uses longer sentences, creates more suspense, focuses on the colors of the water and the movement of the boat; Hemingway uses short sentences, no colors, simple adjectives, and it's unclear what to focus on.) After the paragraphs have been read, hold a class discussion contrasting the two stories. Read additional paragraphs from each story if needed. Students should recognize that Modernist stories like Hemingway's are leaner, with fewer details about the scene and the characters.

James Joyce, Virginia Woolf, William Faulkner, and Katherine Anne Porter (see page 773) are some of the notable practitioners of this method of narration. In stories that employ stream of consciousness, certain memories trigger seemingly random thoughts. Stream of consciousness stories include the following elements:

- first-person point of view
- a lack of conventional sentence structure or grammar
- "free associations" that flow through a character's mind and link distinctly separate events
- interior monologues

The Interior World

Modernist writers reacted against formulaic, plot-driven stories that dominated the early 1900s, including the surprise endings that made the fiction of O. Henry famous. Irish short-story writer Frank O'Connor explained that Modernists instead strove for the "artful approach to the significant moment." Another Irish writer, James Joyce, brought this idea of the moment charged with meaning to full effect in his 1914 short story collection Dubliners, in which he introduced the epiphany, or moment of revelation, and used it to redefine the short story.

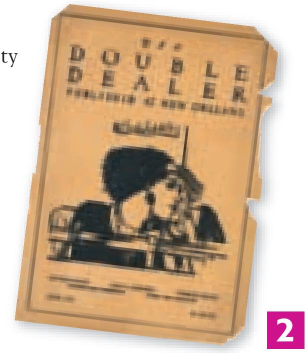
Translations into English of the work of Russian writer Anton Chekhov (see page 557) between 1916 and 1923 brought his method of storytelling to the United States. Chekhov was a master at employing realistic detail and understatement—a de-emphasis on the importance of something or someone. He preferred to use "slice of life" anecdotes in his stories rather than traditional plots. Chekhov's stories, such as "Gooseberries," lack obvious external conflicts, action-packed events, and clear climaxes. Instead, the drama rages inside characters' minds. The protagonists in modern short stories, notably by Hemingway and Fitzgerald, are often antiheroes, or conflicted characters engulfed by indecision.

The language in modern short stories is often subtle and poetic, and requires the reader to infer what is left unsaid. British short-story writer and critic H. E. Bates said, "It is no longer necessary to describe; it is enough to suggest. The full-length portrait, in full dress, with scenic background, has become superfluous; now it is enough that we should know a woman by the shape of her hands." Hemingway (see page 742), who was influenced by Chekhov's style, was also a master of understatement. Hemingway's terse, suggestive language was frequently imitated. Hemingway used the metaphor of an iceberg to explain his view of the short story. "There is seven-eighths of it underwater for every part that shows."

Features of the Modern Short Story

Note the following features of modern short stories to help enrich your understanding of these works.

- unspectacular, or everyday, settings
- themes of instability and loss
- plots without a clear climax or resolution
- understatement
- irony
- stream of consciousness
- antiheroes



2

Literature Online

Literature and Reading For more about the modern short story, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Respond and Think Critically

1. (a)What is stream of consciousness? (b)What influenced its emergence in modern fiction?
2. The Russian writer Anton Chekhov influenced Modernist fiction. What are some characteristics of his short stories?
3. Look back at one of the short stories in Unit Two: American Romanticism. How is it similar to and different from one of the modern short stories in Unit Five?

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Engage students in a full discussion of the seven features of the Modernist short story. Instruct students to create a chart of the seven features, filling in definitions and examples of each feature, using the information on this spread and information gathered during the class discussion. Then have students add to their charts using the Literary Terms Handbook (pp. R1–R21), which will provide students with additional examples and will direct students to selections that illustrate the devices. Finally, have students work in peer groups to compare the information and examples in their charts.

Teach

Literary Element 2

Antihero Say: Modernist writers wrote about antiheroes, main characters who are conflicted and seldom act in heroic ways. Identify a character who is an antihero, and tell why he or she is an antihero. (Students' choices will likely be characters who are more like real people than heroes.)

Assess

1. (a) It is a literary technique that reflects the way people think—a steady and usually disorganized flow of thoughts. (b) Interest in the new field of psychology led writers to adopt stream of consciousness.
2. Realistic details, understatement, "slice of life" anecdotes, conflict within characters' minds
3. Stories written in the Romantic tradition often are dark and contain strong symbolism. Characters are often symbols or archetypes. Modernist short stories focus on the thoughts and problems of real people.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus Transparency 45

Daily Language Practice Transparency 67

Or display images of war that are heroic, such as a photograph of the United States Marine Corps Memorial in Washington, D.C., which depicts the raising of the flag at Iwo Jima during World War II. Ask: How do heroic images of war affect us as individuals? Why are these images important to us as a nation?

Have students compare Hemingway's depiction of soldiers and war with those that appear in the images you show. Explain that the way Hemingway depicted soldiers and the war affected people's perspective. Ask: How does modern media affect the way you see soldiers and war?

Before You Read

In Another Country

Meet Ernest Hemingway

(1899–1961)

Big-game hunters, deep-sea fishermen, soldiers, boxers, bullfighters—these are the types of characters found in Ernest Hemingway's fiction. Strong but sensitive, brainy as well as brawny, the Hemingway hero is usually someone wounded by life, though he keeps his suffering to himself. Closely linked to Hemingway's own adventurous life and personality, the Hemingway hero captured the public's imagination and granted the author celebrity status beyond the literary world. His style and depiction of characters has been imitated by generations of writers.

Coming of Age Born in Oak Park, Illinois, Hemingway spent much of his childhood camping, hunting, and fishing with his father. He began writing in high school and upon graduating landed a job as a cub reporter for the Kansas City Star. Rejected by the military for service in World War I because of an eye defect, he volunteered to serve as a Red Cross ambulance driver near the battlefront in Italy, and was seriously wounded less than a month before he turned nineteen. The injury, said critic Alfred Kazin, "was a shock that went straight into Hemingway's early stories and fables of the war."

> "A man can be destroyed but not defeated."
>
> —Ernest Hemingway
> from The Old Man and the Sea

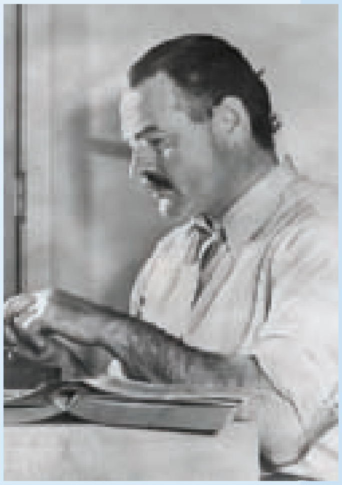
After recuperating, Hemingway took a job as foreign correspondent for the Toronto Star and joined the American writers and artists in Paris who, disillusioned by the war but reluctant to leave the continent where they had fought it, lived as expatriates. Many gathered at the Paris home of American author Gertrude Stein, who coined the term lost generation to describe them.

A Celebrity In 1925, Hemingway published In Our Time, a story collection that established him as an important new writer. He followed with The Sun Also Rises (1926), a novel of the lost generation in 1920s Paris and Spain, and A Farewell to Arms (1929), a tragic World War I love story.

Hemingway drew on his personal adventures as he wrote fiction and won fame for his lifestyle as much as for his writing. He wrote his bullfighting novel, Death in the Afternoon (1932), after attending bullfights in Spain, and his story "The Snows of Kilimanjaro" (1936) after he went on safari in Africa. In 1952 Hemingway published The Old Man and the Sea, a short novel that drew on his own experiences as a deep-sea fisherman off the coast of Cuba. In 1954 Hemingway won the Nobel Prize for Literature "for his mastery of the art of narrative, most recently demonstrated in The Old Man and the Sea, and for the influence that he has exerted on contemporary style."



Literature Online

Author Search For more about Ernest Hemingway, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

In Another Country

Literary Elements
- Style (SE pp. 743, 745, 746, 749)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 746; TE p. 744)

Reading Skills
- Recognize Author's Purpose (SE pp. 743, 745, 748, 750)
- Identify Writer's Technique (TE p. 744)

Vocabulary Skills
- Antonyms (SE pp. 750)
- Academic Vocabulary (SE p. 750)
- Parts of Speech (TE p. 743)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Apply Diction (SE p. 750)
- Research and Report (TE p. 746)
- Personal Response (TE p. 748)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

Hemingway once defined "guts," or courage, as the ability to display "grace under pressure." How do you define courage? Discuss this question with a partner or small group.

Build Background

"In Another Country" takes place in the Italian city of Milan during World War I. The United States joined the Allied Powers only a year before the war ended, but Italy joined the Allied Powers in 1915. The war exacted a high toll of casualties; in fact, of the 65 million people who fought in World War I, over 10 million were killed, and more than 20 million more were wounded.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Modern Fiction

As you read, ask yourself, How does Hemingway's story differ from earlier fiction you have read, in terms of both subject matter and style?

Literary Element Style

Style is the writer's characteristic way of writing. It includes elements such as word choice, sentence structure, and tone. Hemingway, who was strongly influenced by his training as a journalist, pioneered a simple, unadorned style that has been frequently imitated. As you read, ask yourself, What are examples of Hemingway's simple, journalistic style?

Reading Strategy Recognize Author's Purpose

Writers have different purposes, or reasons, for writing. For some, the main purpose is to entertain. Others want to present stories with as much realism as possible. Some writers may also want to teach a lesson or present a set of values or an approach toward life. As you read Hemingway's story, ask yourself, What might his purpose have been?

Tip: Track Ideas Use a chart to note your ideas about the author's purposes.

Detail	Purpose
p. 745: "It was cold in the fall in Milan. . . . Beyond the old hospital were the new brick pavilions."	to portray the setting realistically

Learning Objectives

For pages 742–750

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing style.

Reading: Recognizing author's purpose.

Writing: Applying diction in a brief narrative.

Vocabulary

lurch (lurch) v. to move suddenly and unevenly; p. 745 The dizzy man lurched across the room.

withered (wi´ thərd) adj. shriveled; p. 745 Fresh water did not revive the withered flowers.

detached (di tacht´) adj. not involved emotionally; aloof; indifferent; p. 746 I befriended him, but he remained detached.

jostle (jo´ səl) v. to bump, push, or shove while moving, as in a crowd; p. 746 Did the crowd jostle you, or did you trip on your own?

resign (ri zīn´) v. to make oneself accept something; p. 748 I must resign myself to the situation.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

During World War I, four Italian officers and the narrator—an American officer—meet regularly for physical therapy at an Italian hospital. The oldest officer, a major, offers the narrator lessons in Italian grammar and also advice. Later, the major's young wife dies. The major is inconsolable, and he loses interest in his rehabilitation and in his conversations with the narrator.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 169–174.

Vocabulary

Parts of Speech Explain that some words function as different parts of speech depending on how the word is used. Ask: What part of speech are the words withered and detached as defined in the vocabulary list? (adjective) Ask: Both of these words can also be used as what other part of speech? (past tense form of verb) Have students practice using these two vocabulary words as both adjectives and verbs.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 177.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate The text refers to Hemingway's style as "journalistic." Ask students what they think that means. Explain that journalists tend to write without a lot of extra description because they usually are given limited space in their publication. They also tend to use simple sentence structures and shorter sentences. Instruct students to pay attention to the effect Hemingway's style has on them as they read.

Advanced Display the following from the first paragraph of the story:

It was a cold fall and the wind came down from the mountains.

Engage students in a discussion of how this sentence reflects Hemingway's journalistic sentence structure and word choice.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Modern Fiction Remind students that World War I had a major impact on American writers in the 1920s. Hemingway was seriously injured while serving as an ambulance driver in the war. Ask: How do you think Hemingway's experience during the war affected him as a writer? (Students may suggest that Hemingway understood the random violence of war, and this influenced his writing.)

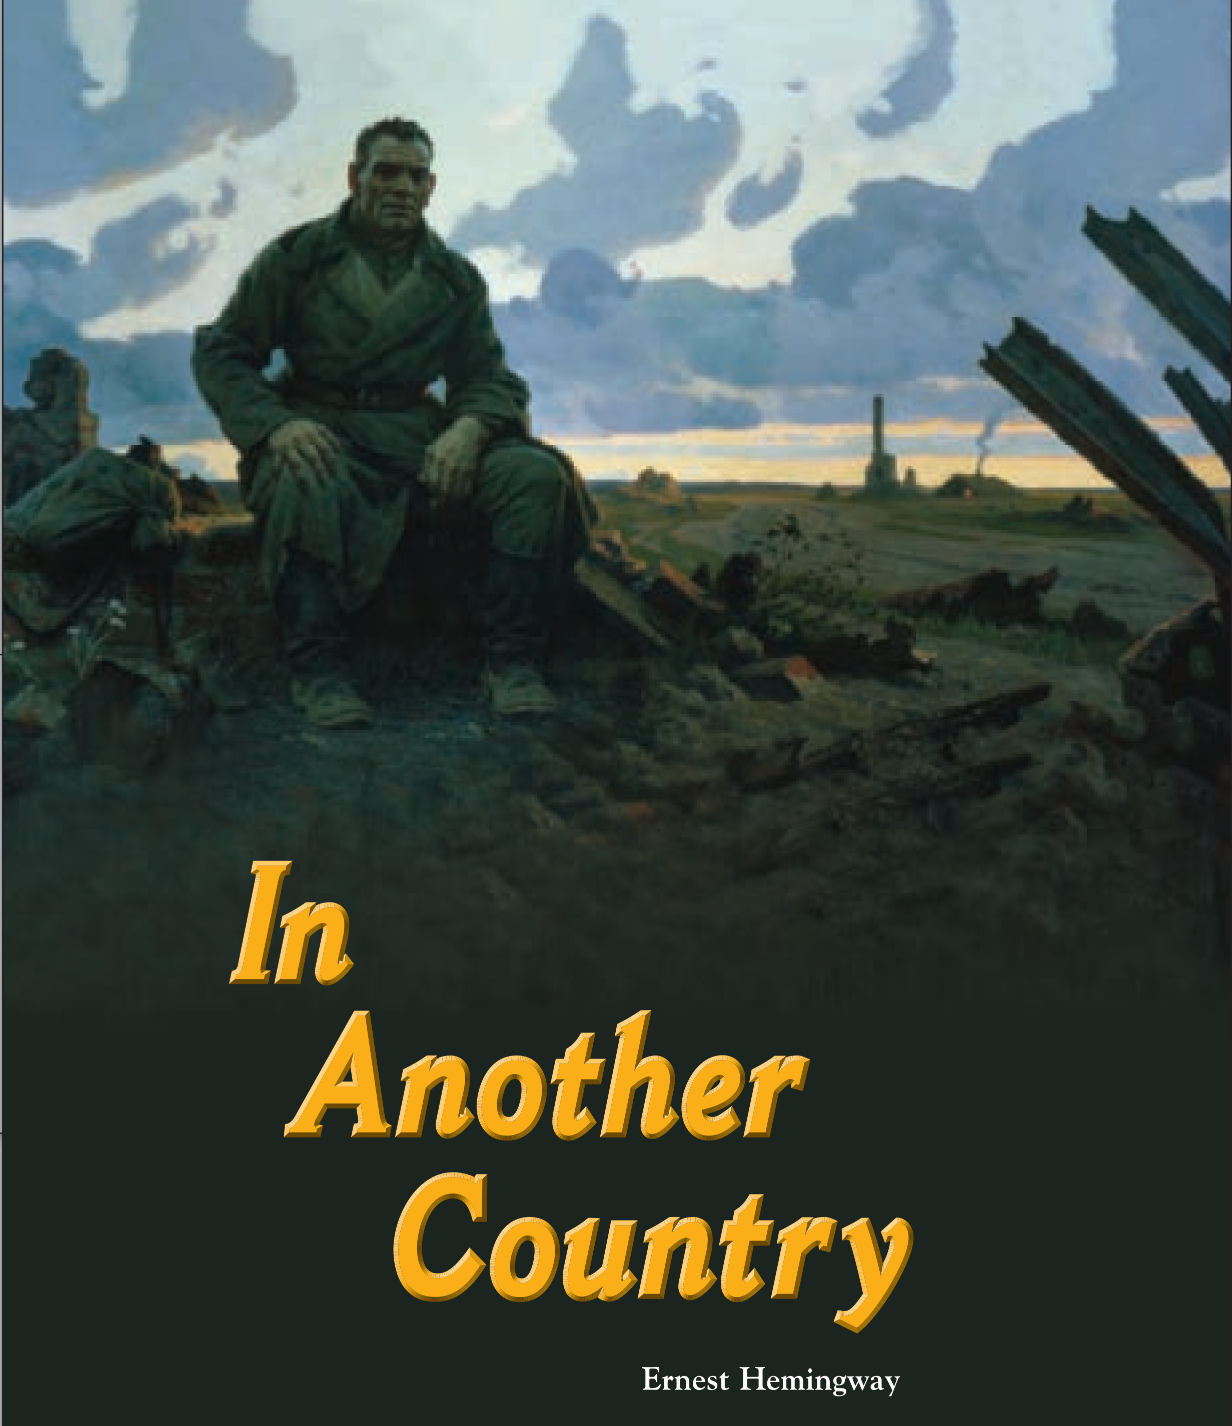
View the Art ★

Russian artist B. V. Cerbakov (1916–) is a realist painter who has often focused on military themes. Ask: What do the man's pose and expression suggest about his feelings? (The man seems composed, almost indifferent, as he sits among ruins.) As students read, ask them to consider how the man in the artwork mirrors the narrator.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 4.7
DRP: 54
Lexile: 1050



In Another Country

Ernest Hemingway

★ The Invincible Soldier. B.V. Cerbakov. Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow, Russia.

Reading Practice

Identify Writer's Technique Students may be confused by the story's lack of plot and conflict. They may also have difficulty identifying a theme. Explain that Hemingway uses literary devices that are often employed by poets, particularly imagery. Tell students to look for places where Hemingway presents images in a seemingly random way. Ask students to notice how the images suggest particular feelings and themes. Have students create a three-column chart with the headings Image, Feelings, and Themes and use the chart to make notes about images as they read. For example, the image of "deer hung stiff and heavy and empty" may make students feel grim, cold, lonely, and sad. The theme in this image could be the impersonal nature of death. After reading the story, have students use the charts and discuss how Hemingway uses images to evoke feelings and to hint at the themes of the story.

1 In the fall the war[1] was always there, but we did not go to it any more. It was cold in the fall in Milan[2] and the dark came very early. Then the electric lights came on, and it was pleasant along the streets looking in the windows. There was much game[3] hanging outside the shops, and the snow powdered in the fur of the foxes and the wind blew their tails. The deer hung stiff and heavy and empty, and small birds blew in the wind and the wind turned their feathers. It was a cold fall and the wind came down from the mountains.

We were all at the hospital every afternoon, and there were different ways of walking across the town through the dusk to the hospital. Two of the ways were alongside canals, but they were long. Always, though, you crossed a bridge across a canal to enter the hospital. There was a choice of three bridges. On one of them a woman sold roasted chestnuts. It was warm, standing in front of her charcoal fire, and the chestnuts were warm afterward in your pocket. The hospital was very old and very beautiful, and you entered through a gate and walked across a courtyard and out a gate on the other side. There were usually funerals starting from the courtyard. Beyond the old hospital were the new brick pavilions, and there we met every afternoon and were all very polite and interested in what was the matter, and sat in the machines that were to make so much difference.

The doctor came up to the machine where I was sitting and said: "What did you like best to do before the war? Did you practice a sport?"

I said: "Yes, football."

"Good," he said. "You will be able to play football again better than ever."

My knee did not bend and the leg dropped straight from the knee to the ankle without a calf, and the machine was to bend the knee and make it move as in riding a tricycle. But it did not bend yet, and instead the machine lurched when it came to the bending part. The doctor said: "That will all pass. You are a fortunate young man. You will play football again like a champion."

In the next machine was a major who had a little hand like a baby's. He winked at me when the doctor examined his hand, which was between two leather straps that bounced up and down and flapped the stiff fingers, and said: "And will I too play football, captain-doctor?" He had been a very great fencer, and before the war the greatest fencer in Italy.

The doctor went to his office in the back room and brought a photograph which showed a hand that had been withered almost as small as the major's, before it had taken a machine course, and after was a little larger. The major held the photograph with his good hand and looked at it very carefully. "A wound?" he asked.

"An industrial accident," the doctor said.

"Very interesting, very interesting," the major said, and handed it back to the doctor.

"You have confidence?"

"No," said the major.

There were three boys who came each day who were about the same age I was. They were all three from Milan, and one of them was to be a lawyer, and one was to be a painter, and one had intended to be a soldier, and after we were finished with the machines, sometimes we walked back together to the Café Cova, which was next door to the Scala.[4] We walked the short way through the communist quarter because we were four together. The people hated us because we were officers, and from a wine-shop some one would call out, "A basso

---

[1] The war is World War I (1914–1918). The United States, Italy, and other countries fought Germany and its allies.

[2] Milan is a city in northern Italy.

[3] Here, game refers to wild animals that have been hunted and killed for food.

[4] The Scala (skä′ lə) is Milan's world-famous opera house.

2 Recognize Author's Purpose What might be Hemingway's purpose in providing such a detailed description of the setting at the start of his story?

Style How would you describe the style of the dialogue? What effect does it have on your sense of the characters? 3

Vocabulary

lurch (lurch) v. to move suddenly and unevenly

withered (wi′ thərd) adj. shriveled

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Recognize Author's Purpose Answer: He may want to create a sense of reality and draw the reader in.

Ask: What feelings does the description of the setting evoke in the second paragraph? (comfortable, warm, enchanting)

Ask: How do these details fit in with the details in the previous paragraph? (The hospital seems inviting—a contrast to the cold weather and dead animals in the first paragraph.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 176.

Literary Element 3

Style Answer: The dialogue is expressed in language that is ordinary, simple, and direct. It is even a bit repetitive and colorless, like everyday speech. The dialogue suggests that the characters are ordinary people with normal concerns. Say: Hemingway uses dialogue to reveal his characters and their situations directly. The language is almost always simple and direct.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Although Hemingway writes many simple sentences, he also writes compound and compound-complex sentences. Review simple, compound, complex, and compound-complex sentences. Help students identify each type of sentence in the story. Refer students to the Language Handbook (p. R43) for an explanation of each type of sentence.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Help students improve their reading fluency to better understand the story. Have students reread the descriptions of the injuries and the promises the doctor makes to the soldiers. As students read aloud, pause and ask: What is the narrator's injury? (He is missing the calf of one of his legs.) How is the major's hand described? (His hand is little "like a baby's" and "withered.") Point out that both the characters are permanently crippled and the machines will not give them back their limbs, only help them improve what is left. This is the reason the soldiers have no confidence in the machines.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Style Answer: It is relayed in a matter-of-fact tone, with little emotion. This makes a hideous injury sound like a normal result of being in the war. Say: Hemingway's use of understatement and tone often reveals surprises. For example, at the end of the paragraph, the narrator undermines the suspense of the story by explaining that the young man with no nose later went to work in a bank. This small detail lets readers know that both the narrator and the young man survive the war.

Vocabulary 2

Context Clues Say: Explain how the details about the movement of the people help you understand the meaning of the word jostle. (The people are crowded together on a busy sidewalk, which helps to convey the idea that people bumped into one another.) Have students practice using the word "jostle" in sentences.

Big Idea 3

Modern Fiction Answer: The characters do not seem heroic but are emotionally numb; in some cases, they are disillusioned with the cause for which they fought.

Piazza Corvetto in Genoa in 1918. Alessandro Milesi. Oil on canvas. Galleria d'Arte Moderna di Nervi, Genoa, Italy.

View the Art As an important Italian port city, Genoa played a key role in both World War I and II. In what ways does this painting reflect the sense of detachment that the characters feel in Hemingway's story?

gli ufficiali!"[5] as we passed. Another boy who walked with us sometimes and made us five wore a black silk handkerchief across his face because he had no nose then and his face was to be rebuilt. He had gone out to the front[6] from the military academy and been wounded within an hour after he had gone into the front line for the first time. They rebuilt his face, but he came from a very old family and they could never get the nose exactly right. He went to South America and worked in a bank. But this was a long time ago, and then we did not any of us know how it was going to be afterward. We only knew then that there was always the war, but that we were not going to it any more.

We all had the same medals, except the boy with the black silk bandage across his face, and he had not been at the front long enough to get any medals. The tall boy with a very pale face who was to be a lawyer had been a lieutenant of Arditi[7] and had three medals of the sort we each had only one of. He had lived a very long time with death and was a little detached. We were all a little detached, and there was nothing that held us together except that we met every afternoon at the hospital. Although, as we walked to the Cova through the tough part of town, walking in the dark, with light and singing coming out of the wine-shops, and sometimes having to walk into the street when the men and women would crowd together on the sidewalk so that we would have had to jostle them to get by, we felt held together by there being something that had happened that they, the people who disliked us, did not understand. 2

---

[5] In Italian, A basso gli ufficiali! (a bä′ sō lyē o͞o fē chä′ lē) means "Down with officers!"

[6] The front is the line or area of conflict between opposing armies.

[7] The Arditi (ar dē′ tē) was a corps of soldiers specially selected for dangerous operations.

1 Style How would you describe the tone in which this gruesome information is relayed?

Modern Fiction How is the portrayal of these characters different from portrayals of war heroes in literature from earlier periods? 3

Vocabulary

detached (di tacht′) adj. not involved emotionally; aloof; indifferent jostle (jo′ səl) v. to bump, push, or shove while moving, as in a crowd

Writing Practice

Research and Report One of the few positive by-products of war is the advancement in the treatment of the wounded. Hemingway's characters illustrate this. They undergo physical therapy using innovative machines. Have students work in small groups to research medical advances that were developed during World War I. Their research might involve such fields as pharmaceuticals, anesthetics, plastic surgery, and field surgery. Have groups report their findings to the class. Have groups write a report on their findings. Remind them to use more than one source for their reports.

We ourselves all understood the Cova, where it was rich and warm and not too brightly lighted, and noisy and smoky at certain hours, and there were always girls at the tables and the illustrated papers on a rack on the wall. The girls at the Cova were very patriotic, and I found that the most patriotic people in Italy were the café girls—and I believe they are still patriotic.

The boys at first were very polite about my medals and asked me what I had done to get them. I showed them the papers, which were written in very beautiful language and full of fratellanza and abnegazione,[8] but which really said, with the adjectives removed, that I had been given the medals because I was an American. After that their manner changed a little toward me, although I was their friend against outsiders. I was a friend, but I was never really one of them after they had read the citations,[9] because it had been different with them and they had done very different things to get their medals. I had been wounded, it was true; but we all knew that being wounded, after all, was really an accident. I was never ashamed of the ribbons, though, and sometimes, after the cocktail hour, I would imagine myself having done all the things they had done to get their medals; but walking home at night through the empty streets with the cold wind and all the shops closed, trying to keep near the street lights, I knew that I would never have done such things, and I was very much afraid to die, and often lay in bed at night by myself, afraid to die and wondering how I would be when I went back to the front again.

The three with the medals were like hunting-hawks; and I was not a hawk, although I might seem a hawk to those who had never hunted; they, the three, knew better and so we drifted apart. But I stayed good friends with the boy who had been wounded his first day at the front, because he would never know now how he would have turned out; so he could never be accepted either, and I liked him because I thought perhaps he would not have turned out to be a hawk either.

The major, who had been the great fencer, did not believe in bravery, and spent much time while we sat in the machines correcting my grammar. He had complimented me on how I spoke Italian, and we talked together very easily. One day I had said that Italian seemed such an easy language to me that I could not take a great interest in it; everything was so easy to say. "Ah, yes," the major said. "Why, then, do you not take up the use of grammar?" So we took up the use of grammar, and soon Italian was such a difficult language that I was afraid to talk to him until I had the grammar straight in my mind.

The major came very regularly to the hospital. I do not think he ever missed a day, although I am sure he did not believe in the machines. There was a time when none of us believed in the machines, and one day the major said it was all nonsense. The machines were new then and it was we who were to prove them. It was an idiotic idea, he said, "a theory, like another." I had not learned my grammar, and he said I was a stupid impossible disgrace, and he was a fool to have bothered with me. He was a small man and he sat straight up in his chair with his right hand thrust into the machine and looked straight ahead at the wall while the straps thumped up and down with his fingers in them.

"What will you do when the war is over if it is over?" he asked me. "Speak grammatically!"

"I will go to the States."

"Are you married?"

"No, but I hope to be."

"The more of a fool you are," he said. He seemed very angry. "A man must not marry."

"Why, Signor Maggiore?"[10]

---

[8] Fratellanza (fra tāl än′ za) and abnegazione (ab nā ga tzyo′ nā) are Italian for "brotherhood" and "self-denial."

[9] Citations are specific references to military achievements worthy of reward or praise.

[10] Signor Maggiore (sē nyor′ ma jō′ rā) means "Mr. Major." In Italy, one said Signor before an officer's rank as a sign of respect.

Modern Fiction How does the close proximity of these three unrelated statements reflect new ideas of Modernism? 4

Teach

Big Idea 4

Modern Fiction Answer: The three statements seem unrelated but convey information about the major. They explain the contradictions within his character. Despite having been a great fencer—a sport in which opponents, like soldiers, fight one-on-one with weapons—the major does not believe in bravery. That the major enjoys discussing grammar suggests that he is educated and proud of his culture.

View the Art ★

Answer: The sense of detachment is evident in the lack of interaction among the many people depicted. Even those walking in groups seem lost in their thoughts.

Alessandro Milesi (1856–1945) was a Venetian painter best known for his depictions of everyday scenes, as in this painting done in the final year of World War I.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Have students reread the second and third paragraphs on page 747. Ask: What sentences and phrases show that the narrator did not think he was a hero? ("being wounded, after all, was really an accident"; "I was very much afraid to die"; "I was not a hawk") Then lead students in a discussion of what they consider to be heroic qualities and whether they think the narrator displays the qualities of a hero or an antihero.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Recognize Author's Purpose Answer: The author may have wanted to convey the randomness and the ironies of death. Instead of the major dying at war, his young wife died suddenly of pneumonia.

Big Idea 2

Modern Fiction Answer: Hemingway includes only details that describe a particular moment in time. He is not interested in resolving all the questions at the end of the story.

APPROACHING Remind students that Modernist stories do not have neat plots with a beginning, middle, and end. Instead, these stories capture moments in real life.

Cultural History ☆

Mourning Dress In the early twentieth century, widows wore black clothing and hats with veils for months at a time when mourning. Men wore black armbands on their upper left arms.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 180.

"Don't call me 'Signor Maggiore.'"

"Why must not a man marry?"

"He cannot marry. He cannot marry," he said angrily. "If he is to lose everything, he should not place himself in a position to lose that. He should not place himself in a position to lose. He should find things he cannot lose."

He spoke very angrily and bitterly, and looked straight ahead while he talked.

"But why should he necessarily lose it?"

"He'll lose it," the major said. He was looking at the wall. Then he looked down at the machine and jerked his little hand out from between the straps and slapped it hard against his thigh. "He'll lose it," he almost shouted. "Don't argue with me!" Then he called to the attendant who ran the machines. "Come and turn this thing off."

He went back into the other room for the light treatment and the massage. Then I heard him ask the doctor if he might use his telephone and he shut the door. When he came back into the room, I was sitting in another machine. He was wearing his cape and had his cap on, and he came directly toward my machine and put his arm on my shoulder.

"I am so sorry," he said, and patted me on the shoulder with his good hand. "I would not be rude. My wife has just died. You must forgive me."

"Oh—" I said, feeling sick for him. "I am so sorry."

He stood there biting his lower lip. "It is very difficult," he said. "I cannot resign myself."

He looked straight past me and out through the window. Then he began to cry. "I am utterly unable to resign myself," he said and choked. And then crying, his head up looking at nothing, carrying himself straight and soldierly, with tears on both his cheeks and biting his lips, he walked past the machines and out the door.

The doctor told me that the major's wife, who was very young and whom he had not married until he was definitely invalided[11] out of the war, had died of pneumonia. She had been sick only a few days. No one expected her to die. The major did not come to the hospital for three days. Then he came at the usual hour, wearing a black band on the sleeve ☆ of his uniform. When he came back, there were large framed photographs around the wall, of all sorts of wounds before and after they had been cured by the machines. In front of the machine the major used were three photographs of hands like his that were completely restored. I do not know where the doctor got them. I always understood we were the first to use the machines. The photographs did not make much difference to the major because he only looked out of the window.

> And then crying, his head up looking at nothing, carrying himself straight and soldierly, with tears on both his cheeks and biting his lips, he walked past the machines and out the door.

Vocabulary

resign (ri zīn´) v. to make oneself accept something

---

[11] Invalided means "removed from active duty because of sickness or disability.

Recognize Author's Purpose What might the unexpected death of the major's wife reveal about the author's purpose? 1

Modern Fiction How is Hemingway's omission of facts about the machines, the photos, and the fate of the major characteristic of the Modernist approach to fiction? 2

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Personal Response Explain that Hemingway's style was unique in its day, and although it has been widely imitated, it remains undeniably his own. Have students write a short personal response to Hemingway's style based on their reading of "In Another Country." Remind students to respond to Hemingway's word choice, sentence structure, dialogue, details, characters, and lack of plot. Students should conclude their responses with an evaluation. Discuss whether Hemingway's reputation as an important modern writer is well deserved.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. How did you react to the end of the story? Explain.
2. (a)Why do the narrator and the others go to the hospital every afternoon? (b)What might the machines represent?
3. (a)What is the effect of the narrator's grammar lessons? (b)Based on this effect, what generalization can you make about the narrator's views of the world?
4. (a)What makes the narrator suspicious of the machines? (b)What do his suspicions show about his attitude toward authority and the likelihood of his recovery?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)To what type of bird does the narrator compare the three young Italian men with medals? (b)How does this comparison affect your view of the three young men, and how does it stress the difference between them and the narrator?
6. (a)What is ironic about the bad news that the major receives? (b)How realistic do you find his reaction to this news?
7. (a)Besides their physical injuries, how might the narrator and the other soldiers be wounded? (b)How effectively does the story convey their attitudes?

Connect

8. Big Idea Modern Fiction How is the portrayal of war in this story different from heroic depictions in times past?
9. Connect to Today How does Hemingway's sparse writing style compare to journalism today?

Literary Element Style

When he began working for the Kansas City Star, Hemingway received a style sheet that instructed reporters to "avoid the use of adjectives, especially such extravagant ones as splendid, gorgeous, grand, magnificent, etc." Short sentences, brief opening paragraphs, and "vigorous English" were also required. Hemingway later called these "the best rules I ever learned for the business of writing."

1. What repeated words, images, and sentence rhythms appear in the opening paragraph? What effect do these elements have on the story's mood or tone?
2. How does Hemingway's style underscore the story's themes?
3. Do you think that Hemingway's journalistic tone, with its emphasis on reporting facts without emotion, robs the story of the emotion it otherwise would have? Why or why not? Support your opinion with examples.

Review: Setting

As you learned on page 602, setting is the time and place in which the events of a literary work occur.

Partner Activity Meet with another classmate to discuss the setting of "In Another Country." Consider the relevance of the story's title and how it highlights the situation of the narrator or the other characters. Also consider how the setting helps determine the story's plot events and themes. You might gather your ideas in a diagram like the one below.

Setting: Italy in World War I
Characters
Plot Events
Themes

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) They go for treatment of their war injuries. (b) The machines might represent the dubious side of technology.
3. (a) The narrator realizes that the Italian language is not as easy as he thought. (b) The narrator has a detached view until he looks at life more closely; he realizes that it is difficult.
4. (a) He has been told that his group is the first to use the machines, yet he is shown pictures of other patients who recovered by using them. (b) His suspicions reflect his distrust of authority. He seems unconvinced that he will recover completely.
5. (a) He compares them to hunting-hawks. (b) It stresses the three men's valor as compared with that of the narrator, who says he received medals just for being an American.
6. (a) The major was more at risk of dying during the war than his wife was. (b) Students may find his reaction realistic because his wife was young and her death was unexpected.
7. (a) They have been emotionally wounded. (b) The narrator's detachment and the major's anger at him may be a result of their emotional wounds.
8. Instead of portraying war as an opportunity to prove one's honor or patriotism, Hemingway portrays it as a source of physical and emotional injury.
9. Students may say that today's journalists emulate Hemingway's dispassionate, spare style.

Literary Element

1. The words cold and wind create a dark mood, as do the images of the dark streets and the dead animals. The word and appears nine times; it connects the images.
2. The stark and detached style reinforces the narrator's emotional deadness and disenchantment with the war.

Review: Setting

Students should emphasize the physical and emotional damage done by being in a country torn by war.

Progress Check

Can students analyze style?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 175.

After You Read

Reading Strategy

1. E is the correct answer because the random structure of the story exemplifies Hemingway's belief in life's unpredictability.

Academic Vocabulary

Possible answer: Despite my inability to speak Spanish, I decided to study abroad in Peru for a semester.

Write with Style

Use these criteria when evaluating students' writing:

- Does the writer use simple and compound sentences?
- Is the writer's word choice simple and clear?
- Does the writer accurately imitate Hemingway's style to relate an emotional experience from his or her past?

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 213–214.

Reading Strategy Recognize Author's Purpose

SAT Skills Practice

1. Hemingway's fragmentary presentation and lack of a clear resolution help to
   - (A) reconcile readers to the death of the major's wife
   - (B) explain why the major and the narrator survived the war
   - (C) illustrate the chasm between the characters' cultures
   - (D) emphasize the narrator's misplaced trust in the medical machines
   - (E) convey the author's themes about the randomness and ironies of life

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Antonyms Brainstorm antonyms for each vocabulary word below.

lurch withered detached jostle resign

EXAMPLE: modest
Antonyms: arrogant, flashy, flamboyant
Sample explanation: A modest person does not seek attention, but a flashy one does.

Academic Vocabulary

Despite the cultural differences between the narrator and the Italians, they are friends.*

Despite is an academic word. Speaking casually, you might say that despite the rain, you were going to play soccer in the park. To further explore the meaning of this word, complete this sentence:
Despite my inability to* ______, I ______.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Write with Style

Apply Diction

Assignment Hemingway's style is characterized by simple and compound sentences, realistic dialogue, and clear, direct word choice. This style makes the narrator seem detached from the horrors of war. Using two or more of Hemingway's techniques, write a few paragraphs about an emotionally intense event.

Get Ideas Brainstorm to come up with a list of events to which you had a strong emotional reaction. Review journal entries, talk with a friend or relative, or review news articles to generate ideas.

Give It Structure Outline the main occurrences from this experience, especially encounters with others where you might include deceptively simple dialogue, like Hemingway's, which heightens emotional intensity for readers.

Look at Language As you review your piece, evaluate your word choice and sentence structure. Consider how the words you have chosen affect the mood of your piece. Do they suit the mood? Word choice is especially important in this sparse style. For instance, the use of the word flapped on page 745 has a very different effect than if Hemingway had said that the major's hand waved or shook. Choose key words from your piece and, in a chart like the one below, examine the connotation of the words you used versus similar words you could have used.

Word	Connotation	Alternative	Difference in Connotation
livid	explosive emotion	angry	less powerful or specific bloom	lush flowers	bud	newer, less full flower
clatter	disruptive sound	noise	less specific, not negative

Also, try to make your sentences direct, like Hemingway's, to match his style. "It was a cold fall and the wind came down from the mountains" is very different from "That fall was chillingly cold, day in and day out, and the frigid wind blew down angrily from the snow-capped mountains."

Vocabulary

Antonyms for lurch: glide, move smoothly
Sample explanation: Something that lurches moves quickly and unevenly.
Antonyms for withered: ripened, thriving, lush
Sample explanation: A plant that is withered is dried and dying, whereas a plant that is thriving is growing and full of life.
Antonyms for detached: involved, concerned, caring
Sample explanation: A detached person does not get involved in emotional situations, but a concerned person does.
Antonyms for jostle: restrain
Sample explanation: To jostle is to move something around, but to restrain is to keep something in one place.
Antonyms for resign: refuse, deny
Sample explanation: A person who resigns himself accepts something, but a person who refuses does not.

For additional grammar practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 179.

Grammar Workshop

Coordinating Conjunctions

Literature Connection A coordinating conjunction is a word, like but in the sentence below, that joins words or groups of words that are of equal grammatical importance in a sentence.

> "In the fall the war was always there, but we did not go to it any more."
>
> —Ernest Hemingway, "In Another Country"

Learning Objectives

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objectives:

Grammar:
Understanding how to use coordinating conjunctions.

Understanding how to use commas with coordinating conjunctions.

Coordinating Conjunctions

and but or nor for yet so

Examples

Use coordinating conjunctions to join parts of a sentence.

He looked straight past me and out through the window.

The hospital was very old and very beautiful.

Use coordinating conjunctions to link short, choppy sentences or to connect sentences logically.

Hemingway was rejected by the military, so he became an ambulance driver.

In the fall the war was always there, but we did not go to it any more.

Practice Rewrite the following sentences, combining the sentence parts by using one of the coordinating conjunctions in parentheses.

1. A woman sold chestnuts, (and, but) we didn't buy them often.
2. The doctor told the men to exercise (or, and) face the consequences.
3. The hospital was old, (so, and) it was beautiful.
4. The major had neither confidence (or, nor) the ability to fence again.
5. We were glad to be in town, (so, for) there was fighting elsewhere.
6. The people hated us, (yet, so) they were not violent.
7. I could speak Italian, (but, and) the major corrected my grammar.
8. The major's wife had died, (for, so) he cried and looked out the window.

Commas and Coordinate Conjunctions

Use a comma before conjunctions when they join clauses that could stand on their own as complete sentences.

- He had complimented me on how I spoke Italian, and we talked together very easily.

Test-Taking Tip

Before handing in a written test, check to see that you have used appropriate coordinating conjunctions.

Language Handbook

For more on coordinating conjunctions, see Language Handbook, p. R43.

Literature Online

Grammar For more grammar practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Remind students that conjunctions are words that join other words or groups of words. Write these sentences on the board:

- The man sold fruit and nuts.
- Al came, but he left early.

Ask: What are the conjunctions in the two sentences? (and, but) Point out that in the second sentence, the conjunction joins two groups of words or clauses.

Remind students that an independent clause is a group of words with a subject and a verb that can stand alone as a sentence. Ask: What are the two independent clauses in the second sentence? (1. Al came; 2. He left early.)

Grammar Workshop

Coordinating Conjunctions

Focus

Run-on Sentences

On the board, write: He went to the hospital every day and he used the physical therapy machines. He attended physical therapy every day but his leg did not improve. Discuss why each sentence needs a comma and where it should go.

Teach

Commas

Students may have trouble understanding when to insert a comma before a conjunction. If the conjunction is joining two nouns, verbs, or phrases, a comma should not be used. If the conjunction joins two independent clauses, a comma should go before the conjunction.

Assess

Practice

1. A woman sold roasted chestnuts, but we didn't buy them often.
2. The doctor told the men to exercise or face the consequences.
3. The hospital was old, and it was beautiful.
4. The major had neither confidence nor the ability to fence again.
5. We were glad to be in town, for there was fighting elsewhere.
6. The people hated us, yet they were not violent.
7. I could speak Italian, but the major corrected my grammar.
8. The major's wife had died, so he cried and looked out the window.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 46

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 68

Or ask students to think of images they associate with winter in the northern part of the United States. If students need prompting, tell them to close their eyes and imagine a snow-covered scene.

As they read, have students compare their own winter-inspired feelings and wishes to those expressed by the characters in the story.

Before You Read

Winter Dreams

Meet F. Scott Fitzgerald

(1896–1940)

F. Scott Fitzgerald once wrote that "all the stories that came into my head had a touch of disaster in them . . . I was pretty sure living wasn't the reckless, careless business these people thought." Many of Fitzgerald's stories and novels describe the reckless lifestyles of young, wealthy Americans in the 1920s.

> "Show me a hero and I will write you a tragedy."
>
> —F. Scott Fitzgerald, from Notebooks

Fitzgerald was born in St. Paul, Minnesota. He attended Princeton University, where he wrote for the newspaper and participated in the drama club. Fitzgerald joined the army before graduating, and while stationed in the South in 1918, he met Zelda Sayre at a country club dance. He fell in love, but Zelda was at first reluctant to marry him. That same summer, a New York publisher rejected the manuscript of his novel The Romantic Egotist.

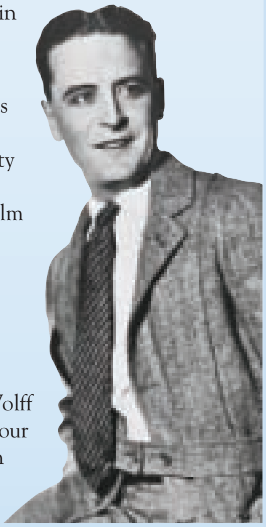
Literary Success Following his stint in the army, Fitzgerald settled in New York City, working for an advertising agency, but he eventually returned to St. Paul to revise his novel. The publisher accepted the revision, retitled This Side of Paradise, and Fitzgerald was ecstatic. He and Zelda were married in 1920, and in 1921 they made their first trip to Europe, returning to St. Paul for the birth of their daughter Frances Scott (Scottie).

Literature Online

Author Search For more about F. Scott Fitzgerald, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Fitzgerald's second novel, The Beautiful and the Damned, and "Winter Dreams" were published in 1922. While in France and Italy, he wrote and revised his most successful novel, The Great Gatsby (1925). He and Zelda lived lavishly, both in the United States and abroad, and spent most of the money Fitzgerald earned from his writing. They regularly moved from Paris to various cities on the French Riviera and then back to Paris. But when the frantic decade ended with the stock market crash in 1929, Fitzgerald's private life and prosperous career also crashed. His lucrative writing career began to dry up with the onset of the Depression. In 1930 Zelda suffered a series of nervous breakdowns and was hospitalized in Europe and the United States.

Later Years Though Fitzgerald struggled in the 1930s with alcoholism and with his marriage, he continued to write stories and novels. Tender Is the Night was published in 1934, and under contract with MGM, Fitzgerald worked on several screenplays in Hollywood. He was working on his fifth novel, The Last Tycoon, when he died in Hollywood of a heart attack at the age of 44. Zelda died in a hospital fire in North Carolina in 1948.



Fitzgerald's works, and his life with Zelda, have inspired more than twenty films of varying success. There have been three film versions of The Great Gatsby alone. Reviews were mixed of all of the movie versions of the novel. There are few dissenters about the book itself, however. Tobias Wolff says that Fitzgerald "saw our American world . . . with clearer eyes than any of his contemporaries."

Selection Skills

Winter Dreams

Literary Elements
- Motivation (SE pp. 753, 755–757, 761, 762, 766, 767, 771)
- Conflict (SE p. 771)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Point of View (SE p. 772)
- Dramatize a Scene (TE p. 756)
- College Application Essay (TE p. 764)

Reading Skills
- Evaluate Sensory Details (SE pp. 753, 754, 758, 760, 763–765, 771)
- Preview (TE p. 754)

Vocabulary Skills
- Synonyms (SE p. 771)
- Academic Vocabulary (SE p. 771)

Listening/Speaking/ Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE pp. 756, 760, 764, 766)
- Discussion (TE p. 762)

Study Skills/Research
- The 1920s Economy (TE p. 758)
- Research the Author (TE p. 760)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

Do you think it is possible to love someone your entire life even though you are not with that person? Freewrite for ten minutes to explore this question.

Build Background

Many of Fitzgerald's stories are somewhat autobiographical. In 1915 he met Ginevra King at a party in St. Paul. The attraction was instant. Fitzgerald and Ginevra corresponded regularly, and Ginevra kept a diary in which she recorded that she was "madly in love with him." Ginevra had other boyfriends, however, and Fitzgerald was jealous. The romance was doomed. Ginevra ended up marrying a wealthy stockbroker, and shortly after, Scott married Zelda. Critics see aspects of Ginevra in most of Fitzgerald's heroines, however, including Judy Jones in "Winter Dreams."

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Modern Fiction

As you read "Winter Dreams," ask yourself, What does this story reveal about romantic feelings and relationships during the Jazz Age?

Literary Element Motivation

Motivation refers to the stated or implied reason or cause for a character's actions. It is often revealed through a combination of the character's desires and morals and the circumstances in which the character finds himself or herself. As you read "Winter Dreams," ask yourself, What motivates the two main characters?

Reading Strategy Evaluate Sensory Details

Sensory details are details that appeal to one or more of the five senses. Writers use these details to help the reader imagine or experience more deeply the content of their work. As you read this story, ask yourself, How effective is Fitzgerald's use of sensory details?

Tip: Take Notes Use a chart like the one below to record the sensory details you find as you read.

Detail	Sense It Appeals To
"desolate sand-boxes knee-deep in crusted ice"	sight

Learning Objectives

For pages 752–771

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing motivation.

Reading: Evaluating sensory details.

Vocabulary

grimace (grim´ is) n. facial expression showing contempt, disgust, or pain; p. 755 Lee made a grimace at the horrible smell.

ominous (om´ ə nəs) adj. threatening; p. 756 Black clouds in the west looked ominous.

perturbation (pur´ tər bā´ shən) n. state of being perturbed, anxious, or uneasy; p. 757 The clerk showed perturbation when the police appeared.

petulance (pech´ ə ləns) n. irritability; impatience; p. 761 The child's petulance wore on the babysitter so much that she refused to return the following week.

mundane (mun dān´) adj. ordinary; p. 761 The mundane details disappointed them.

Tip: Synonyms Understanding words that are similar in meaning to an unfamiliar word, or synonyms, can help you learn the word. Example: Ominous and sinister are synonyms; they both mean threatening.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Dexter Green, a boy from a middle-class family, works as a caddy at a local golf course. There he becomes obsessed with Judy Jones, the daughter of a wealthy businessman. Dexter's goal is to become rich, join high society, and win over Judy. A few years later, Judy accepts him as a suitor but treats him badly. Dexter tries to forget her, but Judy keeps him under her spell. At the end of the story, Dexter learns that Judy has married badly but is a devoted mother. Dexter cannot accept that his dreams have become old and faded.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 183–188.

Vocabulary

Word Origins Have students use a dictionary to find the origins of vocabulary words. Then ask students to find connections between the meaning of the vocabulary words and the meaning of the words from which they were derived. Explain that finding connections will help them remember the meaning of the words.

APPROACHING Tell approaching level students that ominous comes from the Latin word omen, which means "forboding." Ask: What is an omen? Also point out that mundane comes from the Latin word mundus, which means "world."

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 191.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Explain that while plot is about what happens in the story, motivation is about why things happen. Give the following example: Vinita is an 11th-grade student. Even though her classes are difficult this semester, she decides to take a part-time job at the local library. Ask: What are some possible reasons Vinita might have had for making this decision? (She may have wanted to earn some pocket money or to save for college; she may be thinking about working as a librarian, and she wanted some experience working in a library; she may enjoy being at the library; she may be able to do the library work and get her homework done while earning money.) Say: You have described some of Vinita's possible motivations.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Sensory Details

Answer: The details of winter's shutting like a box, Dexter's melancholy, the ragged birds, and the miserable wind all reinforce the gloominess of the setting.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p.190.

Writer's Technique

Fitzgerald's Style The narrator offers a glimpse of happiness—the crispness of fall and bright colors of summer—amid a description of the misery of winter. Many of Fitzgerald's characters experience life similarly—as a plodding misery punctuated by brief flashes of happiness.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 7.9
DRP: 60
Lexile: 1080

Winter Dreams

F. Scott Fitzgerald

Some of the caddies were poor as sin and lived in one-room houses with a neurasthenic[1] cow in the front yard, but Dexter Green's father owned the second best grocery-store in Black Bear—the best one was "The Hub," patronized by the wealthy people from Sherry Island—and Dexter caddied only for pocket-money.

In the fall when the days became crisp and gray, and the long Minnesota winter shut down like the white lid of a box, Dexter's skis moved over the snow that hid the fairways of the golf course. At these times the country gave him a feeling of profound melancholy—it offended him that the links should be in enforced fallowness, haunted by ragged sparrows for the long season. It was dreary, too, that on the tees where the gay colors fluttered in summer there were now only the desolate sand-boxes knee-deep in crusted ice. When he crossed the hills the wind blew cold as misery, and if the sun was out he tramped with his eyes squinted up against the hard dimensionless glare.

In April the winter ceased abruptly. The snow ran down into Black Bear Lake scarcely tarrying for the early golfers to brave the season with red and black balls. Without elation, without an interval of moist glory, the cold was gone.

Dexter knew that there was something dismal about this Northern spring, just as he knew there was something gorgeous about the fall. Fall made him clinch his hands and tremble and repeat idiotic sentences to himself, and make brisk abrupt gestures of command to imaginary audiences and armies. October filled him with hope which November raised to a sort of ecstatic triumph, and in this mood the fleeting brilliant impressions of the summer at Sherry Island were ready

Evaluate Sensory Details What details in this paragraph help you visualize the gloomy setting? 1

---

[1] A neurasthenic cow is one that is thin and weak.

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Preview Explain that Fitzgerald's story follows one character as he strives to reach his goal of becoming rich and entering a higher social circle. Dexter Green is not content with a comfortable middle-class life and dreams of being something greater. On the board, write the following questions, and then ask students to keep them in mind as they read.

- Have you ever wanted to be someone completely different from who you are?
- Have you ever been obsessed by a goal that in the end was not right for you?

grist to his mill. He became a golf champion and defeated Mr. T. A. Hedrick in a marvellous match played a hundred times over the fairways of his imagination, a match each detail of which he changed about untiringly—sometimes he won with almost laughable ease, sometimes he came up magnificently from behind. Again, stepping from a Pierce-Arrow automobile, like Mr. Mortimer Jones, he strolled frigidly into the lounge of the Sherry Island Golf Club—or perhaps, surrounded by an admiring crowd, he gave an exhibition of fancy diving from the springboard of the club raft. . . . Among those who watched him in open-mouthed wonder was Mr. Mortimer Jones.

And one day it came to pass that Mr. Jones—himself and not his ghost—came up to Dexter with tears in his eyes and said that Dexter was the — — best caddy in the club, and wouldn't he decide not to quit if Mr. Jones made it worth his while, because every other — — caddy in the club lost one ball a hole for him—regularly——

2 "No, sir," said Dexter decisively, "I don't want to caddy any more." Then, after a pause: "I'm too old."

"You're not more than fourteen. Why the devil did you decide just this morning that you wanted to quit? You promised that next week you'd go over to the State tournament with me."

"I decided I was too old."

Dexter handed in his "A Class" badge, collected what money was due him from the caddy master, and walked home to Black Bear Village.

"The best — — caddy I ever saw," shouted Mr. Mortimer Jones over a drink that afternoon. "Never lost a ball! Willing! Intelligent! Quiet! Honest! Grateful!"

3 The little girl who had done this was eleven—beautifully ugly as little girls are apt to be who are destined after a few years to be inexpressibly lovely and bring no end of misery to a great number of men. The spark, however, was perceptible. There was a general ungodliness in the way her lips twisted down at the corners when she smiled, and in the—Heaven help us!—in the almost passionate quality of her eyes. Vitality is born in such women. It was utterly in evidence now, shining through her thin frame in a sort of glow. 3

She had come eagerly out on to the course at nine o'clock with a white linen nurse and five small new golf-clubs in a white canvas bag which the nurse was carrying. When Dexter first saw her she was standing by the caddy houses, rather ill at ease and trying to conceal the fact by engaging her nurse in an obviously unnatural conversation graced by startling and irrelevant grimaces from herself.

"Well, it's certainly a nice day, Hilda," Dexter heard her say. She drew down the corners of her mouth, smiled, and glanced furtively around, her eyes in transit falling for an instant on Dexter.

Then to the nurse:

"Well, I guess there aren't very many people out here this morning, are there?"

The smile again—radiant, blatantly artificial—convincing.

"I don't know what we're supposed to do now," said the nurse, looking nowhere in particular.

"Oh, that's all right. I'll fix it up."

Dexter stood perfectly still, his mouth slightly ajar. He knew that if he moved forward a step his state would be in her line of vision—if he moved backward he would lose his full view of her face. For a moment he had not realized how young she was. Now he remembered having seen her several times the year before—in bloomers.[2]

Suddenly, involuntarily, he laughed, a short abrupt laugh—then, startled by himself, he turned and began to walk quickly away.

"Boy!"

Dexter stopped.

"Boy—"

Beyond question he was addressed. Not only that, but he was treated to that absurd smile, that 4 Motivation Why do you think Dexter has these particular daydreams?

---

[2] Bloomers are baggy trousers gathered at the knee and once worn by girls and women as an athletic costume.

Vocabulary

grimace (grim´ is) n. facial expression showing contempt, disgust, or pain

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Make Inferences Point out that Dexter quitting as a caddy is a real event, not part of his daydream. Ask: Why do you think Dexter quits? (He says he is too old, but in the previous paragraph he was daydreaming about beating a rich man at golf; Dexter may be thinking he is above his job as caddy.)

APPROACHING Ask: What transitional phrase shows the story shift from Dexter's daydream to the reality of Mr. Jones speaking with him? ("And one day it came to pass")

Literary Element 3

Character Tell students that Fitzgerald characterizes Judy Jones as a woman-child throughout the story even though she is only eleven years old when she first appears in the story. Ask: Which words from the story more typically describe a woman than a young girl? (The narrator talks about the little girl's "spark," the "ungodliness" in her lips, and calls her eyes "passionate.")

Literary Element 4

Motivation Answer: He is imagining a future beyond his lowly job as caddy.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Have students keep a list of unfamiliar words. Some terms have to do with golf—caddy, fairway—and others are old-fashioned—spring-board, Pierce-Arrow automobile. Have students use context clues to find the meaning of the words.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Explain that the narrator does not always tell events in the order in which they happened. Have students create a dual timeline, one that shows events in the order they appear in the story and another that places events in their chronological order.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Motivation Answer: Students will likely say that the girl's behavior is not justified; she is being bratty and bossy.

APPROACHING Ask: What do Judy's actions reveal about her character? (She is impulsive and bossy) Ask: Why does Fitzgerald describe Dexter as feeling "a monstrous convictiton" that Judy is right in hitting her nurse? (Dexter is immediately charmed by Judy's looks and antics at their first meeting.)

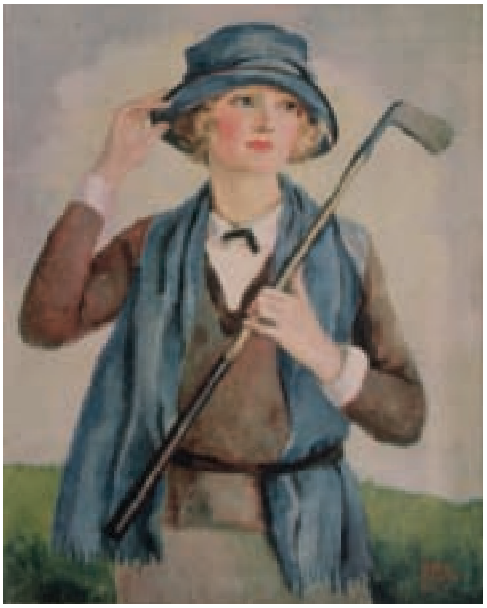
View the Art ★

Answer: The woman in the image is stylishly dressed and appears utterly self-assured. Portrait of a Woman Golfer by Maude Martin Ellis reinforces the image of golf as a sport for the wealthy.



Portrait of a Woman Golfer, 1922. Maude Martin Ellis. Private collection.

View the Art When Fitzgerald wrote this story, golf—a sport long dominated by men—was becoming popular with women as well. How does the woman in this picture compare with your image of Miss Jones? ★ preposterous smile—the memory of which at least a dozen men were to carry into middle age.

"Boy, do you know where the golf teacher is?"

"He's giving a lesson."

"Well, do you know where the caddy-master is?"

"He isn't here yet this morning."

"Oh." For a moment this baffled her. She stood alternately on her right and left foot.

"We'd like to get a caddy," said the nurse. "Mr. Mortimer Jones sent us out to play golf, and we don't know how without we get a caddy."

Here she was stopped by an ominous glance from Miss Jones, followed immediately by the smile.

"There aren't any caddies here except me," said Dexter to the nurse, "and I got to stay here in charge until the caddy-master gets here."

"Oh."

Miss Jones and her retinue[3] now withdrew, and at a proper distance from Dexter became involved in a heated conversation, which was concluded by Miss Jones taking one of the clubs and hitting it on the ground with violence. For further emphasis she raised it again and was about to bring it down smartly upon the nurse's bosom, when the nurse seized the club and twisted it from her hands.

"You damn little mean old thing!" cried Miss Jones wildly.

Another argument ensued. Realizing that the elements of comedy were implied in the scene, Dexter several times began to laugh, but each time restrained the laugh before it reached audibility. He could not resist the monstrous conviction that the little girl was justified in beating the nurse.

The situation was resolved by the fortuitous appearance of the caddy-master, who was appealed to immediately by the nurse.

"Miss Jones is to have a little caddy, and this one says he can't go."

"Mr. McKenna said I was to wait here till you came," said Dexter quickly.

"Well, he's here now." Miss Jones smiled cheerfully at the caddy-master. Then she dropped her bag and set off at a haughty mince[4] toward the first tee.

"Well?" The caddy-master turned to Dexter. "What you standing there like a dummy for? Go pick up the young lady's clubs."

"I don't think I'll go out to-day," said Dexter.

"You don't—"

"I think I'll quit."

The enormity of his decision frightened him. He was a favorite caddy, and the thirty dollars a

Vocabulary

ominous (om′ ə nəs) adj. threatening

---

[3] A retinue is an attendant or a helper.

[4] A mince is a proper, affected walk.

Motivation Do you think Miss Jones's anger is justified? Why or why not? 1

Writing Practice

SMALL GROUP Dramatize a Scene Have students imagine the scene with Dexter, Judy, and her nurse on the golf course as a moment on a television show. Have small groups of students write a one- or two-minute television script dramatizing this scene. Instruct students to include stage directions, dialogue, and an inner monologue for Dexter that he can speak out loud to the audience. After rehearsing, students can act out the scene.

month he earned through the summer were not to be made elsewhere around the lake. But he had received a strong emotional shock, and his perturbation required a violent and immediate outlet.

It was not so simple as that, either. As so frequently would be the case in the future, Dexter was unconsciously dictated to by his winter dreams.

II

Now, of course, the quality and the seasonability of these winter dreams varied, but the stuff of them remained. They persuaded Dexter several years later to pass up a business course at the State university—his father, prospering now, would have paid his way—for the precarious advantage of attending an older and more famous university in the East, where he was bothered by his scanty funds. But do not get the impression, because his winter dreams happened to be concerned at first with musings on the rich, that there was anything merely snobbish in the boy. He wanted not association with glittering things and glittering people—he wanted the glittering things themselves. Often he reached out for the best without knowing why he wanted it—and sometimes he ran up against the mysterious denials and prohibitions in which life indulges. It is with one of those denials and not with his career as a whole that this story deals.

He made money. It was rather amazing. After college he went to the city from which Black Bear Lake draws its wealthy patrons. When he was only twenty-three and had been there not quite two years, there were already people who liked to say: "Now there's a boy—" All about him rich men's sons were peddling bonds precariously, or investing patrimonies[5] precariously, or plodding through the two dozen volumes of the "George Washington Commercial Course," but Dexter borrowed a thousand dollars on his college degree and his confident mouth, and bought a partnership in a laundry.

It was a small laundry when he went into it, but Dexter made a specialty of learning how the English washed fine woolen golf-stockings without shrinking them, and within a year he was catering to the trade that wore knickerbockers.[6] Men were insisting that their Shetland hose and sweaters go to his laundry, just as they had insisted on a caddy who could find golf-balls. A little later he was doing their wives' lingerie as well—and running five branches in different parts of the city. Before he was twenty-seven he owned the largest string of laundries in his section of the country. It was then that he sold out and went to New York. But the part of his story that concerns us goes back to the days when he was making his first big success.

When he was twenty-three Mr. Hart—one of the gray-haired men who liked to say "Now there's a boy"—gave him a guest card to the Sherry Island Golf Club for a week-end. ☆ So he signed his name one day on the register, and that afternoon played golf in a foursome with Mr. Hart and Mr. Sandwood and Mr. T. A. Hedrick. He did not consider it necessary to remark that he had once carried Mr. Hart's bag over this same links, and that he knew every trap and gully with his eyes shut—but he found himself glancing at the four caddies who trailed them, trying to catch a gleam or gesture that would remind him of himself, that would lessen the gap which lay between his present and his past.

It was a curious day, slashed abruptly with fleeting, familiar impressions. One minute he had the sense of being a trespasser—in the next he was impressed by the tremendous superiority he felt toward Mr. T. A. Hedrick, who was a bore and not even a good golfer any more.

2 Modern Fiction What is the "emotional shock" that has made Dexter quit caddying?

3 Motivation What is Dexter's motivation for seeking "the glittering things"?

Vocabulary

perturbation (pur′ tər bā′ shən) n. state of being perturbed, anxious, or uneasy

---

[5] A patrimony is an inheritance from a father.

[6] Knickerbockers are full pants gathered just below the knee.

Teach

Big Idea 2

Modern Fiction
Answer: The realization that a bratty 11-year-old girl is allowed to tell him what to do shocked him emotionally.

Literary Element 3

Motivation Answer: Having glittering things is part of Dexter's winter dreams.

APPROACHING Say: Remember that Dexter's main motivation—his winter dreams—is not clearly stated. It is suggested by his daydreaming and his decisions to quit caddying and to attend a prestigious eastern school. Point out that Dexter is motivated to obtain the things that he is denied of when he is younger: wealth, prestige, the pretty rich girl.

Cultural History ☆

Golf in America Americans played informal rounds of golf as early as 1779. Players hit balls on playing fields for more than 100 years before clubs with groomed courses were created in the late 1800s.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced Tell students that malicious is an adjective related to the noun malice. Malice means the desire to cause pain or injury to another. Have students guess the meaning of malicious.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Established Have students form small groups and assign passages to read aloud. Ask them to discuss what happens in the passage and what they noticed about Fitzgerald's use of language.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Character Say: Try to imagine Judy's tone of voice and facial expressions when she apologizes for having hit the man with her ball. Ask: Do you think the girl was sorry? (Her casual glance and her desire to "play through" suggest that she is not sorry.) Ask: Do you think the girl is ingenuous or malicious? (Students may suggest that she is malicious; she seems to know exactly what she is doing.)

Reading Strategy 2

Evaluate Sensory Details

Answer: The description is appealing because it supports the previous statement that "she was arrestingly beautiful" and emphasizes her vibrancy. The description appeals to the senses of sight and touch.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask: What do you think "high" color means? (bright red)

Reading Strategy 3

Evaluate Sensory Details

Answer: Like the lake, Dexter becomes quiet and reflective at the thought of being near Judy. Both nature and Dexter experience a feeling of quiet anticipation at Judy's approach.

Then, because of a ball Mr. Hart lost near the fifteenth green, an enormous thing happened. While they were searching the stiff grasses of the rough there was a clear call of "Fore!" from behind a hill in their rear. And as they all turned abruptly from their search a bright new ball sliced abruptly over the hill and caught Mr. T. A. Hedrick in the abdomen.

"By Gad!" cried Mr. T. A. Hedrick, "they ought to put some of these crazy women off the course. It's getting to be outrageous."

A head and a voice came up together over the hill:

"Do you mind if we go through?"

"You hit me in the stomach!" declared Mr. Hedrick wildly.

"Did I?" The girl approached the group of men. "I'm sorry. I yelled 'Fore!'"

1 Her glance fell casually on each of the men—then scanned the fairway for her ball.

"Did I bounce into the rough?"

It was impossible to determine whether this question was ingenuous or malicious. In a moment, however, she left no doubt, for as her partner came up over the hill she called cheerfully:

"Here I am! I'd have gone on the green except that I hit something."

As she took her stance for a short mashie[7] shot, Dexter looked at her closely. She wore a blue gingham dress, rimmed at throat and shoulders with a white edging that accentuated her tan. The quality of exaggeration, of thinness, which had made her passionate eyes and down-turning mouth absurd at eleven, was gone now. She was arrestingly beautiful. The color in her cheeks was centered like the color in a picture—it was not a "high" color, but a sort of fluctuating and feverish warmth, so shaded that it seemed at any moment it would recede and disappear. This color and the mobility of her mouth gave a continual impression of flux, of intense life, of passionate vitality—balanced only partially by the sad luxury of her eyes.

She swung her mashie impatiently and without interest, pitching the ball into a sand-pit on the other side of the green. With a quick, insincere smile and a careless "Thank you!" she went on after it.

"That Judy Jones!" remarked Mr. Hedrick on the next tee, as they waited—some moments—for her to play on ahead. "All she needs is to be turned up and spanked for six months and then to be married off to an old-fashioned cavalry captain."

"My God, she's good-looking!" said Mr. Sandwood, who was just over thirty.

"Good-looking!" cried Mr. Hedrick contemptuously. "She always looks as if she wanted to be kissed! Turning those big cow-eyes on every calf in town!"

It was doubtful if Mr. Hedrick intended a reference to the maternal instinct.

"She'd play pretty good golf if she'd try," said Mr. Sandwood.

"She has no form," said Mr. Hedrick solemnly.

"She has a nice figure," said Mr. Sandwood.

"Better thank the Lord she doesn't drive a swifter ball," said Mr. Hart, winking at Dexter.

Later in the afternoon the sun went down with a riotous swirl of gold and varying blues and scarlets, and left the dry, rustling night of Western summer. Dexter watched from the veranda of the Golf Club, watched the even overlap of the waters in the little wind, silver molasses under the harvest-moon. Then the moon held a finger to her lips and the lake became a clear pool, pale and quiet. Dexter put on his bathing-suit and swam out to the farthest raft, where he stretched dripping on the wet canvas of the springboard.

There was a fish jumping and a star shining and the lights around the lake were gleaming. Over on a dark peninsula a piano was playing the songs of last summer and of summers before that—songs from "Chin-Chin" and "The Count of Luxemburg" and "The Chocolate

---

[7] A mashie is a five-iron used in playing golf.

2 Evaluate Sensory Details Why is this a pleasing description of the girl's cheeks? To what sense does the description appeal?

Evaluate Sensory Details How does this description reflect Dexter's feelings for Judy? 3

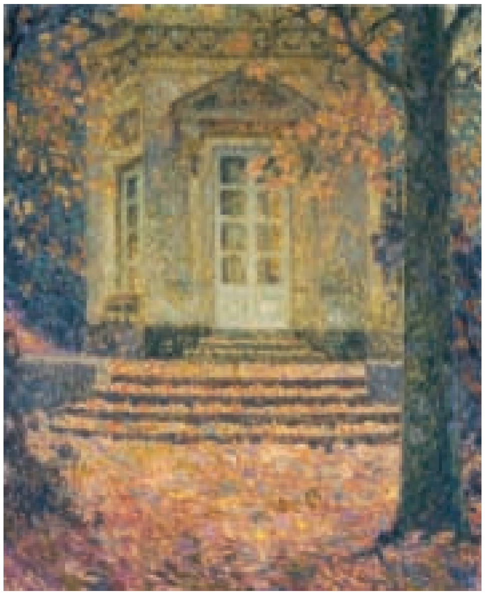
Research Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW The 1920s Economy Dexter Green is able to become wealthy thanks to the economic boom that took place in urban areas in the years following World War I. Investing in stocks, trading bonds, and borrowing money became more common among the middle class. The widespread buying of stocks on credit, however, would eventually turn the boom into a devastating crash. Encourage interested students to research one impact of the economic boom on the American lifestyle in the 1920s. Have students write a paragraph about their research and share the information with the class.



The Music Pavilion. Henri Le Sidaner. Oil on canvas, 73 x 60.5 cm. Private collection. ★

Soldier"[8]—and because the sound of a piano over a stretch of water had always seemed beautiful to Dexter he lay perfectly quiet and listened.

4 The tune the piano was playing at that moment had been gay and new five years before when Dexter was a sophomore at college. They had played it at a prom once when he could not afford the luxury of proms, and he had stood outside the gymnasium and listened. The sound of the tune precipitated in him a sort of ecstasy and it was with that ecstasy he viewed what happened to him now. It was a mood of intense appreciation, a sense that, for once, he was magnificently attuned to life and that everything about him was radiating a brightness and a glamour he might never know again.

A low, pale oblong detached itself suddenly from the darkness of the Island, spitting forth the reverberated sound of a racing motor-boat. Two white streamers of cleft water rolled themselves out behind it and almost immediately the boat was beside him, drowning out the hot tinkle of the piano in the drone of its spray. Dexter raising himself on his arms was aware of a figure standing at the wheel, of two dark eyes regarding him over the lengthening space of water—then the boat had gone by and was sweeping in an immense and purposeless circle of spray round and round in the middle of the lake. With equal eccentricity one of the circles flattened out and headed back toward the raft.

"Who's that?" she called, shutting off her motor. She was so near now that Dexter could see her bathing-suit, which consisted apparently of pink rompers.[9]

The nose of the boat bumped the raft, and as the latter tilted rakishly he was precipitated toward her. With different degrees of interest they recognized each other.

"Aren't you one of those men we played through this afternoon?" she demanded.

He was.

"Well, do you know how to drive a motor-boat? Because if you do I wish you'd drive this one so I can ride on the surf-board behind. My name is Judy Jones"—she favored him with an absurd smirk—rather, what tried to be a smirk, for, twist her mouth as she might, it was not grotesque, it was merely beautiful—"and I live in a house over there on the Island, and in that house there is a man waiting for me. When he drove up at the door I drove out of the dock because he says I'm his ideal."

There was a fish jumping and a star shining and the lights around the lake were gleaming. Dexter sat beside Judy Jones and she explained how her boat was driven. Then she was in the water, swimming to the floating surf-board with a sinuous crawl. Watching her was without effort to the eye, watching a branch waving or [8] "Chin-Chin," "The Count of Luxemburg," and "The Chocolate Soldier" are all musicals or light operas popular at the time of the story.

---

[9] Rompers are a one-piece outfit consisting of loose pants gathered at the knee.

Teach

Reading Strategy 4

Make Inferences Ask: What is Dexter's mood in this paragraph? What words indicate his mood? (Dexter is lulled by the music into a brilliant mood. He is "magnificently attuned to life" and everything around him is "radiating a brightness and a glamour he might never know again.") Ask: What might the words "radiating a brightness and a glamour he might never know again" be suggesting about Dexter's encounter with Judy? (Dexter's late night encounter with Judy will be the pinnacle of happiness in his relationship with Judy. Dexter will never be able to recapture that same happiness in the rest of his encounters with Judy.)

View the Art ★

French painter Henri Le Sidaner (1862–1939) adopted several styles during his career. Mid-career, he began to paint in broad brush strokes, as in this painting. He also painted his subjects from memory.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Point out that Fitzgerald uses the word sinuous twice in one paragraph—once as an adjective (sinuous) and once as an adverb (sinuously)—to describe Judy's movements as she swims. Say: Fitzgerald also uses a metaphor to describe her movements: "Watching her was without effort to the eye, watching a branch waving or a seagull flying." Ask: Given this metaphor, what do you think sinuous means? (graceful, flexible)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Sensory Details

Answer: Students may say that it appeals more to the sense of sight, since the narrator is describing Judy Jones's movements. Words like stabbing also appeal to the sense of touch.

APPROACHING Say: Fitzgerald captured fleeting but important moments in his characters' lives. He focused on small, sensory details. The narrator does not have to explain the impact of Judy's appearance on Dexter; the details suggest that Dexter is deeply moved.

Big Idea 2

Modern Fiction

Answer: "His heart turned over" implies that Dexter has felt the stirrings of a strong attraction to Judy. The first "casual whim" had been her desire to play at the golf course where Dexter had been a caddy many years earlier.

View the Art ★

Answer: The abundance of glittering, beautiful things, the richness of the people's dress, and the air of festivity and respectability might appeal to Dexter.

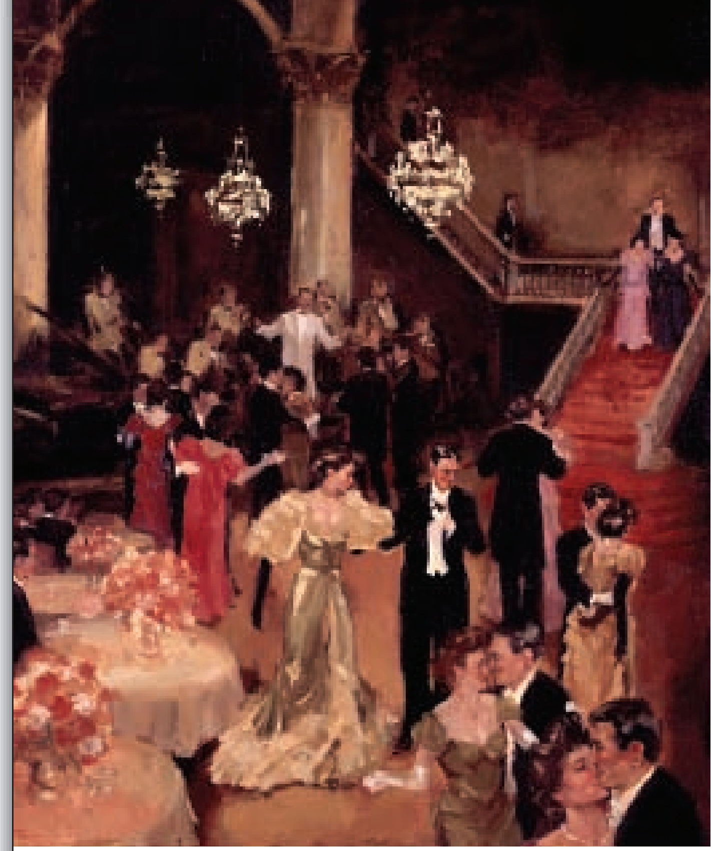
Point out that the painting depicts the opulence and grandeur enjoyed by wealthy people around this time.



Victorian Ball. Vincent McIndoe.

View the Art Hosting—and attending—a ball like the one pictured here was a sign of affluence and respectability during the era when "Winter Dreams" takes place. What elements of high society depicted here might Dexter have found attractive? ★ a sea-gull flying. Her arms, burned to butternut, moved sinuously among the dull platinum ripples, elbow appearing first, casting the forearm back with a cadence of falling water, then reaching out and down, stabbing a path ahead.

They moved out into the lake; turning, Dexter saw that she was kneeling on the low rear of the now uptilted surf-board.

"Go faster," she called, "fast as it'll go."

Obediently he jammed the lever forward and the white spray mounted at the bow. When he looked around again the girl was standing up on the rushing board, her arms spread wide, her eyes lifted toward the moon.

"It's awful cold," she shouted. "What's your name?"

He told her.

"Well, why don't you come to dinner to-morrow night?"

His heart turned over like the fly-wheel of the boat, and, for the second time, her casual whim gave a new direction to his life.

III

Next evening while he waited for her to come down-stairs, Dexter peopled the soft deep summer room and the sun-porch that opened from it with the men who had already loved Judy Jones. He knew the sort of men they were—the men who when he first went to college had entered from the great prep schools with graceful clothes and the deep tan of healthy summers. He had seen that, in one sense, he was better than these men. He was newer and stronger. Yet in acknowledging to himself that he wished his children to be like them he was admitting that he was but the rough, strong stuff from which they eternally sprang.

When the time had come for him to wear good clothes, he had known who were the best tailors in America, and the best tailors in America had made him the suit he wore this evening. He had acquired that particular reserve peculiar to his university, that set it off from other universities. He recognized the value to him of such a mannerism and he had

1 Evaluate Sensory Details Does this description appeal more to the sense of sight or the sense of touch? Explain.

Modern Fiction What does "His heart turned over" imply? What was the first "casual whim" that affected Dexter? 2

Study Skills Practice

Research the Author Fitzgerald based many of his stories and characters on his own experiences. Like Dexter Green, Fitzgerald was born and raised in the Midwest and struggled for years to earn enough money to win the rich girl of his dreams. Tell students to read about Fitzgerald's life, particularly his autobiographical works, such as The Crack-Up (1945). Tell students to look for comparisons between Fitzgerald and Dexter. Students can present their findings in an oral report.

adopted it; he knew that to be careless in dress and manner required more confidence than to be careful. But carelessness was for his children. His mother's name had been Krimplich. She was a Bohemian[10] of the peasant class and she had talked broken English to the end of her days. Her son must keep to the set patterns.

At a little after seven Judy Jones came downstairs. She wore a blue silk afternoon dress, and he was disappointed at first that she had not put on something more elaborate. This feeling was accentuated when, after a brief greeting, she went to the door of a butler's pantry and pushing it open called: "You can serve dinner, Martha." He had rather expected that a butler would announce dinner, that there would be a cocktail. Then he put these thoughts behind him as they sat down side by side on a lounge and looked at each other.

"Father and mother won't be here," she said thoughtfully.

He remembered the last time he had seen her father, and he was glad the parents were not to be here to-night—they might wonder who he was. He had been born in Keeble, a Minnesota village fifty miles farther north, and he always gave Keeble as his home instead of Black Bear Village. Country towns were well enough to come from if they weren't inconveniently in sight and used as footstools by fashionable lakes.

They talked of his university, which she had visited frequently during the past two years, and of the near-by city which supplied Sherry Island with its patrons, and whither Dexter would return next day to his prospering laundries.

During dinner she slipped into a moody depression which gave Dexter a feeling of uneasiness. Whatever petulance she uttered in her throaty voice worried him. Whatever she smiled at—at him, at a chicken liver, at nothing—it disturbed him that her smile could have no root in mirth, or even in amusement. When the scarlet corners of her lips curved down, it was less a smile than an invitation to a kiss.

Then, after dinner, she led him out on the dark sun-porch and deliberately changed the atmosphere.

"Do you mind if I weep a little?" she said.

"I'm afraid I'm boring you," he responded quickly.

"You're not. I like you. But I've just had a terrible afternoon. There was a man I cared about, and this afternoon he told me out of a clear sky that he was poor as a church-mouse. He'd never even hinted it before. Does this sound horribly mundane?"

"Perhaps he was afraid to tell you."

"Suppose he was," she answered. "He didn't start right. You see, if I'd thought of him as poor—well, I've been mad about loads of poor men, and fully intended to marry them all. But in this case, I hadn't thought of him that way, and my interest in him wasn't strong enough to survive the shock. As if a girl calmly informed her fiancé that she was a widow. He might not object to widows, but—

"Let's start right," she interrupted herself suddenly. "Who are you, anyhow?"

For a moment Dexter hesitated. Then:

"I'm nobody," he announced. "My career is largely a matter of futures."

"Are you poor?"

"No," he said frankly, "I'm probably making more money than any man my age in the Northwest. I know that's an obnoxious remark, but you advised me to start right."

There was a pause. Then she smiled and the corners of her mouth drooped and an almost imperceptible sway brought her closer to him, looking up into his eyes. A lump rose in Dexter's

---

[10] A Bohemian is a native of Bohemia, now part of the Czech Republic.

3 Motivation What does Dexter's reason for giving Keeble as his home tell you about him?

4 Motivation What prompts Judy to smile and look into Dexter's eyes, when she has been moodily depressed up until this point?

Vocabulary

petulance (pech´ ə ləns) n. irritability; impatience.

Vocabulary

mundane (mun dān´) adj. ordinary

Teach

Literary Element 3

Motivation Answer: Keeble is less unfashionable than Black Bear Village. Dexter wants to be fashionable and fit in with Judy's crowd and her family, even if it means being dishonest.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Fitzgerald writes that "Country towns were well enough to come from if they weren't inconveniently in sight and used as footstools by fashionable lakes." Ask: What is a footstool? (a stool for resting the feet when sitting) Ask: What does this imply about the function of Black Bear Village for the wealthy people of Sherry Island? (It served their needs.)

Literary Element 4

Motivation Answer: Dexter has just told her that he's making more money than any other man his age in the Northwest, in contrast to the man who earlier declared that he was "poor as a church-mouse."

ENGLISH LEARNERS Say: Fitzgerald writes that Judy's kisses made Dexter feel, rather than hunger, "surfeit that would demand more surfeit." Ask: Can you guess the meaning of surfeit from this phrase? (fullness)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Students may benefit from a review of the meaning of foreshadow: a writer's use of clues or hints to prepare readers for later events in the story. Ask: Were you surprised that Judy is seeing men other than Dexter? Justify your answer with details from the text. (Students may say no because Judy kisses Dexter when he tells her he is rich. Also, Judy does not seem to care about others: she doesn't seem to care that she hit another golfer with her golf ball. However, Fitzgerald has described the effect of Judy's beautiful features on men several times, so students may not be surprised.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Motivation Ask: What effect do Judy's kisses have on Dexter? (Her kisses make him want to kiss her even more. They make him realize that he has always been attracted to her.)

Big Idea 2

Modern Fiction Answer: She seems unlikely to be true to one person. That Dexter is upset by the "varying dozen" bodes ill for their future relationship.

Literary Element 3

Motivation Answer: The men seem to be completely engaged by her, and each one probably hopes that he will be the one she chooses.

ADVANCED Ask: How would you characterize the way Judy handles men? (She manipulates them; when they come on too strong, she changes her approach. The men all play her game.)

throat, and he waited breathless for the experiment, facing the unpredictable compound that would form mysteriously from the elements of their lips. Then he saw—she communicated her excitement to him, lavishly, deeply, with kisses that were not a promise but a fulfilment. They aroused in him not hunger demanding renewal but surfeit that would demand more surfeit . . . kisses that were like charity, creating want by holding back nothing at all. 1

It did not take him many hours to decide that he had wanted Judy Jones ever since he was a proud, desirous little boy.

IV

It began like that—and continued, with varying shades of intensity, on such a note right up to the dénouement. Dexter surrendered a part of himself to the most direct and unprincipled personality with which he had ever come in contact. Whatever Judy wanted, she went after with the full pressure of her charm. There was no divergence of method, no jockeying for position or premeditation of effects—there was a very little mental side to any of her affairs. She simply made men conscious to the highest degree of her physical loveliness. Dexter had no desire to change her. Her deficiencies were knit up with a passionate energy that transcended and justified them.

When, as Judy's head lay against his shoulder that first night, she whispered, "I don't know what's the matter with me. Last night I thought I was in love with a man and to-night I think I'm in love with you——" —it seemed to him a beautiful and romantic thing to say. It was the exquisite excitability that for the moment he controlled and owned. But a week later he was compelled to view this same quality in a different light. She took him in her roadster to a picnic supper, and after supper she disappeared, likewise in her roadster, with another man. Dexter became enormously upset and was scarcely able to be decently civil to the other people present. When she assured him that she had not kissed the other man, he knew she was lying—yet he was glad that she had taken the trouble to lie to him.

He was, as he found before the summer ended, one of a varying dozen who circulated about her. Each of them had at one time been favored above all others—about half of them still basked in the solace of occasional sentimental revivals. Whenever one showed signs of dropping out through long neglect, she granted him a brief honeyed hour, which encouraged him to tag along for a year or so longer. Judy made these forays upon the helpless and defeated without malice, indeed half unconscious that there was anything mischievous in what she did.

When a new man came to town every one dropped out—dates were automatically cancelled.

The helpless part of trying to do anything about it was that she did it all herself. She was not a girl who could be "won" in the kinetic sense—she was proof against cleverness, she was proof against charm; if any of these assailed her too strongly she would immediately resolve the affair to a physical basis, and under the magic of her physical splendor the strong as well as the brilliant played her game and not their own. She was entertained only by the gratification of her desires and by the direct exercise of her own charm. Perhaps from so much youthful love, so many youthful lovers, she had come, in self-defense, to nourish herself wholly from within.

Succeeding Dexter's first exhilaration came restlessness and dissatisfaction. The helpless ecstasy of losing himself in her was opiate rather than tonic.[11] It was fortunate for his work during the winter that those moments of ecstasy came infrequently. Early in their acquaintance it had seemed for a while that there was a deep and spontaneous mutual attraction—that first August, [11] Opiate rather than tonic means that Dexter's helpless ecstasy is numbing rather than stimulating.

---

Modern Fiction What does Dexter's discovery foreshadow about his relationship with Judy? 2

Motivation Why do Dexter and the other men tolerate Judy's behavior? 3

Listening and Speaking Practice

Formal Discussion Have students prepare for a formal discussion by writing the following question on the board: Are Dexter's feelings for Judy romantic or foolish? Require students to write down their first response to the question. Then have them gather evidence from the story, including specific quotes and examples, to support their opinions. Once students have enough evidence, begin the discussion by alternating between students who represent each side of the issue. For students struggling to pick sides, ask them to explain the distinction between these two characteristics and choose which Dexter is more like.

for example—three days of long evenings on her dusky veranda, of strange wan kisses through the late afternoon, in shadowy alcoves or behind the protecting trellises of the garden arbors, of mornings when she was fresh as a dream and almost shy at meeting him in the clarity of the rising day. There was all the ecstasy of an engagement about it, sharpened by his realization that there was no engagement. It was during those three days that, for the first time, he had asked her to marry him. She said "maybe some day," she said "kiss me," she said "I'd like to marry you," she said "I love you"—she said—nothing.

The three days were interrupted by the arrival of a New York man who visited at her house for half September. To Dexter's agony, rumor engaged them. The man was the son of the president of a great trust company. But at the end of a month it was reported that Judy was yawning. At a dance one night she sat all evening in a motor-boat with a local beau, while the New Yorker searched the club for her frantically. She told the local beau that she was bored with her visitor, and two days later he left. She was seen with him at the station, and it was reported that he looked very mournful indeed.

On this note the summer ended. Dexter was twenty-four, and he found himself increasingly in a position to do as he wished. He joined two clubs in the city and lived at one of them. Though he was by no means an integral part of the stag-lines[12] at these clubs, he managed to be on hand at dances where Judy Jones was likely to appear. He could have gone out socially as much as he liked—he was an eligible young man, now, and popular with down-town fathers. His confessed devotion to Judy Jones had rather solidified his position. But he had no social aspirations and rather despised the dancing men who were always on tap for the Thursday or Saturday parties and who filled in at dinners with the younger married set. Already he was playing with the idea of going East to New York. He wanted to take Judy Jones with him. No disillusion as to the world in which she had grown up could cure his illusion as to her desirability.

Remember that—for only in the light of it can what he did for her be understood.

Eighteen months after he first met Judy Jones he became engaged to another girl. Her name was Irene Scheerer, and her father was one of the men who had always believed in Dexter. Irene was light-haired and sweet and honorable, and a little stout, and she had two suitors whom she pleasantly relinquished when Dexter formally asked her to marry him.

Summer, fall, winter, spring, another summer, another fall—so much he had given of his active life to the incorrigible lips of Judy Jones. She had treated him with interest, with encouragement, with malice, with indifference, with contempt. She had inflicted on him the innumerable little slights and indignities possible in such a case—as if in revenge for having ever cared for him at all. She had beckoned him and yawned at him and beckoned him again and he had responded often with bitterness and narrowed eyes. She had brought him ecstatic happiness and intolerable agony of spirit. She had caused him untold inconvenience and not a little trouble. She had insulted him, and she had ridden over him, and she had played his interest in her against his interest in his work—for fun. She had done everything to him except to criticise him—this she had not done—it seemed to him only because it might have sullied the utter indifference she manifested and sincerely felt toward him.

When autumn had come and gone again it occurred to him that he could not have Judy Jones. He had to beat this into his mind but he convinced himself at last. He lay awake at night for a while and argued it over. He told himself the trouble and the pain she had

---

[12] Stag-lines are lines of single men waiting for dance partners at the clubs.

4 Evaluate Sensory Details What do the words dusky, shadowy, and protecting trellises imply about the nature of Dexter and Judy's relationship?

Modern Fiction Why do you think this is the only description of Irene, despite the fact that Dexter becomes engaged to her? 5

Teach

Reading Strategy 4

Evaluate Sensory Details Answer: The details suggest their romance is growing intensely and taking on a dream-like quality for Dexter.

APPROACHING Ask: How does Dexter's "winter self" differ from the way he is during his summer with Judy? (During the winter, Dexter is a hard worker. During the summer, he allows himself to lose focus and fall under Judy's spell.)

Big Idea 5

Modern Fiction Answer: Dexter seems to take Irene for granted. She seems ordinary and arouses little passion in him.

ADVANCED Say: Modern fiction captures the psychic and emotional restlessness of the "lost generation." Ask: Does it surprise you that Dexter has become engaged to another woman only eighteen months after meeting Judy Jones? (Students may not be surprised because Judy is clearly unable to commit herself to Dexter. Or students may be surprised because Dexter seems so obsessed with Judy.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Fitzgerald's use of adjectives may give English learners trouble—for example, incorrigible, innumerable, ecstatic, and untold. Tell students to identify adjectives that give them trouble. Have them work in pairs and use a dictionary to learn the meanings of these words.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Students may have trouble grasping Dexter's seemingly sudden shift from Judy to Irene. Work through the sequence of events with students and list the events on the board. Have students discover the time frame of the events (18 months), list details of what Dexter endured, and finally list details of how he made up his mind to let go of Judy.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Sensory Details

Answer: These images are further evidence that Irene will be merely a backdrop to his life.

APPROACHING Ask: What details in the paragraph establish Dexter's mood? (The darkness and dampness reflect Dexter's depression.)

View the Art ★

Answer: Her suitors, like these men, are rich and have plenty of leisure time. The artwork offers a glimpse into the world of the rich gentlemen's club.

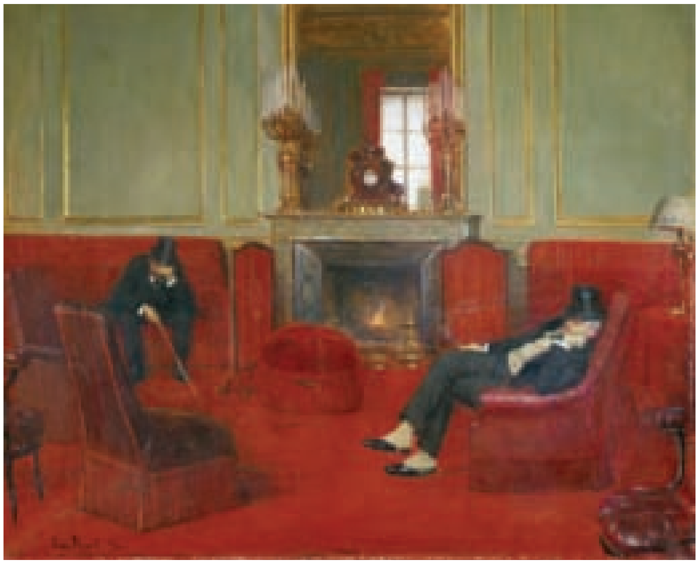
French artist Jean Béraud (1849–1935?), who painted Le Cercle in 1911, was among the late Impressionists whose style was described by critics as polished or finished.



Le cercle, The Club, 1911. Jean Beraud. Oil on canvas, 61 x 73.5 cm. Musee d'Orsay, Paris.

View the Art When "Winter Dreams" was published in 1922, young adults had begun to reject formal courtship in favor of dating, which was more about socializing than settling down. However, men were still expected to initiate relationships. What might Judy's suitors have had in common with the two men in this painting? ★ caused him, he enumerated her glaring deficiencies as a wife. Then he said to himself that he loved her, and after a while he fell asleep. For a week, lest he imagined her husky voice over the telephone or her eyes opposite him at lunch, he worked hard and late, and at night he went to his office and plotted out his years.

At the end of a week he went to a dance and cut in on her once. For almost the first time since they had met he did not ask her to sit out with him or tell her that she was lovely. It hurt him that she did not miss these things—that was all. He was not jealous when he saw that there was a new man to-night. He had been hardened against jealousy long before.

He stayed late at the dance. He sat for an hour with Irene Scheerer and talked about books and about music. He knew very little about either. But he was beginning to be master of his own time now, and he had a rather priggish notion that he—the young and already fabulously successful Dexter Green—should know more about such things.

That was in October, when he was twenty-five. In January, Dexter and Irene became engaged. It was to be announced in June, and they were to be married three months later.

The Minnesota winter prolonged itself interminably, and it was almost May when the winds came soft and the snow ran down into Black Bear Lake at last. For the first time in over a year Dexter was enjoying a certain tranquillity of spirit. Judy Jones had been in Florida, and afterward in Hot Springs, and somewhere she had been engaged, and somewhere she had broken it off. At first, when Dexter had definitely given her up, it had made him sad that people still linked them together and asked for news of her, but when he began to be placed at dinner next to Irene Scheerer people didn't ask him about her any more—they told him about her. He ceased to be an authority on her.

May at last. Dexter walked the streets at night when the darkness was damp as rain, wondering that so soon, with so little done, so much of ecstasy had gone from him. May one year back had been marked by Judy's poignant, unforgivable, yet forgiven turbulence—it had been one of those rare times when he fancied she had grown to care for him. That old penny's worth of happiness he had spent for this bushel of content. He knew that Irene would be no more than a curtain spread behind him, a hand moving among gleaming tea-cups, a voice calling to children . . . ☆

Evaluate Sensory Details What do these two images tell you about Dexter's attitude toward Irene? 1

Writing Practice

College Application Essay Tell students that most colleges require applicants to write an essay. Often they request a specific topic. Have students write a 250–300 word essay analyzing "Winter Dreams." Suggest that they clearly identify the story's significance in the introductory paragraph, use details and quotations to support their points, and use vivid language to reveal their thoughts about the work. If time allows, ask students to exchange papers and offer constructive criticism.

fire and loveliness were gone, the magic of nights and the wonder of the varying hours and seasons . . . slender lips, down-turning, dropping to his lips and bearing him up into a heaven of eyes. . . . The thing was deep in him. He was too strong and alive for it to die lightly.

In the middle of May when the weather balanced for a few days on the thin bridge that led to deep summer he turned in one night at Irene's house. Their engagement was to be announced in a week now—no one could be surprised at it. And to-night they would sit together on the lounge at the University Club and look on for an hour at the dancers. It gave him a sense of solidity to go with her—she was so sturdily popular, so intensely "great."

He mounted the steps of the brownstone house and stepped inside.

"Irene," he called.

Mrs. Scheerer came out of the living-room to meet him.

"Dexter," she said, "Irene's gone up-stairs with a splitting head-ache. She wanted to go with you but I made her go to bed."

"Nothing serious, I—"

"Oh, no. She's going to play golf with you in the morning. You can spare her for just one night, can't you, Dexter?"

Her smile was kind. She and Dexter liked each other. In the living-room he talked for a moment before he said good-night.

Returning to the University Club, where he had rooms, he stood in the doorway for a moment and watched the dancers. He leaned against the door-post, nodded at a man or two—yawned.

"Hello, darling."

The familiar voice at his elbow startled him. Judy Jones had left a man and crossed the room to him—Judy Jones, a slender enamelled doll in cloth of gold: gold in a band at her head, gold in two slipper points at her dress's hem. The fragile glow of her face seemed to blossom as she smiled at him. A breeze of warmth and light blew through the room. His hands in the pockets of his dinner-jacket tightened spasmodically. He was filled with a sudden excitement.

"When did you get back?" he asked casually.

"Come here and I'll tell you about it."

She turned and he followed her. She had been away—he could have wept at the wonder of her return. She had passed through enchanted streets, doing things that were like provocative music. All mysterious happenings, all fresh and quickening hopes, had gone away with her, come back with her now.

She turned in the doorway.

"Have you a car here? If you haven't, I have."

"I have a coupé."[13]

In then, with a rustle of golden cloth. He slammed the door. Into so many cars she had stepped—like this—like that—her back against the leather, so—her elbow resting on the door—waiting. She would have been soiled long since had there been anything to soil her—except herself—but this was her own self outpouring.

3 With an effort he forced himself to start the car and back into the street. This was nothing, he must remember. She had done this before, and he had put her behind him, as he would have crossed a bad account from his books.

He drove slowly down-town and, affecting abstraction, traversed the deserted streets of the business section, people here and there where a movie was giving out its crowd or where consumptive or pugilistic[14] youth lounged in front of pool halls. The clink of glasses and the slap of hands on the bars issued from saloons, cloisters of glazed glass and dirty yellow light.

She was watching him closely and the silence was embarrassing, yet in this crisis he could find no casual word with which to profane the hour. At a convenient turning he began to zigzag back toward the University Club.

"Have you missed me?" she asked suddenly.

"Everybody missed you."

He wondered if she knew of Irene Scheerer. She had been back only a day—her absence

2 Evaluate Sensory Details What does this emphasis on gold seem to symbolize?

---

[13] A coupé is a small two-door car.

[14] Consumptive means "wasteful," and pugilistic means "eager to fight."

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Evaluate Sensory Details

Answer: The gold symbolizes all that he desires. Judy has become a glittering thing for him to admire and desire.

Literary Element 3

Conflict Say: This is the first time readers really see Dexter struggle against the pull that Judy Jones exerts on him. Ask: What details suggest the conflict that Dexter feels? (He is excited but tries to convince himself that he feels nothing for Judy.) Ask: What details does Dexter notice as he drives and what do they suggest about his feelings for Judy? (He notices sordid rather than romantic details, such as the sounds coming from bars. He is perhaps feeling dishonest or dishonorable about driving with Judy.)

Language History ☆

A Penny for a Bushel Point out the sentence "That old penny's worth of happiness he had spent for this bushel of content" at the end of page 764. Explain that a bushel is a measurement of weight equal to 32 dry quarts. Farmers measure fruits or vegetables in bushels.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Encourage students to identify difficult words on this page. Likely candidates include enamelled, spasmodically, and abstraction. Give students time to search a dictionary and a thesaurus to find the meanings of the words and synonyms. Challenge students to paraphrase the sentences.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Students who are skilled in music may enjoy finding music that reflects the story's theme, setting, and tone. Invite students to work individually or in small groups to identify and locate music to accompany "Winter Dreams." Then have them present their selections to the class.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Motivation Answer: He may not wish to spoil the moment; he may lack the courage to tell her.

APPROACHING Say: Judy has not seen Dexter in many months, and they meet almost by accident. Ask: Why do you think she says, "I wish you'd marry me"? (Students should suggest that Judy is playing games with Dexter. She is pretending to want to marry him.)

View the Art ★

Answer: The painting reflects the grim side of Dexter's winter dreams.

In this painting, American Leon Dabo (1865–1960) depicts a New England winter scene. Ask: What mood or feeling is conveyed in this artwork? (The winter scene is gloomy. Winter seems endless and grim.)

Winter Evening. Leon Dabo. Oil on canvas, 53.3 x 71.1 cm. Florence Griswold Museum, Old Lyme, CT.

View the Art Painter Leon Dabo was well known for his atmospheric landscapes of the Hudson River and his hazy lighting techniques. Do you think this painting might be a good representation of Dexter's winter dreams? Explain. ★ had been almost contemporaneous with his engagement.

"What a remark!" Judy laughed sadly—without sadness. She looked at him searchingly. He became absorbed in the dashboard.

"You're handsomer than you used to be," she said thoughtfully. "Dexter, you have the most rememberable eyes."

He could have laughed at this, but he did not laugh. It was the sort of thing that was said to sophomores. Yet it stabbed at him.

"I'm awfully tired of everything, darling." She called every one darling, endowing the endearment with careless, individual camaraderie. "I wish you'd marry me."

The directness of this confused him. He should have told her now that he was going to marry another girl, but he could not tell her. He could as easily have sworn that he had never loved her.

"I think we'd get along," she continued, on the same note, "unless probably you've forgotten me and fallen in love with another girl."

Her confidence was obviously enormous. She had said, in effect, that she found such a thing impossible to believe, that if it were true he had merely committed a childish

Motivation Why do you think Dexter decides not to tell Judy that he is engaged? 1

Listening and Speaking Practice

Pitch an Idea Point out that if Dexter were a celebrity today, dropping Irene for Judy would probably be a story on entertainment news. Have students imagine that they are part of the production team for an entertainment news show. Tell students that they have ten minutes to come up with a pitch for tonight's show. They have to decide how they will present Dexter's break-up and subsequent engagement. What facts will they emphasize, and what "spin" will they put on it? What kinds of shots, special effects, and music will they choose to achieve their goal? Will they use formal, journalistic language, or something more colloquial? Then have the students pitch their ideas to the class. Have the class compare and contrast how the groups' pitches differ in tone, style, and content from Fitzgerald's writing.

indiscretion—and probably to show off. She would forgive him, because it was not a matter of any moment but rather something to be brushed aside lightly.

"Of course you could never love anybody but me," she continued, "I like the way you love me. Oh, Dexter, have you forgotten last year?"

"No, I haven't forgotten."

"Neither have I!"

Was she sincerely moved—or was she carried along by the wave of her own acting?

"I wish we could be like that again," she said, and he forced himself to answer:

"I don't think we can."

"I suppose not. . . . I hear you're giving Irene Scheerer a violent rush."

There was not the faintest emphasis on the name, yet Dexter was suddenly ashamed.

"Oh, take me home," cried Judy suddenly; "I don't want to go back to that idiotic dance—with those children."

Then, as he turned up the street that led to the residence district, Judy began to cry quietly to herself. He had never seen her cry before.

The dark street lightened, the dwellings of the rich loomed up around them, he stopped his coupé in front of the great white bulk of the Mortimer Joneses' house, somnolent, gorgeous, drenched with the splendor of the damp moonlight. Its solidity startled him. The strong walls, the steel of the girders, the breadth and beam and pomp of it were there only to bring out the contrast with the young beauty beside him. It was sturdy to accentuate her slightness—as if to show what a breeze could be generated by a butterfly's wing.

He sat perfectly quiet, his nerves in wild clamor, afraid that if he moved he would find her irresistibly in his arms. Two tears had rolled down her wet face and trembled on her upper lip.

"I'm more beautiful than anybody else," she said brokenly, "why can't I be happy?" Her moist eyes tore at his stability—her mouth turned slowly downward with an exquisite sadness: "I'd like to marry you if you'll have me, Dexter. I suppose you think I'm not worth having, but I'll be so beautiful for you, Dexter."

A million phrases of anger, pride, passion, hatred, tenderness fought on his lips. Then a perfect wave of emotion washed over him, carrying off with it a sediment of wisdom, of convention, of doubt, of honor. This was his girl who was speaking, his own, his beautiful, his pride.

"Won't you come in?" He heard her draw in her breath sharply.

Waiting.

"All right," his voice was trembling. "I'll come in."

V

It was strange that neither when it was over nor a long time afterward did he regret that night. Looking at it from the perspective of ten years, the fact that Judy's flare for him endured just one month seemed of little importance. Nor did it matter that by his yielding he subjected himself to a deeper agony in the end and gave serious hurt to Irene Scheerer and to ☆ Irene's parents, who had befriended him. There was nothing sufficiently pictorial about Irene's grief to stamp itself on his mind. 2

Dexter was at bottom hard-minded. The attitude of the city on his action was of no importance to him, not because he was going to leave the city, but because any outside attitude on the situation seemed superficial. He was completely indifferent to popular opinion. Nor, when he had seen that it was no use, that he did not possess in himself the power to move fundamentally or to hold Judy Jones, did he bear any malice toward her. He loved her, and he would love her until the day he was too old for loving—but he could not have her. So he tasted the deep pain that is reserved only for the strong, just as he had tasted for a little while the deep happiness.

Motivation Why does Dexter agree to go in after his earlier doubts? 3

Teach

Big Idea 2

Modern Fiction Say: Even though it appears that Dexter and Judy have made their choices at the end of section IV, keep in mind that indecision is an important theme in modern fiction. Ask: How have the characters demonstrated indecisiveness at the beginning of section V? (Dexter has canceled his engagement to Irene, and Judy has ended her engagement to Dexter.)

Literary Element 3

Motivation Answer: He is overcome with emotion; he may feel that he won't see her again.

APPROACHING Say: Once Dexter has stopped the car, Judy does all the talking. Ask: How would you characterize Judy based on her remarks? (Judy is self-absorbed, vain, and unhappy.)

Cultural History ☆

Broken Engagements In the 1920s, breaking off an engagement had major social and financial consequences. For example, Irene and her parents might have invested considerable time and money in preparing a trousseau and planning a wedding.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

AAVE Approaching level students who are users of African American vernacular English (AAVE) may not always use the right syntax when asking questions. For example, they may say: "Why Judy doesn't feel happy?" instead of "Why doesn't Judy feel happy?" Have students find and read aloud the questions on this page. Highlight the word order in the questions for students. Then have students practice using the correct syntax in asking questions by working in pairs to ask other questions about the story so far. Work with each pair of students to make sure students are using correct Standard Academic English in their questions and answers.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Answer: He has been through a lot emotionally; he may be numb and incapable of showing strong feelings toward Judy.

Literary Element 2

Character Ask: What effect does Devlin's remark about Judy's current situation have on Dexter? (Dexter is filled with disbelief and excitement. He wonders if he might still have a chance with Judy.)

Even the ultimate falsity of the grounds upon which Judy terminated the engagement that she did not want to "take him away" from Irene—Judy, who had wanted nothing else—did not revolt him. He was beyond any revulsion or any amusement.

He went East in February with the intention of selling out his laundries and settling in New York—but the war[15] came to America in March and changed his plans. He returned to the West, handed over the management of the business to his partner, and went into the first officers' training-camp in late April. He was one of those young thousands who greeted the war with a certain amount of relief, welcoming the liberation from webs of tangled emotion.

> Even the ultimate falsity of the grounds upon which Judy terminated the engagement that she did not want to "take him away" from Irene—Judy, who had wanted nothing else—did not revolt him. He was beyond any revulsion or any amusement.

VI

This story is not his biography, although things creep into it which have nothing to do with those dreams he had when he was young. We are almost done with them and with him now. There is only one more incident to be related here, and it happens seven years farther on.

It took place in New York, where he had done well—so well that there were no barriers too high for him. He was thirty-two years old, and, except for one flying trip immediately after the war, he had not been West in seven years. A man named Devlin from Detroit came into his office to see him in a business way, and then and there this incident occurred, and closed out, so to speak, this particular side of his life.

"So you're from the Middle West," said the man Devlin with careless curiosity. "That's funny—I thought men like you were probably born and raised on Wall Street. You know—wife of one of my best friends in Detroit came from your city. I was an usher at the wedding."

Dexter waited with no apprehension of what was coming.

"Judy Simms," said Devlin with no particular interest; "Judy Jones she was once."

"Yes, I knew her." A dull impatience spread over him. He had heard, of course, that she was married— perhaps deliberately he had heard no more.

"Awfully nice girl," brooded Devlin meaninglessly, "I'm sort of sorry for her."

"Why?" Something in Dexter was alert, receptive, at once.

"Oh, Lud Simms has gone to pieces in a way. I don't mean he ill-uses her, but he drinks and runs around—"

"Doesn't she run around?"

"No. Stays at home with her kids."

"Oh."

"She's a little too old for him," said Devlin.

"Too old!" cried Dexter. "Why, man, she's only twenty-seven." 2

He was possessed with a wild notion of rushing out into the streets and taking a train to Detroit. He rose to his feet spasmodically.

"I guess you're busy," Devlin apologized quickly. "I didn't realize—"

---

[15] The war refers to World War I, which the United States entered in 1917.

1 Modern Fiction Do you think Dexter really feels this way, or is he fooling himself?

Listening and Speaking Practice

SMALL GROUP Choral Reading A choral reading provides force to a literary work. Like a musical choir, choral readers work in unison. Organize students into three groups of varying sizes. Then assign each group one of the last three paragraphs of "Winter Dreams." Give students time to rehearse their group reading of the paragraph, with one student serving as the director. The director should suggest phrasings, volume, and expressions that convey the meanings of the words. After rehearsing, the groups should present their choral readings to the class. Discuss with the class how the choral readings affected them. Ask: How did the readings influence your understanding of the story? (Students may say that it emphasized the sadness of the ending, and Dexter's loss.)

"No, I'm not busy," said Dexter, steadying his voice. "I'm not busy at all. Not busy at all. Did you say she was—twenty-seven? No, I said she was twenty-seven."

"Yes, you did," agreed Devlin dryly.

"Go on, then, Go on."

"What do you mean?"

"About Judy Jones."

Devlin looked at him helplessly.

"Well, that's—I told you all there is to it. He treats her like the devil. Oh, they're not going to get divorced or anything. When he's particularly outrageous she forgives him. In fact, I'm inclined to think she loves him. She was a pretty girl when she first came to Detroit."

A pretty girl! The phrase struck Dexter as ludicrous.

"Isn't she—a pretty girl, any more?"

"Oh, she's all right."

"Look here," said Dexter, sitting down suddenly. "I don't understand. You say she was a 'pretty girl' and now you say she's 'all right.' I don't understand what you mean—Judy Jones wasn't a pretty girl, at all. She was a great beauty. Why, I knew her, I knew her. She was—"

Devlin laughed pleasantly.

"I'm not trying to start a row," he said. "I think Judy's a nice girl and I like her. I can't understand how a man like Lud Simms could fall madly in love with her, but he did." Then he added: "Most of the women like her."

Dexter looked closely at Devlin, thinking wildly that there must be a reason for this, some insensitivity in the man or some private malice.

"Lots of women fade just like that," Devlin snapped his fingers. "You must have seen it happen. Perhaps I've forgotten how pretty she was at her wedding. I've seen her so much since then, you see. She has nice eyes."

A sort of dullness settled down upon Dexter. For the first time in his life he felt like getting very drunk. He knew that he was laughing loudly at something Devlin had said, but he did not know what it was or why it was funny. When, in a few minutes, Devlin went he lay down on his lounge and looked out the window at the New York sky-line into which the sun was sinking in dull lovely shades of pink and gold.

He had thought that having nothing else to lose he was invulnerable at last—but he knew that he had just lost something more, as surely as if he had married Judy Jones and seen her fade away before his eyes.

The dream was gone. Something had been taken from him. In a sort of panic he pushed the palms of his hands into his eyes and tried to bring up a picture of the waters lapping on Sherry Island and the moonlit veranda, and gingham on the golf-links and the dry sun and the gold color of her neck's soft down. And her mouth damp to his kisses and her eyes plaintive with melancholy and her freshness like new fine linen in the morning. Why, these things were no longer in the world! They had existed and they existed no longer.

For the first time in years the tears were streaming down his face. But they were for himself now. He did not care about mouth and eyes and moving hands. He wanted to care, and he could not care. For he had gone away and he could never go back any more. The gates were closed, the sun was gone down, and there was no beauty but the gray beauty of steel that withstands all time. Even the grief he could have borne was left behind in the country of illusion, of youth, of the richness of life, where his winter dream had flourished.

"Long ago," he said, "long ago, there was something in me, but now that thing is gone. Now that thing is gone, that thing is gone. I cannot cry. I cannot care. That thing will come back no more."

Modern Fiction What dream has gone, and why has it gone? 3

Teach

Big Idea 3

Modern Fiction Answer: Dexter has lost the dream of being with Judy. He realizes that time has passed, and with it, his and Judy's youth.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 194.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate The narrator says that Dexter felt neither revulsion nor amusement at the thought of Judy. Ask students to look up the meanings of revulsion and amusement, and ask them if they think the words are antonyms. Have students work in pairs to find words that are better antonyms.

Approaching Level

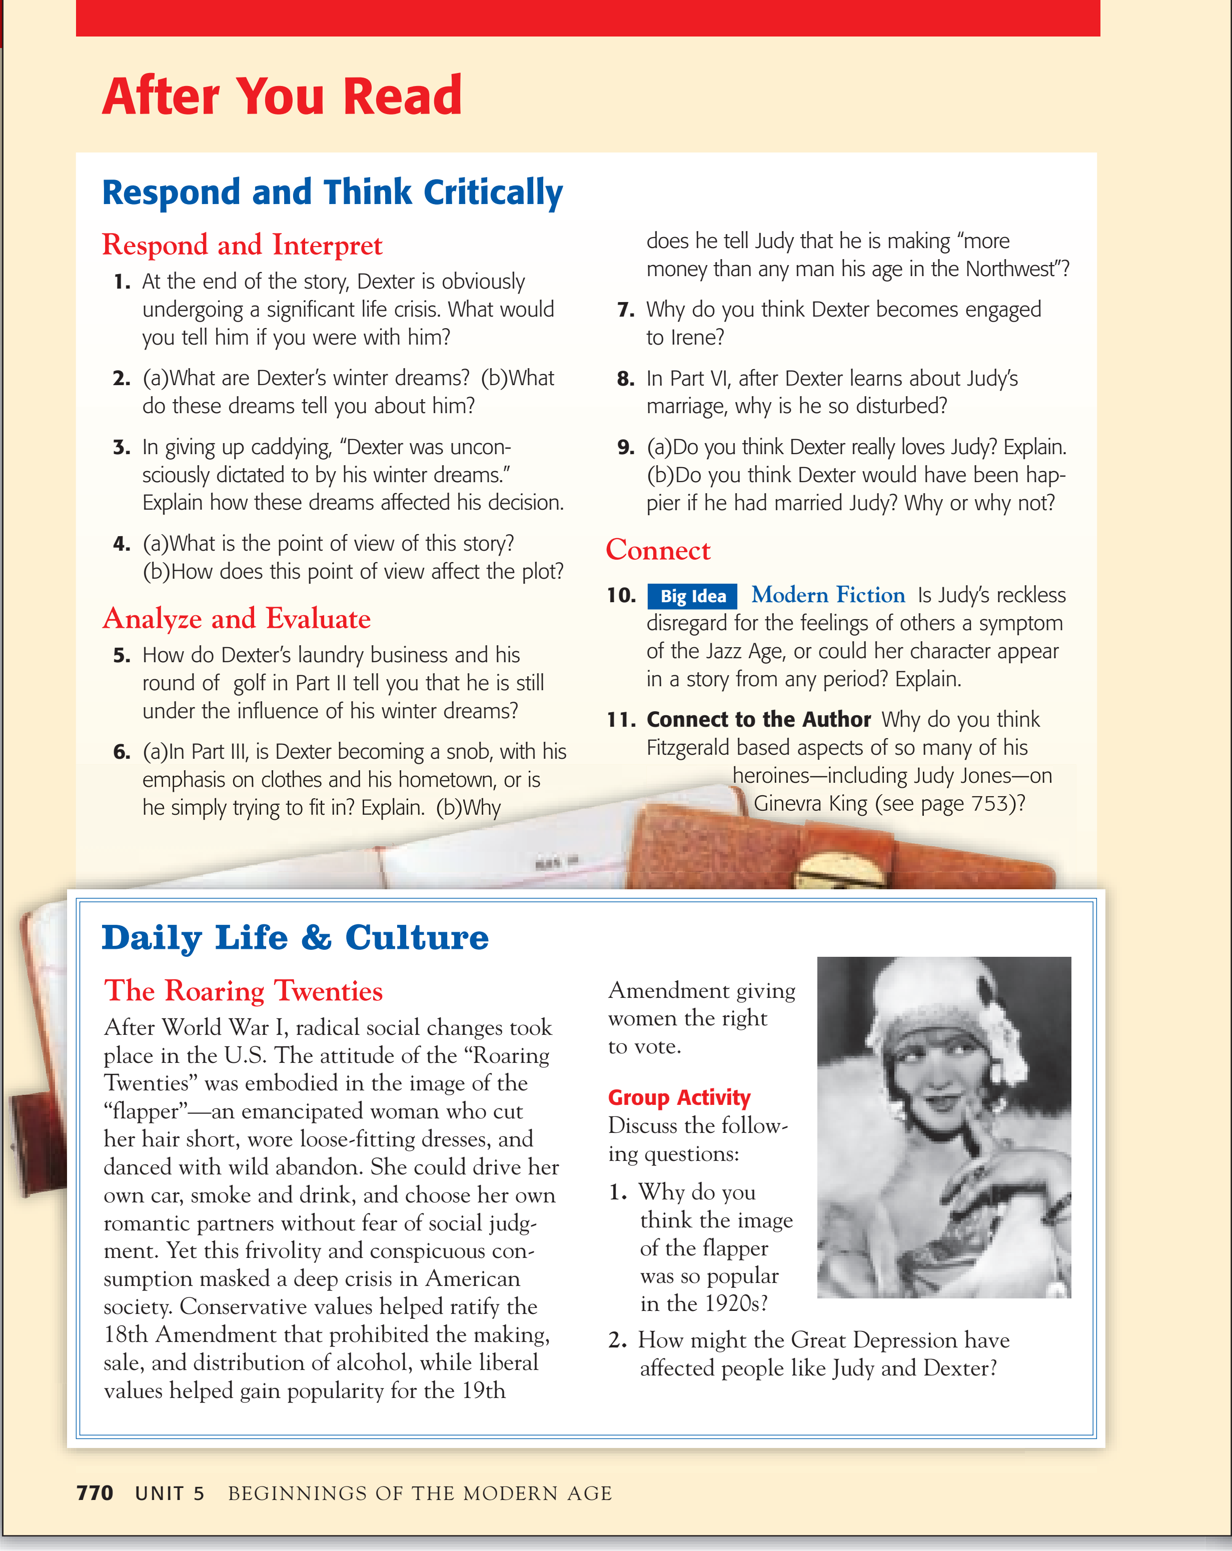
DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Students who learn best by organizing information into patterns may find it useful to organize details about the characters and their actions. Suggest that students break the story into parts, such as sections, seasons, or years. Then have them jot down key details about the characters.

After You Read

Assess

1. Some students might tell him to forget the past. Others may be sympathetic toward him.
2. (a) He dreams of joining the privileged world. (b) He is envious of that world.
3. His job as a caddy separates him from the world he dreams about. By quitting, he takes his first step toward becoming part of that world.
4. (a) The point of view is third-person limited. (b) The reader can know only what Dexter is thinking and what he knows.
5. He wants to make money. Playing on the golf course leaves him feeling superior toward Mr. Hedrick.
6. (a) Dexter doesn't want to ruin his chances with Judy, so he is careful to fit in. (b) He knows that Judy doesn't like men who are poor.
7. To make Judy jealous; to be with someone more reliable than Judy
8. He has trouble facing his faded dreams.
9. (a) Students may suggest that he loves her for her beauty and excitement. (b) Students may suggest that Dexter would have been miserable because she would never have committed to him.
10. Real women in an earlier age would not have had the same freedoms, but literature from different time periods has examples of spirited, willful heroines.
11. Scott was strongly affected by his relationship with King.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. At the end of the story, Dexter is obviously undergoing a significant life crisis. What would you tell him if you were with him?
2. (a)What are Dexter's winter dreams? (b)What do these dreams tell you about him?
3. In giving up caddying, "Dexter was unconsciously dictated to by his winter dreams." Explain how these dreams affected his decision.
4. (a)What is the point of view of this story? (b)How does this point of view affect the plot?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. How do Dexter's laundry business and his round of golf in Part II tell you that he is still under the influence of his winter dreams?
6. (a)In Part III, is Dexter becoming a snob, with his emphasis on clothes and his hometown, or is he simply trying to fit in? Explain. (b)Why does he tell Judy that he is making "more money than any man his age in the Northwest"?
7. Why do you think Dexter becomes engaged to Irene?
8. In Part VI, after Dexter learns about Judy's marriage, why is he so disturbed?
9. (a)Do you think Dexter really loves Judy? Explain. (b)Do you think Dexter would have been happier if he had married Judy? Why or why not?

Connect

10. Big Idea Modern Fiction Is Judy's reckless disregard for the feelings of others a symptom of the Jazz Age, or could her character appear in a story from any period? Explain.
11. Connect to the Author Why do you think Fitzgerald based aspects of so many of his heroines—including Judy Jones—on Ginevra King (see page 753)?

Daily Life & Culture

The Roaring Twenties

After World War I, radical social changes took place in the U.S. The attitude of the "Roaring Twenties" was embodied in the image of the "flapper"—an emancipated woman who cut her hair short, wore loose-fitting dresses, and danced with wild abandon. She could drive her own car, smoke and drink, and choose her own romantic partners without fear of social judgment. Yet this frivolity and conspicuous consumption masked a deep crisis in American society. Conservative values helped ratify the 18th Amendment that prohibited the making, sale, and distribution of alcohol, while liberal values helped gain popularity for the 19th Amendment giving women the right to vote.

Group Activity Discuss the following questions:

1. Why do you think the image of the flapper was so popular in the 1920s?
2. How might the Great Depression have affected people like Judy and Dexter?

Daily Life & Culture

1. The image appealed to women's growing sense of independence and took advantage of fluctuating social values.
2. Judy's family would probably have lost most of its money, thereby forcing her to live at a lower economic level; Dexter made his first fortune based on his own talents and started making a second fortune after the war. He could probably succeed again.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 215–216.

Literary Element Motivation

In literature, motivation refers to the reasons or causes for a character's actions. The lack of clear motivation for characters' actions is considered a weakness in a story or play. Sometimes motivation is subtle, however, and may not be immediately apparent.

1. What is the chief motivation for most of Dexter's actions?
2. What do you think motivates Judy to behave as she does in her relationships with Dexter and others before she is married?
3. What is Judy's motivation in mentioning Irene to Dexter after he becomes engaged?
4. What do you think motivated Judy to get married?

Review: Conflict

As you learned in Unit Four, Part 2, conflict is the main struggle between two opposing forces in a story or drama. An external conflict is a struggle between a character and an outside force, such as another character. An internal conflict is a struggle between opposing thoughts in a character's mind.

Group Activity In a small group, discuss the nature of the conflict in "Winter Dreams." Answer these questions.

1. What is the conflict in "Winter Dreams"?
2. Is this conflict internal or external?
3. How is the conflict resolved?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Reading Strategy Evaluate Sensory Details

Sensory details are details that appeal to the senses. Often, these details contribute to the meaning and mood, or atmosphere, of a story.

Partner Activity Refer to the chart you made on page 753 to help you answer these questions. A passage in the last part of "Winter Dreams" reads: "the sun was sinking in dull lovely shades of pink and gold." How does this passage seem to sum up Dexter's feelings and his life? What emotions does it stir up in you, the reader? Meet with another classmate to discuss these questions.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Synonyms With a partner, match each boldfaced vocabulary word below with its synonym. You will not use all the answer choices. Use a thesaurus or dictionary to check your answers.

1. grimace
2. ominous
3. perturbation
4. petulance
5. mundane

a. peevishness
b. artless
c. illness
d. commonplace
e. scowl
f. menacing
g. anxiety

Academic Vocabulary

Judy affects all her suitors when she is young, and news of what she has become affects Dexter profoundly.

Affect is an academic word. A doctor, writing a prescription, might warn her patient that the medicine she is recommending affects everyone differently.

To further explore the meaning of this word, answer the following question: How would you like to affect those around you?

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

After You Read

Literary Element

1. Dexter is chiefly motivated by his dream of being a part of a moneyed society and by his attraction to Judy.
2. She enjoys being sought after and admired. Her love seems to be for herself instead of others.
3. She is testing Dexter, trying to see whether she can lure him away from Irene.
4. Readers are not told whether she was truly in love with her husband; her age might have been her motivation. Also, she may have wanted to get revenge on Dexter.

Progress Check

Can students analyze motivation?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 189.

Review: Conflict

1. The conflict is Dexter's desire to be with Judy and to be accepted by high society. He is unable to manage to do either.
2. The conflict is internal.
3. The conflict is only resolved when he realizes that his dream has gone.

To create custom assessments using software, use ExamView Assessment Suite.

To create custom assessments online, go to Progress Reporter Online Assessment.

Reading Strategy

A setting sun is a traditional literary symbol of death. In Dexter's case, it is the death of a dream and of his youth. Before the sun sets, however, the sky, like Dexter's fading dream, is suffused with beauty.

Vocabulary

1. e 2. f 3. g 4. a 5. d

Academic Vocabulary

Students should describe what kind of influence they would like to have on others.

After You Read

Writing

Students' stories should use either the first- or third-person point of view consistently throughout. Students should also develop the character's motivation using details and use concrete details and images to develop setting, character, and tone in their stories.

Scoring Guide

Assess students' performances in the following categories using the scoring guide at the bottom of the page:

- Addresses all parts of the writing task.
- Develops believable and realistic characters and plot.
- Point of view in story is consistent, and narrator only talks about what he or she is allowed to know.
- Sensory details and techniques such as interior monologue add to the tone of the story and enhance understanding of the characters.
- Provides a variety of sentence types; uses precise, descriptive language.
- Follows English language conventions.

Respond Through Writing

Short Story

Apply Point of View When you consider how Judy treats Dexter in this story, it might seem hard to understand why he remains under her spell. Write a 1,500-word short story about someone who stays in a difficult relationship, explaining why he or she does so. Write your story from either the first-person or third-person point of view.

Understand the Task In a story with a first-person point of view, the narrator is a character in the story, and uses the words I and me to tell the story. In a story with a third-person point of view, the narrator is someone who stands outside the story and describes the characters and action. In a story with a third-person limited point of view, the narrator reveals the thoughts, feelings, and observations of only one character. In a story with a third-person omniscient point of view, the narrator knows everything that goes on—including the thoughts and feelings of every character.

Prewrite Detailing a character's motivation is key when writing about relationships. Each point of view allows you to give your readers different insight into why your main character acts as he or she does. When choosing a point of view, think about which one will help you to most effectively convey your main character's motivations.

Draft As you write, create a full world for your story. Use concrete details that appeal to multiple senses to establish the setting. Then, in your chosen point of view, narrate your character's story. Be sure to remain focused on significant events and details, and to allow the pace of the story to change to accommodate shifts in time and mood.

Revise Reread your story, looking closely at your descriptions. Are they vivid? Do they use concrete and sensory details to show the specific actions, movements, gestures, and feelings of the characters? If not, revise to give clearer descriptions. You might also incorporate interior monologues to help convey your characters' feelings and motivations. Below is an example of interior monologue told from a third-person point of view.

> EXAMPLE: I should be leaving, Marta told herself as she refilled her punch glass. I should just leave this horrid party right now and get back to my normal life. I don't belong here.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your paper, correcting any errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing a short story.

Grammar: Using pronouns to maintain consistent point of view.

Grammar Tip

Point of View

Avoid unintended shifts in point of view. Since your chosen point of view is the angle from which your reader sees people, objects, and events, switching your point of view within a story can create confusion.

Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Task addressed	fully	mostly	partially	barely
Characters, Plot	fully developed and believable	somewhat developed and believable	partially developed and realistic	unrealistic
Point of View	maintains one point of view	maintains one point of view	point of view changes occasionally	point of view changes often
Sensory Details	well employed	employed	few employed	none
Language	varied, precise, descriptive	varied, somewhat descriptive	predictable, basic	not varied, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	some	many

Before You Read

The Jilting of Granny Weatherall

Meet Katherine Anne Porter

(1890–1980)

> "I knew what death was, and had almost experienced it. I had . . . the happy vision just before death. Now if you have had that, and survived it, come back from it, you are no longer like other people."
>
> —Katherine Anne Porter

Katherine Anne Porter, who published her first collection of short stories when she was forty, described herself as "a late starter." But "a late finisher" might be more accurate. During her long career, she tended to write and rewrite her stories, sometimes putting them aside for many years. Porter sought to tell each story "as clearly and purely and simply as I can."

Experiences of Death and Near-Death

Katherine Anne Porter was born in a small log house on a farm in central Texas. Her mother died before she was two, and Porter and her four siblings were raised by one of their grandmothers. The grandmother's death when Porter was eleven had a powerful emotional impact on the family. Afterward, Porter's family moved to San Antonio, Texas, where she studied acting.

Shortly after moving to Dallas, Texas, in 1915, Porter became ill with tuberculosis and believed she had only a few months to live. She recovered only ☆ to be hit by the World War I flu epidemic, and she came so close to death that her family finalized her burial arrangements. Porter's struggle to survive, the close friendships she formed with other young women in a sanatorium in Texas, and the opportunities she had to reflect on her life during this period were to have a profound effect on her creative activities. She emerged from several years of illness with a new career goal: to be a writer.

A Creative Restlessness Porter spent most of her thirties living abroad. She took on a range of writing projects and sought out the company of friends and circles of writers and artists who provided her with the intense interpersonal experiences that inspired her writing.

Porter published several collections of short stories, starting with Flowering Judas (1929). Although it was her novel, Ship of Fools (1962), that became a best seller, Porter was primarily a practitioner of the short story. Many of her stories, including "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall," are set in the South and feature women who have profound self-realizations at crucial moments in their lives. At age seventy-six, two years after the publication of twenty-seven of her stories in The Collected Stories of Katherine Anne Porter, Porter received a Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Award.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Katherine Anne Porter, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Literature Launchers:
Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Selection Launcher

Selection Focus Transparency 47

Daily Language Practice Transparency 70

Or display images of weddings—pictures, cakes, rings, and decorations. Ask: What feelings do most people associate with weddings? Why are weddings important to people?

As they read, have students consider how the main character's disappointment at being left at the altar has affected her life.

Cultural History ☆

1918 Influenza Pandemic In 1918, a flu virus spread around the world and became one of the deadliest disease outbreaks in human history. More people died from the flu than from World War I.

Selection Skills

The Jilting of Granny Weatherall

Literary Elements
- Stream of Consciousness (SE pp. 774, 776, 777, 779, 780, 782, 783)
- Characterization (SE p. 783)

Vocabulary Skills
- Context Clues (SE pp. 784)
- Suffixes (TE p. 774)

Reading Skills
- Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist (SE pp. 774–777, 780, 781, 784)
- Monitor Comprehension (TE p. 774)
- Draw Conclusions (TE p. 782)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Monologue (SE p. 784)
- Eulogy (TE p. 776)
- Timeline (TE p. 778)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 779)
- Monologue (SE p. 784)
- Literary Discussion (TE p. 780)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

As feisty old Ellen Weatherall lies dying, she teases and scolds her daughter and her young doctor. As they come and go, her mind drifts between the present and the past. She remembers her husband, their children, and other details of her life. Now and then, she grieves over the painful memory of her humiliation sixty years earlier when her fiancé, George, jilted her on their wedding day. Her children arrive, the priest offers last rites, and then Granny drifts into death.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 196–201.

Vocabulary

Suffixes Ask students to look at the nouns and adjectives in the vocabulary list and identify the suffixes used to form these vocabulary words. (-ful, -ty) Have students use a dictionary to find the meanings of the suffixes. (able to; state or quality) Then have students list other words that use these suffixes.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Point out to students that when adding the suffix -ful to a noun ending in the letter y, the y changes to an i, as in the case of dutiful.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 204.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

How would you feel if you were left waiting on your wedding day? How would you overcome that disappointment? Discuss these questions with a partner.

Build Background

This story is set in the South in the early twentieth century. Women of the time were often confined to the traditional roles of wife, mother, and homemaker. Roman Catholicism figures prominently in Porter's story. Granny Weatherall's religious beliefs and her ideas about guilt and forgiveness are important elements of the story.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Modern Fiction

As you read, ask, What Modernist techniques does Porter use?

Literary Element Stream of Consciousness

Stream of consciousness is a technique that a writer uses to imitate the flow of thoughts, feelings, images, and memories of a character. Stream of consciousness replaces traditional chronological order with a seemingly random collection of impressions, forcing the reader to piece together the plot or theme. Porter uses stream of consciousness to represent Granny's thoughts, memories, and state of mind. As you read, ask yourself, What is the chronological order of events in the story? How does this differ from the order Granny presents them?

Reading Strategy Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist

To draw conclusions means to use different pieces of information to make a general statement. A protagonist is the central character in a literary work, around whom the main conflict revolves. As Granny's thoughts skip from one person or subject to another, and back and forth in time, various clues about her past emerge. As you read, ask yourself, What clues and details can I use to draw conclusions about Granny's character?

Tip: Take Notes Use a chart to record details and draw conclusions based on them.

Details	Conclusion
Granny calls the doctor a brat.	Granny thinks of the doctor as a kid.

Learning Objectives

For pages 773–784

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing stream of consciousness.

Reading: Drawing conclusions about the protagonist.

Speaking and Listening: Performing a monologue.

Vocabulary

tactful (takt´ fəl) adj. able to speak or act without offending others; p. 776 Southern women were expected to be tactful in their relations.

dutiful (do͞o´ ti fəl) adj. careful to fulfill obligations; p. 776 Only a dutiful person could take care of a farm and raise several children.

vanity (van´ i tē) n. excessive pride, as in one's looks; p. 779 The man's vanity made it hard for him to see why he had not received the award.

jilt (jilt) v. to drop or reject as a sweetheart; p. 779 None of her children had been jilted; they had all married their first loves.

piety (pī´ ə tē) n. religious devoutness; goodness; p. 780 Piety was a common response to the moral issues raised by the war.

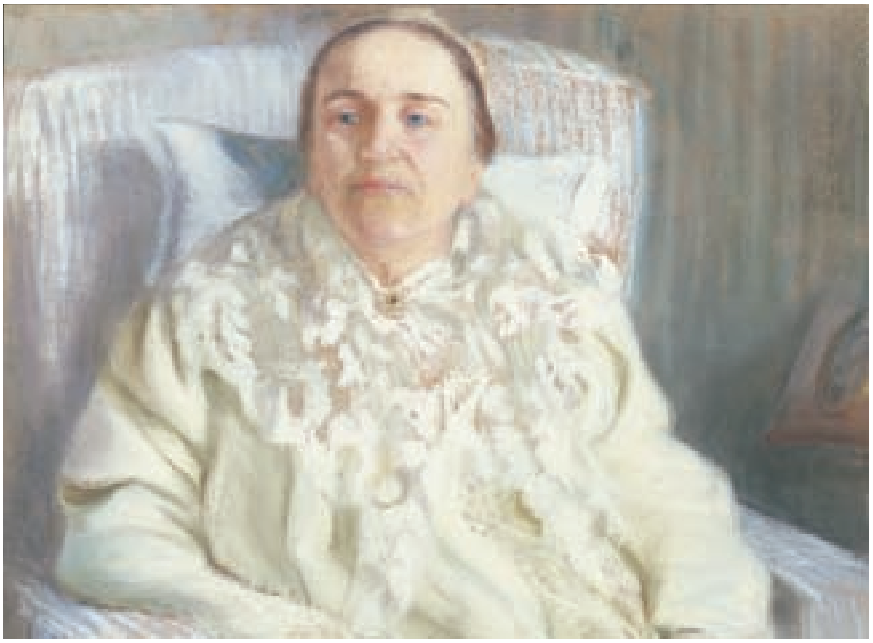
Tip: Context Clues To learn a word's meaning, look at the other words in the sentence and try to predict a possible meaning.

Reading Practice

Monitor Comprehension Porter's stream-of-consciousness narrative may be challenging to some students. Encourage students to pause to ask questions while they read, particularly at points where they are confused. As students read the story, have them monitor their comprehension by asking themselves the following questions: When did this event take place? To whom is Granny referring? What associations does Granny make between past and present events? Is this event happening in the present, or is it a memory? Tell students to record their answers and review and revise the answers as they read further.



The White Bed Jacket, c. 1905. Lilla Cabot Perry. Pastel on tan paper, 25½ x 31½ in. Hirschl & Adler Galleries Inc., NY. ★

The Jilting of Granny Weatherall

Katherine Anne Porter

1 She flicked her wrist neatly out of Doctor Harry's pudgy careful fingers and pulled the sheet up to her chin. The brat ought to be in knee-breeches. Doctoring around the country with spectacles on his nose. "Get along now, take your schoolbooks and go. There's nothing wrong with me."

Doctor Harry spread a warm paw like a cushion on her forehead where the forked green vein danced and made her eyelids twitch. "Now, now, be a good girl, and we'll have you up in no time."

"That's no way to speak to a woman nearly eighty years old just because she's down. I'd have you respect your elders, young man."

"Well, missy, excuse me." Doctor Harry patted her cheek. "But I've got to warn you, haven't I? You're a marvel,[1] but you must be careful or you're going to be good and sorry."

---

[1] A marvel is a wonderful or astonishing thing.

2 Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist "She" in this paragraph is Granny Weatherall. What can you infer about where she is and what she is like from this paragraph?

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Students may benefit from a more in-depth discussion of stream of consciousness. Break down the term with students. First, have a student read aloud the Literary Element Stream of Consciousness blurb in the text. Next, ask: What is a stream? (Students may say that a stream is a river or brook.) What is consciousness? (Students may know that this has something to do with the mind.)

Explain that consciousness, in this case, refers to the thoughts in one's mind. So stream of consciousness is the unedited flow of one's thoughts.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Modern Fiction Say: The themes of change and broken attachments are important to Modernist American fiction writers. Ask: Based on what you know about this literature, how would you expect the memories of an old, dying woman to be represented? (Students may suggest that the story will not be sentimental.)

Reading Strategy 2

Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist Answer: The woman is in bed because she is sick. She is impatient with her doctor.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 203.

View the Art ★

Lilla Cabot Perry (1848–1933) was an American painter and a champion of the French Impressionist style. Perry was known for scenes of nature and domestic life.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 4.6
DRP: 50
Lexile: 820

Teach

Literary Element 1

Stream of Consciousness

Answer: Granny slips into the distant past, remembering long-ago illnesses. She forgets that she is weak and in bed. She tells the doctor that she is able to pay her own bills.

Reading Strategy 2

Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist

Answer: Granny's wish to spank her grown daughter shows that her thoughts are in the past.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Say: Granny's words offer clues to her character. Notice Granny's response to her daughter's kindness. Point out to students that the words dutiful and good are used as adjectives to praise people. However, Granny uses the words in a negative way and says that her daughter deserves a spanking for being dutiful and good. Ask: Why does Granny use adjectives that praise people in a negative way? (She is teasing her daughter.)

Interactive Read and Write

Other options for teaching this selection can be found in

- Interactive Read and Write for EL Students, pp. 189–202
- Interactive Read and Write for Approaching-Level Students, pp. 189–202
- Interactive Read and Write for On-Level Students, pp. 189–202

"Don't tell me what I'm going to be. I'm on my feet now, morally speaking. It's Cornelia. I had to go to bed to get rid of her."

Her bones felt loose, and floated around in her skin, and Doctor Harry floated like a balloon around the foot of the bed. He floated and pulled down his waistcoat[2] and swung his glasses on a cord. "Well, stay where you are, it certainly can't hurt you."

"Get along and doctor your sick," said Granny Weatherall. "Leave a well woman alone. I'll call for you when I want you . . . Where were you forty years ago when I pulled through milk-leg[3] and double pneumonia? You weren't even born. Don't let Cornelia lead you on," she shouted, because Doctor Harry appeared to float up to the ceiling and out. "I pay my own bills, and I don't throw my money away on nonsense!"

She meant to wave good-bye, but it was too much trouble. Her eyes closed of themselves, it was like a dark curtain drawn round the bed. The pillow rose and floated under her, pleasant as a hammock in a light wind. She listened to the leaves rustling outside the window. No, somebody was swishing newspapers: no, Cornelia and Doctor Harry were whispering together. She leaped broad awake, thinking they whispered in her ear.

"She was never like this, never like this!" "Well, what can we expect?" "Yes, eighty years old . . ."

Well, and what if she was? She still had ears. It was like Cornelia to whisper round doors. She always kept things secret in such a public way. She was always being tactful and kind. Cornelia was dutiful; that was the trouble with her. Dutiful and good: "So good and dutiful," said Granny, "that I'd like to spank her." She saw herself spanking Cornelia and making a fine job of it.

"What'd you say, Mother?"

Granny felt her face tying up in hard knots.

"Can't a body think, I'd like to know?"

"I thought you might want something."

"I do. I want a lot of things. First off, go away and don't whisper."

She lay and drowsed, hoping in her sleep that the children would keep out and let her rest a minute. It had been a long day. Not that she was tired. It was always pleasant to snatch a minute now and then. There was always so much to be done. Let me see: tomorrow.

Tomorrow was far away and there was nothing to trouble about. Things were finished somehow when the time came; thank God there was always a little margin over for peace: then a person could spread out the plan of life and tuck in the edges orderly. It was good to have everything clean and folded away, with the hairbrushes and tonic bottles sitting straight on the white embroidered linen; the day started without fuss and the pantry shelves laid out with rows of jelly glasses and brown jugs and white stone-china jars with blue whirligigs[4] and words painted on them: coffee, tea, sugar, ginger, cinnamon, allspice; and the bronze clock with the lion on the top nicely dusted off. The dust that lion could collect in twenty-four hours! The box in the attic with all those letters tied up, well, she'd have to go through that tomorrow. All those letters—George's letters and John's letters and her letters to them both—lying around for Visual Vocabulary Allspice, a spice thought to combine the flavors of cloves, cinnamon, and nutmeg, comes from the dried berries of the pimento tree.

1 Stream of Consciousness How does this paragraph show that Granny's mind travels back and forth between the past and present?

Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist Do Granny's thoughts refer to the past or present? Explain. 2

Vocabulary

tactful (takt´ fəl) adj. able to speak or act without offending others dutiful (do͞o´ ti fəl) adj. careful to fulfill obligations

---

[2] A waistcoat is a vest.

[3] Milk-leg is a painful swelling of the leg that may occur after childbirth.

[4] Whirligigs (hwur' li gigz') are circular patterns, or swirls.

Writing Practice

Eulogy A eulogy is a speech or written commendation praising the character and achievements of someone who has died. In the past, a eulogy was formal. Today, it can be formal or informal, with a serious or funny tone. A eulogy should contain the following elements:

- two or three characteristics of the person being eulogized
- supporting anecdotes or evidence
- achievements or honors of the deceased and their significance

Have students write a eulogy for Granny Weatherall based on details from the story. Ask volunteers to read their eulogies aloud.

the children to find afterwards made her uneasy. Yes, that would be tomorrow's business. No use to let them know how silly she had been once.

While she was rummaging round she found death in her mind and it felt clammy and unfamiliar. She had spent so much time preparing for death there was no need for bringing it up again. Let it take care of itself now. When she was sixty she had felt very old, finished, and went round making farewell trips to see her children and grandchildren, with a secret in her mind: This is the very last of your mother, children! Then she made her will and came down with a long fever. That was all just a notion like a lot of other things, but it was lucky too, for she had once for all got over the idea of dying for a long time. Now she couldn't be worried. She hoped she had better sense now. Her father had lived to be one hundred and two years old and had drunk a noggin[5] of strong hot toddy[6] on his last birthday. He told the reporters it was his daily habit, and he owed his long life to that. He had made quite a scandal and was very pleased about it. She believed she'd just plague Cornelia a little.

"Cornelia! Cornelia!" No footsteps, but a sudden hand on her cheek. "Bless you, where have you been?"

"Here, mother."

☆ "Well, Cornelia, I want a noggin of hot toddy."

"Are you cold, darling?"

"I'm chilly, Cornelia. Lying in bed stops the circulation. I must have told you that a thousand times."

Well, she could just hear Cornelia telling her husband that Mother was getting a little childish and they'd have to humor her. The thing that most annoyed her was that Cornelia thought she was deaf, dumb, and blind. Little hasty glances and tiny gestures tossed around her and over her head, saying, "Don't cross her, let her have her way, she's eighty years old," and she sitting there as if she lived in a thin glass cage. Sometimes Granny almost made up her mind to pack up and move back to her own house where nobody could remind her every minute that she was old. Wait, wait, Cornelia, till your own children whisper behind your back!

In her day she had kept a better house and had got more work done. She wasn't too old yet for Lydia to be driving eighty miles for advice when one of the children jumped the track, and Jimmy still dropped in and talked things over: "Now, Mammy, you've a good business head, I want to know what you think of this . . . ?" Old. Cornelia couldn't change the furniture round without asking. Little things, little things! They had been so sweet when they were little. Granny wished the old days were back again with the children young and everything to be done over. It had been a hard pull, but not too much for her. When she thought of all the food she had cooked, and all the clothes she had cut and sewed, and all the gardens she had made—well, the children showed it. There they were, made out of her, and they couldn't get away from that. Sometimes she wanted to see John again and point to them and say, "Well, I didn't do so badly, did I?" But that would have to wait. That was for tomorrow. She used to think of him as a man, but now all the children were older than their father, and he would be a child beside her if she saw him now. It seemed strange and there was something wrong in the idea. Why, he couldn't possibly recognize her. She had fenced in a hundred acres once, digging the post holes herself and clamping the wires with just a Negro boy to help. That changed a woman. John would be looking for a young woman with the peaked Spanish comb in her hair and the painted fan. Digging post [5] A noggin is a small mug or cup.

---

[6] A hot toddy is a drink made with liquor, hot water, sugar, and spices.

3 Stream of Consciousness In what way is this paragraph an unpredictable flow of feelings, thoughts, memories, and images?

Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist How does Granny view herself as a mother? 4

Teach

Literary Element 3

Stream of Consciousness

Answer: The paragraph meanders through a series of seemingly unrelated thoughts—from memories of her pantry to the memory of love letters in the attic. Her memory of the letters reminds her to go through them so that her children will not read embarrassing parts.

Reading Strategy 4

Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist

Answer: Granny perceives herself as a hard-working mother who cooked, cleaned, raised her children, and ran a farm mostly by herself. She seems proud of her achievements.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Explain that when Granny says, "It had been a hard pull," she means that she had put a lot of effort into taking care of her children.

Language History ☆

Noggin and Toddy Granny Weatherall's choice of language shows that she is from another time. The words noggin and toddy were more commonly used in the 19th century. Toddy was first used to describe liquor made from tropical plants, such as a coconut and palm. The word dates back to the late 18th century. Noggin was first used to mean "a small drinking vessel" in the late 16th century.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Explain that a simile is a figure of speech that compares unlike objects using like or as. Point out the simile "Doctor Harry floated like a balloon." Ask students to create similes that describe Granny Weatherall.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Have students read the paragraph beginning "In her day," aloud to increase reading fluency. Point out the lines in the passage that describe Granny.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Modern Fiction Say: Modernist fiction writers were familiar with psychology. They understood how the human mind drifts from one thought to another. They also understood the importance of symbols.

Ask: What might the fog stand for? (The fog symbolizes Granny's unclear memories; it is also a real fog that Granny remembers, one that reminded her to call for her children and protect them.)

Big Idea 2

Modern Fiction Answer: The stream of consciousness method allowed modern writers to show the way people's minds flow from one thought or idea to another.

holes changed a woman. Riding country roads in the winter when women had their babies was another thing: sitting up nights with sick horses and sick Negroes and sick children and hardly ever losing one. John, I hardly ever lost one of them! John would see that in a minute; that would be something he could understand, she wouldn't have to explain anything!

It made her feel like rolling up her sleeves and putting the whole place to rights again. No matter if Cornelia was determined to be everywhere at once, there were a great many things left undone on this place. She would start tomorrow and do them. It was good to be strong enough for everything, even if all you made melted and changed and slipped under your hands, so that by the time you finished you almost forgot what you were working for. What was it I set out to do? she asked herself intently, but she could not remember. 1 A fog rose over the valley, she saw it marching across the creek swallowing the trees and moving up the hill like an army of ghosts. Soon it would be at the near edge of the orchard, and then it was time to go in and light the lamps. Come in, children, don't stay out in the night air.

Lighting the lamps had been beautiful. The children huddled up to her and breathed like little calves waiting at the bars in the twilight.

Lighting the lamps had been beautiful. The children huddled up to her and breathed like little calves waiting at the bars in the twilight. Their eyes followed the match and watched the flame rise and settle in a blue curve, then they moved away from her. The lamp was lit, they didn't have to be scared and hang on to mother any more. Never, never, never more. God, for all my life I thank Thee. Without Thee, my God, I could never have done it. Hail, Mary, full of grace.[7]

I want you to pick all the fruit this year and see that nothing is wasted. There's always someone who can use it. Don't let good things rot for want of using. You waste life when you waste good food. Don't let things get lost. It's bitter to lose things. Now, don't let me get to thinking, not when I am tired and taking a little nap before supper . . .

The pillow rose about her shoulders and pressed against her heart and the memory was being squeezed out of it: oh, push down the pillow, somebody; it would smother her if she tried to hold it. Such a fresh breeze blowing and such a green day with no threats in it. But he had not come, just the same. What does a woman do when she has put on the white veil and set out the white cake for a man and he doesn't come? She tried to remember. No, I swear he never harmed me but in that. He never harmed me but in that . . . and what if he did? There was the day, the day, but a whirl of dark smoke rose and covered it, crept up and over into the bright field where everything was planted so carefully in orderly rows. That was hell, she knew hell when she saw it. For sixty years she had prayed against remembering him and against losing her

---

[7] Hail, Mary, full of grace is the beginning of a Roman Catholic prayer to the Virgin Mary.

Modern Fiction How is this method of showing Granny's thoughts related to Modernism? 2

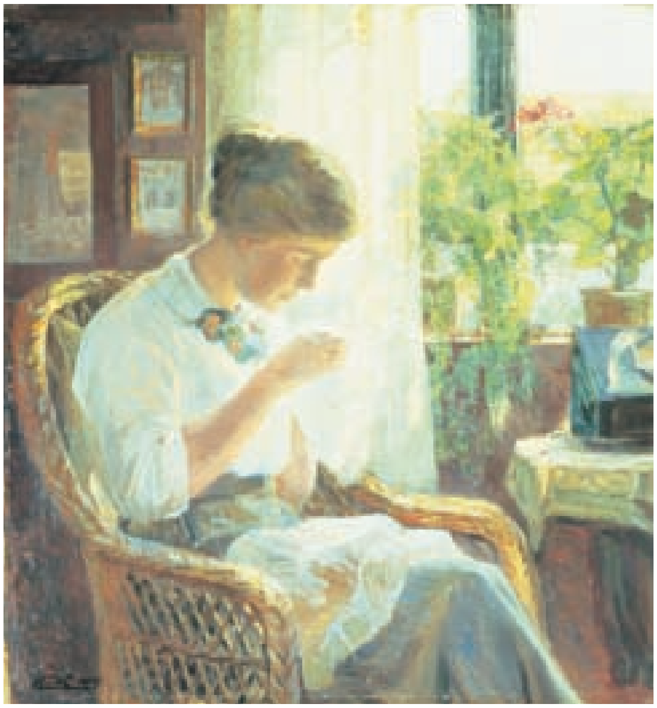
Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Make a Timeline Because the writer uses stream of consciousness to convey the story, students may benefit from placing the main events of the story in chronological order. As they read, have them make a list of the main events. These will include the following:

- Granny is jilted by George.
- Granny raises her children by herself.
- Granny marries John.
- Father Connolly visits granny.
- Granny makes out a will.
- Granny sees Hapsy at her bedside.
- Granny gives birth to Hapsy.
- Cornelia washes Granny's face.

When students have finished reading the story, list the events students have identified on the board. Then have students write down the events in the order in which they occurred. Have volunteers share their answers with the class.



The Seamstress, 1914. Knud Larsen. Oil on canvas, 20 x 18½ in. Private collection.

View the Art Women of the early twentieth century often managed household tasks such as sewing. How might the woman in this painting be like Cornelia at that age? ★ soul in the deep pit of hell, and now the two things were mingled in one, and the thought of him was a smoky cloud from hell that moved and crept in her head when she had just got rid of Doctor Harry and was trying to rest a minute. Wounded vanity, Ellen, said a sharp voice in the top of her mind. Don't let your wounded vanity get the upper hand of you. Plenty of girls get jilted. You were jilted, weren't you? Then stand up to it. Her eyelids wavered and let in streamers of blue-gray light like tissue paper over her eyes. She must get up and pull the shades down or she'd never sleep. She was in bed again and the shades were not down. How could that happen? Better turn over, hide from the light; sleeping in the light gave you nightmares. "Mother, how do you feel now?" and a stinging wetness on her forehead. But I don't like having my face washed in cold water!

Hapsy? George? Lydia? Jimmy? No, Cornelia, and her features were swollen and full of little puddles. "They're coming, darling, they'll all be here soon." Go wash your face, child, you look funny.

Instead of obeying, Cornelia knelt down and put her head on the pillow. She seemed to be talking but there was no sound. "Well, are you tongue-tied? Whose birthday is it? Are you going to give a party?"

Cornelia's mouth moved urgently in strange shapes. "Don't do that, you bother me, daughter."

"Oh, no, Mother. Oh, no . . ."

Nonsense. It was strange about children. They disputed your every word. "No what, Cornelia?"

"Here's Doctor Harry."

3 Stream of Consciousness In writing that uses stream of consciousness, some information is often unclear. What is unclear here?

Vocabulary

vanity (van´ i tē) n. excessive pride, as in one's looks jilt (jilt) v. to drop or reject as a sweetheart

Teach

Literary Element 3

Stream of Consciousness

Answer: Students may not understand that Granny is remembering the pain and humiliation of having been left at the altar sixty years before by her fiancé, George. This passage is the first time Granny refers to that time in the story.

View the Art ★

Answer: Students may say that Cornelia is described as "dutiful and good"—the woman in the painting appears to be dutiful and quiet as she bends over her needlework.

Danish artist Knud Larsen (1865–1922) painted traditional landscapes, interiors, and genre paintings, such as The Seamstress.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate Students may have trouble with the disjointed sequence of Granny's thoughts. Break students into groups and assign each group one section of Granny's thoughts. Have each group work together to paraphrase their section. They may need to use a dictionary to look up any unfamiliar words. Then have a member of each group orally summarize their section for the class and tell whether Granny is thinking about the past, the present, or both.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Tell students to create a timeline of the events in Granny's life. They should include the following: Granny is jilted; she marries John and has children; John dies; Granny runs the farm; one child, Hapsy, dies young; the children grow up and seek her advice; Granny is dying.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Irony Ask: What is ironic when Granny tells Cornelia, "Find him and be sure to tell him I forgot him"? (The irony is that Granny has not forgotten George or the pain he caused her.)

Reading Strategy 2

Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist Answer: Granny has drifted into the past; she remembers one of her children as a baby and then as an adult. Readers know that she is dreaming or remembering because it is Cornelia, not Hapsy, who is caring for Granny.

Literary Element 3

Stream of Consciousness Answer: She is experiencing pain related to a terrible memory. The pain has caused her to remember giving birth.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Explain that while Granny is trying to remember everything she was able to have despite being jilted by George, her mind wanders to another memory. This is indicated by the ellipsis, which is punctuation used to indicate an omission or submission of words. At the end of the paragraph, when she says the phrase "my time has come," she is referring to going into labor.

"I won't see that boy again. He just left five minutes ago."

"That was this morning, Mother. It's night now. Here's the nurse."

"This is Doctor Harry, Mrs. Weatherall. I never saw you look so young and happy!"

"Ah, I'll never be young again—but I'd be happy if they'd let me lie in peace and get rested."

She thought she spoke up loudly, but no one answered. A warm weight on her forehead, a warm bracelet on her wrist and a breeze went on whispering, trying to tell her something. A shuffle of leaves in the everlasting hand of God, He blew on them and they danced and rattled. "Mother, don't mind, we're going to give you a little hypodermic." "Look here, daughter, how do ants get in this bed? I saw sugar ants yesterday." Did you send for Hapsy too?

It was Hapsy she really wanted. She had to go a long way back through a great many rooms to find Hapsy standing with a baby on her arm. She seemed to herself to be Hapsy also, and the baby on Hapsy's arm was Hapsy and himself and herself, all at once, and there was no surprise in the meeting. Then Hapsy melted from within and turned flimsy as gray gauze and the baby was a gauzy shadow, and Hapsy came up close and said, "I thought you'd never come," and looked at her very searchingly and said, "You haven't changed a bit!" They leaned forward to kiss, when Cornelia began whispering from a long way off, "Oh, is there anything you want to tell me? Is there anything I can do for you?"

Yes, she had changed her mind after sixty years and she would like to see George. I want you to find George. Find him and be sure to tell him I forgot him. I want him to know I had my husband just the same, and my children and my house, like any other woman. A good house too and a good husband that I loved and fine children out of him. Better than I hoped for, even. Tell him I was given back everything he took away, and more. Oh, no, O God, no, there was something else besides the house and the man and the children. Oh, surely they were not all? What was it? Something not given back . . . Her breath crowded down under her ribs and grew into a monstrous frightening shape with cutting edges; it bored[8] up into her head, and the agony was unbelievable. Yes, John, get the doctor now, no more talk, my time has come.

When this one was born it should be the last. The last. It should have been born first, for it was the one she had truly wanted. Everything came in good time. Nothing left out, left over. She was strong, in three days she would be as well as ever. Better. A woman needed milk in her to have her full health.

"Mother, do you hear me?"

"I've been telling you—"

"Mother, Father Connolly's here."

"I went to Holy Communion only last week. Tell him I'm not so sinful as all that."

"Father just wants to speak to you."

He could speak as much as he pleased. It was like him to drop in and inquire about her soul as if it were a teething baby, and then stay on for a cup of tea and a round of cards and gossip. He always had a funny story of some sort, usually about an Irishman who made his little mistakes and confessed them, and the point lay in some absurd thing he would blurt out in the confessional[9] showing his struggles between native piety and original sin. Granny felt easy about her soul. Cornelia, where are your manners? Give Father Connolly a chair. She had her

---

[8] Here, to bore means "to make a hole, as by drilling or pushing."

[9] A confessional is a small booth in a Catholic church where a person confesses his or her sins to a priest and asks forgiveness from God through the priest.

2 Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist In this paragraph, is Granny thinking about the past or present? How do you know?

Stream of Consciousness What causes this shift in Granny's thoughts? 3

Vocabulary

piety (pī´ ə tē) n. religious devoutness; goodness

Listening and Speaking Practice

SMALL GROUP

Literary Discussion Have students discuss "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall" in small groups, evaluating Porter's depiction of Granny and her thoughts. Remind students that good discussion should include evidence from the text. Students should also evaluate the story based on what they have seen and experienced in real life. Tell students that they need to express, argue, and support their opinions clearly in their contributions to the discussion. You might provide a statement to get students started, such as: "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall" is a realistic depiction of an old woman facing death. Tell students to consider the statement, adopt a position, and then discuss their reviews.

secret comfortable understanding with a few favorite saints who cleared a straight road to God for her. All as surely signed and sealed as the papers for the new Forty Acres. For ever . . . heirs and assigns[10] forever. Since the day the wedding cake was not cut, but thrown out and wasted. The whole bottom dropped out of the world, and there she was, blind and sweating, with nothing under her feet and the walls falling away. His hand had caught her under the breast, she had not fallen; there was the freshly polished floor with the green rug on it, just as before. He had cursed like a sailor's parrot and said, "I'll kill him for you." "Don't lay a hand on him, for my sake leave something to God." "Now, Ellen, you must believe what I tell you . . ."

So there was nothing, nothing to worry about any more, except sometimes in the night one of the children screamed in a nightmare, and they both hustled out shaking and hunting for the matches and calling, "There, wait a minute, here we are!" John, get the doctor now, Hapsy's time has come. But there was Hapsy standing by the bed in a white cap. "Cornelia, tell Hapsy to take off her cap. I can't see her plain."

Her eyes opened very wide and the room stood out like a picture she had seen somewhere. Dark colors with the shadows rising towards the ceiling in long angles. The tall black dresser gleamed with nothing on it but John's picture, enlarged from a little one, with John's eyes very black when they should have been blue. You never saw him, so how do you know how he looked? But the man insisted the copy was perfect, it was very rich and handsome. For a picture, yes, but it's not my husband. The table by the bed had a linen cover and a candle and a crucifix. The light was blue from Cornelia's silk lampshades. No sort of light at all, just frippery.[11] You had to live forty years with kerosene lamps to appreciate honest electricity. She felt very strong and she saw Doctor Harry with a rosy nimbus[12] around him.

"You look like a saint, Doctor Harry, and I vow that's as near as you'll ever come to it."

"She's saying something."

"I heard you, Cornelia. What's all this carrying-on?"

"Father Connolly's saying—"

Cornelia's voice staggered and bumped like a cart in a bad road. It rounded corners and turned back again and arrived nowhere. Granny stepped up in the cart very lightly and reached for the reins, but a man sat beside her, and she knew him by his hands, driving the cart. She did not look in his face, for she knew without seeing, but looked instead down the road where the trees leaned over and bowed to each other and a thousand birds were singing a Mass. She felt like singing too, but she put her hand in the bosom of her dress and pulled out a rosary, and Father Connolly murmured Latin in a very solemn voice and tickled her feet.[13] My God, will you stop that nonsense? I'm a married woman. What if he did run away and leave me to face the priest by myself? I found another a whole world better. I wouldn't have exchanged my husband for anybody except St. Michael[14] himself, and you may tell him that for me, with a thank you into the bargain.

Did You Know?
A rosary is a string of beads used to help count specific prayers as they are recited.

Light flashed on her closed eyelids, and a deep roaring shook her. Cornelia, is that lightning? I hear thunder. There's going to be a storm. Close all the windows. Call the children

---

[10] Assigns are people to whom property is legally transferred.

[11] Frippery is a showy, useless display.

[12] A nimbus is a disk or ring of light; a halo.

[13] The priest is administering the Sacrament of the Infirm, a Catholic ritual that includes saying prayers and applying oil to the many parts of a person's body.

[14] St. Michael is an archangel, usually depicted as a handsome knight.

4 Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist Besides the jilting, what events in Granny's life appear to have the most importance for her?

Modern Fiction How is the characterization in this story different from traditional characterization? 5

Teach

Reading Strategy 4

Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist Answer:

The birth and premature death of Hapsy, her favorite child, are important to Granny.

APPROACHING Ask: How do you know these events have importance to Granny? (Out of all the events of her life, these are the ones that she is focusing on in the last moments of her life, so they must be important to her.)

Big Idea 5

Modern Fiction Answer:

The characterization is different because it is shown through the frenzied thoughts of a character that is dying.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Journal Entry Invite students to write a journal entry from Cornelia's point of view. They should talk about Cornelia's feelings as she tries her best to take care of her mother and how Cornelia must have felt when she realized that her mother was dying. Instruct students to use details from the original story and to write in a stream of consciousness format. Students may wish to share their journal entries with the class.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Stream of Consciousness
Answer: It is unclear whose words are quoted or that Hapsy has died.

Cultural History ☆

Marriage as Metaphor in the Bible Explain that in the Bible, God and Christ are referred to as bridegrooms, and that marriage is a metaphor used to describe the spiritual relationship between Christ and his followers. Tell students that some Christians believe that Christ escorts the recently deceased into the afterlife. Porter uses this belief in an ironic way. At the end, Granny is jilted a second time.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 207.

Progress Check

Can students identify stream of consciousness?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 202.

Illuminated dining room. Vicenzo Irolli. Pinacoteca Provinciale, Bari, Italy.

in . . . "Mother, here we are, all of us." "Is that you, Hapsy?" "Oh, no, I'm Lydia. We drove as fast as we could." Their faces drifted above her, drifted away. The rosary fell out of her hands and Lydia put it back. Jimmy tried to help, their hands fumbled together, and Granny closed two fingers round Jimmy's thumb. Beads wouldn't do, it must be something alive. She was so amazed her thoughts ran round and round. So, my dear Lord, this is my death and I wasn't even thinking about it. My children have come to see me die. But I can't, it's not time. Oh, I always hated surprises. I wanted to give Cornelia the amethyst[15] set—Cornelia, you're to have the amethyst set, but Hapsy's to wear it when she wants, and, Doctor Harry, do shut up. Nobody sent for you. Oh, my dear Lord, do wait a minute. I meant to do something about the Forty Acres, Jimmy doesn't need it and Lydia will later on, with that worthless husband of hers. I meant to finish the altar cloth and send six bottles of wine to Sister Borgia for her dyspepsia.[16] I want to send six bottles of wine to Sister Borgia, Father Connolly, now don't let me forget.

Cornelia's voice made short turns and tilted over and crashed. "Oh, Mother, oh, Mother, oh, Mother . . ."

"I'm not going, Cornelia. I'm taken by surprise. I can't go."

You'll see Hapsy again. What about her? "I thought you'd never come." Granny made a long journey outward, looking for Hapsy. What if I don't find her? What then? Her heart sank down and down, there was no bottom to death, she couldn't come to the end of it. The blue light from Cornelia's lampshade drew into a tiny point in the center of her brain, it flickered and winked like an eye, quietly it fluttered and dwindled. Granny lay curled down within herself, amazed and watchful, staring at the point of light that was herself; her body was now only a deeper mass of shadow in an endless darkness and this darkness would curl round the light and swallow it up. God, give a sign!

For the second time there was no sign. Again no bridegroom and the priest in the house. She could not remember any other sorrow because this grief wiped them all away. Oh, no, there's nothing more cruel than this—I'll never forgive it. She stretched herself with a deep breath and blew out the light.

Stream of Consciousness What is unclear about this moment in the story? 1

---

[15] Amethyst (am' ə thist) is purple or violet quartz and is typically used in jewelry.

[16] Dyspepsia is indigestion.

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Draw Conclusions When readers draw conclusions, they use evidence to infer new information. Readers can reach conclusions about why a writer wrote a piece of literature or why a character behaves in a certain way. Evidence may come from the selection and from the readers' experiences. Form small groups and ask students to draw conclusions to answer this question: What does "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall" say about the way people hold on to their memories? Have groups share their conclusions with the class.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What was your reaction to Granny Weatherall's train of thought throughout the story?
2. (a)At the beginning of the story, what attitudes does Granny have toward Dr. Harry, Cornelia, and her own illness? (b)What do Granny's attitudes reveal about her state of mind?
3. (a)Who is Hapsy, and where does Granny see her? (b)How does this experience relate to what occurs at the end of the story?
4. (a)Which event does Granny recall with particular anger and sadness? (b)What does her "message" for the person involved allow you to infer about her feelings toward him?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)In your opinion, did Granny live a full life? Support your answer with details from the story. (b)What is symbolic about the name Weatherall?
6. (a)How do the present and past merge when the priest appears? (b)How does Porter use religion to add an extra layer of meaning to the story? Explain.
7. Evaluate whether Porter brings this story to an effective close. Explain your answer using details from the story.

Connect

8. Big Idea Modern Fiction How does the stream of consciousness technique that Porter uses to tell the story clarify the role that memories, experiences, and inner and outer worlds play in one's life?
9. Connect to the Author (a)What is the significance of Granny's name? (b)What connections, if any, do you make between Granny's life and Porter's?

Literary Element Stream of Consciousness

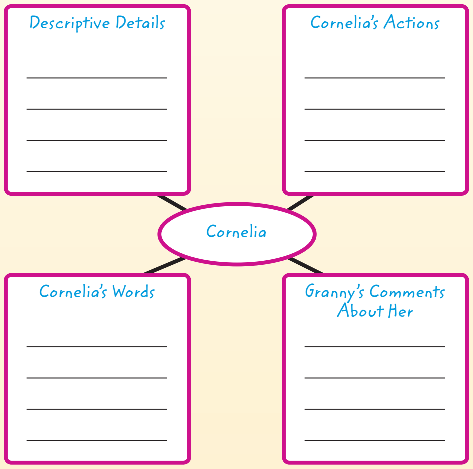
By using stream of consciousness, Porter takes the reader deep into the mind of Granny Weatherall and presents a vivid picture of death. Look back at the timeline you created as you answer the following questions:

1. What kinds of clues help the reader distinguish the past from the present?
2. Is stream of consciousness a good technique for telling the story of the hours and minutes leading up to death? Why or why not?

Review: Characterization

Characterization refers to the various methods that a writer uses to develop the personality of a character. These include description, dialogue, the character's actions, and sometimes, as in this story, the character's thoughts.

Partner Activity Work with a classmate to review how you learned about Cornelia as you read the story. Create a web diagram like the one below, adding new circles with specific information from the story.



After You Read

Assess

1. Some students may think it is typical of how someone thinks. Others may dislike the style.
2. (a) Granny is irritated; she denies that she is ill. (b) She is rational enough to react to others but not aware she is dying.
3. (a) A daughter who has died; Granny visualizes Hapsy at her bedside. (b) Hapsy's appearance and words, "I thought you'd never come," lead to Granny's looking for Hapsy.
4. (a) Being jilted by her fiancé, George (b) She never got over the humiliation, but she does not want him to know.
5. (a) Students may say Granny has had a full and often difficult life. She raised her children and ran a farm after her husband's death. (b) Granny has weathered all the things, both good and bad, that have come her way.
6. (a) The priest reminds Granny of her wedding. (b) During her first engagement, Granny anticipated being joined with another under the eyes of God. As she dies, she expects a signal from God that she may rejoin Hapsy. In both cases, Granny is jilted.
7. Granny's death is the suitable ending. The irony and disappointment of her death mirror that of her being jilted years earlier.
8. Stream of consciousness allows Porter to show memories and feelings, which contrast with Granny's outer life.
9. (a) Granny has weathered both sorrows and joys in her life. (b) Students may say that both experienced intense realizations at critical points in their lives; Porter had a near-death experience.

Literary Element

1. Dialogue helps pinpoint Granny's place in time. For example, when she hears Cornelia's voice, she is in the present, but when she tells John to call the doctor, she is in the past.
2. Porter's use of stream of consciousness lets her portray the random thoughts of a dying person.

Review: Characterization

Possible responses:

Descriptive details: Cornelia's features are "swollen and full of little puddles."

Cornelia's words: "She was never like this, never like this!"

Cornelia's actions: She tries to make Granny as comfortable as possible.

Granny's comments: Cornelia is "dutiful and good."

After You Read

Reading Strategy

1. A is the correct answer because all of Granny's accomplishments that she remembers before dying happened because she rebounded and went on with her life.

Vocabulary

1. Annette's careful critique of her friends implies that she is sure to speak without offending.
2. It is the task of a caretaker to make sure his charges remain healthy, so dutiful refers to one who does his assigned job.
3. Though he has not heard the results, the uncle's excessive pride in himself makes him believe he will win.
4. The sister's emotional distress after the jilting implies that the boyfriend broke up with her.
5. Carrying a rosary, an item affiliated with religious worship, is characteristic of a devoutly spiritual person.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 217–218.

Reading Strategy Draw Conclusions About the Protagonist

SAT Skills Practice

1. Which event in Granny's life most powerfully illustrates her independence?
   (A) rebounding after being jilted
   (B) dying without forgiveness
   (C) digging post holes
   (D) plaguing Cornelia
   (E) playing cards with the priest

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Context Clues Identify context clues to the meaning of each vocabulary word.

1. Annette was being tactful when she gave feedback on her friends' presentations.
2. We wanted to leave a dutiful caretaker in charge of the sensitive animals.
3. My uncle's vanity was great enough that he felt sure he had won the contest.
4. My sister cried for three days after her boyfriend jilted her and married another girl.
5. Joseph, who always carried a rosary, was known for his piety.

Academic Vocabulary

Granny Weatherall's dominant thoughts are of her children and of the fiancé who left her.

Dominant is an academic word. Using context clues, infer the meaning of dominant in the above sentence. Check your inference in a print or online dictionary.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Literature Online

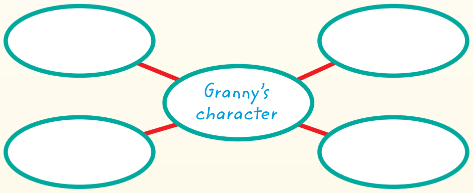
Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Speaking and Listening

Performance

Assignment Imagine that George arrives in Granny's room or calls her on the phone. Write and perform a monologue in which Granny speaks to George. Review your details/conclusion chart from page 774 to help you understand what Granny would say to George and how she would act.

Prepare Before beginning to draft your monologue, use a word web such as the one below to help you analyze Granny's character. As you write Granny's speech, keep in mind the basic character traits you have identified.



Once you have drafted your monologue, read it aloud, both as an aid to revision and to begin rehearsing your delivery. Ask yourself if your monologue expresses the characteristics of Granny's personality and captures her voice. Once you are satisfied with the text of your monologue, rehearse it carefully. It is useful to rehearse in front of a family member or friend—you can practice eye contact and get feedback on details such as your pronunciation and pacing. You can also videotape your performance and provide your own evaluation.

Perform In performing your monologue, speak loudly enough to be heard, but vary the pacing and inflection of your voice to reflect the meaning of your words. Maintain eye contact with your audience. Use appropriate and natural facial expressions and gestures to reinforce the dramatic content of your monologue.

Evaluate Write a paragraph evaluating your delivery of your monologue. When your classmates present their monologues, offer oral feedback. Use the checklist on page 163 for help in your evaluation.

Academic Vocabulary

Students should infer from context that dominant means "in control over others."

For help with creating presentations, see Student Presentation Builder on StudentWorks Plus.

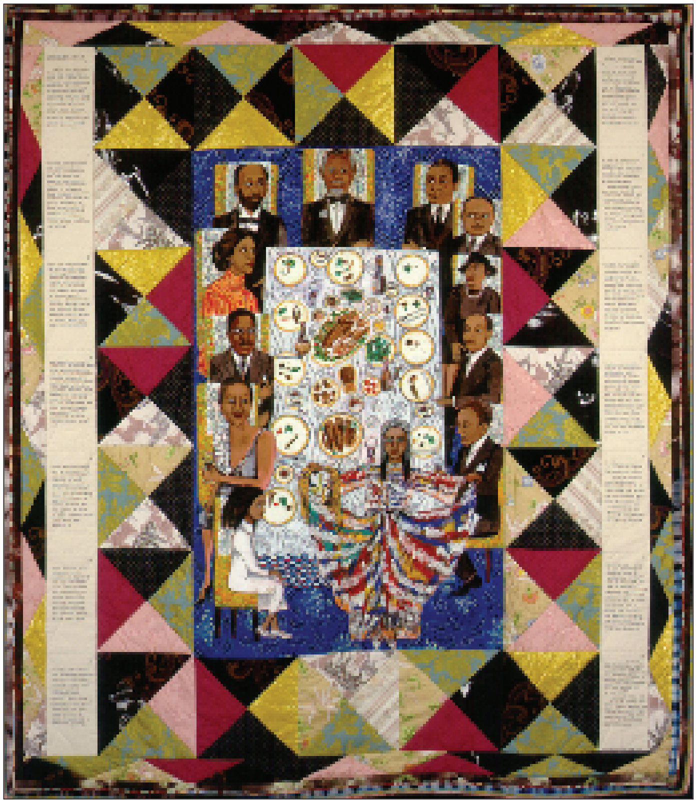
Speaking and Listening

Use these criteria when evaluating students' monologues:

- Did the student use character analysis of Granny to prepare the monologue?
- Did the student's monologue capture Granny's character and voice?
- Did the student effectively use verbal and nonverbal techniques in delivering the monologue?

PART 3

THE HARLEM RENAISSANCE 1



The Bitter Nest, Part II: The Harlem Renaissance Party, c. 1988. Faith Ringgold. Acrylic on canvas with printed, dyed, and pieced fabric, 94 x 83 in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC.

View the Art Faith Ringgold explores feminism and racism through her painted story-quilts, which often incorporate both images and text. What story do you "read" from looking at this quilt? ★

> "I, too, am America." 2
>
> —Langston Hughes, "I, Too"

Analyze and Extend

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Explain that a renaissance is a period of rebirth or revival, or a period of artistic growth. The Renaissance refers most often to the European renaissance of the fourteenth through sixteenth centuries, which produced artists such as Michelangelo and Leonardo da Vinci. Ask: What connection can you infer between Langston Hughes's quote and a renaissance in the African American community of Harlem? (As an African American Hughes contributes to American culture.)

Literary Element 2

Allusion Explain to students that the quotation is the last line of a poem by Hughes. The poem begins "I, Too, Sing America." This is an allusion to a poem from Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass.

View the Art ★

Story Quilts Faith Ringgold (1930–) is an award-winning children's book illustrator, artist, and teacher. She is famous for her story quilts, which combine storytelling, painting, and quilted fabric. In this quilt, Ringgold includes some famous African American writers and artists.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Explain that the 1920s are often referred to as the "Roaring Twenties," a period of prosperity and change for some Americans. Provide historical information for students to read and discuss. Ask why they think the term "Roaring Twenties" is used to describe this period.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Point out that Hughes wrote: "I, too, am America," not "I, too, am American." Ask: What is the difference? (Stating "I am America" suggests that the speaker represents a larger group whereas "I am American" refers only to the speaker.)

For additional support for English Learners, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 210.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

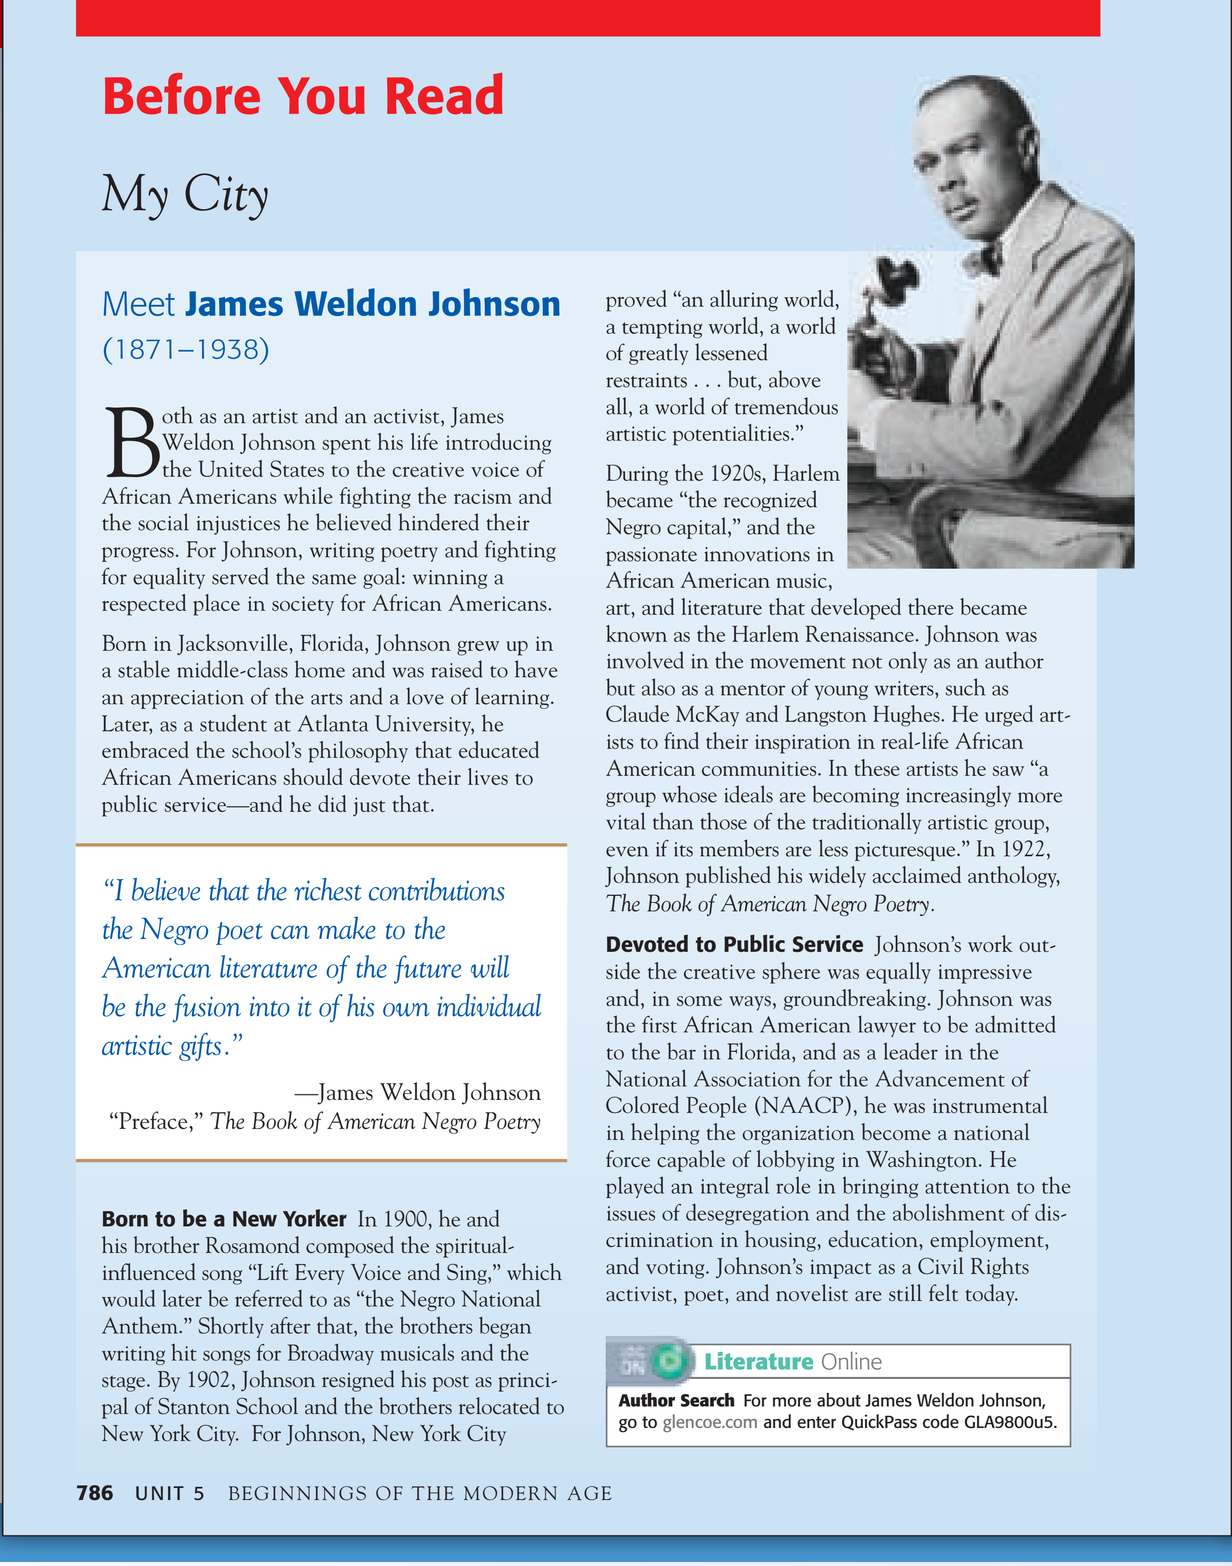
Selection Focus Transparency 48

Daily Language Practice Transparency 71

Or display images of major cities around the world, such as Paris, Shanghai, and Cairo.

Ask: If you could visit any city in the world, which would it be? Why?

Have students share their choices with the class. Encourage students to describe their city of choice and point out the imagery they use.



Before You Read

My City

Meet James Weldon Johnson
(1871–1938)

Both as an artist and an activist, James Weldon Johnson spent his life introducing the United States to the creative voice of African Americans while fighting the racism and the social injustices he believed hindered their progress. For Johnson, writing poetry and fighting for equality served the same goal: winning a respected place in society for African Americans.

Born in Jacksonville, Florida, Johnson grew up in a stable middle-class home and was raised to have an appreciation of the arts and a love of learning. Later, as a student at Atlanta University, he embraced the school's philosophy that educated African Americans should devote their lives to public service—and he did just that.

> "I believe that the richest contributions the Negro poet can make to the American literature of the future will be the fusion into it of his own individual artistic gifts."
>
> —James Weldon Johnson
> "Preface," The Book of American Negro Poetry

Born to be a New Yorker In 1900, he and his brother Rosamond composed the spiritual-influenced song "Lift Every Voice and Sing," which would later be referred to as "the Negro National Anthem." Shortly after that, the brothers began writing hit songs for Broadway musicals and the stage. By 1902, Johnson resigned his post as principal of Stanton School and the brothers relocated to New York City. For Johnson, New York City proved "an alluring world, a tempting world, a world of greatly lessened restraints . . . but, above all, a world of tremendous artistic potentialities."

During the 1920s, Harlem became "the recognized Negro capital," and the passionate innovations in African American music, art, and literature that developed there became known as the Harlem Renaissance. Johnson was involved in the movement not only as an author but also as a mentor of young writers, such as Claude McKay and Langston Hughes. He urged artists to find their inspiration in real-life African American communities. In these artists he saw "a group whose ideals are becoming increasingly more vital than those of the traditionally artistic group, even if its members are less picturesque." In 1922, Johnson published his widely acclaimed anthology, The Book of American Negro Poetry.

Devoted to Public Service Johnson's work outside the creative sphere was equally impressive and, in some ways, groundbreaking. Johnson was the first African American lawyer to be admitted to the bar in Florida, and as a leader in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), he was instrumental in helping the organization become a national force capable of lobbying in Washington. He played an integral role in bringing attention to the issues of desegregation and the abolishment of discrimination in housing, education, employment, and voting. Johnson's impact as a Civil Rights activist, poet, and novelist are still felt today.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about James Weldon Johnson, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

My City

Literary Elements
- Sonnet (SE pp. 787, 789)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 788)

Reading Skills
- Interpret Imagery (SE pp. 787, 789)

Vocabulary Skills
- Antonyms (SE pp. 787, 789)
- Adjectives (TE p. 787)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a Brochure (SE p. 789)
- Word Choice (TE p. 788)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poem

What is your favorite place? Why? Make a list of your reasons. Use vivid language, imagery, and specific details.

Build Background

Johnson often crafted his early poetry using classical models—writing rhymed verse in traditional forms such as the sonnet. "My City" is an example of a Petrarchan sonnet, named for the Italian poet who developed the form in the 1300s.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance

In "My City," Johnson celebrates Manhattan, the most well-known borough of New York City. Harlem is a neighborhood in Manhattan. As you read, ask, What does Johnson's poem say about the vitality of the city during the Harlem Renaissance?

Literary Element Sonnet

A sonnet is a lyric poem of fourteen lines, typically written in iambic pentameter. "My City" is a Petrarchan (or Italian) sonnet, which is divided into two stanzas, an eight-line octave and a six-line sestet. The octave often sets up a situation or poses a question that is responded to in the sestet. As you read, ask, What does Johnson accomplish by using this structure?

Reading Strategy Interpret Imagery

Imagery is the "word pictures" that a writer creates to make the text more vivid or evoke an emotional response. Writers often use sensory details to create effective images. As you read, ask, How does Johnson's imagery differ in each stanza?

Tip: Take Notes Create a chart like the one started below to analyze the impact of images in "My City." Consider both the impact on a reader's emotions and on the poem's meaning.

Image	Impact
endless night

Learning Objectives

For pages 786–789

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing a sonnet.

Reading: Interpreting imagery.

Writing: Writing a brochure.

Vocabulary

subtle (sə´ təl) adj. faint; barely noticeable; not obvious; p. 788 Although her smirk was subtle, I saw it.

stark (stärk) adj. absolute; complete; p. 788 Pablo's opinion was in stark contrast to mine.

unutterable (un ə´ tə rə bəl) adj. too deep or great to be put into words; p. 788 The apprehended thief experienced unutterable regret.

Tip: Antonyms Understanding an unfamiliar word's antonyms—words with opposite or nearly opposite meanings—and using them in a sentence can help you learn the new word. Example: Overpowering is an antonym of subtle. Sentence: When a dessert has a subtle mocha flavor, the taste of coffee is not too overpowering.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

The sonnet begins with the speaker asking himself what he'll miss most when he dies. He ponders whether he will long for elements of nature, such as trees, birds, and streams. In the second stanza, he comes to the conclusion that he will miss Manhattan the most. He contrasts the delights of the borough with the elements of nature. He describes city sights and sounds and ends with a strong statement about how much he will miss them.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 211–216.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Vocabulary

Use Adjectives Explain to students that the word stark typically refers to a contrast or difference between things that are at opposite extremes, as opposed to the type of completeness that comes from having a full range of possibilities. Ask: What nouns might the word stark be used to modify? (contrast, difference, justice) What nouns might the word stark not be used to modify? (compromise, well-being, joy)

APPROACHING Ask: What is a feeling that could be described with the adjective unutterable? (Despair, remorse, joy)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Remind students that a writer uses imagery by creating "word pictures" to generate an emotional response. Write the word imagery on the board. Point out that the root of this word is imāgō, which is also the root of the word image. Ask students to define the word image. Then have them explain the differences between the words image and imagery. Help students brainstorm other words that have the same root and have them define the words. (imagine, imaginary, imagination) Write the words and the students' definitions on the board. Then have students use dictionaries to find the meanings of the words and compare them with their own definitions.

Teach

Big Idea 1

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: The speaker loves all the features of Manhattan, including her shining towers and slums.

View the Art ★

Jacob Lawrence (1917–2000) is one of the most famous African American artists. He is known for his depiction of important African American events. After making his name in Harlem, Lawrence achieved national acclaim in 1941 with his Migration series, featured on pages 807–809.

Ask: How does Lawrence's painting relate to Johnson's poem? (Students may say it reflects the crowds and the "throbbing force" described in Johnson's poem.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 218.

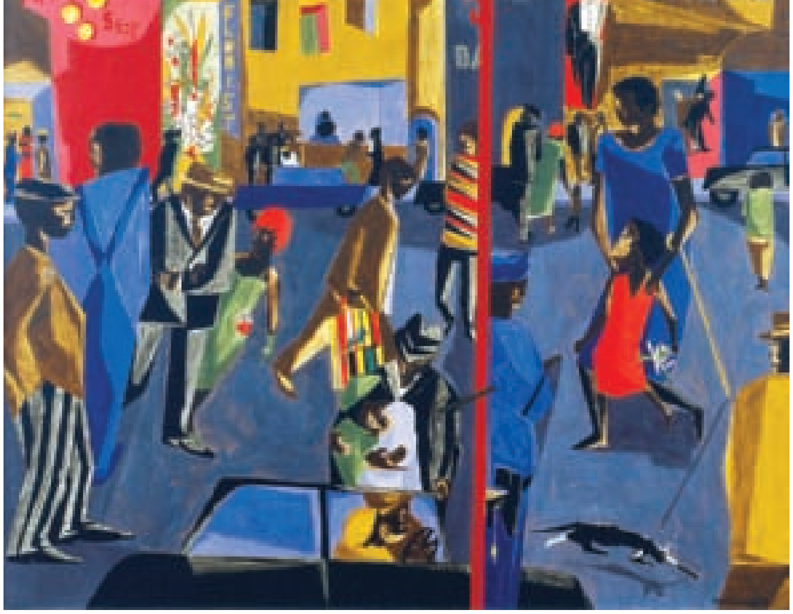
Progress Check

Can students analyze a sonnet?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 217.

My City

James Weldon Johnson



Fulton and Nostrand, 1958. Jacob Lawrence. Tempera on masonite, 24 x 30 in. Private collection. Courtesy Terry Dintenfass Gallery, NY. ★

When I come down to sleep death's endless night,
The threshold of the unknown dark to cross,
What to me then will be the keenest loss,
When this bright world blurs on my fading sight?
Will it be that no more I shall see the trees
Or smell the flowers or hear the singing birds
Or watch the flashing streams or patient herds?
No. I am sure it will be none of these.

But, ah! Manhattan's sights and sounds, her smells,
Her crowds, her throbbing force, the thrill that comes
From being of her a part, her subtle spells,
Her shining towers, her avenues, her slums—
O God! the stark, unutterable pity,

To

The Harlem Renaissance How do you think the speaker feels toward Manhattan's "shining towers" and "slums"? 1

Vocabulary

subtle (sə´ təl) adj. faint; barely noticeable; not obvious

stark (stärk) adj. absolute; complete unutterable (un ə´ tə rə bəl) adj. too deep or great to be put into words

Writing Practice

Word Choice Point out the importance of word choice in poetry. The condensed nature of poetry makes word choice essential. Note how words like stark and unutterable work well because they not only get their meaning across, but they also paint a vivid picture. Have students practice using imagery by writing a full description of the town in which they live. Instruct students to include favorite sights, sounds, and smells in their descriptions.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. How did "My City" make you feel about New York City as it was during the Harlem Renaissance?
2. (a)What question does the speaker pose for himself at the beginning of the poem? (b)Is the speaker's age implied in this question? If so, how?
3. (a)What possible answers to his question does the speaker first explore? (b)Why might he propose these answers?
4. (a)What answer does the speaker finally provide? (b)What reasons does he give? (c)What does this answer tell you about the speaker's personality?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)What, according to the speaker, is "the stark, unutterable pity" (line 13)? (b)Why might the speaker feel this way about the city?
6. (a)How does the rhyme scheme connect to the poem's meaning? (b)Would the poem have the same effect without a rhyme scheme? Explain.

Connect

7. Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance How does Johnson's poem reflect the general mood of the Harlem Renaissance?
8. Connect to Today Do people today feel as intense a connection to where they live as Johnson expresses in "My City"? Explain.

Literary Element Sonnet

Petrarchan sonnets have an octave and a sestet. After the octave establishes the main idea, the sestet can develop that idea or offer a new idea.

1. What relationship do the octave and sestet have in "My City"? Explain.
2. How does the division of this poem into an octave and a sestet contribute to its effectiveness?

Reading Strategy Interpret Imagery

Refer to your image and impact chart from page 787 as you answer the following questions.

1. How does the imagery change from the octave to the sestet?
2. How does the change support the poem's meaning?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Antonyms With a partner, brainstorm antonyms for each boldfaced vocabulary word below. Then discuss your choices with your classmates. Be prepared to explain why you chose your words.

subtle stark unutterable

EXAMPLE: ideal

Antonyms: flawed, faulty, defective

Sample explanation: An ideal vacation meets all possible hopes and expectations, but a flawed one does not.

Writing

Write a Brochure Using a map and tourist information about Manhattan, locate places that match Johnson's descriptions. Then create an illustrated tourism guide for "My City." Before you turn in your guide, share it with another student and ask for feedback on how well it expresses Johnson's love of Manhattan.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students may say that the poem expresses the excitement of living in New York.
2. (a) The speaker asks himself what he will miss most when he dies. (b) The speaker's age is not clear, but the question suggests that he is looking back over many years.
3. (a) He considers whether nature and pastoral scenes might be the answer. (b) These are conventional images of beauty.
4. (a) The speaker decides that he will miss Manhattan the most. (b) He loves the crowds and city life. (c) He enjoys the excitement and activity of city life.
5. (a) It is the sorrow the speaker feels because death will force him to give up Manhattan forever. (b) To the speaker, the city represents the best of life.
6. (a) The rhyme of the second stanza gives it a faster tempo, reflecting the rhythm and pace of the city. (b) A change would affect the tempo of one or both of the stanzas.
7. It celebrates a city where there was a great blossoming of African American culture.
8. Students may say that people feel less connected because they change cities more often.

Literary Element

1. Contradiction: The octave focuses on nature, and the sestet on civilization.
2. It creates a sharp distinction between pastoral prettiness and urban energy.

Writing

Make sure that students' citations of places match the images in the poem.

Reading Strategy

1. From rural imagery to urban imagery
2. The imagery evokes both the city and the author's feelings about it.

Vocabulary

subtle; Antonyms: obvious, overpowering, palpable; Sample explanation: A perfume that is subtle has a faint scent, whereas one that is overpowering can be smelled at a distance.

stark; Antonyms: incomplete; Sample explanation: Stark pity is absolute and whole, but incomplete pity is not.

unutterable; Antonyms: describable, imaginable; Sample explanation: Something that is unutterable cannot be described.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus Transparency 49

Daily Language Practice Transparency 72

Or write on the board: What is your favorite book? How has it inspired you?

Display some popular books to start the discussion. Encourage students to share their favorite books with the class. Have volunteers give an oral review of their favorite book. They should include the title, author, and an explanation of why they enjoyed it or how it inspired them.

Before You Read

from Dust Tracks on a Road

Meet Zora Neale Hurston

(1891–1960)

In 1973, writer Alice Walker traveled to Fort Pierce, Florida, to visit Zora Neale Hurston's grave. According to Walker, what she found looked "more like an abandoned field" than a cemetery. Walker ordered a headstone to mark Hurston's grave. "I wanted to mark Zora's grave so that one day all our daughters and sons would be able to locate the remains of a human mountain in Florida's and America's so frequently flat terrain," Walker explains.

Introduction to Folklore Zora Neale Hurston grew up in Eatonville, Florida, one of the first incorporated black towns in the United States, where her father was the mayor. Only thirteen years old when her mother died, Hurston spent the next two decades working as a waitress, a manicurist, and a maid, while trying to complete a high school education. Finally she enrolled in Howard University, and later Barnard College. There, she came to the attention of celebrated anthropologist Franz Boas, who invited Hurston to become formally trained as an anthropologist and a folklorist.

After completing her studies, Hurston used her training to collect the folklore of Eatonville and other southern African American communities. She later used this material as a source for much of the fiction writing she pursued when not documenting folklore.

Literary Success and Obscurity Although considered an important figure in the Harlem Renaissance, Hurston was a fierce individualist who resisted membership in any one school of thought. She once remarked, "I am so put together that I do not have much of a herd instinct. Or if I must be connected with the flock, let me be the shepherd my ownself. That is just the way I am made." Her ideas sometimes got her into trouble with her fellow writers, some of whom felt that documenting the speech and folkways of small-town African Americans could expose the community to ridicule. Over the years Hurston's popularity declined. By the time of her death in a Florida retirement home, she was penniless.

> "There is no agony like bearing an untold story inside you."
>
> —Zora Neale Hurston

Today, thanks to Walker and other admirers, Hurston's books are widely read. She is remembered for her ability to capture the traditions and poetic speech of southern African American culture. Her book Mules and Men is recognized as the first history of African American folklore written by an African American, and her novel Their Eyes Were Watching God has sold more than a million copies since its republication in 1969. In her autobiography, Hurston recalled, "I used to climb to the top of one of the huge chinaberry trees which guarded our front gate and look out over the world. The most interesting thing I saw was the horizon. . . . It grew upon me that I ought to walk out to the horizon and see what the end of the world was like."

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Zora Neale Hurston, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

Dust Tracks on a Road

Literary Elements
- Voice (SE pp. 791, 192, 791, 796, 797, 798)
- Allusion (SE p. 798)

Reading Skills
- Analyze Language (SE pp. 791, 793, 795, 796, 799)
- Predict (TE p. 792)
- Connect (TE, 796)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 795; TE p. 792)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Apply Allusion (SE p. 799)
- Point of View (TE p. 794)

Vocabulary Skills
- Analogies (SE pp. 791, 799)
- Synonyms and Antonyms (TE p. 791)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

Have you ever received a gift that changed your perceptions of another person? Write a brief journal entry describing that situation.

Build Background

This excerpt takes place in about 1900 in Eatonville, Florida. Zora Neale Hurston frequently celebrated the customs and speech of her hometown in her writing. Although the autobiography Dust Tracks on a Road is fascinating for what it reveals about Hurston and her background, it conceals much about her life at the same time. Hurston never tells when she was born, never mentions her second marriage, and contradicts details about her life that she wrote about in private letters to friends.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance

As you read, ask yourself, What details of Southern life did Hurston consider worthy of recording and celebrating?

Literary Element Voice

The voice of a literary work is the distinctive use of language that conveys the author's or narrator's personality to the reader. Voice is determined by elements of style such as word choice and tone. As you read, ask yourself, What does the narrator's voice reveal about her personality and background?

Reading Strategy Analyze Language

When you analyze a selection, you look at separate parts to see how they work together to produce an underlying meaning. As you read, ask yourself, How does Hurston use vivid words, dialect (local speech patterns), and regional expressions to create a rich portrait of childhood in Eatonville?

Tip: Read Slowly When you read material that contains unfamiliar words, phrases, or concepts, slow down your reading rate to aid comprehension.

Learning Objectives

For pages 790–799

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing voice.

Reading: Analyzing language.

Writing: Applying allusion in a paragraph.

Vocabulary

brazenness (brā´ zən nəs) n. defiant behavior; boldness; p. 792 We laughed at the comic's brazenness when he ridiculed the mayor.

exalt (ig zôlt´) v. to lift up; to put in high spirits; p. 794 I always exalt the influence of my mother.

snicker (sni´ kər) n. a snide, partly suppressed laugh, often expressing disrespect; p. 794 When the actor forgot his lines, a man in the audience let out a snicker.

indifferent (in dif´ ər ənt) adj. lacking feeling or concern; p. 796 Jim played for the joy of it; he was completely indifferent to whether he won or lost.

Tip: Analogies Analogies are comparisons that show similarities between two things that are otherwise dissimilar. An analogy can help explain something unfamiliar by comparing it to something familiar.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Ask students to identify the most familiar use of the word voice. (the sounds produced by a person) Explain that a writer is said to have a distinctive voice just as an individual does. This voice comes through in the author's choice of words. Have students make a two-column chart, like the one at right, to record examples of the author's voice as they read the selection.

Word Choice	Narrator's Voice
The movement made me glad to see it.	Optimistic, open to adventure

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Hurston recalls an episode from her childhood that encouraged her interest in reading. When two white women visited her school in Eatonville, Florida—an African American town—they were impressed by her oral reading ability. They treated her to fancy food, clothes, and shiny new pennies; more importantly, they sent her a box of books. The books unlocked Hurston's imagination and inspired her deeply.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 222–227.

Vocabulary

Synonyms and Antonyms

Remind students that synonyms are words that have the same or similar meanings. Antonyms are words that have opposite or nearly opposite meanings. Synonyms and antonyms are always the same part of speech. Have students identify a synonym and an antonym for each of the four vocabulary words. Have students defend their choices.

APPROACHING Have students check the meanings of their synonyms and antonyms in the dictionary. Have them reevaluate whether or not they were correct choices.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 230.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Voice Answer: Anecdotes such as the one about Hurston hitchhiking suggest that the young Hurston was likable, brash, and unafraid.

View the Art ★

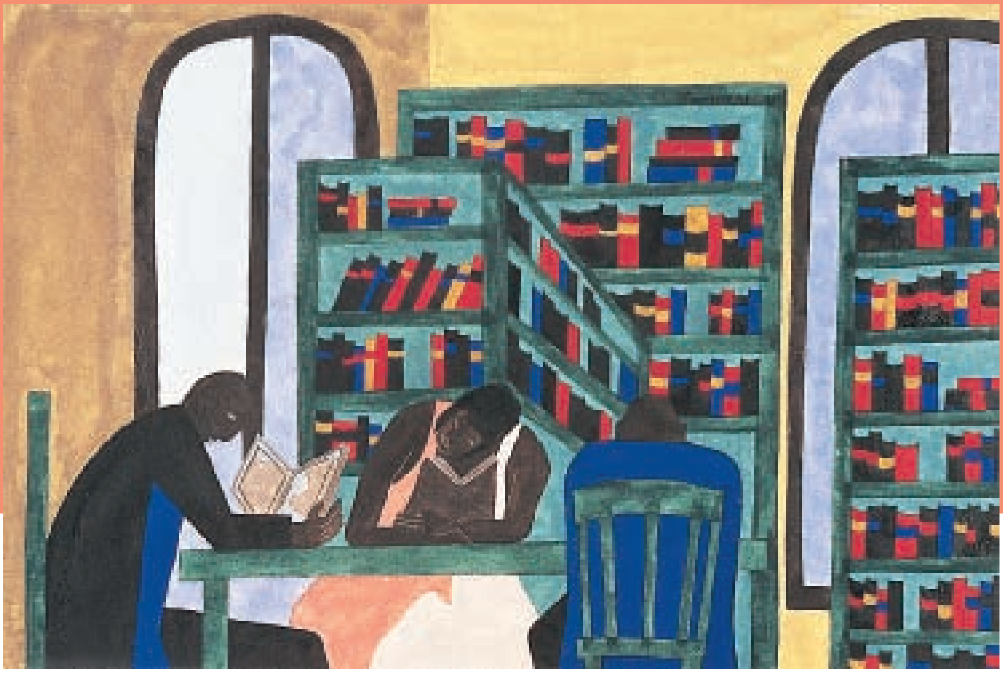
A library played an important part in Jacob Lawrence's artistic development. Lawrence was inspired by Professor Charles Seifert, who taught African American history at the 135th Street public library in Harlem. Due in part to Seifert's influence, Lawrence began painting the stories and histories of African Americans.

Ask: How might you take advantage of services provided by a library to further your own creative growth? (Students may say that libraries offer free classes, Internet access, book clubs, and events.)

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 5.1
DRP: 53
Lexile: 920



Harlem Series, no. 28: The Libraries Are Appreciated, 1943. Jacob Lawrence. Gouache on paper, 14½ x 21¼ in. Philadelphia Museum of Art, PA. ★

from Dust Tracks on a Road

Zora Neale Hurston

I used to take a seat on top of the gate-post and watch the world go by. One way to Orlando ran past my house, so the carriages and cars would pass before me. The movement made me glad to see it. Often the white travelers would hail[1] me, but more often I hailed them, and asked, "Don't you want me to go a piece of the way with you?" They always did. I know now that I must have caused a great deal of amusement among them, but my self-assurance must have carried the point, for I was always invited to come along. I'd ride up the road for perhaps a half-mile, then walk back. I did not do this with the permission of my parents, nor with their foreknowledge. When they found out about it later, I usually got a whipping. My grandmother worried about my forward ways a great deal. She had known slavery and to her my brazenness was unthinkable.

Voice What does this passage suggest about the young Hurston's personality? 1

Vocabulary

brazenness (brā´ zən nəs) n. defiant behavior; boldness

---

[1] Hail means "to greet."

Reading Practice

SMALL GROUP

Actively Read and Predict

Ask students to stop reading at the beginning of the first full paragraph on page 793. Divide students into groups. Based on what they have read so far, students hypothesize what they think might come next. Then, have them develop a list of questions that they would like answered as they read further.

Encourage students to look for the answers as they read further. This will help them set their own purposes for reading. When they finish the passage, have them compare their predictions with what actually happens.

"Git down offa dat gate-post! You li'l sow, you! Git down! Setting up dere looking dem white folks right in de face! They's gowine[2] to lynch you, yet. And don't stand in dat doorway gazing out at 'em neither. Youse too brazen to live long."

Nevertheless, I kept right on gazing at them, and "going a piece of the way" whenever I could make it. The village seemed dull to me most of the time. If the village was singing a chorus, I must have missed the tune.

Perhaps a year before the old man[3] died, I came to know two other white people for myself. They were women.

It came about this way. The whites who came down from the North were often brought by their friends to visit the village school. A Negro school was something strange to them, and while they were always sympathetic and kind, curiosity must have been present, also. They came and went, came and went. Always, the room was hurriedly put in order, and we were threatened with a prompt and bloody death if we cut one caper[4] while the visitors were present. We always sang a spiritual, led by Mr. Calhoun himself. Mrs. Calhoun always stood in the back, with a palmetto switch[5] in her hand as a squelcher. We were all little angels for the duration, because we'd better be. She would cut her eyes[6] and give us a glare that meant trouble, then turn her face towards the visitors and beam as much as to say it was a great privilege and pleasure to teach lovely children like us. They couldn't see that palmetto hickory in her hand behind all those benches, but we knew where our angelic behavior was coming from.

Usually, the visitors gave warning a day ahead and we would be cautioned to put on shoes, comb our heads, and see to ears and fingernails. There was a close inspection of every one of us before we marched in that morning. Knotty heads, dirty ears and fingernails got hauled out of line, strapped and sent home to lick the calf[7] over again.

This particular afternoon, the two young ladies just popped in. Mr. Calhoun was flustered,[8] but he put on the best show he could. He dismissed the class that he was teaching up at the front of the room, then called the fifth grade in reading. That was my class.

So we took our readers and went up front. We stood up in the usual line, and opened to the lesson. It was the story of Pluto and Persephone.[9] It was new and hard to the class in general, and Mr. Calhoun was very uncomfortable as the readers stumbled along, spelling out words with their lips, and in mumbling undertones before they exposed them experimentally to the teacher's ears.

Then it came to me. I was fifth or sixth down the line. The story was not new to me, because I had read my reader through from lid to lid, the first week that Papa had bought it for me.

That is how it was that my eyes were not in the book, working out the paragraph which I knew would be mine by counting the children ahead of me. I was observing our visitors, who held a book between them, following the lesson. They had shiny hair, mostly brownish. One had a looping gold chain around her neck. The other one was dressed all over in black and white with a pretty finger ring on

---

2. Gowine is dialect for "going."
3. The old man, a white farmer who was a friend of Hurston's family, took Zora Neale fishing and gave her advice.
4. Cut one caper is slang for "play a trick or prank" or "behave extravagantly or noisily."
5. A palmetto switch, a whip used for discipline, was made from the flexible stem of a leaf from a palmetto palm.
6. Cut her eyes is slang for "look at with scorn or contempt."
7. Lick the calf is slang for "get cleaned up."
8. Flustered means "nervous" or "agitated."
9. The myth of Pluto and Persephone (pər sef´ ə nē) explains the origin of the seasons. Pluto is god of the underworld, and Persephone is his wife.

2 The Harlem Renaissance What do these details reveal about the United States at the time?

Analyze Language Why does the author include phrases such as "lick the calf"? 3

Teach

Big Idea 2

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: These details reveal that some Southern African Americans did not often come into contact with white people, especially with Northern whites. The details also suggest that the white visitors were motivated to visit the school both by kindness and by curiosity.

Reading Strategy 3

Analyze Language

Answer: The inclusion of colloquial language adds authenticity and humor.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 229.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced Students may more readily understand this passage if they are familiar with some of the slang and dialect that Hurston uses. Preteach the following slang and unfamiliar terms from the story: gowine, cut one caper, cut her eyes, lick the calf, flustered, passed, and roast.

Have students pantomime each term or phrase. Once they understand the meaning of each one, reinforce comprehension by asking students questions such as the following:

Under what conditions would someone need to "lick the calf"? (when visitors are coming) What is another common or slang phrase with a meaning similar to "cut one caper"? (cut up) What is an example of a situation in which someone could feel flustered? (when asked a difficult question) When might a teacher "cut her eyes"? (when students are whispering while she is talking)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Point of View Ask: What is first-person point of view in nonfiction? (The story is told from the author's point of view.) Say: An autobiography almost always uses first-person point of view. Ask: What might be an advantage and a disadvantage of this? (Students may say that an advantage is they hear what the author thinks and feels, and a disadvantage is that they are limited because they only hear the author's side of the story.)

Literary Element 2

Voice Answer: The word exalted conveys Hurston's feelings of being lifted into higher realms of experience through her reading of the myth.

her left hand. But the thing that held my eyes were their fingers. They were long and thin, and very white, except up near the tips. There they were baby pink. I had never seen such hands. It was a fascinating discovery for me. I wondered how they felt. I would have given those hands more attention, but the child before me was almost through. My turn next, so I got on my mark, bringing my eyes back to the book and made sure of my place. Some of the stories I had re-read several times, and this Greco-Roman myth was one of my favorites. I was exalted by it, and that is the way I read my paragraph. 2

"Yes, Jupiter[10] had seen her (Persephone). He had seen the maiden picking flowers in the field. He had seen the chariot of the dark monarch pause by the maiden's side. He had seen him when he seized Persephone. He had seen the black horses leap down Mount Aetna's[11] fiery throat. Persephone was now in Pluto's dark realm and he had made her his wife."

The two women looked at each other and then back to me. Mr. Calhoun broke out with a proud smile beneath his bristly moustache, and instead of the next child taking up where I had ended, he nodded to me to go on. So I read the story to the end, where flying Mercury, the messenger of the Gods, brought Persephone back to the sunlit earth and restored her to the arms of Dame Ceres, her mother, that the world might have springtime and summer flowers, autumn and harvest. But because she had bitten the pomegranate
1 while in Pluto's kingdom, she must return to him for three months of each year, and be his queen. Then the world had winter, until she returned to earth.

The class was dismissed and the visitors smiled us away and went into a low-voiced conversation with Mr. Calhoun for a few minutes. They glanced my way once or twice and I began to worry. Not only was I barefooted, but my feet and legs were dusty. My hair was more uncombed than usual, and my nails were not shiny clean. Oh, I'm going to catch it now. Those ladies saw me, too. Mr. Calhoun is promising to 'tend to me. So I thought.

Then Mr. Calhoun called me. I went up thinking how awful it was to get a whipping before company. Furthermore, I heard a snicker run over the room. Hennie Clark and Stell Brazzle did it out loud, so I would be sure to hear them. The smart-aleck was going to get it. I slipped one hand behind me and switched my dress tail at them, indicating scorn.

"Come here, Zora Neale," Mr. Calhoun cooed as I reached the desk. He put his hand on my shoulder and gave me little pats. The ladies smiled and held out those flower-looking fingers towards me. I seized the opportunity for a good look.

"Shake hands with the ladies, Zora Neale," Mr. Calhoun prompted and they took my hand one after the other and smiled. They asked me if I loved school, and I lied that I did. There was some truth in it, because I liked geography and reading, and I liked to play at recess time. Whoever it was invented writing and arithmetic got no thanks from me. Neither did I like the arrangement where the teacher could sit up there with a palmetto stem and lick me whenever he saw fit. I hated things I couldn't do anything about. But I knew better than to bring that up right there, so I said yes, I loved school.

---

[10] In Roman mythology, Jupiter is king of the gods and Pluto's brother.

[11] Mount Aetna (et´ nə) (also spelled Etna) is a volcano in eastern Sicily, Italy.

[12] Sandspurs (also called sandburs) are spiny burs that grow on a grass of the same name.

2 Voice What does the use of the word "exalted" convey about the feelings the myth stirs in the young Hurston?

Vocabulary

exalt (ig zôlt´) v. to lift up; to put in high spirits

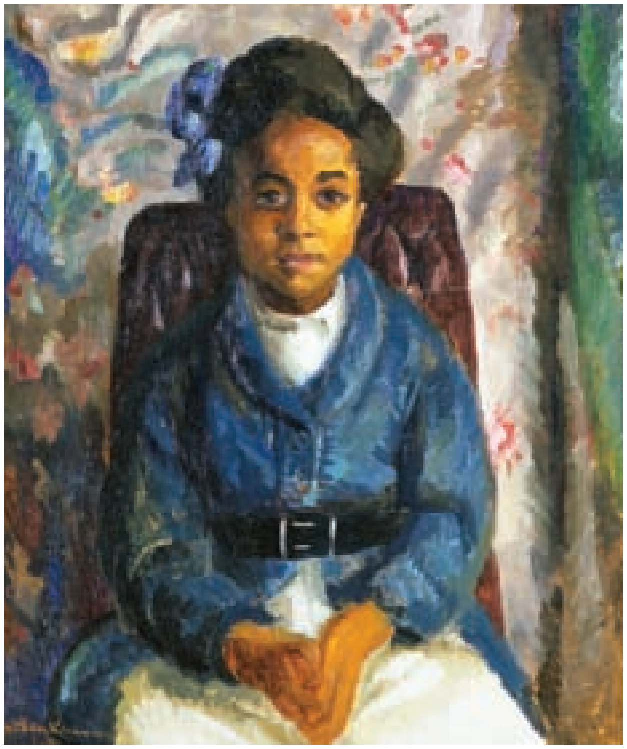
Vocabulary

snicker (sni´ kər) n. a snide, partly suppressed laugh, often expressing disrespect

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW

Point of View Have students practice using different points of view. Instruct students to write a paragraph describing what they did after school the previous day. Have students write the paragraph in first-person point of view. Then have students rewrite their paragraphs from the third-person point of view. Have students compare their two points of view and discuss how they differ.



Gwendolyn, 1918. John Sloan. Oil on canvas, 24 x 20 in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC. Gift of Mrs. John Sloan.

View the Art As a Realist, John Sloan often painted the gritty, hard side of life in New York City. How does the girl in his painting compare with your picture of the girl in Hurston's story? Support your response. ★

"I can tell you do," Brown Taffeta gleamed. She patted my head, and was lucky enough not to get sandspurs[12] in her hand. Children who roll and tumble in the grass in Florida are apt to get sandspurs in their hair. They shook hands with me again and I went back to my seat.

When school let out at three o'clock, Mr. Calhoun told me to wait. When everybody had gone, he told me I was to go to the Park House, that was the hotel in Maitland, the next afternoon to call upon Mrs. Johnstone and Miss Hurd. I must tell Mama to see that I was clean and brushed from head to feet, and I must wear shoes and stockings. The ladies liked me, he said, and I must be on my best behavior.

The next day I was let out of school an hour early, and went home to be stood up in a tub of suds and be scrubbed and have my ears dug into. My sandy hair sported a red ribbon to match my red and white checked gingham dress, starched until it could stand alone. Mama saw to it that my shoes were on the right feet, since I was careless about left and right. Last thing, I was given a handkerchief to carry, warned again about my behavior, and sent off, with my big brother John to go as far as the hotel gate with me.

First thing, the ladies gave me strange things, like stuffed dates and preserved ginger, and encouraged me to eat all that I wanted. Then they showed me their Japanese dolls and just talked. I was then handed a copy of Scribner's Magazine, and asked to read a place that was pointed out to me. After a paragraph or two, I was told with smiles, that that would do.

I was led out on the grounds and they took my picture under a palm tree. They handed me what was to me then a heavy cylinder done up in fancy paper, tied with a ribbon, and they told me goodbye, asking me not to open it until I got home.

My brother was waiting for me down by the lake, and we hurried home, eager to see what was in the thing. It was too heavy to be candy

---

13. Avarice is greed, or excessive desire for wealth.

3 The Harlem Renaissance What kinds of details about the old southern way of life does the author celebrate?

Analyze Language How would you characterize the language in this passage? 4

Teach

Big Idea 3

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: Hurston celebrates the intimate, rural way of life she knew through her use of details, such as colloquial speech.

Reading Strategy 4

Analyze Language

Answer: In this passage, Hurston uses more formal language. She may do this to convey her sense of being on top of the world after receiving the special gift from the two ladies.

View the Art ★

Answer: The girl in the painting is neatly dressed, sitting calmly and attentively with her hands folded in her lap. Like Zora, she seems eager to please. She looks similar to the way Zora might have looked when she went to the hotel to meet with the ladies.

John Sloan (1871–1951) began his career as an illustrator and cartoonist. Influenced by art teacher Robert Henri, Sloan was part of the movement known as The Ashcan School. He and seven other artists became known as "The Eight," and they gained fame for their realist approach.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Help students explore the causes and effects of events in the passage to help them better understand its meaning. Ask students to describe what caused

- Zora's grandmother to worry about Zora's behavior in front of white people;
- Northerners to come to visit the school;
- Zora to have time to closely observe the two ladies who popped in; and
- Zora to receive attention from the two ladies.

Ask students to explain the effect of

- Zora receiving the new pennies;
- Mrs. Calhoun standing in the back of the room with a palmetto switch in her hand when visitors came; and
- Zora reading to the two lady visitors.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Voice Answer: Hurston's choice of words suggests she has strong faith in her own judgment. She is unafraid to reject the judgment of others in favor of her own.

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Language Answer: Humor includes exaggerated elements, such as the descriptions of the martyrs' "big, soulful, blue eyes," as well as the funny mixture of serious judgments with colloquial expressions, such as "had no meat on their bones."

Literary History ☆

Hans and Robert Two of Hurston's favorite authors were Hans Christian Andersen (1805–1875), whose fairy tales include "The Ugly Duckling," and Robert Louis Stevenson (1850–1894), author of Treasure Island.

or anything like that. John insisted on toting it for me.

My mother made John give it back to me and let me open it. Perhaps, I shall never experience such joy again. The nearest thing to that moment was the telegram accepting my first book. One hundred goldy-new pennies rolled out of the cylinder. Their gleam lit up the world. It was not avarice[13] that moved me. It was the beauty of the thing. I stood on the mountain. Mama let me play with my pennies for a while, then put them away for me to keep.

That was only the beginning. The next day I received an Episcopal hymn-book bound in white leather with a golden cross stamped into the front cover, a copy of The Swiss Family Robinson, and a book of fairy tales.

I set about to commit the song words to memory. There was no music written there, just the words. But there was to my consciousness music in between them just the same. "When I survey the Wondrous Cross" seemed the most beautiful to me, so I committed that to memory first of all. Some of them seemed dull and without life, and I pretended they were not there. If white people liked trashy singing like that, there must be something funny about them that I had not noticed before. I stuck to the pretty ones where the words marched to a throb I could feel.

A month or so after the two young ladies returned to Minnesota, they sent me a huge box packed with clothes and books. The red coat with a wide circular collar and the red tam pleased me more than any of the other things. My chums pretended not to like anything that I had, but even then I knew that they were jealous. Old Smarty had gotten by them again. The clothes were not new, but they were very good. I shone like the morning sun.

But the books gave me more pleasure than the clothes. I had never been too keen on dressing up. It called for hard scrubbings with Octagon soap suds getting in my eyes, and none too gentle fingers scrubbing my neck and gouging in my ears.

In that box were Gulliver's Travels, Grimm's Fairy Tales, Dick Whittington, Greek and Roman Myths, and best of all, Norse Tales. Why did the Norse tales strike so deeply into my soul? I do not know, but they did. I seemed to remember seeing Thor[14] swing his mighty short-handled hammer as he sped across the sky in rumbling thunder, lightning flashing from the tread of his steeds and the wheels of his chariot. The great and good Odin,[15] who went down to the well of knowledge to drink, and was told that the price of a drink from that fountain was an eye. Odin drank deeply, then plucked out one eye without a murmur and handed it to the grizzly keeper, and walked away. That held majesty for me.

Of the Greeks, Hercules moved me most. I followed him eagerly on his tasks. The story of the choice of Hercules as a boy when he met Pleasure and Duty, and put his hand in that of Duty and followed her steep way to the blue hills of fame and glory, which she pointed out at the end, moved me profoundly. I resolved[16] to be like him. The tricks and turns of the other Gods and Goddesses left me cold. There were other thin books about this and that sweet and gentle little girl who gave up her heart to Christ and good works. Almost always they died from 1 Voice What does Hurston's choice of words suggest about her faith in her own sense of judgment?

Analyze Language Why is the language in this passage humorous? 2

Vocabulary

indifferent (in dif´ ər ənt) adj. lacking feeling or concern

---

[14] In Norse mythology, Thor is the god of thunder. His magical hammer returns to him like a boomerang after being thrown.

[15] Odin (ō´ din), the father of Thor, is the supreme god in Norse mythology and the creator of the first man and woman. Odin traded an eye for a drink from the well of wisdom, which was guarded by a giant.

[16] Resolved means "decided."

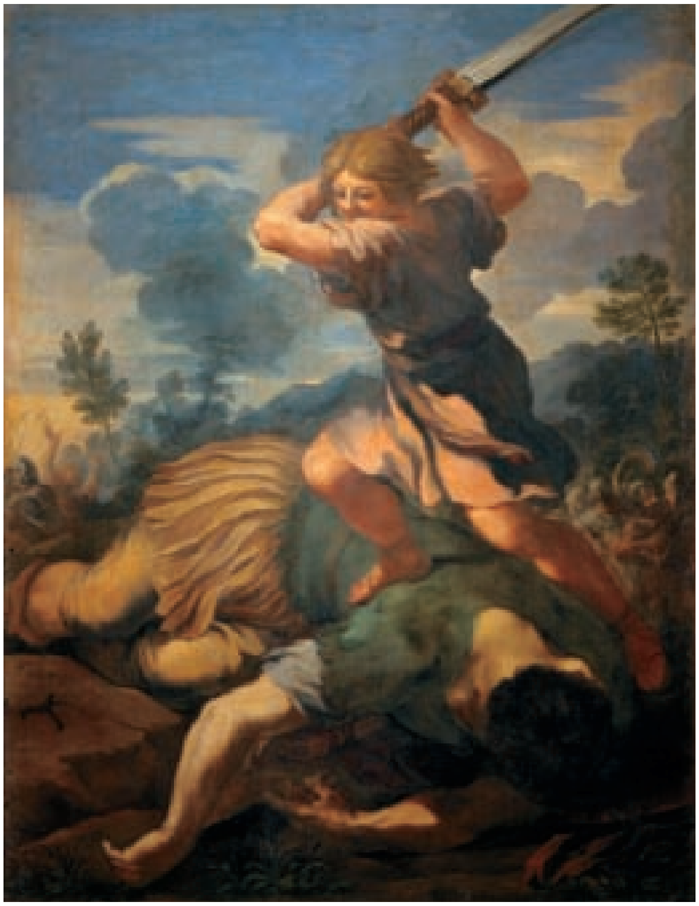
[17] Passed is short for "passed on" or "passed away" and means "died."

Reading Practice

SMALL GROUP SPIRAL REVIEW

Connect Many students are familiar with fairy tales by Andersen or by the Brothers Grimm. Point out that students have probably read many of the same stories that Hurston read. Have students break into groups, and have each group choose a favorite fairy tale. Have students come up with modern examples of their fairy tale. Have students write a modern version of their fairy tale, using the same archetypal characters, and have each group present its story to the class.



David slaying Goliath. Pietro da Cortona. Pinacoteca, Vatican Museums, Vatican State.

it, preaching as they passed.[17] I was utterly indifferent to their deaths. In the first place I could not conceive of death, and in the next place they never had any funerals that amounted to a hill of beans, so I didn't care how soon they rolled up their big, soulful, blue eyes and kicked the bucket. They had no meat on their bones.

But I also met Hans Andersen and Robert Louis Stevenson. They seemed to know what I wanted to hear and said it in a way that tingled me. Just a little below these friends was Rudyard Kipling in his Jungle Books. I loved his talking snakes as much as I did the hero.

I came to start reading the Bible through my mother. She gave me a licking one afternoon for repeating something I had overheard a neighbor telling her. She locked me in her room after the whipping, and the Bible was the only thing in there for me to read. I happened to open to the place where David[18] was doing some mighty smiting,[19] and I got interested. David went here and he went there, and no matter where he went, he smote 'em hip and thigh. Then he sung songs to his harp awhile, and went out and smote some more. Not one time did David stop and preach about sins and things. All David wanted to know from God was who to kill and when. He took care of [18] David was the second king of Judah and Israel. He killed the giant Goliath.

---

[19] Smiting means "striking hard, as with a hand or a weapon, so as to cause serious injury or death."

[20] Luke and Paul were authors of much of the New Testament of the Christian Bible.

[21] Laid about means "hit out in all directions."

[22] Roast is slang for "burn in hell."

Voice What do you infer about Hurston from the language in this passage? 3

Teach

Literary Element 3

Voice Answer: Hurston liked forceful, active people.

APPROACHING Ask students to rephrase the two sentences "Never a quiet moment. I liked him a lot" with one sentence that starts with the words "I liked him a lot because..."

Literary History

Old Testament Refer students to Hurston's phrase "he smote 'em hip and thigh." This comes from the Book of Judges in the Old Testament: "And he smote them hip and thigh with great slaughter." The expressions to smite hip and thigh means "to attack unmercifully."

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 245.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Bibliography Ask students to create a bibliography of Hurston's short stories, novels, and plays. Annotate this bibliography by writing a brief summary of each work. For example, John Redding Goes to Sea is a folktale about a larger-than-life character, John Redding, whose family prevents him from going to sea. While saving a bridge during a flood, Redding ironically gets his wish when he loses his life.

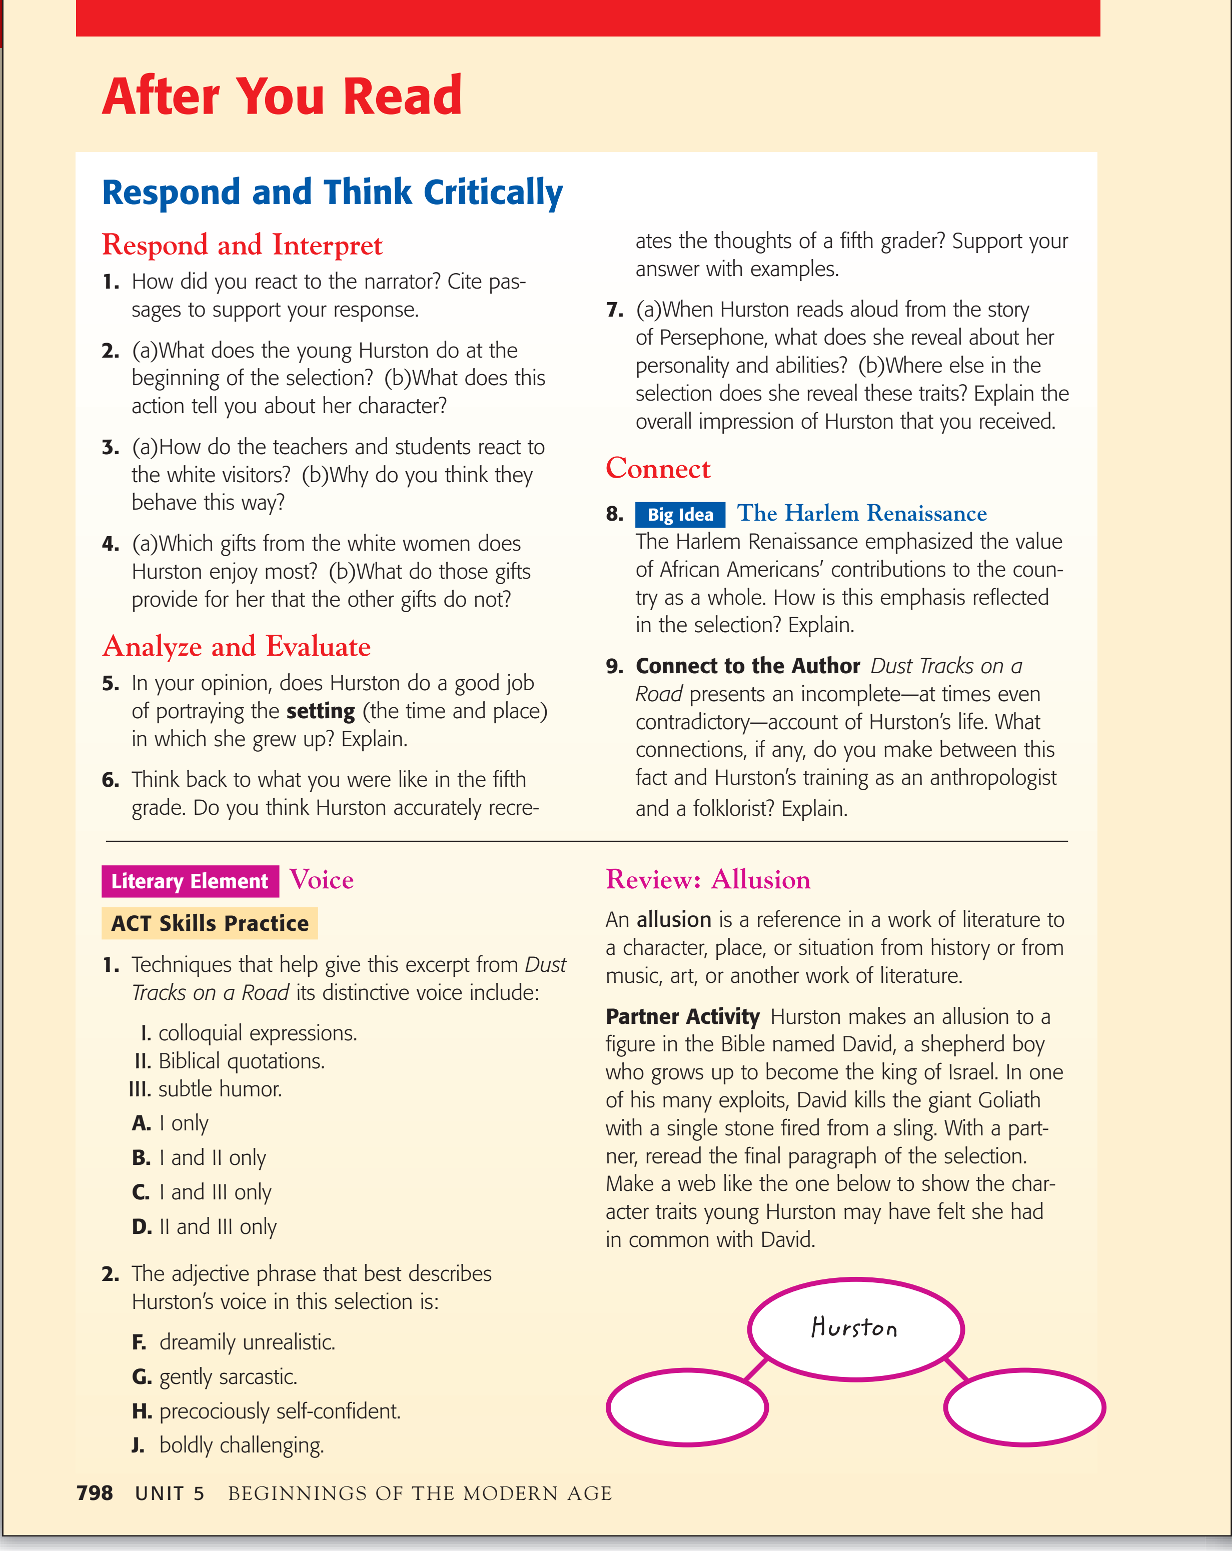
Then have students identify three books or articles that critique Hurston's work, and three books or articles about her life. Tell them to annotate these sources, identifying distinguishing features among the sources.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students should cite passages from the selection for support.
2. (a) She sits on top of the gatepost, hailing travelers. She talks and often rides with them. (b) She is confident and curious.
3. (a) The students are told to come to school clean and to behave well. When the visitors come unannounced, the teacher and the students are nervous. (b) They are unsure of the white visitors' motives, but they know the importance of making a good impression.
4. (a) It is the books that she enjoys most. (b) She finds the books moving and uplifting, especially the myths.
5. Most students will think that she does a good job of portraying the setting and may cite her use of dialect and her descriptions.
6. Students may say that she gives the fifth-grade version of herself an adult point of view. Her comments on the books are more in keeping with an adult opinion.
7. (a) She shows that she is a good reader, is brave, and has a lively personality. (b) Students should cite specific examples from the story. They will likely view Hurston as intelligent and confident.
8. Many African American artists created work that spoke specifically to their heritage and experience. Hurston's story speaks specifically to her experiences growing up in a southern African American community.
9. Students may say that she is more interested in the meaning of the story than the facts.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 221–222.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. How did you react to the narrator? Cite passages to support your response.
2. (a)What does the young Hurston do at the beginning of the selection? (b)What does this action tell you about her character?
3. (a)How do the teachers and students react to the white visitors? (b)Why do you think they behave this way?
4. (a)Which gifts from the white women does Hurston enjoy most? (b)What do those gifts provide for her that the other gifts do not?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. In your opinion, does Hurston do a good job of portraying the setting (the time and place) in which she grew up? Explain.
6. Think back to what you were like in the fifth grade. Do you think Hurston accurately recreates the thoughts of a fifth grader? Support your answer with examples.
7. (a)When Hurston reads aloud from the story of Persephone, what does she reveal about her personality and abilities? (b)Where else in the selection does she reveal these traits? Explain the overall impression of Hurston that you received.

Connect

8. Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance The Harlem Renaissance emphasized the value of African Americans' contributions to the country as a whole. How is this emphasis reflected in the selection? Explain.
9. Connect to the Author Dust Tracks on a Road presents an incomplete—at times even contradictory—account of Hurston's life. What connections, if any, do you make between this fact and Hurston's training as an anthropologist and a folklorist? Explain.

Literary Element Voice

ACT Skills Practice

1. Techniques that help give this excerpt from Dust Tracks on a Road its distinctive voice include:

   I. colloquial expressions.
   II. Biblical quotations.
   III. subtle humor.

   A. I only
   B. I and II only
   C. I and III only
   D. II and III only

2. The adjective phrase that best describes Hurston's voice in this selection is:

   F. dreamily unrealistic.
   G. gently sarcastic.
   H. precociously self-confident.
   J. boldly challenging.

Review: Allusion

An allusion is a reference in a work of literature to a character, place, or situation from history or from music, art, or another work of literature.

Partner Activity Hurston makes an allusion to a figure in the Bible named David, a shepherd boy who grows up to become the king of Israel. In one of his many exploits, David kills the giant Goliath with a single stone fired from a sling. With a partner, reread the final paragraph of the selection. Make a web like the one below to show the character traits young Hurston may have felt she had in common with David.

Literary Element

1. C is the correct answer because Hurston's use of dialect and humor gives the work its distinctive voice of intelligent self-confidence.
2. H is the correct answer because Hurston's tone and use of language combine the innocence of a child with the wisdom of an adult.

Review: Allusion

Students might include traits such as fearlessness, a sense of purpose, and unflinching honesty.

Progress Check

Can students analyze voice?

If No → See Unit 4 Teaching Resources Book, p. 228.

Reading Strategy Analyze Language

Hurston specialized in using colloquial, or everyday, language to bring to life the customs, geography, feelings, and way of speaking of the people she was writing about. In Dust Tracks on a Road, the inclusion of colorful regional expressions and local dialect lends the narration a powerful authenticity.

1. List examples of dialect or regional expressions that Hurston uses to evoke the people of Eatonville.
2. What ideas about or impressions of Eatonville do you glean from these examples? Explain.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Analogies Complete each analogy below using vocabulary words. Use a dictionary if you need help.

1. shyness : brazenness :: calmness :
   a. timidness b. serenity c. turbulence
2. snicker : laugh :: smirk :
   a. giggle b. grin c. frown
3. exalt : celebration :: weep :
   a. contest b. trial c. funeral
4. indifferent : fascinated :: ignorant :
   a. enlightened b. aggravated c. inundated

Academic Vocabulary

As a child, Hurston had a range of literary interests, from Norse mythology to the Bible.

Range is an academic word. To further explore the meaning of this word, complete this sentence:

When I ______, I experience a range of emotions, from ______ to ______.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

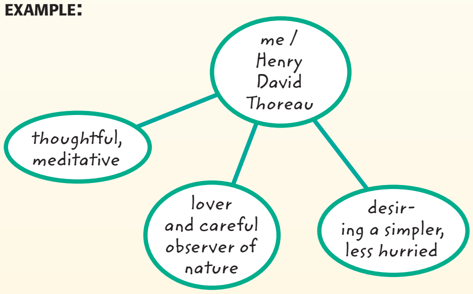
Write with Style

Apply Allusion

Assignment In making an allusion to the Biblical figure David, Hurston reveals several things about herself as a young girl. Write a paragraph about yourself in which you incorporate an allusion to a character, place, or situation from history, music, art, or another piece of literature.

Get Ideas Think about a piece of literature, song, movie, historical event, or piece of art with which you identify. Why do you connect with it? What does it say about you? Look back at the word web you made about Hurston and David on page 798 and make a similar one for yourself and the subject of your allusion, noting what you and your subject have in common. Model it after the example below.

EXAMPLE:



me / Henry David Thoreau
thoughtful, meditative lover and careful observer of nature desiring a simpler, less hurried

Give It Structure Next, think about how you want to weave your allusion in to your writing. What is your purpose in using this allusion? Are you looking to make a direct comparison to yourself, as Hurston did, or does your allusion relate to a specific aspect of your life, such as your family? What do you want your audience to get from your piece? Is your allusion well known, or will you have to explain it? After considering these questions, write your paragraph.

Look at Language Review your paragraph and evaluate whether your use of allusion achieves your goal of revealing something about yourself or your life. Have you used precise language to convey your ideas, and a varied sentence structure to maintain a reader's interest? If not, revise your work, using a dictionary or thesaurus if necessary.

After You Read

Assess

Reading Strategy

1. Possible responses might include: "Git down offa dat gatepost! You li'l sow, you! Setting up dere looking dem white folks right in de face!"
2. These examples create a vivid image of Eatonville. They provide colorful images of the setting. The dialect allows readers to imagine what conversations in Eatonville would sound like.

Vocabulary

1. c 2. b 3. c 4. a

Academic Vocabulary

Possible answer: When I finish a good book, I experience a range of emotions, from satisfaction to regret.

For grammar practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 332.

Write with Style

Use these criteria when evaluating students' writing:

- Does the writer clearly connect the allusion to his or her own life?
- Does the writer have a clear purpose in writing?
- Does the writer use a variety of sentence structures?

Vocabulary Workshop

Homonyms

Focus

Remind students that words that are spelled the same but have different origins are homonyms. Have students look up the word bear to see the different meanings and etymology.

Teach

Write the homonyms their, there and they're on the board. Have students explain the difference among the words.

Suggest the following mnemonics:

> Their contains heir. An heir gains possession of something.
> There contains here, a place.
> They're is correct only when it can be replaced by they are.

Have students use the words in sentences to clarify their different meanings and usages.

Assess

Practice

1. reel	6. tale
2. main	7. principal
3. bore	8. night
4. site	9. stares
5. scent	10. hoarse

Learning Objectives

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objective:

Vocabulary: Understanding homonyms.

Vocabulary Workshop

Homonyms

Literature Connection Homonyms are different words that sound alike but have different meanings and sometimes different spellings. For example, hail can be either of two completely different words.

> "Often the white travelers would hail me, but more often I hailed them, and asked, 'Don't you want me to go a piece of the way with you?'"
>
> —Zora Neale Hurston, from Dust Tracks on a Road

Here hail means "to greet." Hail as a noun means "pellets of ice."

The English language is full of homonyms. Here is a sample list.

Word	Meaning	Example
bear bear	an animal to endure	The brown bear walked right into our campsite. The entire team must bear the burden of defeat.
bank bank	a mound or border a place to keep money	We stood on the river's bank and watched the current. My bank informed me my account was overdrawn.
break brake	to crack, split, or smash to stop a movement	Enslaved people endeavored to break their bonds. The negligent driver failed to brake for the pedestrian.
hear here	to listen in this place	In the village, we could hear the pealing church bells. I am resolved to remain here until I am evicted.
piece peace	a part of something tranquility	I completed the last piece of the puzzle. In the midst of war, people long for peace.
holy wholly holey	sacred completely full of holes	The pilgrims consider the shrine to be holy. I am not wholly convinced of your arguments. My holey socks are in need of repair.

Practice Choose the correct homonym to fit each sentence. Consult a dictionary if you need help.

1. The angler tried to (real, reel) in the fish.
2. The lion is the (main, mane) attraction at the zoo.
3. Most graduates considered the public speaker a (boar, bore).
4. This is a perfect (sight, site, cite) for the new museum.
5. The (scent, cent, sent) of spices wafted from the restaurant.
6. Upon his release, the prisoner told a (tail, tale) of woe.
7. Coffee is one of the (principle, principal) exports of Colombia.
8. One dark (knight, night), I lost my way.
9. The hostile (stares, stairs) of the judges unnerved the skater.

Homonyms

Homonyms are different words that sound alike and may be spelled alike. Homonyms are distinct from multiple-meaning words, which are single words with more than one meaning. In sentences 1–2 below, bear and bear are homonyms, because they are different words:

1. I can't bear it.
2. The bear growled.

In sentences 4–5, bear is one word with two different meanings:

4. I can't bear it.
5. I'm going to bear a child.

Tip

To determine the meaning of a homonym, use context clues.

Dictionary

To help you find word definitions, see p. 102..

Literature Online

Vocabulary For more vocabulary practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Workshop Resources

Mnemonic Devices Write these pairs of sentences on the board:

The best way to go is through that door.
How much does the apple weigh?
The principal came to our class today.
He follows his principles and never lies.
What can you buy for just five cents?
The dog had lost its sense of hearing and did not hear the burglar.

Have pairs of students use context clues to find the meaning and pronunciation of each pair of words. Give an example of a mnemonic, e.g., "for" and "four" can be distinguished because "four" has 4 letters. Have teams generate mnemonics of their own for each word pair.

Before You Read

If We Must Die and The Tropics in New York

Meet Claude McKay

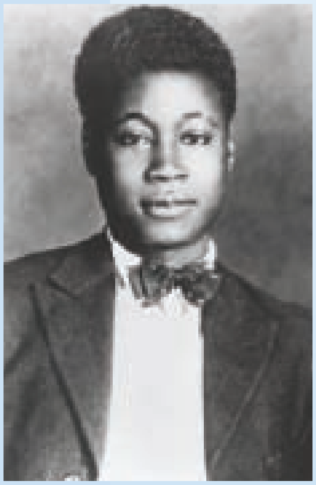
(1890–1948)

Some critics think "If We Must Die" in 1919 was the spark that ignited the Harlem Renaissance. Though he was not an innovator in modern verse—his sonnets were strongly influenced by British literary traditions—McKay's focus on the African American experience distinguished him as a new, outspoken voice in American literature. The poets of the Harlem Renaissance hailed McKay as a leader because of his frank approach to racial and social issues.

McKay was born and educated in rural Jamaica. His brother Uriah Theophilus, a schoolteacher, and Englishman Walter Jekyll, a British scholar collecting Jamaican folklore, encouraged McKay's creativity. With access to their books, McKay read Victorian authors, as well as the medieval Italian writer Dante and the French poet Baudelaire.

Culture Shock After winning an award for his poetry in 1912, McKay used the money to come to the United States. McKay was drawn to this country, seeing it as "a new land to which all people who had youth and a youthful mind turned," and believing that "surely there would be opportunity in this land, even for a Negro." However, when McKay arrived, he was shocked by the blatant racism and violence he found, and he spent much of his life looking for ways to counter the "ignoble cruelty" of racism through his poetry and his actions.



McKay admired poets who wrote about their own struggles in society, and he strove to do the same in his own writing: "In their poetry I could feel their race, their class, their roots in the soil . . . I could not feel the reality of them without that. So likewise I could not realize myself writing without conviction." With its focus on the racial and social realities of the United States, Home to Harlem reached the best seller list—the first novel by an African American to do so.

> "All my life I have been a troubadour wanderer, nourishing myself mainly on the poetry of existence. And all I offer here is the distilled poetry of my experience."
>
> —Claude McKay

Lost and Then Found McKay truly represented the spirit of the "New Negro." Through his poem "If We Must Die," he captured a universal sentiment of resistance in the face of injustice. So universal was this theme that Winston Churchill quoted the poem to rally the British people during World War II.

By the time of his death, McKay had become virtually unknown. His work was later rediscovered and highly praised. In 1973 author Jean Wagner concluded that "McKay remains beyond a doubt the immediate forerunner and one of the leading forces of the Renaissance, the man without whom it could never have achieved what it did."

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Claude McKay, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 50

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 73

Or display images from various 1960s peace movements.

Ask: What modern injustices might your generation address? (Students may mention genocide, poverty, and environmental destruction.) Then, discuss with students which of these issues motivates them strongly enough that they could write poetry about them.

Selection Skills

If We Must Die / The Tropics in New York

Literary Elements
- Meter (SE pp. 802, 805)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a Poem (SE p. 805)

Reading Skills
- Analyze Tone (SE pp. 802, 803, 805)
- Identify Author's Purpose (TE p. 802)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Origins (SE p. 805)
- Synonyms (TE p. 802)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 804)
- Sound Devices (TE p. 804)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In “If We Must Die,” McKay says that although African Americans are outnumbered, if they go down fighting, their deaths will not be in vain. In “The Tropics of New York,” McKay describes exotic, luscious images from Jamaica. In the last four lines, he is so overcome that it brings him to tears.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 235–240.

Vocabulary

Synonyms Students may confuse the verb constrained with restrained. Both terms come from the Latin verb stringere, which means “to bind or draw tight.” Restrained is a synonym for constrained when constrained means “limited” or “prevented”: The belt restrained (or constrained) her lungs from expanding. However, constrained is more frequently used to mean “forced” and followed by the preposition to. Give students these examples:

Once they waved to him, Jack felt constrained to offer his friends a ride.

His father’s direct question constrained Jack to confess that he had given his friends a ride.

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 243.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

Have you or has someone you know ever faced prejudice? What is the best response in such a situation? Discuss these questions with a partner.

Building Background

“If We Must Die” reflects the racial strife in the United States just after World War I. During the summer of 1919, McKay worked as a waiter in a railroad dining car, and he and his coworkers feared being attacked. As McKay later wrote, “It was during those days that the sonnet, ‘If We Must Die,’ exploded out of me. And for it the Negro people unanimously hailed me as a poet.”

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance

As you read, ask, How do these poems address social and cultural challenges faced by African Americans of the time?

Literary Element Meter

Meter is the regular pattern of stressed (´) and unstressed (˘) syllables that gives a line of poetry a predictable rhythm. The basic unit of meter is the foot, and the length of a metrical line can be expressed in terms of the number of feet it contains. As you read, ask, How does McKay use meter in these two poems?

Reading Strategy Analyze Tone

Tone is an author’s attitude toward his or her subject matter. Authors convey tone through word choice, punctuation, sentence structure, and figures of speech. These two poems have very different tones. As you read, ask yourself, What is the tone of each poem? How does McKay convey that tone?

Tip: Compare and Contrast Use a chart to note the elements in each poem that contribute to the tone.

	“If We Must Die”	“The Tropics in New York”
Elements	simile—“like hogs hunted and penned”
Tone

Learning Objectives

For pages 801–805

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing meter.

Reading: Analyzing tone.

Writing: Writing a poem.

Vocabulary

nobly (nō´ blē) adv. with superior morals or character; p. 803 The businessman nobly gave his fortune to the poor.

constrain (kən strān´) v. to force or limit; p. 803 In the 1800s strict laws constrained African Americans and women from voting.

kinsmen (kinz´ men) n. those who share the same racial or cultural background as another; p. 803 Although not brothers by birth, the two friends were kinsmen by culture.

benediction (ben´ ə dik´ shən) n. a blessing or something that fosters goodness; p. 804 The homeless shelter was a benediction for the men and women who needed it.

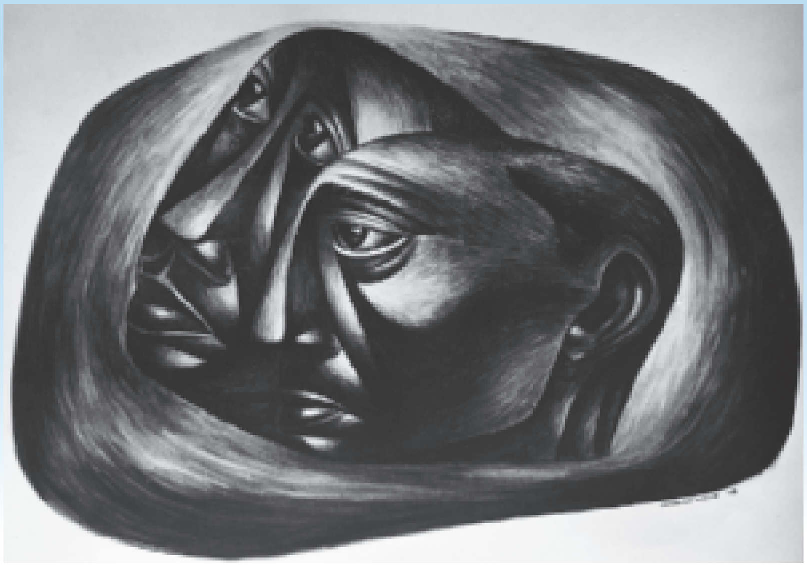
Tip: Word Origins Word origins, also called etymologies, are the history and development of words. They are often found in dictionary entries.

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW

Identify Author’s Purpose

Explain that an author’s purpose may be to entertain, to inform, to express an opinion, or to persuade. Readers can infer the author’s purpose through careful reading. Ask students to examine “If We Must Die” for the author’s purpose. Tell students to pay attention to how McKay stirs readers’ thoughts and feelings. Then ask students to determine the author’s purpose in “The Tropics in New York.” Have students write a paragraph for each poem, explaining their conclusion and providing examples as supportive evidence.



Two Heads, 1946. Charles White. Watercolor, 16¾ x 24¼ in. Collection of Martin & Sondra Sperber, New York. Courtesy Heritage Gallery, Los Angeles, CA.

If We Must Die

Claude McKay

If we must die, let it not be like hogs
Hunted and penned in an inglorious[1] spot,
While round us bark the mad and hungry dogs, 1
Making their mock at our accursed[2] lot.
If we must die, O let us nobly die,
So that our precious blood may not be shed
In vain; then even the monsters we defy
Shall be constrained to honor us though dead!
O kinsmen! we must meet the common foe!
Though far outnumbered let us show us brave,
And for their thousand blows deal one deathblow!
What though before us lies the open grave?
Like men we'll face the murderous, cowardly pack,
Pressed to the wall, dying, but fighting back!

---

[1] Inglorious means "shameful" or "disgraceful."

[2] Accursed (ə kur´ sid) means "being under a curse" or "doomed."

Analyze Tone What tone does McKay establish here? What type of words does he use to achieve this? 2

Vocabulary

nobly (nō´ blē) adv.	with superior morals or character
constrain (kən strān´) v.	to force or limit
kinsmen (kinz´ men) n.	those who share the same racial or cultural background as another

Teach

Literary Element 1

Analogies Ask: How does McKay describe his oppressors? (as "mad and hungry dogs") Discuss with students the effect this description has on the reader.

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Tone Answer: McKay evokes a bitter, but proud tone in these lines. He uses strong language, such as murderous, cowardly, and fighting back to emphasize the forcefulness of his tone.
Ask: What other strong language does McKay use to emphasize his tone? (McKay uses nobly and honor for proud; inglorious, mock and accursed for bitter; defy and deathblow for militant.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 242.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Have students read through each poem and write down unfamiliar words. Write these words on the board. Ask students to guess the meaning of each word, and then look it up in a dictionary. Have them compare the dictionary definition with their own and revise their definition as needed.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To reinforce the concept of tone, ask: What do you see or feel when you hear these phrases: a dark and stormy night (fearful or curious); soothing, tropical breezes? (content or relaxed) Have students propose words or phrases that evoke emotions or images.

Teach

Big Idea 1

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: This detail reveals McKay's longing for his former life in Jamaica and reflects the conflict that many African Americans felt between their home countries and life in the United States.

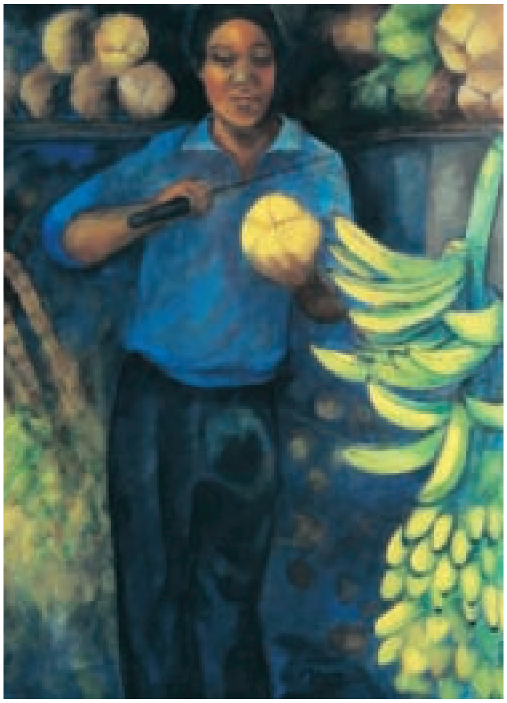
View the Art ★

Hyacinth Manning is a contemporary painter based in St. Augustine, Florida. Like McKay, she is a native of Jamaica. Manning says, "With my figurative paintings in warm tropical colors and bold patterns, I hope to inspire emotions of comfort and love. I grew up in a bright and sunny Caribbean atmosphere." Discuss with students how Manning's use of darks and lights draws attention to the fruit at the center of the painting.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 245.



Fruit Stand Vendor, 1994. Hyacinth Manning. Acrylic on canvas. 28 x 22 in. Private collection. ★

The Tropics in New York

Claude McKay

Bananas ripe and green, and ginger-root,
   Cocoa in pods and alligator pears,
And tangerines and mangoes and grape fruit,
   Fit for the highest prize at parish fairs,

Set in the window, bringing memories
   Of fruit-trees laden by low-singing rills,
And dewy dawns, and mystical blue skies
   In benediction over nun-like hills.

My eyes grew dim, and I could no more gaze;
   A wave of longing through my body

The Harlem Renaissance How does this detail reflect the African American experience during the Harlem Renaissance? 1

Vocabulary

benediction (ben´ ə dik´ shən) n. a blessing or something that fosters goodness

Listening and Speaking Practice

SMALL GROUP SPIRAL REVIEW

Sound Devices

Say: Writers use sound devices to enhance the sense of rhythm, to emphasize particular sounds, or to add a musical quality to their writing. Review with students different sound devices from the Literary Terms Handbook, including alliteration, assonance, consonance, onomatopoeia, rhyme, and rhythm.

Divide the class into small groups. Have two students from each group read the two poems aloud to the group. Before the poems are read, tell students to keep these questions in mind as they listen:

- What sound devices are used in "If We Must Die"? What are some examples? (Possible answers: alliteration: mad, making, and mock; rhyme: in vain and constrained.)
- What sound devices are used in "The Tropics of New York"? What are some examples? (Possible answers: alliteration: dewy dawns; assonance: highest prize or parish fairs.)

Have students discuss their answers.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. (a)Which images from the poems stand out in your mind? (b)What effects do these images have on you?
2. (a)In "If We Must Die," what two animals does the speaker name? Which animals are the hunters, and which are the hunted? (b)With which animals does the speaker identify? Explain.
3. (a)In "The Tropics in New York," what does the speaker see in the window? (b)What memories does that sight bring?
4. (a)How does the speaker react when he recalls his homeland? (b)Why might he have this reaction?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Some critics believe "If We Must Die" marked the beginning of the Harlem Renaissance. Why might this poem have had a powerful impact?
6. In "The Tropics in New York," how do sensory details convey the author's meaning? Explain.

Connect

7. Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance What message about identity is implied in "The Tropics in New York"?
8. Connect to Today Does our culture deal today with social injustices comparable to those existing during the Harlem Renaissance?

Literary Element Meter

The metrical foot that McKay uses in both poems is the iamb: one unstressed syllable followed by one stressed syllable. Most lines have five iambic feet, or beats, to form iambic pentameter. How does the meter's effect differ in these poems?

Reading Strategy Analyze Tone

McKay uses very different tones in these poems.

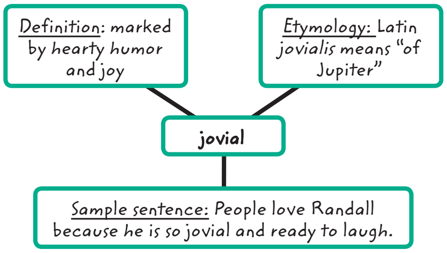
1. Look at the chart you made on page 802. What words or images helped you understand the tone of each poem?
2. How would you describe the tone in each poem?

Vocabulary Practice

Word Origins For each vocabulary word, give the definition, summarize the etymology, and use the word correctly in a sentence. Use a dictionary for help.

nobly constrained kinsmen benediction



Definition: marked by hearty humor and joy

Etymology: Latin jovialis means "of Jupiter" jovial

Sample sentence: People love Randall because he is so jovial and ready to laugh.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Writing

Write a Poem A window display reminds the narrator in "The Tropics in New York" of a place he misses. Have you ever had a similar experience? Write a poem about how an everyday event or sight can awaken intense longing.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students' answers will vary.
2. (a) Dogs are the hunters, and hogs are the hunted. (b) The speaker identifies with the hogs.
3. (a) Beautiful tropical fruit (b) The speaker's Caribbean homeland
4. (a) He cries. (b) Because of the ugliness of where he lives now
5. It encouraged African Americans to stand up for themselves.
6. The details present an image of a lost paradise.
7. There is a choice between retaining black identity and assimilation into white culture.
8. Students may say that poverty, racism, or sexism are injustices still faced today. Some people stage marches and picket events.

Reading Strategy

"If We Must Die": bitter, militant; "The Tropics in New York": nostalgic.

Vocabulary

nobly Definition: with superior morals or character; Etymology: Latin nobilis means "renowned, of superior birth" constrained Definition: forced or limited; Etymology: Latin constringere means "to tie tightly together" kinsmen Definition: those who share the same cultural background; Etymology: Old English cyn means "family" benediction Definition: a blessing or something that fosters goodness; Etymology: Latin beneficium means "a kindness"

Literary Element

In "If We Must Die," the meter creates a powerful dramatic feeling. In "The Tropics in New York," the meter has a more lilting, songlike quality.

Writing

Students' poems should focus on an everyday event and use rhyme, alliteration, or meter.

Progress Check

Can students analyze meter?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 241.

TIME

Focus

Summary

Robert Hughes describes the importance of Jacob Lawrence's Migration series. "Migration" refers to the exodus of many African Americans from the South to the North during the early decades of the twentieth century.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Preview

1. Explain that epic here refers to a work of art that depicts the legendary deeds of historical heroes.
2. The paintings deal with African Americans who faced hardship.

Historical Note ☆

Reconstruction Reconstruction was the effort to rebuild the South after the Civil War. After federal troops left the South in 1877, the South was allowed to continue segregation. Although the Thirteenth Amendment abolished slavery, most African Americans were treated as second-class citizens until the civil rights movement of the 1950s and 1960s.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 247–255.

Learning Objectives

For pages 806–809

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Reading:
Using text features.
Analyzing informational text.
Scanning text.

Set a Purpose for Reading

As you read, ask yourself, How did Jacob Lawrence, a Harlem artist, view the African American experience?

Preview the Article

1. Examine the title. What might the author mean by a "black epic"?
2. Look at the paintings on pages 807–809. What can you predict about the content of the article from these images?

Reading Strategy

Scan Text to Find Specific Information

Scanning is the process of searching quickly through text for key words and specific information. Scan the article for the key words Harlem and painting. What do you learn about these topics? Use a graphic organizer to record information.

Word	Information
Harlem	Lawrence—younger than and different from Harlem Renaissance artists

TIME

STANZAS FROM A BLACK EPIC 1

The 60 paintings in Jacob Lawrence's great Migration series present piercing images of the African American experience.

By ROBERT HUGHES

THE SIXTY PAINTINGS THAT MAKE UP JACOB LAWRENCE'S Migration series are works that anyone interested in African American cultural history—or, in a wider way, the story of American painting as a whole—should see.

More than 60 years have passed since Lawrence made these little pictures, on store-bought panels in his Harlem studio; and they are of far greater power than almost all the acreage of Works Progress Administration (WPA) murals that preceded them in the 1930s. They were almost immediately bought, half by the Phillips Collection in Washington, D.C., and half by the Museum of Modern Art (MOMA) in New York City, and were in fact the first paintings by a black artist to enter MOMA's collection. It seemed to the directors of both museums that Lawrence's series represented a unique combination of African American experience, history painting, and a modernist style. They were right. From Benjamin West to Robert Rauschenberg, American art is sown with attempts, varying between saccharine sentimentality and stunning success, to image forth the American story. And for reasons that are sadly obvious, few of these were created by African Americans, until Lawrence appeared.

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Make a List Point out that Hughes refers to the Great Migration as "A Black Epic" in the title of this article. A story that resembles an epic, such as the Iliad or the Odyssey, is one that has heroic characters who endure many trials before they reach their goal. Have students write a list of the trials that African Americans went through that make the story of the Great Migration an epic.

Younger than the painters and writers who took part in the Harlem Renaissance of the 1920s, Lawrence was also at an angle to them: He was not interested in the kind of idealized portrayals of African Americans that others tended to produce. These fake-primitive images were being created as an antidote to the vile stereotypes with which white popular art had flooded the culture since Reconstruction. Nevertheless, Lawrence gained self-confidence from the cultural climate of Harlem—in particular, from Alain Locke, a Harvard-trained art critic. Locke believed strongly that art created by African Americans could speak explicitly to their community and still embody the values of modernism. Or, in Locke's words: "There is in truly great art no essential conflict between racial or national traits and universal human values."

2 The Great Migration

What are the paintings about? A huge subject, which no artist could touch and only an African American one could have handled with the depth of feeling it required. The migration of African Americans from the rural South to the industrial North, as it unfolded in the first decades of the 20th century, had an epic character. It was a collective Odyssey to match the Iliad of the Civil War. This migration was forced by the merciless Southern white reaction that came in the wake of Reconstruction. The African American population—all poor, nearly all rural—of the Southern states was plunged into a hell where their rights were abolished.

The Female Workers Were the Last to Arrive North* Panel #57 from the Migration series. Jacob Lawrence. The Phillips Collection, Washington, DC.

In the South, 1900 to 1925 brought the high tide of Jim Crow laws, lynchings, and the terrorism of the Ku Klux Klan. Unable to vote, powerless to change their political status, Southern blacks voted with their feet. By the end of the 1930s more than a million of them (the exact figures will probably never be known) had flocked to mid-Atlantic, Northeastern, and Midwestern cities, looking for a

TIME

Teach

Text Element 2

Subheads Explain that effective subheads point readers to the main idea of a section, are in the active voice if they include verbs, and often have parallel structure. Have students identify the subheads in the article, and then determine whether or not they have these characteristics. Ask: How do these subheads help the reader understand the text? (They give a quick overview.)

Literary History ☆

Iliad* and *Odyssey Students may not be familiar with Homer's epic Greek poems the Iliad and the Odyssey. The Iliad, the first of the two poems, tells the story of the Trojan War. The Odyssey is the story of Odysseus' journey home after the war.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 9.8
DRP: 68
Lexile: 1240

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Hughes uses many proper nouns in his article. List some of these on the board (e.g., Works Progress Administration, Alain Locke, Jim Crow Laws, Ku Klux Klan, Schomburg Collection). Have students find each definition in a dictionary or encyclopedia. Have pairs of students return to each section containing one or more of these proper nouns. Have them paraphrase each section, adding information that they learned about each proper noun.

TIME

Teach

Big Idea 1

The Harlem Renaissance

Point out to students that Hughes provides background about Lawrence's early years. Ask: How did the Harlem Renaissance affect Lawrence and his painting? (Lawrence went to school in Harlem and grew up with people who had migrated.)

Vocabulary 2

Context Clues Remind students that context clues can help them find the meaning of new or difficult vocabulary. Ask: What kind of crowd is a jeering crowd? How can you tell from the context? (Since the crowd is attending a hanging, they would be rowdy or unfriendly.) Ask: What kind of research is painstaking? How can you tell from the context? (Since Lawrence spent months at it and got his facts right, it is thorough and accurate research.)

Cultural History ☆

Cubism Pablo Picasso and Georges Braque founded Cubism in Paris in the early twentieth century. The Cubists broke down the subject matter into parts and then reassembled it in abstract forms. Cubism shows the subject from multiple angles and distances at the same time, usually resulting in many geometric shapes.

better America than the one they had known. Some of them no doubt imagined they were going to a promised land; and in this they were sharply disappointed, especially after 1929, when they arrived in a North economically devastated by the Depression. But there was no way back. The South was drained of its black workforce, while the North acquired a new one. From these migrants grew a radically altered conception of African American culture: distinctively urban but still Southern in its origins and collective memory. This was the culture that produced the Harlem Renaissance. In it, African Americans reinvented themselves.

A Harlem Education

1 Born in Atlantic City, New Jersey, in 1917, Lawrence was schooled in Harlem and grew up among migrants and their children. When, years later, he told an interviewer that "I am the black community," he was neither bragging nor kidding. He trained as a painter at the Harlem Art Workshop, inside the public library's 135th Street branch. Indeed the library itself, with its Schomburg Collection, Manhattan's chief archive on African American life and history, was to shape his series. Lawrence did months of painstaking research there to get the historical background right, even though the final paintings rarely allude to specific events. He took on the task with a youthful earnestness (he was in his early 20s) that remains one of the most touching aspects of the final work and goes far beyond self-expressiveness. You sense that something is speaking through Lawrence.

One of the remarkable things about the Migration series is the language it does not use. Lawrence was not a propagandist. He avoided the caricatures used in Popular Front, Social Realist art, then at its peak in America. Considering the violence and suffering of so much of his subject matter—prisons, deserted communities, city slums, race riots, labor camps—his images are restrained, and all the more piercing. When he painted a lynching, for instance (No. 15), he left out the dangling body and the jeering crowd: there is only bare 2 earth, a branch, an empty noose, and the huddled lump of a grieving woman. He set aside the muralist influence that lay so heavily on other artists—he wasn't painting murals but images closer in size to single pages, no more than 18 inches by 12 inches.

Painting an Epic

Nevertheless, Lawrence imagined the paintings as integrally connected—a single work of art, no less united than a mural is, but portable. The Migration series has the effect of a visual ballad, with each painting a stanza: taut, compressed, pared down to the barest requirements of narration. Number 10, They Were Very Poor, takes the elements of a Southern sharecropper's life down to the static minimum. It shows a man and a woman staring at empty bowls on a bare brown plane and an empty basket hung on the wall by an enormous nail—the sort of nail you imagine in a crucifixion. There is no trace of sentimentality. Lawrence called his style "dynamic Cubism," and its debt to late ☆ Cubism is obvious—the flat, sharp overlaps of form, legible silhouettes, and generally high degree of abstraction in the color. Yet, his

They Were Very Poor Panel 10 from the Migration series. Jacob Lawrence. The Museum of Modern Art, NY.

Viewing Practice

Painters' Styles Hughes references Lawrence's style throughout his article. Students should be familiar with different styles in writing but may not have as much exposure to style in art. Ask: What are some different artistic styles? (Impressionism, Cubism, Surrealism)

Ask: How does Lawrence's style present the events of the Great Migration? (Lawrence uses silhouettes, abstract colors and minimalist, sharp images that narrate the lives of those involved in the Great Migration.) Have students browse through the art in Unit 5 and select a painting with a style different from Lawrence's. Lead students in a discussion about the styles of painting they find.

And the Migration Spread Panel 23 from the Migration series. Jacob Lawrence. The Phillips Collection, Washington, DC.

style also tends to an Egyptian stillness, friezelike even when you know the subject was in motion, like the crowd surging into the narrow slot between two railroad cars in Number 23, And the Migration Spread.

Lawrence's style gives his pictures a solid gravity. His dense and well-locked compositions are prime illustrations of the permanence and resistance that are his key themes. These themes are integral to the African Americans depicted throughout Lawrence's Migration series—the first, and arguably still the best, treatment of the African American historical experience by an African American artist.

—Updated 2006, from TIME, December 6, 1993

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Write a brief summary of the main ideas in this article before you answer the following questions. For help on writing a summary, see page 79.
2. How do you react to the paintings of Jacob Lawrence?
3. (a)What was the Great Migration? (b)How do Lawrence's paintings show this event?
4. (a)Name four or more subjects of the paintings in the Migration series. (b)How did Lawrence treat these subjects differently than others before him did?
5. (a)What is the artistic style of the paintings in the Migration series? (b)What is the effect of the style on the subject matter?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. (a)According to Hughes, why is the Migration series so important? (b)How well does Hughes back up his claim?
7. (a)What does Hughes mean by "stanzas from a black epic"? (b)How well does his title fit his essay? Explain.
8. The art critic Alain Locke said, "There is in truly great art no essential conflict between racial or national traits and universal human values." How is this idea evident in Lawrence's work?

Connect

9. How does this selection relate to the Harlem Renaissance? How does it go beyond it to tell more about African American history and culture?

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Research Have students research Jacob Lawrence's paintings in books or on the Internet. Have students identify paintings that illustrate the ideas presented in the article. Then have students write a paragraph about each painting, explaining how it illustrates material in the article.

Assess

1. Students should use subheads to organize their summary of the main ideas in the article.
2. Students may react strongly to Lawrence's work.
3. (a) The Great Migration was a historic period in which African Americans moved from the South to the North. (b) His paintings show African Americans during the Great Migration.
4. (a) Female workers, a lynching, a sharecropper's life, and a crowd squeezed between two train cars (b) He combined African American experience and a Modernist style.
5. (a) The style is dynamic Cubism. (b) An Egyptian stillness
6. (a) It was the first and best depiction of the African American historical experience. (b) Hughes supports his claim well.
7. (a) Hughes is referring to specific events in African American history. (b) The title fits the essay well because each painting is like a stanza from African American history.
8. Lawrence appeals to the human race instead of any single race. He conveys ideas all people can relate to.
9. Lawrence's paintings depict southern African Americans whose culture made up the Harlem Renaissance.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 225–226.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Literature Launchers:
  Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Selection Launcher

Selection Focus
  Transparency 51

Daily Language Practice
  Transparency 74

Or ask students where their ancestors are from. Make a list on the board, and point out the variety of cultures represented in the list. Then ask students to consider books, TV programs, and movies that are set in other countries. Have them name some countries that they would like to learn about, on the basis of what they have read and seen. Encourage them to note the cultural settings of books and movies over the next week, and see what piques their interest.

Before You Read

Langston Hughes's Poetry and Prose

Meet Langston Hughes

(1902–1967)

In 1921 Langston Hughes moved to New York City and enrolled at Columbia University to learn more about poetry—in the nightclubs and streets of Harlem. "To see Shuffle Along was the main reason I wanted to go to Columbia," Hughes said. "When I saw it, I was thrilled and delighted." Many African Americans were moving north for good-paying jobs and vibrant city life, yet Hughes knew their life was bittersweet. The remnants of slavery and the struggle with segregation held back African Americans from the American dream that was readily available to many whites during the Roaring Twenties.

Hughes's writing celebrated the dignity of ordinary, working-class African Americans, helping many realize that black was beautiful. "They seemed to me like the gayest and the bravest people possible—these Negroes from the Southern ghettos—facing tremendous odds, working and laughing and trying to get somewhere in the world," Hughes said. This sentiment fit the Modernist notion that everyday images, speech, and events belong in the highest forms of literature.

Many Homes Born in Joplin, Missouri, Hughes had lived in six different cities by the age of twelve. It was a childhood of books, music, and poverty. His father moved to Mexico, and his mother moved frequently in search of employment. When his mother sought work, Hughes stayed in Lawrence, Kansas, with his grandmother.

After high school, he visited his father, who was by then a prosperous lawyer. Crossing the Mississippi on the train gave Hughes the inspiration for "The Negro Speaks of Rivers." "I put it down on the back of an envelope I had in my pocket, and within the space of ten or fifteen minutes, as the train gathered speed in the dusk, I had written this poem." His father offered to pay his college tuition if Hughes left the U.S., but Hughes wanted to try life in New York City. The city captivated him, but he was unhappy at school. He dropped out—later finishing his degree elsewhere—and did odd jobs while traveling to Africa and France.

Harlem's Bard Returning to the U.S., Hughes worked in a hotel in Washington, D.C. In 1925 he left three poems by the plate of well-known poet Vachel Lindsay. Newspapers reported the next day that Lindsay had discovered an astonishing poet, who happened to be an African American busboy. Hughes soon moved back to Harlem, able to support himself through his writing. Considered the poet laureate of Harlem, he also wrote novels, nonfiction, plays, and children's books. Even death could not dampen his sense of humor. He arranged for a jazz trio to play Duke Ellington's tune "Do Nothing Till You Hear from Me" at his funeral in New York City.

Hughes's legacy lives on in contemporary culture. Critic Kevin Powell writes, "The very people that he documented so well . . . were the people who created hip-hop. . . . We're still asking the same questions that Langston Hughes was asking."

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Langston Hughes, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA3816u5.

Selection Skills

I, Too and The Negro Speaks of Rivers

Literary Elements
- Repetition (SE pp. 811, 813, 814)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Essay (SE p. 814)
- Poetry (TE p. 812)

Reading Skills
- Make Predictions About Theme (SE pp. 811, 813, 814)

Vocabulary Skills
- Analogies (SE pp. 811, 814)
- Build Sentences (TE p. 811)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poems

With what group of people do you feel most closely associated? What do you have in common with the other people in that group? Explore these questions in a brief journal entry.

Build Background

When Hughes began writing in the 1920s, little progress had been made in securing basic rights for African Americans. In the South, laws legalized segregation. In the North, African American workers were generally hired only for low-wage jobs. Hughes's father had left for Mexico because he was fed up with discrimination in the United States. Hughes's college-educated mother moved from city to city looking for work but found only menial jobs. In Harlem, many artists, writers, and intellectuals hoped their artistic movement would help bring about an end to such discrimination.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance

As you read these poems, ask yourself, How does Hughes perceive African Americans and their rightful place in American culture?

Literary Element Repetition

Repetition is the recurrence of sounds, words, phrases, lines, and other elements in a literary work. Repetition increases the sense of unity in a work and can call attention to particular ideas, themes, or arguments. As you read these poems, ask yourself, What effect does Hughes's use of repetition and refrain have on his poems?

Reading Strategy Make Predictions About Theme

Making predictions about the theme, or message, of a literary work can help give you a purpose for reading. Verifying predictions can help you understand a work. Read the titles of the poems. What do you predict these poems will be about?

Tip: Use Titles to Make Predictions A title like "I, Too" implies a connection. Now complete the sentence to make predictions about the theme of the poem.

I, too, (am) ____________________.

I, too, (can) ____________________.

Learning Objectives

For pages 810–814

In studying these texts, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing repetition.

Reading: Making predictions about theme.

Writing: Writing an essay.

Vocabulary

lull (lul) v. to soothe or cause to sleep; p. 813 The mother rocked her baby to lull him to sleep.

bosom (booz´ əm) n. the chest or heart; p. 813 The frantic woman pressed her child to her bosom once she found him again.

dusky (dus´ kē) adj. murky or dark in color; p. 813 The sailors could not see the bottom of the muddy, dusky water.

Tip: Analogies Comparisons based on relationships between words are known as analogies. For example, in the analogy lull : agitate :: dark : light, each pair of words is opposite in meaning. To complete an analogy, decide on the relationship represented by the first pair of words. Then apply that relationship to the second set of words.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

In "I, Too," Hughes first paints a portrait of the African American as a second-class citizen, then presents his vision of future African Americans: allowed to sit at the table with whites and recognized as beautiful. In "The Negro Speaks of Rivers," Hughes uses rivers to portray African American history. The rivers he's "known" throughout time imbue him with a deep sense of history.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 256–261.

Vocabulary

Build Sentences Write the following words on the board: conversation, apartment, time, family. Have students write sentences that include one of these words and one of the vocabulary words. Have them use every vocabulary word on this page in their sentences.

ADVANCED Have students use the words on the board and the vocabulary words on this page to build sentences that form a story or a poem.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To understand the effects of rhythm and repetition in Hughes's poems, have student read the poems aloud in different ways, pausing in different places each time they read. Tell them to pay attention to the rhythm and repetition as they read. As students experiment, have them discuss these questions:

- Are there places in the poem where pauses seem to come more naturally?
- What is the natural rhythm of the poem? Does the poem imitate the rhythms of normal speech?
- How does repetition of certain words and phrases affect the rhythm? Does it help to emphasize the poet's theme?

Teach

Big Idea 1

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: These lines imply that conditions for African Americans are going to improve and that they will have opportunities equal to those of their white counterparts.

APPROACHING Discuss with students the difference between sitting in the kitchen and sitting at the dining table when there is company at home.

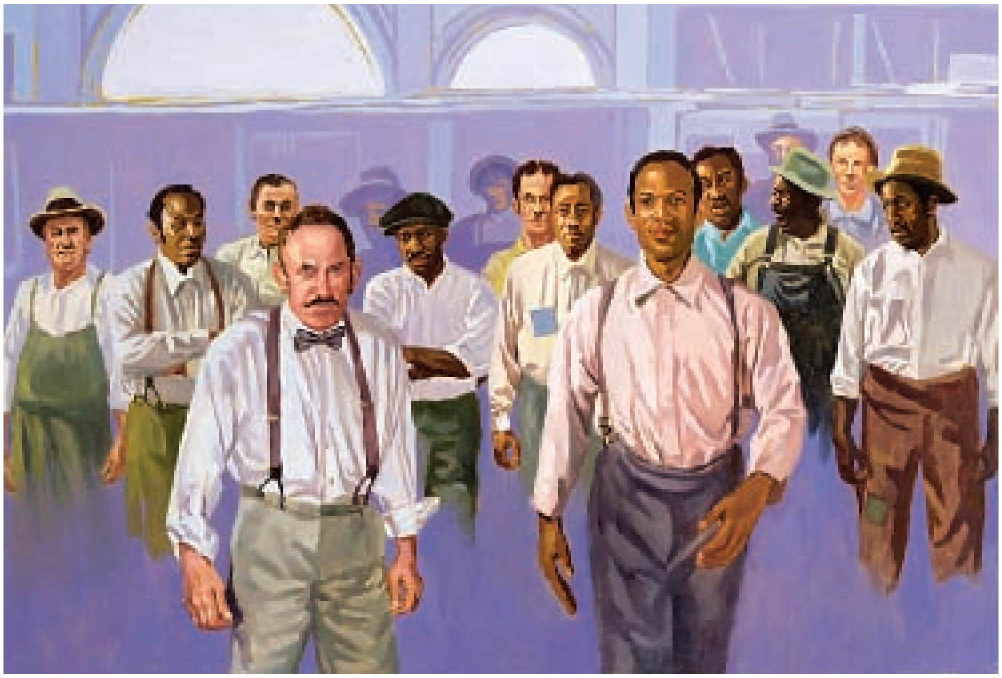
Writer's Technique ☆

Allusion The Civil War–era poet Walt Whitman inspired Hughes to write "I, Too." Hughes's poem is a response to Whitman's "I Hear America Singing" (page 410), a celebratory portrayal of the unity of Americans.

Literary Element 2

Tone Have students suggest adjectives that describe the tone. (optimistic, happy) Ask: How does Hughes achieve a hopeful tone in the poem? (The speaker hopes that "tomorrow," he will sit at the table, not in the kitchen.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Point out that when Hughes uses the word "tomorrow," he does not literally mean the next day, but sometime in the future.



Against All Odds, 2003. Colin Bootman. Oil on board. Private collection.

I, Too

Langston Hughes

I, too, sing America. ☆

I am the darker brother.
They send me to eat in the kitchen
When company comes,
But I laugh,
And eat well,
And grow strong.

Tomorrow,
I'll be at the table
When company comes. 2
Nobody'll dare
Say to me,
"Eat in the kitchen,"
Then.

Besides,
They'll see how beautiful I am
And be ashamed—

I, too, am America.

1 The Harlem Renaissance What do lines 8–10 imply about the future of African Americans?

Writing Practice

Write Poetry Challenge students to write their own poems about America. Have students include repetition in their poems. Once they have completed first drafts, group students into pairs and have them read their poems to each other. Tell them to give feedback on the rhythm and flow of their partner's poem. Have students incorporate their partners' comments into their final drafts.

The Negro Speaks of Rivers

Langston Hughes

Rondout, New York, c. 1907. Leon Dabo. Oil on canvas.
Indianapolis Museum of Art, IN.

I've known rivers:
I've known rivers ancient as the world and older than the flow of human blood in human veins.

My soul has grown deep like the rivers. 3

I bathed in the Euphrates[1] when dawns were young.
I built my hut near the Congo[2] and it lulled me to sleep.
I looked upon the Nile[3] and raised the pyramids above it.
I heard the singing of the Mississippi when Abe Lincoln went down to New Orleans,[4] and I've seen its muddy bosom turn all golden in the sunset.

I've known rivers:
Ancient, dusky rivers.

My soul has grown deep like the rivers.

Make Predictions About Theme What do you expect this poem to be about, after reading the title and the first line? 4

Repetition What idea does the repetition in line 10 emphasize? 5

Vocabulary

lull (lul) v. to soothe or cause to sleep bosom (booz´ əm) n. the chest or heart dusky (dus´ kē) adj. murky or dark in color

---

[1] The Euphrates (yo͞o frā′ tēz) River flows from Turkey through Syria and Iraq. Many ancient civilizations flourished in the area between the Euphrates and Tigris rivers.

[2] The Congo, also called the Zaire, is a river in central Africa.

[3] The Nile, which runs through northeast Africa, is the longest river in the world.

[4] According to legend, Abraham Lincoln decided that slavery should be abolished after witnessing his first slave auction in New Orleans, Louisiana, along the Mississippi River.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Compare and Contrast Provide students with a copy of Langston Hughes's poem, "Let America Be America Again." Have them compare and contrast this poem with the two in the textbook. Have them focus on literary elements such as repetition, tone, and the author's choice of words. Ask them to compare the themes of the poems and explain which poem they liked the best. Then have students choose one aspect of the poems (either a literary element or the theme) and write a paragraph comparing and contrasting the poems. Tell them to provide examples from the poems to support their analysis.

Teach

Literary Element 3

Analogy Remind students what an analogy is. Ask: What analogy does Hughes use in this poem? (He compares his soul to rivers.) Discuss with students why Hughes uses this analogy. (He wants to express the depth of his soul and rivers are usually associated with depth.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Discuss how the word deep has a literal relation to a river, but it has a figurative relation to one's soul. Explain that the depth of a river is tangible, or having physical existence, while the depth of a soul is spiritual.

Reading Strategy 4

Make Predictions Answer: The poem will probably be about rivers that African Americans have lived near and have gotten to know well.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 263.

Literary Element 5

Repetition Answer: The repetition of the line serves to emphasize the depth of history embodied in the rivers and reflected in the speaker's soul.

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) The speaker is an African American; "they" are white. (b) Separate
3. (a) As "ancient as the world" (b) To establish the long history of his race
4. (a) They suggest that Africans and African Americans have always been part of history. (b) They may symbolize the proud history of African Americans.
5. (a) Expectancy; anger; patience (b) Answers will vary.
6. (a) In the past, African Americans were forced into the background. (b) He embodies the experiences of his race.
7. The poems assert that African Americans have always been a part of American culture.
8. Students may say that Hughes felt the effects of racism during his childhood.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 227–228.

Literary Element

1. The words "I, too" and "America" are repeated. In the poem's first line, the speaker speaks as one man; in the last line, he speaks for his race.
2. It suggests that the speaker carries the accumulated experience and wisdom of his race.

Progress Check

Can students analyze repetition?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 262.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. Which lines from the poems would you most like to have Langston Hughes explain? Put your response in the form of a question.
2. (a)What is the identity of the speaker and of the other people in "I, Too"? (b)Does the speaker feel at one with these people or separate from them?
3. (a)How does the speaker in "The Negro Speaks of Rivers" describe the rivers he has known? (b)For what reason might he emphasize their age?
4. (a)What do the activities associated with these rivers communicate about the history of African Americans? (b)In your opinion, what do the rivers symbolize, or stand for?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)How would you describe the mood of "I, Too"? (b)What elements of the poem contribute to this mood?
6. (a)What historical realities does the poem "I, Too" reflect? (b)In what ways has the speaker in "The Negro Speaks of Rivers" been affected by the history of his people?

Connect

7. Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance How do these poems affirm the place of African Americans in the cultural history of this country?
8. Connect to the Author In what ways do you think Hughes's early experiences and family life influenced poems such as "I, Too" and "The Negro Speaks of Rivers"?

Literary Element Repetition

Repetition is the recurrence of sounds, words, phrases, lines, or other elements.

1. What words are repeated in two lines of "I, Too"? How does the difference between these lines develop the theme of the poem?
2. What does the refrain in "The Negro Speaks of Rivers" contribute to the theme of the poem?

Reading Strategy Make Predictions About Theme

Recall your predictions about the poems from page 811. How accurate were they?

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Analogies Complete each analogy below. In each expression, : means "is to" and :: means "as."

1. lull : sleepy :: agitate :
- a. hungry
- b. confused
- c. excited
- d. ambivalent

2. bosom : torso :: knee :
- a. kneecap
- b. leg
- c. joint
- d. foot

3. dusky : bright :: glossy :
- a. matte
- b. shiny
- c. attractive
- d. opaque

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA3816u5.

Writing

Write an Essay Think about a person, place, or event that helped shape who you are. Write a brief essay describing how it affected your identity.

Reading Strategy

Students' answers will vary.

Vocabulary

1. c 2. b 3. a

Writing

Students' essays should identify a specific person, place, or event and relate it to the formation of identity.

Before You Read

When the Negro Was in Vogue

Connect to the Autobiography

Why do certain people and places become fashionable for a time and then just as suddenly fall out of favor? Freewrite three paragraphs in response to this question.

Build Background

Hughes's mentor Carl Van Vechten and publisher Alfred A. Knopf urged Hughes to write an autobiography. He replied, "I am still too much enmeshed in the effects of my young life to write about it." It was not until he was thirty-eight that he wrote The Big Sea.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance

As you read, ask, Why was Harlem the center of the renaissance of African American arts in the 1920s and 1930s?

Literary Element Juxtaposition

The placing of two or more distinct things side by side is called juxtaposition. This is commonly done to contrast or compare the things and may evoke an emotional response in the reader. As you read, ask yourself, Why does Hughes juxtapose the Harlem natives with the "Nordics," or white tourists?

Reading Strategy Analyze Concrete Details

Good writers use concrete, or specific, details to help readers visualize scenes that they describe. As you read, ask, Why does Hughes want readers to visualize certain scenes or images?

Tip: Chart Details Create a chart like the one below to record concrete details you encounter as you read.

Thing Described	Concrete Details	Why Visualize

Learning Objectives

For pages 815–822

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing juxtaposition.

Reading: Analyzing concrete details.

Vocabulary

scintillating (sin´ tə lā´ ting) adj. brilliant; sparkling; p. 816 Her scintillating conversation drew a large number of partygoers to her side.

vogue (vōg) n. fashion; style; p. 816 It seems to be the vogue today to wear sunglasses indoors.

patronage (pā´ trə nij) n. business; trade; custom; p. 817 A large part of the restaurant's patronage comes from local people.

influx (in´ fluks´) n. a continual coming in of people or things; p. 817 The influx of patrons to the restaurant made waiting for a table a lengthy process.

millennium (mi le´ nē əm) n. a period of great happiness, peace, or prosperity; p. 820 For Roger, being a movie critic was like the millennium.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

Hughes describes the unprecedented milieu of Harlem in the 1920s. While African Americans enjoyed success in the arts, whites flocked to Harlem for entertainment. This unusual mingling of races was at times uncomfortable for the Harlem residents, who felt they were being scrutinized. To relax, they went to rent parties.

Vocabulary

Dialogues Have students work in pairs. Have one student make a statement that includes a vocabulary word, e.g., I wear only clothes that are in vogue. Have the other student ask a question that includes that word, e.g., Why do you choose only clothes that are in vogue? The dialogue may continue for several exchanges until they use all of the vocabulary words.

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 267–279.

Selection Skills

When the Negro Was in Vogue

Literary Elements
- Juxtaposition (SE pp. 815, 817, 819, 822)
- Historical Narrative (SE p. 822)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Persuasive Essay (SE p. 823)
- Ellipses (SE p. 823)
- Personal Opinion (TE p. 820)

Reading Skills
- Analyze Concrete Details (SE pp. 815, 819, 820, 822)

Vocabulary Skills
- Synonyms (SE p. 822)
- Word Roots (TE p. 818)

Study Skills/Research/Assessment
- Drama (TE p. 816)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Connect to Historical Context Have students discuss what they know about the 1920s. If necessary, direct students to skim the Unit Introduction (pages 644 to 651). Ask: What is the "crash of 1929"? (Stock market crash) What does Hughes mean when he says the crash sent "Negroes, white folks, and all rolling down the hill toward the Works Progress Administration"? (Many people lost their jobs and homes after the crash and had to rely on the WPA to find work.)

View the Art ★

Aaron Douglas (1898–1979) painted murals, illustrations, and book covers. The four panels of Aspects of Negro Life depict freedom in Africa, slavery in America, liberation after the Civil War, and city life in the 1920s.

Ask: Which of the four scenes do you think Song of the Towers depicts? Why? (The final panel, depicting the freedom African Americans found in cities.)

Interactive Read and Write

Other options for teaching this selection can be found in

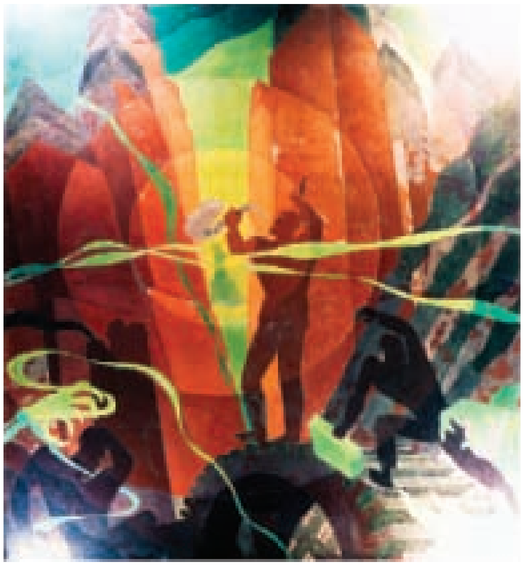
- Interactive Read and Write for EL Students, pp. 203–212
- Interactive Read and Write for Approaching-Level Students, pp. 203–212
- Interactive Read and Write for On-Level Students, pp. 203–212

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 6.1
DRP: 64
Lexile: 1290

When the Negro Was in Vogue

Langston Hughes



Aspects of Negro Life: Song of the Towers, 1934. Aaron Douglas. Oil on canvas, 9 x 9 ft. Manu Sassoonian. Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture, The New York Public Library, NY. ★

1 The 1920's were the years of Manhattan's black Renaissance. It began with Shuffle Along, Running Wild, and the Charleston.[1] Perhaps some people would say even with The Emperor Jones, Charles Gilpin, and the tom-toms at the Provincetown. But certainly it was the musical revue, Shuffle Along, that gave a scintillating send-off to that Negro vogue in Manhattan, which reached its peak just before the crash of 1929, the crash that sent Negroes, white folks, and all rolling down the hill toward the Works Progress Administration.[2]

Shuffle Along was a honey of a show. Swift, bright, funny, rollicking, and gay, with a dozen danceable, singable tunes. Besides, look who were in it: The now famous choir director, Hall Johnson, and the composer, William Grant Still, were a part of the orchestra. Eubie Blake and Noble Sissle wrote the music and played and acted in the show. Miller and Lyles were the comics. Florence Mills skyrocketed to fame in the second act. Trixie Smith sang "He May Be Your Man But He Comes to See Me Sometimes." And Caterina Jarboro, now a European prima donna,[3] and the internationally celebrated Josephine Baker were merely in the chorus. Everybody was in the audience—including me. People came back to see it innumerable times. It was always packed.

---

[1] The Charleston is an energetic dance to jazz music. The Lindy Hop and the black-bottom, mentioned later, are similar dances.

[2] The Works Progress Administration was a government agency established in 1935 to give employment to out-of-work people.

[3] A prima donna (prē´ mə don´ ə) is a principal or featured woman singer.

Vocabulary

scintillating (sin´ tə lā´ ting) adj. brilliant; sparkling vogue (vōg) n. fashion; style

Research Practice

SMALL GROUP

Drama Divide students into small groups. Assign each group to research one of the plays mentioned on pages 816 and 817. (Review the plays for appropriateness.) Assign students to gather information about the original casts and productions in the 1920s. Have each group design a movie poster for the play they researched. The poster should be an advertisement for a movie version of the play that would appeal to today's audiences. Students can select their own cast and key images to include on the poster. Have students present posters to the class.

was thrilled and delighted. From then on I was in the gallery of the Cort Theatre every time I got a chance. That year, too, I saw Katharine Cornell in A Bill of Divorcement, Margaret Wycherly in The Verge, Maugham's The Circle with Mrs. Leslie Carter, and the Theatre Guild production of Kaiser's From Morn Till Midnight. But I remember Shuffle Along best of all. It gave just the proper push—a pre-Charleston kick—to that Negro vogue of the 20's, that spread to books, African sculpture, music, and dancing.

Put down the 1920's for the rise of Roland Hayes, who packed Carnegie Hall, the rise of Paul Robeson in New York and London, of Florence Mills over two continents, of Rose McClendon in Broadway parts that never measured up to her, the booming voice of Bessie Smith and the low moan of Clara on thousands of records, and the rise of that grand comedienne of song, Ethel Waters, singing: "Charlie's elected now! He's in right for sure!" Put down the 1920's for Louis Armstrong and Gladys Bentley and Josephine Baker.

> Some of the owners of Harlem clubs made the grievous error of barring their own race.

White people began to come to Harlem in droves.[4] For several years they packed the ☆ expensive Cotton Club on Lenox Avenue. But I was never there, because the Cotton Club was a Jim Crow[5] club for gangsters and monied whites. They were not cordial[6] to Negro patronage, unless you were a celebrity like Bojangles. So Harlem Negroes did not like the Cotton Club and never appreciated its Jim Crow policy in the very heart of their dark community. Nor did ordinary Negroes like the growing influx of whites toward Harlem after sundown, flooding the little cabarets and bars where formerly only colored people laughed and sang, and where now the strangers were given the best ringside tables to sit and stare at the Negro customers—like amusing animals in a zoo.

The Negroes said: "We can't go downtown and sit and stare at you in your clubs. You won't even let us in your clubs." But they didn't say it out loud—for Negroes are practically never rude to white people. So thousands of whites came to Harlem night after night, thinking the Negroes loved to have them there, and firmly believing that all Harlemites left their houses at sundown to sing and dance in cabarets, because most of the whites saw nothing but the cabarets, not the houses.

Some of the owners of Harlem clubs, delighted at the flood of white patronage,

---

[4] Droves are large crowds.

[5] Jim Crow refers to segregation or discrimination against African Americans.

[6] Cordial (kôr′ jəl) means "warm and friendly."

2 The Harlem Renaissance What factors helped make New York the center of African American culture?

Juxtaposition How does the juxtaposition of whites and African Americans at the same Harlem nightclubs develop Hughes's theme? 3

Vocabulary

patronage (pā´ trə nij) n. business; trade; custom influx (in´ fluks´) n. a continual coming in of people or things

Teach

Big Idea 2

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: Factors included the musical revue Shuffle Along and a number of other theatrical productions featuring African American performers.

Literary Element 3

Juxtaposition

Answer: It develops the theme that below the surface, things were not so great for most African Americans. Although whites had discovered African American musicians, dancers, and artists, whites were displacing African American patrons in their own clubs.

Cultural History ☆

The Cotton Club The legendary Cotton Club opened in 1923. All the performers were African American. Even though the club was located in Harlem, almost all the patrons were white. Many prominent African American performers got their start there, including Cab Calloway and Duke Ellington.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Point out to students that Hughes mentions many artists who lived in Harlem at the time in his essay. On the board make a three-column chart with the headings "Artist," "Type of Art," and "Other Facts." Have students review the essay to identify the artists Hughes mentions and, when provided, note down the type of artwork in which they were engaged and other facts about them.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Research Have students research and write a report on Jim Crow laws. Tell them to find out when and where Jim Crow laws were passed, what activities the laws applied to, and the effects the laws had on African Americans.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Metaphor Tell students to reread the paragraph describing Gladys Bentley and find the metaphor Hughes uses to describe her. ("a perfect piece of African sculpture") Ask: What does this metaphor tell us about how Hughes felt about Bentley's performances? (Hughes greatly admired Bentley's energetic and powerful singing and thought that she was the epitome of African American culture in Harlem at that time.)

View the Photograph ★

Have students examine the photograph on this page. Ask: What does the photograph show? (It shows the entrance to the Cotton Club.) What impression of the Cotton Club do you get from this photograph? (There is a doorman standing at the entrance of the club. This shows that the club probably catered to the rich.)

COTTON CLUB
UCKLEY
AUTY SALON
MANICURE 35
Thelma
FROCKS

★

Some of the owners of Harlem clubs, delighted at the flood of white patronage, made the grievous error of barring their own race, after the manner of the famous Cotton Club. But most of these quickly lost business and folded up, because they failed to realize that a large part of the Harlem attraction for downtown New Yorkers lay in simply watching the colored customers amuse themselves. And the smaller clubs, of course, had no big floor shows or a name band like the Cotton Club, where Duke Ellington usually held forth, so, without black patronage, they were not amusing at all.

1 Some of the small clubs, however, had people like Gladys Bentley, who was something worth discovering in those days, before she got famous, acquired an accompanist, specially written material, and conscious vulgarity. But for two or three amazing years, Miss Bentley sat, and played a big piano all night long, literally all night, without stopping—singing songs like "The St. James Infirmary," from ten in the evening until dawn, with scarcely a break between the notes, sliding from one song to another, with a powerful and continuous underbeat of jungle rhythm. Miss Bentley was an amazing exhibition of musical energy—a large, dark, masculine lady, whose feet pounded the floor while her fingers pounded the keyboard—a perfect piece of African sculpture, animated by her own rhythm. 1

Vocabulary Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Word Roots Remind students that knowing word roots can help them decode unfamiliar words. Point out that the word millennium on page 819 contains the Latin root mill, meaning "thousand." Ask: What is the word root in the word century and what do you think it means? (The Latin root cent means "hundred.") Point out that words like centennial and centenarian also contain this root. Have students use a dictionary and look up number-related word roots for other words such as pentameter, hexameter, septennial, octogenarian, and nonagenarian. Tell students to make a table of number-related word roots and list other examples of words with these roots.

But when the place where she played became too well known, she began to sing with an accompanist, became a star, moved to a larger place, then downtown, and is now in Hollywood. The old magic of the woman and the piano and the night and the rhythm being one is gone. But everything goes, one way or another. The '20's are gone and lots of fine things in Harlem night life have disappeared like snow in the sun—since it became utterly commercial, planned for the downtown tourist trade, and therefore dull.

The lindy-hoppers at the Savoy even began to practise acrobatic routines, and to do absurd things for the entertainment of the whites, that probably never would have entered their heads to attempt merely for their own effortless amusement. Some of the lindy-hoppers had cards printed with their names on them and became dance professors teaching the tourists. Then Harlem nights became show nights for the Nordics.[7]

Some critics say that that is what happened to certain Negro writers, too—that they ceased to write to amuse themselves and began to write to amuse and entertain white people, and in so doing distorted and over-colored their material, and left out a great many things they thought would offend their American brothers of a lighter complexion. Maybe—since Negroes have writer-racketeers, as has any other race. But I have known almost all of them, and most of the good ones have tried to be honest, write honestly, and express their world as they saw it.

All of us know that the gay and sparkling life of the so-called Negro Renaissance of the '20's was not so gay and sparkling beneath the surface as it looked. Carl Van Vechten, in the character of Byron in Nigger Heaven, captured some of the bitterness and frustration of literary Harlem that Wallace Thurman later so effectively poured into his Infants of the Spring—the only novel by a Negro about that fantastic period when Harlem was in vogue.

It was a period when, at almost every Harlem upper-crust dance or party, one would be introduced to various distinguished white celebrities there as guests. It was a period when almost any Harlem Negro of any social importance at all would be likely to say casually: "As I was remarking the other day to Heywood—," meaning Heywood Broun. Or: "As I said to George—," referring to George Gershwin. It was a period when local and visiting royalty were not at all uncommon in Harlem. And when the parties of A'Lelia Walker, the Negro heiress, were filled with guests whose names would turn any Nordic social climber green with envy. It was a period when Harold Jackman, a handsome young Harlem school teacher of modest means, calmly announced one day that he was sailing for the Riviera for a fortnight, to attend Princess Murat's yachting party. It was a period when Charleston preachers opened up shouting churches as sideshows for white tourists. It was a period when at least one charming colored chorus girl, amber enough to pass for a Latin American, was living in a pent house, with all her bills paid by a gentleman whose name was banker's magic on Wall Street. It was a period when every season there was at least one hit play on Broadway acted by a Negro cast. And when books by Negro authors were being published with much greater frequency and much more publicity than ever before or since in history. It was a period when white writers wrote about Negroes more successfully (commercially speaking) than Negroes did about themselves. It was the period (God help us!) when Ethel Barrymore appeared in blackface 3 [7] Nordics usually refers to people of Scandinavia; here, the word means white people in general.

---

2 Analyze Concrete Details What do the dancers' cards contribute to Hughes's criticism of Harlem nightlife?

Juxtaposition Hughes often juxtaposes two distinct people or situations. What is he saying about the situation in Harlem with this juxtaposition? 4

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate English learners can benefit from reading aloud and paraphrasing the text in their own words. Have students work in pairs and read aloud portions of the passage to each other, helping each other with difficult pronunciations or unfamiliar words or phrases. Tell students to look up any unfamiliar terms not explained in the footnotes in the dictionary. Then ask students to orally paraphrase the section they have just read to each other.

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Concrete Details

Answer: The detail about the dancers' cards provides evidence that African Americans went to absurd lengths to entertain white people.

Literary Element 3

Repetition Point out that just as Hughes used repetition in his poetry, so he does here in prose. Ask: What is the effect of Hughes's use of repetition here? (By repeating "it was a period when," Hughes reinforces his point, creates rhythm, and builds momentum.)

Literary Element 4

Juxtaposition Answer: Hughes is saying that the cultural life in Harlem had reached a point where European nobility socialized with African American teachers. There was no telling where you might wind up if you were in the right club at the right time.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Explain that in the phrase "a handsome young Harlem teacher of modest means," the adjective modest means "being limited in amount." The noun means has the meaning of "a person's material resources." In other words, Hughes is saying that Harold Jackson was not a rich person.

Teach

Big Idea 1

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: He portrays the Harlem Renaissance as having little effect on society as a whole. Although African American actors and writers were in vogue, ordinary African Americans were not aware of what was going on in New York.

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Concrete Details

Answer: The rent parties were events where unexpected talent would appear. There was a spontaneity about the parties that made them a big success.

Big Idea 3

The Harlem Renaissance

Answer: African Americans from all walks of life gathered at the rent parties. Because this sort of gathering happened in few other places, Harlem became the center of African American culture.

in Scarlet Sister Mary! It was the period when the Negro was in vogue.

I was there. I had a swell time while it lasted. But I thought it wouldn't last long. (I remember the vogue for things Russian, the season the Chauve-Souris first came to town.) For how could a large and enthusiastic number of people be crazy about Negroes forever? But some Harlemites thought the millennium had come. They thought the race problem had at last been solved through Art plus Gladys Bentley. They were sure the New Negro would lead a new life from then on in green pastures of tolerance created by Countee Cullen, Ethel Waters, Claude McKay, Duke Ellington, Bojangles, and Alain Locke.

I don't know what made any Negroes think that—except that they were mostly intellectuals doing the thinking. The ordinary Negroes hadn't heard of the Negro Renaissance. And if they had, it hadn't raised their wages any. As for all those white folks in the speakeasies[8] and night clubs of Harlem—well, maybe a colored man could find some place to have a drink that the tourists hadn't yet discovered.

Then it was that house-rent parties began to flourish—and not always to raise the rent either. But, as often as not, to have a get-together of one's own, where you could do the black-bottom with no stranger behind you trying to do it, too. Non-theatrical, non-intellectual Harlem was an unwilling victim of its own vogue. It didn't like to be stared at by white folks. But perhaps the downtowners never knew this—for the cabaret owners, the entertainers, and the speakeasy proprietors treated them fine—as long as they paid.

The Saturday night rent parties that I attended were often more amusing than any night club, in small apartments where God knows who lived—because the guests seldom did—but where the piano would often be augmented[9] by a guitar, or an odd cornet, or somebody with a pair of drums walking in off the street. And where awful bootleg[10] whiskey and good fried fish or steaming chitterling were sold at very low prices. And the dancing and singing and impromptu[11] entertaining went on until dawn came in at the windows.

These parties, often termed whist[12] parties or dances, were usually announced by brightly colored cards stuck in the grille of apartment house elevators. Some of the cards were highly entertaining in themselves.

Almost every Saturday night when I was in Harlem I went to a house-rent party. I wrote lots of poems about house-rent parties, and ate thereat many a fried fish and pig's foot—with liquid refreshments on the side. I met ladies' maids and truck drivers, laundry workers and shoe shine boys, seamstresses and porters. I can still hear their laughter in my ears, hear the soft slow music, and feel the floor shaking as the dancers danced.

---

[8] During Prohibition, speakeasies were secret clubs where alcoholic drinks were sold illegally.

[9] Augmented (ôg ment′ əd) means "accompanied; enlarged."

[10] Bootleg means "made, transported, or sold illegally."

[11] Impromptu (im promp′ to͞o) means "offhand or without preparation."

[12] Whist is a card game similar to bridge.

1 The Harlem Renaissance How does Hughes portray the effects of the Harlem Renaissance on society?

Vocabulary

millennium (mi le´ nē əm) n. a period of great happiness, peace, or prosperity

2 Analyze Concrete Details What do the details Hughes shares about rent parties tell you about the reason for their success?

3 The Harlem Renaissance What does Hughes's experience at rent parties say about the reasons Harlem became the center of African American culture?

Writing Practice

Personal Opinion Have students respond to these questions in a short essay: After reading Hughes's essay, what is your impression of the Harlem Renaissance? What positive and negative effects did the Harlem Renaissance have on African Americans?

Students may wish to do some additional research on the Harlem Renaissance before answering these questions. Remind students to support their opinions with details from Hughes's essay and from other sources. After students finish their essays, have volunteers read their essays to the class.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. If you had lived in Harlem in the 1920s, what aspect of its culture do you think you would have enjoyed most? Explain.
2. (a)How was the musical Shuffle Along instrumental in Hughes's move to Harlem? (b)According to Hughes, what was the musical's importance to the African American community?
3. (a)How did the Jim Crow policy operate in the Cotton Club? (b)How did the residents of Harlem respond to the Jim Crow policy?
4. (a)What were house-rent parties? (b)How does Hughes compare them to other forms of entertainment?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. (a)What did the "ordinary Negroes" who lived in Harlem think about the Renaissance? (b)Why?
6. According to Hughes, what did it mean for "the Negro" to be "in vogue"?

Connect

7. Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance How did some Harlemites expect the Renaissance to affect race relations? Was this realistic?
8. Connect to Today How might Hughes respond to African American artists today? Explain and support your response.

Daily Life & Culture

Harlem

By the middle of the 1920s, Harlem had become the largest community of people of African ancestry in the world. Laws were less oppressive in the North than in the South, but African Americans still faced prejudice. Hughes mentions the whites-only policy of the Cotton Club; other theaters and nightclubs had it also.

Employment opportunities were limited. Nearly half of African American men held service jobs as messengers, janitors, or waiters. Many others labored on the docks, loading and unloading ships. Few found work in the skilled trades, and many unions were closed to them. Over 60 percent of African American women were employed—far more than any other group of women at the time. More than half did laundry or worked as maids, both low-paying jobs.

Group Activity Discuss the following questions with classmates.

1. What opportunities and difficulties might a person from the rural South have faced in Harlem?
2. What problems might a young family have faced if both parents held jobs?

After You Read

Assess

1. Students' answers will vary.
2. (a) Hughes went to Columbia University in New York City so that he could see the show. (b) The show was the first musical written by, about, and for blacks, and it called attention to the vitality of African American music.
3. (a) The Cotton Club management disliked black patrons unless they were celebrities. (b) They resented such a policy in their own community.
4. (a) Parties at which food and drink were sold to anyone who wanted to attend, often to raise money to pay someone's rent. (b) He says that the rent parties were "more amusing than any night club."
5. (a) Many of them were unaware of the Harlem Renaissance. (b) The African American vogue did not affect their daily lives and did not raise their wages.
6. African American culture and art became fashionable among whites.
7. Some people in Harlem hoped that the Renaissance was the beginning of a millennium of racial tolerance. They were not realistic because their hopes proved to be illusory.
8. Hughes may admire the talent of African American artists today, but he might not like the fact that actors and singers have become "utterly commercial."

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 229–230.

Daily Life & Culture

1. Their opportunities were limited by racism, segregation, and the lack of well-paying jobs.
2. The parents would not have the time or energy to devote to their children.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Element

1. These people were common people, not artists and intellectuals, out for fun on a Saturday night. The parties were democratic, including anyone and everyone.
2. Hughes thinks the intellectuals had unrealistic expectations, while the ordinary African Americans had no increased expectations because the Renaissance did not affect their lives.

Progress Check

Can students analyze juxtaposition?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 273.

Review: Historical Narrative

Students may say that the people Hughes mentions were so famous at the time he was writing that he did not need to identify them.

Literary Element Juxtaposition

Juxtaposition is the placing together of two or more distinct things for the purpose of comparing or contrasting them. In "When the Negro Was in Vogue," Langston Hughes juxtaposes people, places, and activities.

1. Why do you think Hughes juxtaposes "ladies' maids and truck drivers, laundry workers and shoe shine boys, seamstresses and porters" in his description of the house-rent parties?
2. What is Hughes's conclusion from his juxtaposition of the "intellectual" African Americans and the "ordinary" Harlem African Americans?

Review: Historical Narrative

As you learned on page 416, a historical narrative is a work of nonfiction that tells the story of important historical events or developments.

Partner Activity Meet with another classmate and talk about the many people that Hughes mentions in this historical narrative. Sort them out, as best you can, using the context in which Hughes mentions them. Use a chart like this one to take notes.

African Americans in Harlem

Writers & Poets	Singers & Actors	Musicians & Composers	Not Sure

When you have listed all the names, highlight any that you have heard of before. Why do you suppose Hughes does not identify each of the people he mentions, such as George Gershwin?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Reading Strategy Analyze Concrete Details

ACT Skills Practice

1. The concrete details Hughes gives about the rent parties appeal to the senses of:

I. hearing
II. smell / taste
III. sight

A. II only
B. I and II only
C. II and III only
D. I, II, and III

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Synonyms With a partner, match each vocabulary word with its synonym. You will not use all the answer choices. Use a thesaurus or dictionary to check your answers.

1. millennium	a. business
2. patronage	b. inflow
3. scintillating	c. fashion
4. vogue	d. brilliant
5. influx	e. time of happiness
	f. unclear

Academic Vocabulary

Hughes labels the white tourists who flocked to Harlem for entertainment as "Nordics."

Label is an academic word. Using context clues, try to figure out the meaning of label in each sentence and explain the difference between the two meanings:

1. For my detention, my science teacher made me label slides with the names of the organisms they displayed.
2. The inventors labeled their new product "The Wingbat."

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Vocabulary

1. e 2. a 3. d 4. c 5. b

Reading Strategy

1. D is the correct answer because Hughes describes the invitations, music, laughter, food, and drink of the rent parties.

Academic Vocabulary

1. The student is forced to copy the names down in order to identify the slides, so label means "to affix an identifying phrase to."
2. The inventors have to create an original name, so label means "to designate with an identifying phrase," not just to place a label with a preexisting name on an object.

Respond Through Writing

Persuasive Essay

Argue a Position Hughes examines both the artistic advances and social inequalities of the Harlem Renaissance. Overall, does he consider the movement to have had a positive or negative impact? Write a persuasive essay on this topic. Support your argument with details from the text, and include rhetorical devices to strengthen your argument.

Understand the Task When you argue persuasively, you use logic or reason to influence a reader's ideas or actions. Rhetorical devices include repetition, emotional appeal, hyperbole, and rhetorical questions.

Prewrite Fill in a chart with evidence that supports your argument. Make another chart with opposing arguments and evidence that supports them. Make sure to record any outside sources you use so you can properly attribute the information.

Argument	Evidence	Opposing Argument	Counter-Evidence

Draft Begin with your thesis, in which you will argue whether Hughes considered the Harlem Renaissance to have had a positive or negative impact. Your body paragraphs should all have topic sentences related to the thesis. Use evidence from your chart as support, and cite the page numbers for quotations. You might apply the sentence frame below to address opposing arguments:

While some might object that ______, I would reply that ______.

Revise Exchange papers with a partner. Evaluate each other's essay. Is the argument logical and well-supported? Does the essay refute counterarguments? Does the essay include persuasive techniques? Revise your essay based on the comments you receive.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your paper, correcting any errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Use the Grammar Tip in the side column to help you with using ellipses.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objectives:

Writing: Writing a persuasive essay.

Grammar: Using ellipses in quotations.

Grammar Tip

Ellipses

Ellipsis points (. . .) are three spaced periods that indicate the omission of words within a text, such as a quotation. Ellipses are useful when you don't need to refer to the entirety of a quotation, just relevant portions:

Hughes claims it was white writers who benefited most: "White writers wrote about Negroes more successfully . . . than Negroes did about themselves."

When you use ellipses, make sure you do not alter the meaning of quotations by omitting key phrases or words. Do not use ellipses at the beginning of a quotation or at the end if the quotation reads as a complete sentence. In the second case, simply end the quotation with a period.

After You Read

Assess

Respond Through Writing

Students' essays should

- Establish a clear position on the issue.
- Use logic and rhetorical strategies to persuade the reader.
- Be clearly and cohesively organized.

For grammar practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 277.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

AAVE Approaching level students who use African American vernacular English (AAVE) may have trouble with the verb "to be" in their writing. In their persuasive essays, help students recognize where they may make mistakes in Standard Academic English by omitting or misusing is or are with nouns and present participles. They may also sometimes omit is or are between pronoun subjects and predicate nouns or adjectives. For example, if students chose home as a setting, students may say "Home be comfortable and familiar" instead of "Home is comfortable and familiar." Work with students and help them find places in their persuasive essays where the verb "to be" is omitted or misused. Guide students in correcting their mistakes where necessary.

Focus

Bellringer Options

Daily Language Practice Transparency 76

Or go over the vocabulary on the next page so that students are comfortable with the words reap and sow. Ask: What is the literal meaning of the biblical statement “you reap whatever you sow”? (You will harvest the fruit of whatever seeds you plant.) Ask: What is the figurative meaning of this statement? (What you do comes back to you.)

Discuss contemporary cases that illustrate the biblical idea, and ones that belie it.

Before You Read

A black man talks of reaping

Meet Arna Bontemps
(1902–1973)

Historian, educator, and author of poems, plays, and novels, Arna Bontemps helped draw attention to the misleading education he felt many U.S. citizens had received about the heritage and accomplishments of African Americans. He has been credited with helping to create the “trickle of interest in Negro American literature—that trickle which is now a torrent.” He wrote, “Had I not gone home summers and hobnobbed with Negroes, . . . I would have come out [of college] imagining that the story of the Negro could be told in two short paragraphs: a statement about jungle people in Africa and an equally brief account of the slavery issue in American history.”

> “In the Harlem Renaissance poetry led the way for the other arts. It touched off the awakening that brought novelists, painters, sculptors, dancers, dramatists, and scholars of many kinds to the notice of a nation that had nearly forgotten about the gifts of its Negro people.”
>
> —Arna Bontemps

A Childhood Teacher Bontemps was born in Alexandria, Louisiana, but racism there led his family to move to Los Angeles when Bontemps was three. During his childhood, his great-uncle Buddy shared with Bontemps a love of variety shows, folk stories, and dialect, all of which were staples of African American culture at the time. Bontemps would go on to incorporate the cultural achievements of African Americans in his work.

When Bontemps was a student at UCLA, he discovered a book by Claude McKay, a poet whose work eventually helped to spark the Harlem Renaissance. Bontemps read McKay’s book twice in one day and then “began telling everybody I knew about it.” In 1923, when he moved to New York, he became friends with Langston Hughes, Countee Cullen, and other Harlem Renaissance artists.

Adult Achievements Bontemps’s father wanted his son to become a mason, but Bontemps preferred to try his luck as a writer. Soon after his arrival in Harlem, he won recognition for his poetry and for his first novel, God Sends Sunday.

In 1943 Bontemps became the librarian at Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee, where he devoted himself to recording the history of African Americans. He said that his book The Story of the Negro “consists mainly of things I learned after I left school that I wish I had known much earlier.” Bontemps went on to write more than twenty-five books, including The Harlem Renaissance Remembered and Golden Slippers, the first children’s anthology of African American poetry.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Arna Bontemps, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

A black man talks of reaping

Literary Elements
- Metaphor (SE pp. 825–827)
- Allusion (TE p. 826)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE p. 826)

Reading Skills
- Connect to Personal Experience (SE pp. 825, 827)

Vocabulary Skills
- Context Clues (SE pp. 825, 827)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Poem

How you would feel if others benefited from your work but you did not? How would you feel if you unfairly benefited from someone else's work? Discuss these questions in a small group.

Build Background

The references to sowing in this poem are an extended metaphor, but the metaphor depends on some specific factual information about planting and harvesting. Because many things can go wrong before a seed becomes a harvestable plant, the results of sowing are unpredictable. Bontemps may have had in mind the New Testament parable of the Sower and the Seed (Matthew 13:3–9), which contains one of the best known examples of the metaphor.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance

As you read, ask yourself, How does Bontemps's poem address the injustices stemming from racial inequality?

Literary Element Metaphor

A metaphor is a figure of speech that compares two seemingly unlike things. In contrast to a simile, a metaphor does not use the words like or as in making a comparison. For example, the phrase "the car was lightning and thunder" compares a noisy and speedy car to lightning and thunder. "A black man talks of reaping" includes an implied extended metaphor—a metaphor that is developed at length. As you read, ask, What does Bontemps accomplish by using an extended metaphor?

Reading Strategy Connect to Personal Experience

To connect the events and ideas of a literary work to your own life or to other works you've read, ask yourself, Do I know someone like this? Have I ever felt this way? What else have I read that reminds me of this poem?

Tip: Take Notes Use a chart like the one started below to record the connections you find.

Events, ideas, or feelings in the poem	My connections

Learning Objectives

For pages 824–827

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing metaphors.

Reading: Connecting to personal experience.

Writing: Writing a letter.

Vocabulary

sown (sōn) v. planted; p. 826 Two weeks after the seeds were sown, the plants sprouted.

lean (lēn) adj. unproductive; lacking; p. 826 The farmers fear that this year will be a lean one.

reap (rēp) v. to gather or to harvest; p. 826 Each fall, the farmers reap the grain in the fields.

Tip: Context Clues To learn a word's meaning, look at the words surrounding it and try to predict its definition. Example: In lines 1–2, Bontemps writes, "I have sown beside all waters in my day / I planted deep, within my heart the fear." The placement of sown and planted suggests that the two words are synonyms.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Preteach these phrases from the poem: "beside all waters," "planted deep within my heart," "I scattered seed," "reaping only what the hand can hold at once," and "my children glean in fields they have not sown." Then have students explain each phrase in their own words.

Established Have students create a three-column chart with the headings "Questions," "Sowing," and "Reaping." In the first column have them list the questions Who? What? When? Where? and Why? They should answer these questions for sowing and reaping in the other two columns.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

The speaker is a black man who works the land but has little to show for his efforts. The first stanza tells about his efforts to ensure a good harvest. The second stanza describes the disappointing result. The third stanza points to the difference between those who work but have nothing to show for it and those who profit by the work of others.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 280–285.

Vocabulary

Perfect Tenses Explain to students that sown is a past participle form of the verb to sow. The word sowed may also be used: I have sown (or sowed) seeds in the fields. The tense used in this sentence is called the present perfect. This tense describes an action that is complete at the present time. It begins with I have, you have, she has and so on. Have students use the word sown in sentences in the present perfect.

ADVANCED Have students explain how the word sown is used in the future perfect and past perfect. Have them write a dialogue using all three forms of the perfect tense with this or other verbs.

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Teach

Big Idea 1

The Harlem Renaissance
Say: Think about the Great Migration. Where might the speaker's children be working? (Many African Americans had moved to Northern cities to find new jobs.)

Literary Element 2

Metaphor Answer: Sharecroppers owed landowners so much for rent, tools, and seed that they saw little or no profit.

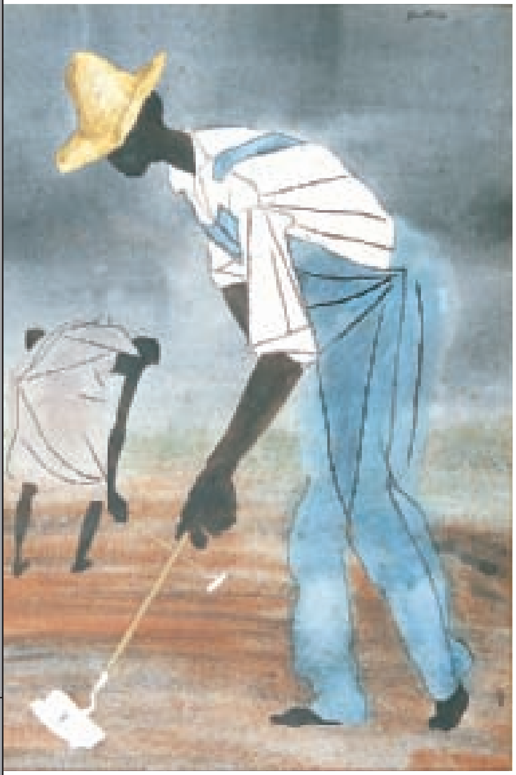
For additional literary element practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 286.

View the Art

Robert Gwathmey (1903–1988) was among the first white Americans to capture the hardships of blacks in rural Virginia. He depicted many scenes of sharecroppers who paid for the land they rented by giving most of their crop to the landowners.

Share Croppers, c. 1941. Robert Gwathmey. Watercolor, 45 x 32.4 cm. ©Estate of Robert Gwathmey/Licensed by VAGA, New York/San Diego Museum of Art. Museum purchase with funds provided by Mrs. Leon D. Bonnet.



A black man talks of reaping

Arna Bontemps

I have sown beside all waters in my day.
I planted deep, within my heart the fear that wind or fowl would take the grain away.
I planted safe against this stark, lean year.

I scattered seed enough to plant the land in rows from Canada to Mexico but for my reaping only what the hand can hold at once is all that I can show.

Yet what I sowed and what the orchard yields my brother's sons are gathering stalk and root; 1 small wonder then my children glean[1] in fields

---

[1] Glean means "to gather grain left on a field after reaping."

Metaphor What might be the underlying reason that the speaker has profited little from the hard work of sowing (lines 7–8)? 2

Vocabulary

sown (sōn) v. planted lean (lēn) adj. unproductive; lacking reap (rēp) v. to gather or to harvest

Reading Practice

SMALL GROUP SPIRAL REVIEW

Allusion Remind students that an author's indirect reference to a person, event, or another work of literature is called an allusion. Ask them how Bontemps alludes to Langston Hughes's "The Negro Speaks of Rivers" and to the Bible. (Bontemp's "black man talks" calls to mind Hughes's "Negro speaks," his "reaping" alliterates with Hughes's "rivers," and his use of the terms "sown" and "reaping" allude to the Bible.) Have students work in small groups to write a poem in which they allude to another work of literature, one in the text or one that is commonly known. Have groups read their poems and have the class determine the specific allusions they are making.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. How did this poem affect you? Explain.
2. (a)What is the work done by the speaker in the poem? (b)How would you explain the fears and concerns expressed in the first stanza?
3. (a)Who are "my brother's sons," and what are they doing? (b)Why do you think they are able to act in such a way?
4. (a)What does the speaker mean by "my children glean in fields they have not sown"? (b)What might be the "bitter fruit" the children feed on? Explain.

Analyze and Evaluate

5. James Baldwin wrote, "Color is not a human or a personal reality; it is a political reality." How does this poem illustrate Baldwin's point?
6. How does the title of the poem help you understand the poem's overall meaning? Explain.

Connect

7. Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance How does this poem reflect both African American history and goals of the Harlem Renaissance?
8. Connect to Today Are the last two lines of the poem still applicable today? Explain.

Literary Element Metaphor

An extended metaphor is a metaphor that is developed over more than one line.

1. What comparison is Bontemps making?
2. What details in the poem convey the metaphor?
3. How does the metaphor help support the theme, or underlying message, of the poem?

Reading Strategy Connect to Personal Experience

Refer to your chart from page 825 to note connections to the poem.

1. How do your ideas and experiences compare with those Bontemps wrote about?
2. Think of a time you were treated unfairly. How did you feel and respond? Explain what you learned from this.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Context Clues Identify the context clues in the following sentences that help you determine the meaning of each boldfaced vocabulary word.

1. When it's time for the exam, I plan to reap the benefits of studying.
2. Our tomato plants produced far fewer tomatoes than they did last season; it was a lean crop.
3. When I looked out the window, I saw that the flowers I had sown last fall were just coming up.

Writing

Write a Letter In this poem, Bontemps raises awareness about the difficulties faced by African Americans. You can express your thoughts on injustice, too. Think about a troubling issue in your community. Write a letter to your state or national representative or senator describing the situation. Your style should be formal, like that of a business letter.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students' responses will vary.
2. (a) Sowing and reaping (b) The speaker has feared that weather or birds would spoil his crop.
3. (a) The children of white people, who are taking the crops (b) The sharecropping system allows them to do so.
4. (a) A literal interpretation is that the speaker's children must search fields for unharvested grain. Metaphorically, they are working in other people's businesses. (b) Unfairness; prejudice
5. It shows that African Americans suffered from the politics of sharecropping.
6. The title presents the literal farming situation; metaphorically, work without reward.
7. The poem reflects the African American history of sharecropping. It reflects the Harlem Renaissance goal of bringing those concerns to the public.
8. Students may say that people have more choices today, so they are no longer forced to feed on "bitter fruit."

Writing

Students' letters should address a specific issue and have a formal and persuasive tone.

Literary Element

1. He is comparing the sharecropper's life to the results of racial prejudice.
2. Possible answers: "sown"; "planted deep"; "scattered seed"; "reaping"; "orchard"
3. It illustrates the theme of exploitation.

Reading Strategy

Students' answers will vary.

Progress Check

Can students connect the text to personal experience?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 287.

Vocabulary

1. Studying will help the student gain better grades on her exams, so reap means "to obtain or gather."
2. Because not many tomatoes were produced in the crop, lean means "not plentiful."
3. The flowers' growth is due to the fact that their seeds were sown, or planted, months before.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 52

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 77

Or engage the class in a discussion about the possibility of sharing emotions with people whom we think of as different. Ask: Deep down, despite our differences, what basic human needs and desire do we all share?

Before You Read

Any Human to Another

Meet Countee Cullen
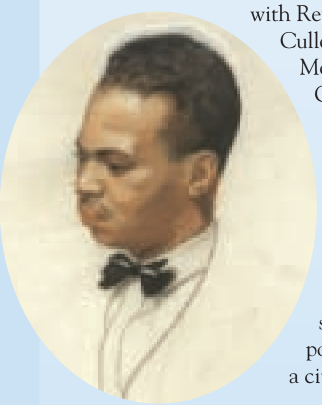
(1903–1946)

Probably more than any other writer during the Harlem Renaissance, Countee Cullen embodied the ideal of the "New Negro" and fulfilled the goals of African American leaders W. E. B. DuBois and James Weldon Johnson. He successfully reached both African American and white audiences and eloquently addressed the issues of racism and injustice in the United States. Though some argued that Cullen spurned his African American heritage because he considered himself simply a poet and not an African American poet, he never denied his African American culture. His verse—even as it showed the influence of English Romantic poetry—echoed the struggle and violence of the times.

Cullen was born Countee Porter. His birthplace remains a mystery, but most scholars believe it was Louisville, Kentucky. Cullen was raised by a woman who was thought to be his grandmother, and when she died in 1917, he went to live with Reverend Frederick A. Cullen, pastor of the Salem Methodist Episcopal Church in Harlem, and his wife, Carolyn. Although not legally adopted by the Cullens, he eventually took their last name.

Cullen excelled in school and won several poetry awards, including a citywide contest. Before he graduated from New York University, his first book of poems, Color, was published to good reviews. By the time he received his master's degree from Harvard, Cullen had become the most esteemed African American poet of his time.



Countee Porter Cullen, 1925. Winold Reiss. Pastel on artist board. National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC.

> "I shall not write of Negro subjects for the purpose of propaganda. That is not what a poet is concerned with. Of course, when the emotion rising out of the fact that I am a Negro is strong, I express it."
>
> —Countee Cullen

Contradictions Cullen wanted to prove that African Americans could write as well as whites. His belief in art's ability to unite people of all races prompted him to caution African American poets against becoming "racial poets." James Weldon Johnson understood Cullen's desire to avoid the "Negro poet" label, but he also noted a paradox: "Strangely, it is because Cullen revolts against… racial limitations—technical and spiritual—that the best of his poetry is motivated by race."

Legacy Cullen published several collections of poetry after Color. Although critical acclaim for his works waned in later years, his popularity never suffered, and today his literary legacy remains due to the eloquent, artfully crafted poems he wrote during the Harlem Renaissance.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Countee Cullen, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Selection Skills

Any Human to Another

Literary Elements
- Stanza (SE pp. 829, 831)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Journal Entry (SE p. 831)

Reading Skills
- Connect to Contemporary Issues (SE pp. 829, 831)
- Analyze Text Structure (TE p. 830)

Vocabulary Skills
- Antonyms (SE pp. 829, 831)

Literature and Reading Review

Connect to the Poem

How much can we empathize with—very deeply feel—another person's troubles? Freewrite for ten minutes on this topic.

Build Background

Growing up in Harlem, Cullen learned about African American pride, unity, and art. Yet he was also immersed in white culture: he was educated in white upper-class schools, read the works of European writers, and imitated John Keats and other English Romantic poets. This combination of influences—white and African American, formal and informal—is reflected in his work.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance

As you read this poem, ask yourself, How did Cullen envision the role of art as a means of breaking down racial barriers?

Literary Element Stanza

A stanza is a group of lines forming a unit in a poem or song. A stanza tends to focus on a certain topic or feeling. Typically, stanzas are separated by a line space and often have the same number of lines, the same meter, and the same rhyme scheme. As you read, ask yourself, What is the focus of each stanza? How are the stanzas arranged?

Reading Strategy Connect to Contemporary Issues

Cullen's poem reflects his desire to see people as individuals rather than as representatives of a group and to focus on what unites them. As you read, ask, How are his beliefs relevant today?

Tip: Record Your Observations To assess the values you identify in Cullen's poem in the context of contemporary issues, record your observations in a chart like the one below:

Cullen's Beliefs	Contemporary Issues	Observations
Sorrow unites people	Terrorist attacks	Cullen would understand why people unite after terrorist attacks.

Learning Objectives

For pages 828–831

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing stanzas.

Reading: Connecting to contemporary issues.

Writing: Writing a journal entry.

Vocabulary

fused (fūzd) adj. blended; p. 830 The jeweler crafted a bracelet made of fused metals.

diverse (di vurs´) adj. composed of different elements; p. 830 Because of newcomers from Asia and Latin America, the town had become more ethnically diverse.

unique (ū nēk´) adj. unusual; p. 830 The artist generally paints religious paintings, so this landscape painting is unique.

unsheathed (un shēthd´) adj. removed from a protective case; p. 830 The unsheathed sword appeared both menacing and beautiful.

Tip: Antonyms Understanding the opposite of an unfamiliar word, or its antonym, can help you learn the word. Example: Unique and ordinary are antonyms.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

The speaker points out that no person stands completely alone and that both joy and sorrow—the latter much more prevalent than the former—should be shared.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 291–296.

Vocabulary

Prefixes Two common prefixes are un- and dis-, both meaning "not," or "the opposite of." Give students the following list of words and have them affix the correct prefix: reliable, comfort, prove, interesting, service, safe, place, appealing, interested. Then have them check the meanings of the words in the dictionary.

APPROACHING Write the following words on the board: unsheathed, unlikely, unpopular, unforeseen, unofficial, unnecessary. Point out that when the first letter of the base word is n, you get a double letter. Have students identify the base word and its meaning using a dictionary. Have them predict the meaning of the words with the prefix. Have them use a dictionary to check their answers.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate To help students understand the poem, have them write out the individual stanzas as sentences without special capitalization. Then have them rearrange the words, add extra punctuation, or add pronouns or other words to make the sentences easier to understand. Have them read their sentences aloud and explain what each one means. Then have them return to the poem and read it aloud.

Advanced Have students read each stanza and identify and explain any metaphors or similes the poet uses. Have them discuss how each use of figurative language helps give the reader a better understanding of the poet's message.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Stanza Ask: Would this work be better presented as a prose paragraph of six sentences? (Some students may say the short lines and short stanzas help them understand the message and hear the music.)

For additional literary element practice, see Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 297.

Big Idea 2

The Harlem Renaissance
Answer: Students may suggest race-proud whites (or blacks), class-conscious rich people, or people who seek to avoid human troubles.

View the Art ★

The title of the artwork is a quotation from a 1933 speech by Jane Addams, a U.S. social worker. Ask: What do the messages of Addams, the artist, and Cullen have in common? (They all want humans to recognize what they share with one another.)

Civilization is a method of living, an attitude of equal respect for all men, from the series Great Ideas of Western Man, 1955. George Giusti. India ink and gouache on paper sheet, 24⅞ x 18⁵⁄₁₆ in. ★ National Museum of American Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC.

Any Human to Another

Countee Cullen

The ills I sorrow at
Not me alone
Like an arrow,
Pierce to the marrow,
Through the fat
And past the bone.

Your grief and mine
Must intertwine
Like sea and river,
Be fused and mingle,
Diverse yet single,
Forever and forever.

Let no man be so proud
And confident,
To think he is allowed
A little tent
Pitched in a meadow
Of sun and shadow
All his little own.

Joy may be shy, unique,
Friendly to a few,
Sorrow never scorned to speak
To any who
Were false or true.

Your every grief
Like a blade
Shining and unsheathed
Must strike me down.
Of bitter aloes[1] wreathed,
My sorrow must be laid
On your head like a crown. 1

---

[1] Aloes refers to the spiny leaves of the aloe plant, whose juices are used to make a bitter medicine.

Harlem Renaissance What types of people might the speaker be referring to here? 2

Vocabulary

fused (fūzd) adj. blended diverse (di vurs′) adj. composed of different elements unique (ū nēk′) adj. unusual unsheathed (un shēthd′) adj. removed from a protective case

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Analyze Text Structure On first reading, students may have trouble following the sense of lines 1–6. One reason is syntax: The subject (ills) is separated from its verb (pierce) by two lines, and the verb's direct object (me), along with an adverb phrase (like an arrow), precedes the verb.

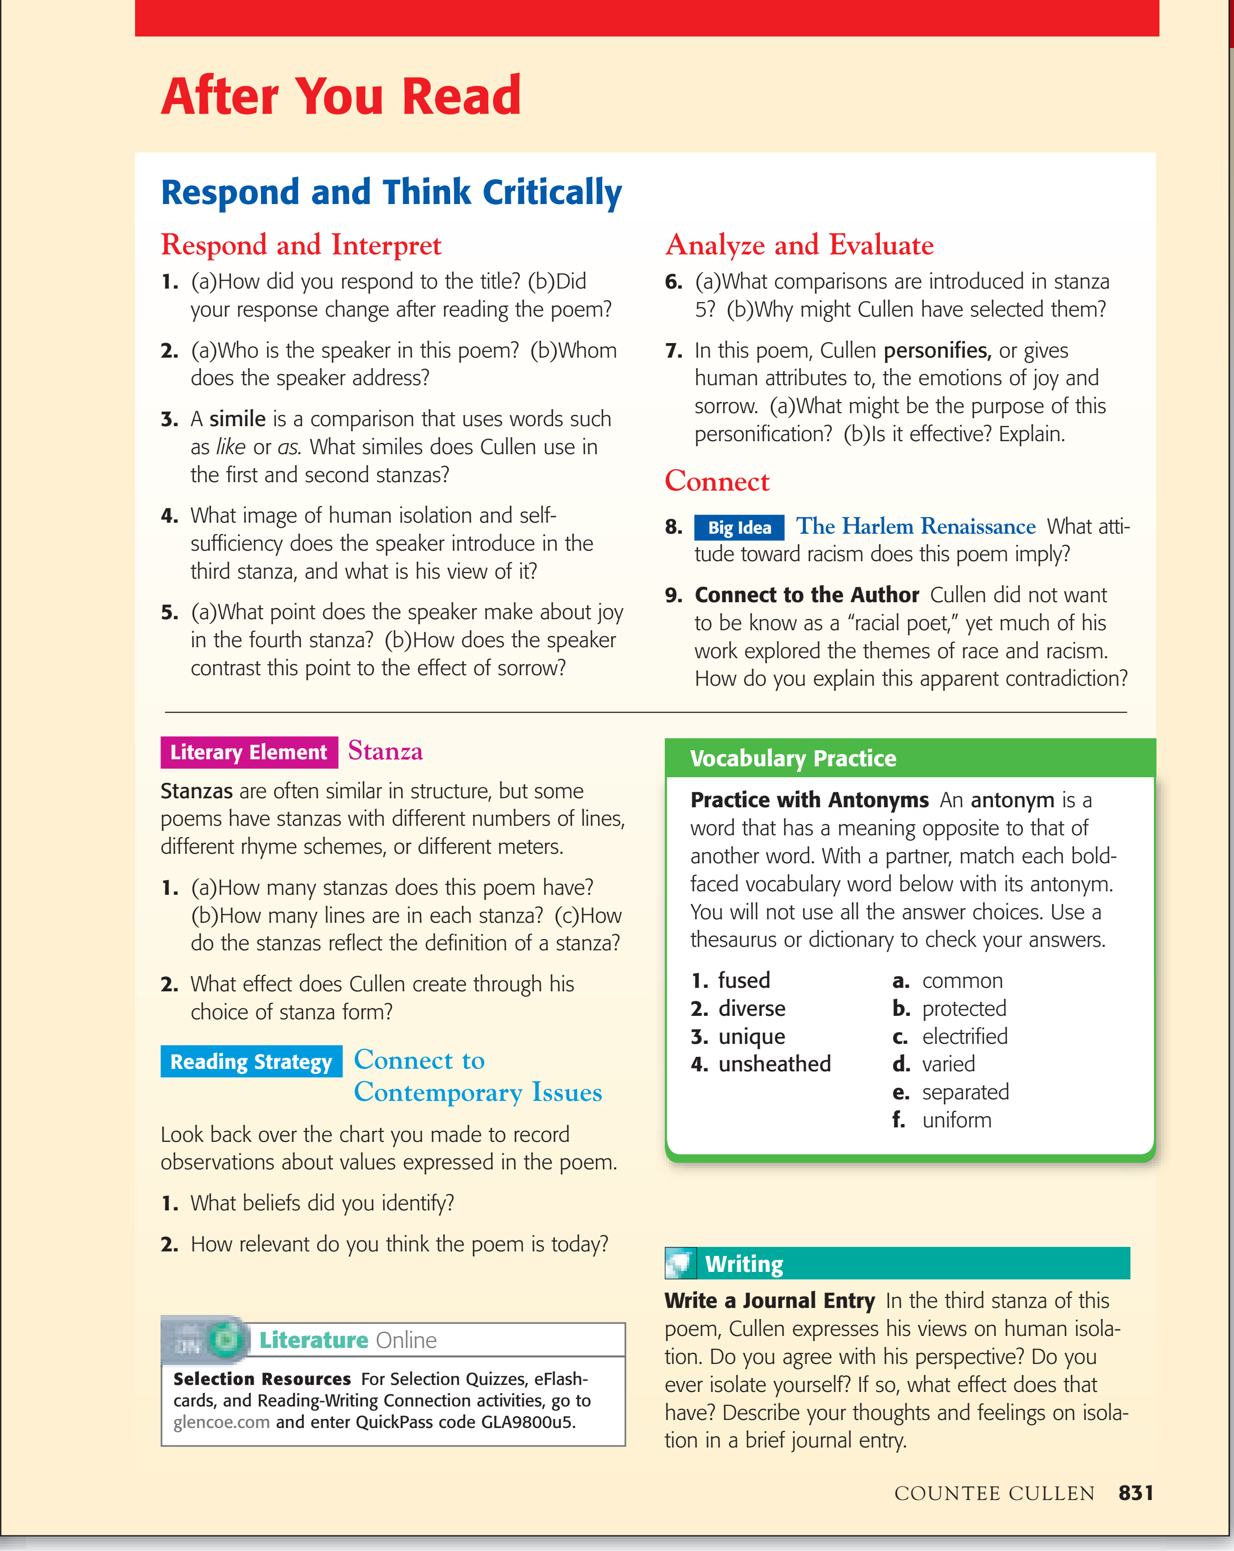
After pointing out this inverted syntax, ask students to write a paraphrase of the first stanza. Remind them that a paraphrase is a restatement of someone else's words in one's own words. Then ask for paraphrases of the remaining four stanzas of the poem. Have students read their paraphrases aloud for the class.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. (a)How did you respond to the title? (b)Did your response change after reading the poem?
2. (a)Who is the speaker in this poem? (b)Whom does the speaker address?
3. A simile is a comparison that uses words such as like or as. What similes does Cullen use in the first and second stanzas?
4. What image of human isolation and self-sufficiency does the speaker introduce in the third stanza, and what is his view of it?
5. (a)What point does the speaker make about joy in the fourth stanza? (b)How does the speaker contrast this point to the effect of sorrow?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. (a)What comparisons are introduced in stanza 5? (b)Why might Cullen have selected them?
7. In this poem, Cullen personifies, or gives human attributes to, the emotions of joy and sorrow. (a)What might be the purpose of this personification? (b)Is it effective? Explain.

Connect

8. Big Idea The Harlem Renaissance What attitude toward racism does this poem imply?
9. Connect to the Author Cullen did not want to be know as a "racial poet," yet much of his work explored the themes of race and racism. How do you explain this apparent contradiction?

Literary Element Stanza

Stanzas are often similar in structure, but some poems have stanzas with different numbers of lines, different rhyme schemes, or different meters.

1. (a)How many stanzas does this poem have? (b)How many lines are in each stanza? (c)How do the stanzas reflect the definition of a stanza?
2. What effect does Cullen create through his choice of stanza form?

Reading Strategy Connect to Contemporary Issues

Look back over the chart you made to record observations about values expressed in the poem.

1. What beliefs did you identify?
2. How relevant do you think the poem is today?

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Antonyms An antonym is a word that has a meaning opposite to that of another word. With a partner, match each boldfaced vocabulary word below with its antonym. You will not use all the answer choices. Use a thesaurus or dictionary to check your answers.

1. fused
2. diverse
3. unique
4. unsheathed

a. common
b. protected
c. electrified
d. varied
e. separated
f. uniform

Writing

Write a Journal Entry In the third stanza of this poem, Cullen expresses his views on human isolation. Do you agree with his perspective? Do you ever isolate yourself? If so, what effect does that have? Describe your thoughts and feelings on isolation in a brief journal entry.

After You Read

Assess

1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) Any human being (b) The reader, another human being
3. Stanza 1: Ills are compared to an arrow; stanza 2: Griefs are compared to a sea and a river.
4. The speaker describes a tent pitched in a meadow; he warns against seeking isolation.
5. (a) Joy is for the few. (b) Sorrow disdains no one.
6. (a) The reader's grief is compared to a blade; the speaker's sorrow is compared to a crown of aloes. (b) Cullen sees grief as piercing and sorrow as continual.
7. (a) To suggest that people have no control over their joys and sorrows (b) Students' answers will vary.
8. Cullen rejects any attitude that divides humans, including racism.
9. Students may say that Cullen was writing about his experiences and his life which were affected by race.

Literary Element

1. (a) Five (b) Six, six, seven, five, and seven (c) The stanzas vary slightly in number of lines, rhyme scheme, and meter, yet the ideas connect.
2. The effect of thinking through an idea

Progress Check

Can students connect to contemporary issues?

If No → See Unit 5 Teaching Resources Book, p. 298.

Reading Strategy

1. Possible answers: that sorrow unites humanity; that grief is unavoidable
2. Most will say that it is relevant.

Vocabulary

1. e 2. f 3. a 4. b

Writing

Students' journal entries should make connections between Cullen's view on isolation and their personal thoughts and experiences.

Writing Workshop

Literary Analysis

Focus

Bellringer

This workshop reprints part of Lawrence Raab's analysis of "Mending Wall." His analysis points to questions the poem asks, various ways of interpreting certain lines in the poem, and some of the contradictions inherent in the poem. Ask: Do you think a poem can mean anything you want it to mean? Why do people sometimes take away different meanings from the same poem?

Summary

In this workshop, students will write and present analyses of poems. They will follow the stages of the writing process, including prewriting, drafting, revising, and editing. The workshop includes two mini-lessons, on precise word choice and the use of quotations.

Learning Objectives

For pages 832–839

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objective:

Writing: Analyzing a poem to demonstrate understanding of the poem's meaning and appreciation of the effects that create that meaning.

Writing Process

At any stage of a writing process, you may think of new ideas to include and better ways to express them. Feel free to return to and revise earlier stages as you write.

- Prewrite
- Draft
- Revise
- Focus Lesson: Word Choice
- Edit & Proofread
- Focus Lesson: Embedding Quotations in Text
- Present

Writing Workshop

Literary Analysis

Literature Connection In this passage, John F. Kennedy examines aspects of Frost's character revealed through his poetry in order to honor Frost's achievement as a whole.

> "[Robert Frost's] sense of the human tragedy fortified him against self-deception and easy consolation. 'I have been' he wrote, 'one acquainted with the night.' And because he knew the midnight as well as the high noon, because he understood the ordeal as well as the triumph of the human spirit, he gave his age strength with which to overcome despair."
>
> —John F. Kennedy, from "Remarks at Amherst College"

Similarly, in a literary analysis, you examine the parts of a text to understand better the meaning of the text as a whole. The checklist below will help you learn the goals and strategies for writing a successful literary analysis of a poem.

Checklist: Features of Literary Analysis Essays

Goals	Strategies
To demonstrate understanding of a poem	☑ Analyze the form, language, meter, sound devices, or other aspects of a poem ☑ Adopt and maintain a third-person point of view
To state a clear, insightful thesis	☑ State your own perspective on the meaning of the poem ☑ Maintain a consistent focus throughout your essay
To support your thesis	☑ Quote directly from the poem to support your main ideas ☑ Make substantial, specific, and relevant references to the poem
To use effective words and syntax	☑ Use precise, effective language ☑ Vary sentences

Workshop Resources

Print Materials

- Unit 5 Teaching Resources pp. 304–306
- Writing Kit
- Success in Writing: Research and Reports

Technology

- Literature Online: Writing Resources and Grammar Resources, www.glencoe.com
- Online Essay Grader, www.glencoe.com
- Student Presentation Builder on StudentWorks Plus CD-ROM
- Media Workshop DVD
- Online Student Edition

Assignment: Analyze a Poem

Analyze a poem to interpret its meaning and write a literary analysis of about 1,500 words that explains how various techniques help create that meaning. Write with your audience and purpose in mind.

Audience: peers, classmates, and teachers familiar with the poem

Purpose: to demonstrate an understanding of the poem's meaning and an appreciation of the effects that create that meaning

Analyze a Professional Model

In his expository literary analysis, Lawrence Raab argues that Robert Frost's "Mending Wall" is less about revealing a particular meaning than showing the reader how to find meaning. As you read the analysis, pay attention to the comments in the margin. They point out features that you might want to include in your own literary analysis.

From "Robert Frost's 'Mending Wall'" by Lawrence Raab ☆

"Mending Wall" opens with a riddle: "Something there is . . ." And a riddle, after all, is a series of hints calculated to make us imagine and then name its hidden subject. The poem doesn't begin, "I hate walls," or even, "Something dislikes a wall." Its first gesture is one of elaborate and playful concealment, a calculated withholding of meaning. Notice also that it is the speaker himself who repairs the wall after the hunters have broken it. And it is the speaker each year who notifies his neighbor when the time has come to meet and mend the wall. Then can we safely claim that the speaker views the wall simply as a barrier between human contact and understanding?

Speaker and neighbor work together and equally. Although the job is tedious and hard, the speaker considers it "just another kind of outdoor game / One on a side." He acknowledges that his whimsical spell—"'Stay where you are until our backs are turned!'"—is useless, and that the result is impermanent and perhaps less important than something else. For all practical purposes this particular wall is not needed. But the project of mending it has taken on significance: "Spring is the mischief in me, and I wonder / If I could put a notion in his head . . . "

The speaker's mischievous impulse is to plant an idea. He does not say that he wants to change his neighbor's mind, to make him believe

Real-World Connection

In the real world, whether you are making a recommendation for acquiring a business, advocating for a patient's care, or recommending a new dish for a menu, you are using the same skills you will practice in this workshop: explaining and supporting an opinion.

Introduction/Point of View

Engage your reader with an interesting introduction. State your own fresh perspective on the poem. Maintain the third-person point of view throughout your analysis.

Support

Use direct quotations from the poem to support your analysis.

Literature Online

Writing and Research For prewriting, drafting, and revising tools, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Writing Workshop

Literary Analysis

Teach

Big Idea

New Poetics Remind students that in this unit they have encountered poems that, when first published, pushed the boundaries of subject matter, form, and style. Other poems are more traditional. In their analyses, students should comment on the poems' relationship to tradition.

Writing Skills

Analyze a Professional Model Point out that one important way to become a better writer is to identify and imitate the practices of good writers. Have students bring in good writing models, similar to the Raab piece, that they find on their own.

Literary History ☆

Lawrence Raab Tell students that Raab is a respected poet who also teaches at Williams College in Massachusetts. A collection of his poems, titled What We Don't Know About Each Other, was a finalist for a National Book Award. This essay comes from Touchstone: American Poets on a Favorite Poem (1996).

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Have students take turns reading the paragraphs of the Raab article aloud. After each paragraph, have them read the side column labels and then discuss how the paragraph expresses this part of the analysis of the poem. Make sure they give specific answers. Then choose one poem from the unit and have students reread it aloud together. Ask them to suggest ideas about what they might write in an analysis of the poem.

Teach

Writing Skills

Purpose Point out that Raab uses the present tense in his analysis (for example, "He does not say that he wants to change his neighbor's mind"). Tell students that, in general, it is best to use the present tense in discussing authors' or characters' actions in works of literature. Ask: Why might the present tense be preferable in such cases? (Possible answer: A work's actions are renewed as each reader experiences it.)

Vivid Verbs Many students overuse the verb to be. Point out that Raab is not afraid to use is but also uses other verbs. Ask: What are some of his phrases with strong verbs? (Possible answers: "nudge . . . imagination"; "irks the speaker"; "lures the unwary reader")

Writer's Technique ☆

Direct Statement Point out the writer's statement of what he finds when he analyzes the poem: The poem is about thinking.

Purpose
Reflect your understanding of the poem by explaining its complexities and revealing its subtle meanings.

Command of Language
Vary sentences; use precise, effective language.

Purpose
Focus on specific literary elements—such as the speaker's point of view—and other unique aspects of the text. Support your ideas with accurate, detailed references to the poem.

Literary Analysis
Explain how quotations and examples support your major points.

Conclusion
Summarize your thesis in the conclusion and leave the reader with something to ponder.

what he himself believes. He wants to nudge the neighbor's imagination, just as a teacher might wish to challenge a student. So he asks questions: " 'Why do they make good neighbors? Isn't it / Where there are cows? But here there are no cows.' " But the neighbor is unwilling to play this game of teacher and student. He won't answer the questions, or consider the riddle. . . .

This is the poem's essential challenge, which the neighbor will not accept. But the challenge is ours as well—our work, our play. The relationship between speaker and neighbor is like the relationship between poem and reader, another kind of indoor game, one on a side.

But this is a relationship between poem and reader, not poet and reader. Frost, I want to believe, is not the speaker exactly. He is behind the whole poem, rather than narrowly inside it. We need to be at least a little skeptical of the speaker and not associate him automatically with the side of upholding freedom, reason, and tolerance. At the end, because the neighbor won't play his game, the speaker imagines him as "an old-stone savage," a harsh judgment to apply even to the most recalcitrant student. Because the neighbor will only repeat what he remembers his father having said, he seems to "move in darkness . . . Not of woods only and the shade of trees." . . . It's his refusal to be playful and imaginative that irks the speaker, and his unwillingness to consider work as anything more than a job to be accomplished. The speaker, after all, does not ask the neighbor to give up his father's notion. He wants him to "go behind" it. If, as I want to suggest, the poem is about education, this distinction is important. The poem does not merely advocate one position over another. It asks neither for advocacy nor for application, but for investigation. It is not a statement but a performance. It enacts its meanings. . . .

"Mending Wall" is a poem that lures the unwary reader into believing that thinking is merely voting, choosing up sides, taking out of the poem what most fits our own preconceived ideas. It adopts this subversive tactic because its ultimate purpose is to challenge us to go behind what we might find initially appealing in the formulas that lie on its surface. "We ask people to think," Frost says, "and we don't show them what thinking is." "Mending Wall" is less a poem about what to think than it is a poem about what thinking is, and where it might lead. ☆

Reading-Writing Connection Think about the writing techniques you just encountered and try them out in the literary analysis you write.

Reading Practice

Speaker vs. Author Raab writes, "Frost, I want to believe, is not the speaker exactly." Help students understand the difference between a speaker or narrator and an author by asking them to think about clear-cut cases. Say: Look back at the biographical note about Arna Bontemps (page 824). Decide whether he is the speaker in the poem "A black man talks of reaping" on page 826. (No, Bontemps was not a sharecropper.)

Prewrite

Choose a Poem to Analyze Select a poem in this unit you find challenging and would like to understand better. Review your purpose and audience, and make a time frame for completing each stage of your writing process.

Explore Your Poem Explore the techniques used in the poem:

- Paraphrase the poem's general meaning. Then focus on specific words, punctuation, sounds, and figures of speech. Analyze how these elements contribute to the meaning. Then reread the poem.
- Focus on smaller sections of the poem in detail. Explore the images in each section and think about how they bring out the poet's message.

Analyze the Elements A chart like the one below can help you work out your analysis and can serve as evidence to support your thesis. ☆

Poem	"I, Too" by Langston Hughes
Form	5 stanzas; 18 lines
Rhyme Scheme	unrhymed
Repetition	Lines nearly repeat: "When company comes" (lines 4 and 10) and "eat in the kitchen" (lines 3 and 13).
Imagery	image of eating in kitchen in stanzas 2 and 3
Figurative Language	"I, too, sing America" (line 1); "I, too, am America" (line 18)
Speaker/ Characters	African American speaker; "They" (Americans excluding African Americans)
Tone	Confident in stanzas 1, 2, 3, 5; doubting in stanza 4
Theme	The speaker wants not only to be able to participate in what "America" is but also to be admired and seen as an individual.

Clarify Your Thesis Look at your analysis chart and decide which elements are most important in the poem you chose. Then examine your notes and sum up your interpretation of the poem in a thesis statement, explaining how literary elements contribute to the theme.

Make a Plan Use the elements in your chart to support your thesis. Organize your points so your analysis follows a logical, effective order.

Every Word Counts

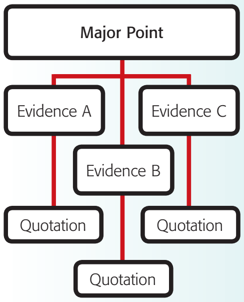
Poets choose each word in a poem specifically to give the poem meaning and impact. Always look for multiple meanings of a word and note how different meanings may enhance or complicate the meaning of the poem.

Avoid Plagiarism

If you consult outside sources to do this assignment, remember that work in both digital and print sources is usually copyrighted, which means that the author has the exclusive right to reproduce or recreate the work. Fair use laws allow you to copy small parts of a copyrighted work as long as you give complete and accurate credit to your sources.

Organization of Major Points

Use a graphic organizer to help you organize your body paragraphs.



Teach

Writing Process

Prewrite Model for students how they might mark up a copy of a poem under analysis. On an overhead transparency, show how an active reader underlines or checks key ideas, circles critical phrases, draws lines or arrows to connect related ideas, places a question mark beside confusing text, and so on.

APPROACHING Modify the instruction "think about a poem in this unit" by asking students to choose one of three poems that you have copied and to annotate it as part of their analysis.

Literary History ☆

Allusion On the next page, the workshop model calls Langston Hughes's "I, Too" (page 812) a response to Walt Whitman's "I Hear America Singing." A more literary term for Hughes's nod to Whitman's poem is allusion. Therefore, a student analyzing the Hughes poem might add a row labeled "Allusion" or "Other Literary Techniques" to a chart like the sample on this page.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate When students are writing their drafts, have them concentrate on recording their ideas on paper. Then have them read their drafts to a partner. Have them discuss the writer's intent and whether the listener has understood the point of the article. Instruct students to make helpful comments to each other and ask useful questions. Make sure students record any helpful ideas they receive. When they start revising, have them use these comments to help them clarify their work. Then have students read their essays to each other again. This time have them focus on their transitions. Have students discuss any problematic transitions and suggest improvements to each other.

Teach

Writing Process

Draft Here's what Lawrence Raab says to his Williams students about drafting: "Write your opening paragraph last, after you've discovered the ideas of your essay. Use the opening paragraph to get things started in an interesting way—with a provocative sentence, perhaps, or a challenging question. . . ." After students read the workshop model, ask volunteers to suggest alternative openings.

Writing Skills

Thesis/Point of View

Answer: It gives an overall interpretation of the poem's meaning. The writer appears to agree with the thesis and is using a third-person point of view.

Purpose

Answer: The writer understands Whitman's poem, so he knows what Hughes means when he says that he, too, would like the opportunity to see himself as part of America, just as Whitman had. The writer discusses Whitman's reference to diversity, and shows how, ironically, Whitman's world does not include Hughes.

Support

Answer: The quotation supports the writer's point that the poem's speaker is part of America, yet different. The writer has woven the quote into a sentence. The line numbers in parentheses refer to specific lines in the poem.

Draft

Use Your Plan as a Guide Organize your main points in a straightforward way in the body of your essay, supporting each point with direct evidence from the poem. Explain the significance of quotations and examples and make clear how they support your thesis.

Analyze a Workshop Model

Here is the final draft of a literary analysis essay. Use your answers to the questions in the margins to guide you as you write your essay.

Writing Frames

As you read the workshop model, think about the writer's use of the following frames:

- The poem reflects ______.
- ______ can be interpreted as ______.
- The ______ stanza of the poem describes/shifts/continues ______.
- The speaker expresses/describes/wants/seems ______.

Consider using frames like these in your own literary analysis.

Thesis/Point of View

What makes this thesis effective? What is the writer's point of view?

Purpose

How does the writer demonstrate understanding of the poem? What unique aspect of the text or universal theme does the writer discuss?

Support

What is the effect of directly quoting the words from the poem here? How has the writer created coherence while quoting? How has the writer attributed the primary source?

Part of America: Langston Hughes's "I, Too"

Langston Hughes's poem "I, Too" comments on the past, present, and possible future treatment of African Americans in the United States. The poem reflects the speaker's desire not only to be able to participate in what America is but also to be recognized as an individual, as part of the very definition of America.

Hughes's poem can be read as a direct response to Walt Whitman's poem "I Hear America Singing." Whitman writes about America's diversity by describing how each individual sings a unique song. In "I, Too" the speaker's response is a wish to be recognized as one of those individual voices. The opening line of the poem, set apart for emphasis, suggests a direct reply to Whitman. "I, too, sing America," proclaims the speaker, pleading for attention and recognition and wondering why he was excluded from Whitman's poetic list of Americans (line 1).

The second stanza of the poem describes the speaker's current situation. The line "I am the darker brother" implies that there is a relation to the rest of America, but by describing the speaker as "darker," Hughes identifies the speaker as an African American (line 2). Hughes describes an ambiguous "they" who send the speaker away "when company comes," segregating and hiding him from other people (lines 3, 4). Although he is shoved aside, he attempts to make the best of his situation by laughing, eating, and getting stronger (lines 5–7). Hughes illustrates how, even when they are being discounted, African Americans remain optimistic, knowing that a better future lies ahead.

Vocabulary Practice

Multiple Meanings Six lines from the bottom of this page, the essay writer uses the word ambiguous to describe "they"—the people who "send [the speaker] to eat in the kitchen." Invite students to find two meanings of ambiguous. Ask: Which of the two meanings does the writer of the essay have in mind? (One meaning is "having two or more possible meanings"; another is "not clear; indefinite; vague"—synonymous with obscure. Most students will decide that the writer of the essay is using ambiguous with the second meaning.)

In the third stanza the speaker speculates on how the treatment of African Americans will change "Tomorrow." To highlight this shift, the speaker repeats the main image of the second stanza and follows a similar structure in both stanzas. The turning point, "When company comes," from line 4 is repeated exactly in line 10 but to a different effect. In the third stanza, the speaker looks forward to the day when he will sit at the table with everybody else, in a time when nobody will even consider telling him to "'Eat in the kitchen'" (line 13). In this stanza, Hughes cements the symbolism of "the table," which represents the basic rights and freedoms of a participating American.

In the fourth stanza the speaker further speculates on the changes the future will bring for African Americans. The three-line structure of this stanza sharply diverges from the structure of other stanzas, and the "Besides" introduces this stanza as an aside that similarly diverges from the main text of the poem (lines 15–17). In this stanza, the speaker shifts from affirming that "they" will allow him (and all African Americans) to participate, or "eat at the table," to affirming that "they" will eventually recognize him as beautiful and be ashamed of their past treatment of him (line 16–17). Therefore, the speaker wants—and expects—not only to be allowed to share the same freedoms and liberties as other American citizens, to participate in what "America" is, but also to be admired and seen as an individual. Line 17 ends abruptly with a dash, however, suggesting that the speaker suddenly doubts his own statement. This dash serves to undercut the proud, confident, determined tone of the speaker in the first three stanzas, each of which ends with a period. The speaker seems to acknowledge that the future he described may not happen.

With the final line, Hughes brings the poem full circle, concluding with "I, too, am America" (line 18). This line, in effect, repeats the opening of the poem, lending a sense of symmetry and closure to the whole. The speaker is not just participating in ("singing") America; he is also a part of it—he is America. Yet even this confident closing line cannot erase the hint of doubt from the preceding line. Placing the final line in the present tense, as if it were already true, emphasizes the pain behind the statement, as well as the insistence on strength and hope, even as "Tomorrow" seems further and further away.

Exposition

Organization

How is this essay organized, and why is this method effective?

Command of Language

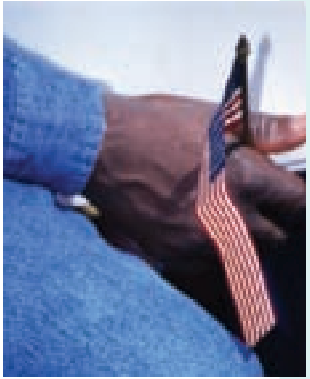
Where is the language most effective or precise? How do the sentences vary?

Purpose

Why might the writer address the form of the poem here? How do the evidence and explanation support the writer's thesis?

Focus

How does the writer maintain a consistent focus?



Conclusion

How might this conclusion give the reader something to ponder further?

Teach

Writing Skills

Organization/Appreciation

Answer: It treats the poem's stanzas in order. The organization is effective because the writer's analysis points out the structure of the poem.

Command of Language

Answer: When the speaker of the poem talks about the possibilities of a better life in the future.

Purpose

Answer: The fourth stanza has a structure different from that of the preceding two stanzas. The writer supports the thesis that the speaker wants to be part of America.

Focus

Answer: It explains the basic motivation that underlies the speaker's statements in the poem.

Conclusion

Answer: It might make the reader wonder how much the situation of African Americans has changed since the poem was written.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Raab suggests that students write their opening paragraph last. Ask: How might you be able to start with your second paragraph before writing your first paragraph? (Students may say that you can choose one line or stanza to write about; they may say that you can have an idea about your first paragraph, but still not write it until later.) Have students examine the second paragraphs of the analyses of Frost's and Hughes's poem. Have them create a list of words and phrases they might use in the second paragraph of their essay. Ask: What words in these paragraphs might be useful in analyzing any poem? (speaker, considers, acknowledges, result, impermanent, important, practical, particular, significance; interpreted, response, describing, recognized, voices, opening, line, emphasis, suggests, proclaims, pleading, wondering) As students write their essays, remind them to use the words from the list.

Teach

Writing Process

Revise Remind students that as peer reviewers they should be coaches and cheerleaders as much as finders of errors. They should keep in mind that finding positive things to say about a classmate's writing is just as helpful as finding weaknesses.

Writing Skills

Conciseness Review the thesis statement in the workshop model on page 836. Ask students to contrast that sentence with the following one: "In this essay, I am going to talk about the main idea that I think is underlying this poem, which is the speaker's desire not only to be able to participate in what America is but also to be recognized as an individual, as part of the very definition of America."

Traits of Strong Writing

Include these traits of strong writing to express your ideas effectively.

Ideas
Organization
Voice
Word Choice
Sentence Fluency
Conventions
Presentation

For more information on using the Traits of Strong Writing, see pages R30–R32.

Word Choice

This academic vocabulary word appears in the student model:

individual (in´ də vij´ wəl, -vi´ jə wəl, -vi´ jü əl,) n. 1. one human being; 2. a person or thing existing in contrast to the group of which it may form a part; The poem reflects the speaker's desire to be recognized as an individual. Using academic vocabulary may help strengthen your writing. Try to use one or two academic vocabulary words in your literary analysis. See the complete list on pages R89–R91.

Literature Online

Writing and Research For editing and publishing tools, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Revise

Peer Review Exchange your finished draft with that of a partner to identify the strengths and weaknesses of each draft. Use the checklist below to evaluate and strengthen each other's writing.

Checklist

- ☑ Do you analyze the techniques in the poem to show how they contribute to the poem's meaning?
- ☑ Do you state your interpretation in a concise thesis statement?
- ☑ Do you explain subtle details and reveal complex meanings?
- ☑ Do you support your thesis with quotations and examples from the poem?
- ☑ Do you organize your response to literature in a logical, coherent way?
- ☑ Do you maintain a consistent point of view and focus?

Focus Lesson

Sharpen the Precision of Word Choice

In your essay, help your readers understand your ideas by replacing abstract statements with precise words and vivid examples.

Draft:

The poem, however, shifts toward a sense of doubt, suggesting that the speaker and his views have changed. The tone and the punctuation in the final stanza contribute to this effect.

Revision:

Line 17 ends abruptly with a dash,[1] however, suggesting that the speaker suddenly doubts his own statement.[2] This dash serves to undercut the proud, confident, determined tone of stanzas 1–3.[3]

1: Be concise and concrete.
2: Give specific rather than general explanations.
3: Replace vague examples with vivid, precise examples.

Writing Practice

Abstract vs. Concrete Nouns To give students practice in switching from abstract to concrete nouns (and vice versa), ask for concrete nouns to replace abstract nouns 1–3 below and for abstract nouns to replace concrete nouns 4–6. Possible answers:

1. warmth (stove)
2. poverty (rags)
3. insight (teacher)
4. motorcycle (swiftness)
5. laughter (humor)
6. eye (insight)

Edit and Proofread

Get It Right Proofread your draft for errors in grammar, usage, and spelling. Refer to the Language Handbook, pages R42–R61, as a guide.

Focus Lesson

Embed Quotations in Text

Much of your direct evidence will be in the form of quotations embedded in your analysis. Place quotation marks around each quotation. Set off the quotation and line reference with commas.

Problem: Direct evidence is not set off in quotation marks and is not set off with commas from the introductory remarks.

The turning point when company comes (line 4) is repeated.

Solution: Place quotation marks around the quotation and set off with commas the quotation from the surrounding remarks.

The turning point, "When company comes" (line 4), is repeated. ☆

Problem: Quotation marks include material not in the quotation.

Hughes describes an ambiguous "they who send the speaker away when company comes," hiding him from others (lines 3, 4).

Solution: Place quotation marks around only quoted material, using two or more sets of quotation marks if necessary.

Hughes describes an ambiguous "they" who send the speaker away "when company comes," hiding him from others (lines 3, 4).

Quoting Poetry

When you quote poetry, be sure to give the line numbers (rather than page numbers) in parentheses after each quotation. Use a slash (/) to indicate a line break. Example:

"Tomorrow, / I'll be at the table" (lines 8–9)

Peer Review Tips

A classmate may ask you to read his or her analysis. Jot down notes as you read so you can give constructive feedback. Use the following questions to get started:

- What is the writer's thesis? How well does the evidence support it?
- Does the writer increase your understanding of or appreciation for the poem and the author's style?
- Where has the writer used fresh, vivid language and rhetorical devices?

Word-Processing Tip

Select the header or footer option to number your pages. Put the number in the upper right-hand corner of the header, or center it in the footer.

Present

The Final Touch Make sure your analysis is typed in a legible font and type size, with reasonable margins and spacing. If you are writing your analysis by hand, use clear, legible handwriting. Check with your teacher about any additional presentation guidelines.

Writer's Portfolio

Place a clean copy of your literary analysis in your portfolio to review later.

Teach

Writing Process

Edit and Proofread Alert students to the special care that even professional writers must take with quotation marks:

- Every opening quotation mark requires a closing quotation mark.
- In the United States, commas and periods almost always go inside closing quotation marks.

Remind students of the rules for capitalizing the titles of short stories, books, and articles. They should demonstrate correct capitalization when referencing works of literature in their papers. For additional support, see the Language Handbook, pages R55 and R58.

Language History ☆

Word Generalization Explain to students that one way word meanings have developed over time is through the process known as generalization—words that once had narrow meanings have taken on broader meanings. The word company, for example, can refer to a group of people or to a commercial enterprise. See whether students, using a good dictionary (perhaps the Oxford English Dictionary if a print or online edition is available), can figure out which meaning of company came first and which arose as a result of generalization.

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Research Have students do independent research to find additional poems by the author of the poem they have chosen. Have them read and analyze these poems and use the information and understanding they gain about the author and the author's style and tone in their essay. As they write, instruct students to make use of a variety of techniques for providing supportive details, such as analogies, anecdotes, restatements, paraphrases, examples, and comparisons.

Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop

Oral Interpretation of a Poem

Focus

Summary

In this workshop, students will plan, rehearse, and present an oral interpretation of a poem.

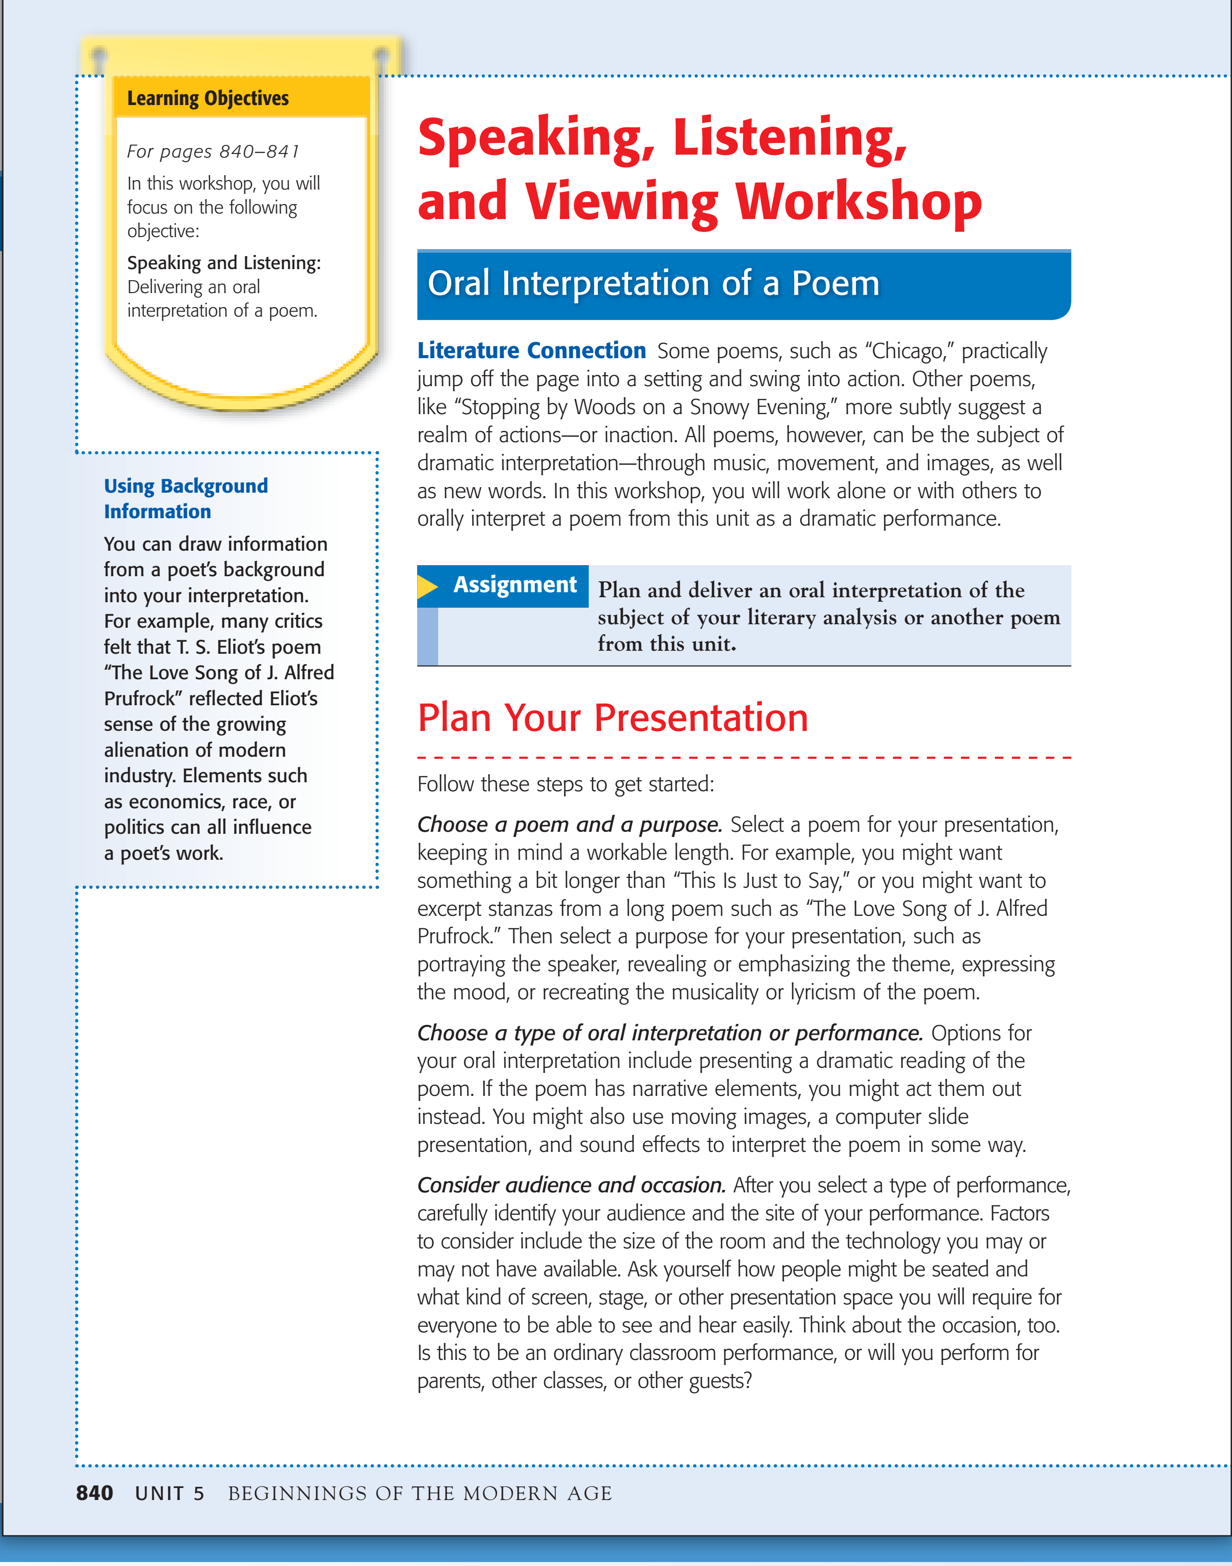
Teach

Speaking Skills

Keep Listeners on Track Remind students that just as they aim for coherence in their writing, they need, as speakers, to signal listeners when they move from one part of an oral presentation to another part. Discuss signals that speakers can use:

- pauses
- changes in posture, position, and tone of voice

For help with creating presentations, see Student Presentation Builder on StudentWorks Plus.



Learning Objectives

For pages 840–841

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objective:

Speaking and Listening: Delivering an oral interpretation of a poem.

Using Background Information

You can draw information from a poet's background into your interpretation. For example, many critics felt that T. S. Eliot's poem "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" reflected Eliot's sense of the growing alienation of modern industry. Elements such as economics, race, or politics can all influence a poet's work.

Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop

Oral Interpretation of a Poem

Literature Connection Some poems, such as "Chicago," practically jump off the page into a setting and swing into action. Other poems, like "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening," more subtly suggest a realm of actions—or inaction. All poems, however, can be the subject of dramatic interpretation—through music, movement, and images, as well as new words. In this workshop, you will work alone or with others to orally interpret a poem from this unit as a dramatic performance.

Assignment Plan and deliver an oral interpretation of the subject of your literary analysis or another poem from this unit.

Plan Your Presentation

Follow these steps to get started:

Choose a poem and a purpose. Select a poem for your presentation, keeping in mind a workable length. For example, you might want something a bit longer than "This Is Just to Say," or you might want to excerpt stanzas from a long poem such as "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock." Then select a purpose for your presentation, such as portraying the speaker, revealing or emphasizing the theme, expressing the mood, or recreating the musicality or lyricism of the poem.

Choose a type of oral interpretation or performance. Options for your oral interpretation include presenting a dramatic reading of the poem. If the poem has narrative elements, you might act them out instead. You might also use moving images, a computer slide presentation, and sound effects to interpret the poem in some way.

Consider audience and occasion. After you select a type of performance, carefully identify your audience and the site of your performance. Factors to consider include the size of the room and the technology you may or may not have available. Ask yourself how people might be seated and what kind of screen, stage, or other presentation space you will require for everyone to be able to see and hear easily. Think about the occasion, too. Is this to be an ordinary classroom performance, or will you perform for parents, other classes, or other guests?

Reading Practice

Scansion Remind students that to scan a line of poetry is to determine its meter or rhythm. Have students copy their poems and mark the stressed syllables with acute accents or capital letters and the unstressed syllables with breves or lowercase letters. Have them scan the lines from Claude McKay's "If We Must Die" on this page as practice. Note that some lines of poetry can be scanned in different ways—as in these two readings of line 1:

IF we must DIE, let it NOT be like HOGS
If WE must DIE, let it not BE like HOGS

Develop Your Presentation

To engage your audience, follow these guidelines:

- Open dramatically in order to capture your audience's attention from the first moment. For example, use sound effects that lure or jangle; a tone that startles or beguiles; or images that provoke or entertain.
- Create visual interest throughout your presentation:
  Computer slide show: Use elements of design, such as color, rules, shading, and other effects, to create interest.
  Dramatic reading: Make a backdrop, or bring in props to add interest.
  Audio broadcast: Consider projecting images your audience can watch as they listen.
  Adopting the persona of the speaker: Use a costume or makeup.
- Use your voice to its fullest effect. In a dramatic reading, use tone and volume to maximize, minimize, sugar-coat, or acidify meaning.
- Provide a satisfying and obvious sense of closure. Think carefully about your final words, pose, sound effect, bar of music, or image.

Rehearse

Rehearse your oral interpretation or dramatic presentation by performing it aloud on your own and then performing it for a small group. As you ask for feedback, keep the speaking techniques below in mind. As you offer feedback to others, keep the listening techniques below in mind.

Techniques for Dramatic Presentations

Speaking Techniques	Listening Techniques
☑ Use Audience Feedback Study the expressions on your listeners' faces for feedback that may tell you, for example, to slow down the rate of the images or to reduce the volume of the music or sound effects.	☑ Focus Look directly at the performers and images and concentrate on what they convey.
☑ Volume Adjust your volume to the size of your audience: no one should feel as if you're shouting for no reason, and no one should strain to hear you.	☑ Respond Show interest by responding to various effects as well as through upright posture and other posture that says, clearly, "I'm with you."
☑ Entertain Let go of the everyday you to slip into the role of performer.	☑ Evaluate Identify the most successful parts or aspects of the presentation.

Presentation Tips

Use the following checklist to evaluate your oral interpretation:

- Did you engage and entertain your audience from beginning to end?
- Did you achieve your purpose of conveying one central aspect of the poem?
- Did your oral interpretation suit the performance space and the occasion?

Listening Tips

Use the following checklist to evaluate your listening and viewing skills:

- Did you focus directly on the performance, showing respect and interest through focused attention and body language?
- Did you respond appropriately?
- Did you correctly interpret the purpose of the performance?
- Did you identify weaknesses and strengths of the performance?

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate To help English learners with pronunciation, intonation, and phrasing, read aloud—or provide an audio recording of—one or more poems to demonstrate techniques for oral interpretation. Reread each poem several times, demonstrating possible differences in the reading. First have students listen without the text in front of them, and then during the second or third reading, with the text in front of them. Then have students take turns reading the same poem after you, first to the group and then again in pairs for more practice.

Teach

Speaking Skills

Eye Contact Some presenters select a few individuals to make eye contact with while speaking; they move their eyes from one person to another and then back to the first again. Other presenters look at large areas of the audience, perhaps slowly moving their eyes (and their head) from the left side of the audience to the middle, to the right, and then back through the middle to the left. Ask students who have had prior experience speaking in public what they prefer to do with their eyes.

Listening Skills

Eye Contact Explain that good listeners, even when taking notes, try to make eye contact with presenters. Not only are they supporting the speakers, but by keeping themselves on task, these listeners are also guarding against losing their concentration. Ask for other suggestions on how listeners can make themselves concentrate on speakers.

Writing

After the students have recited their poems, have them write a reflection evaluating their preparation and the experience of speaking in front of an audience.

Focus

Summary

The purpose of Independent Reading is to encourage students to read novels from the time period that they have learned about in this unit, as well as recent novels that have been influenced by the period.

Teach

Cultural History ☆

From Book to Screen Many of the novels featured here have been adapted at least once for motion pictures or TV:

- The Age of Innocence: 1924, 1934, 1993
- Their Eyes Were Watching God: 2005
- Ethan Frome: 1993
- All Quiet on the Western Front: 1930, 1979
- Heat and Dust: 1983

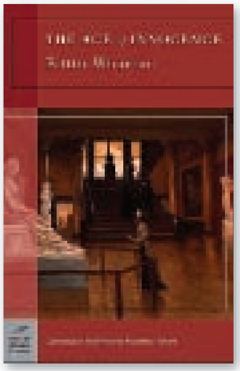
If students have seen any of these, they may offer opinions on the pros and cons of adaptations.

Independent Reading

The Modern Novel

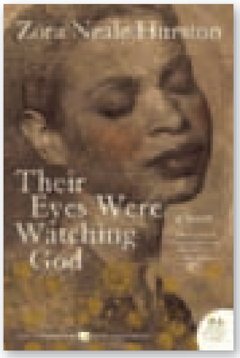
MANY POST–WORLD WAR I WRITERS SAW THE WAR AS AN INDICATION OF the failure of the old ways and began to explore new subject matter, styles, and themes. As women marched and protested for the right to vote, stories focusing on women's lives began to reveal their struggles. Edith Wharton immerses readers in a world of scandal and deceit in the lives of the wealthy. Zora Neale Hurston creates a character of strength and passion who carves out a life of her own in a small town in the South. Ruth Prawer Jhabvala tells the story of a British woman in India whose independence leads to scandal and exile. The early twentieth century saw the acceptance of America into the literary conversation, with both women and men recognized for their contributions.



The Age of Innocence

Edith Wharton

Through the story of a doomed love, Edith Wharton presents an illuminating study of New York society in the 1870s. In an ideal match, worldly and wealthy Newland Archer is engaged to young and beautiful May Welland, a member of the same elite social circle. However, the presence of May's cousin, the exotic and aristocratic Ellen Olenska, disrupts the couple's perfect union. Wharton was awarded a Pulitzer Prize for this story of Archer's struggle between passion and society's conventions.



Their Eyes Were Watching God

Zora Neale Hurston

Janie Crawford journeys toward self-identity and love in Zora Neale Hurston's most famous novel. Hurston vividly captures the lives and aspirations of African American men and women in 1930s Florida. When the book was first published, Hurston was criticized for her use of southern dialect. Some critics believed it promoted black stereotypes. When the novel regained popularity in the 1970s, however, she was praised for her honest presentation of African American women. Oprah Winfrey produced a film version of the novel in 2005 starring Halle Berry.

Listening and Speaking Practice

Book Group Have students who read the same novel on their own discuss it as a group while the rest of the class listens. Instruct them to prepare discussion questions, follow a novel-discussion template that you provide, or select topics from publishers' discussion guides available in some versions of novels or online. After the discussion, have the listeners provide feedback to the group.

GLENCOE LITERATURE LIBRARY

Ethan Frome

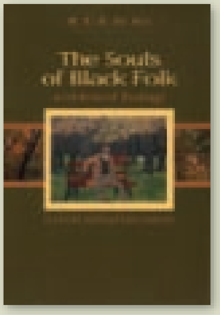
Edith Wharton

A tragic love triangle between the title character, his ailing wife, and her young cousin.

The Souls of Black Folk

W.E.B. DuBois

A guide for early twentieth-century black protest, these essays are essential to an understanding of African American history and the Civil Rights struggle.



All Quiet on the Western Front

Erich Maria Remarque

A German soldier experiences the horrors of battle during World War I and later struggles to adjust upon his return home.

CRITICS' CORNER

"Jhabvala is a connoisseur of divided souls, conceiving characters whose inner longings are at odds with their outer protective coloration – Indians who covet and achieve more tidy, "modernized" existences, then feel as if someone had stolen their life force; Westerners who eagerly hand themselves over to India's chaotic bliss, then find it too rigorous to endure."

—The New York Times, November 29, 1993

"With the exception of E. M. Forster, no 20th-century writer has more eloquently described Westerners' attempts to grasp the ambiguities of Indian culture than Ruth Prawer Jhabvala."

—The New York Times, March 28, 1993

Heat and Dust

Ruth Prawer Jhabvala ☆

Olivia is a beautiful and independent woman married to an important British official stationed in India in the 1920s. Inevitably, Olivia's free spirit clashes with the values of British colonial society.

Create a Book Jacket

Book jackets are designed to grab a potential reader's attention. Read one of the books listed on this page and design a new book jacket that will persuade your classmates to read it. Your book jacket should include a summary that does not reveal the ending, a description of the writer's style, and a short biography of the author with a picture if possible. Display your work for the class.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To encourage students in their reading, have them write response journals to connect the novel to their own lives. Possible questions for students to respond to include:

- How would you compare the characters to yourself, your family, and your friends?
- Could you be friends with any of the characters? Why or why not?
- How does your feeling about the book change as you read?
- How did you feel about the ending?
- What connections did you see between the book and your own life?
- What would you like to ask the author?

Teach

Literary History ☆

Ruth Prawer Jhabvala The author of Heat and Dust, which received the Booker Prize in 1975, is also a writer of screenplays. She won her first Oscar for her film adaptation of E. M. Forster's A Room with a View. Like her main character in Heat and Dust, Jhabvala knows what it means to live in a country where you were not born. She too moved to India from England when she married an Indian man in the early 1950s.

Book Jacket

Evaluate students' book jackets by considering the following:

- clearly stated summary
- effective use of details
- attention to grammar and spelling conventions

Glencoe Literature Library

Glencoe Literature Library offers an extensive collection of hardcover books that help you encourage your students to read independently. Choose among the more than 120 full-length literary works—novels, novellas, plays, and nonfiction. Each book includes related readings from a broad range of genres. Go to www.glencoe.com for more information.

Assessment

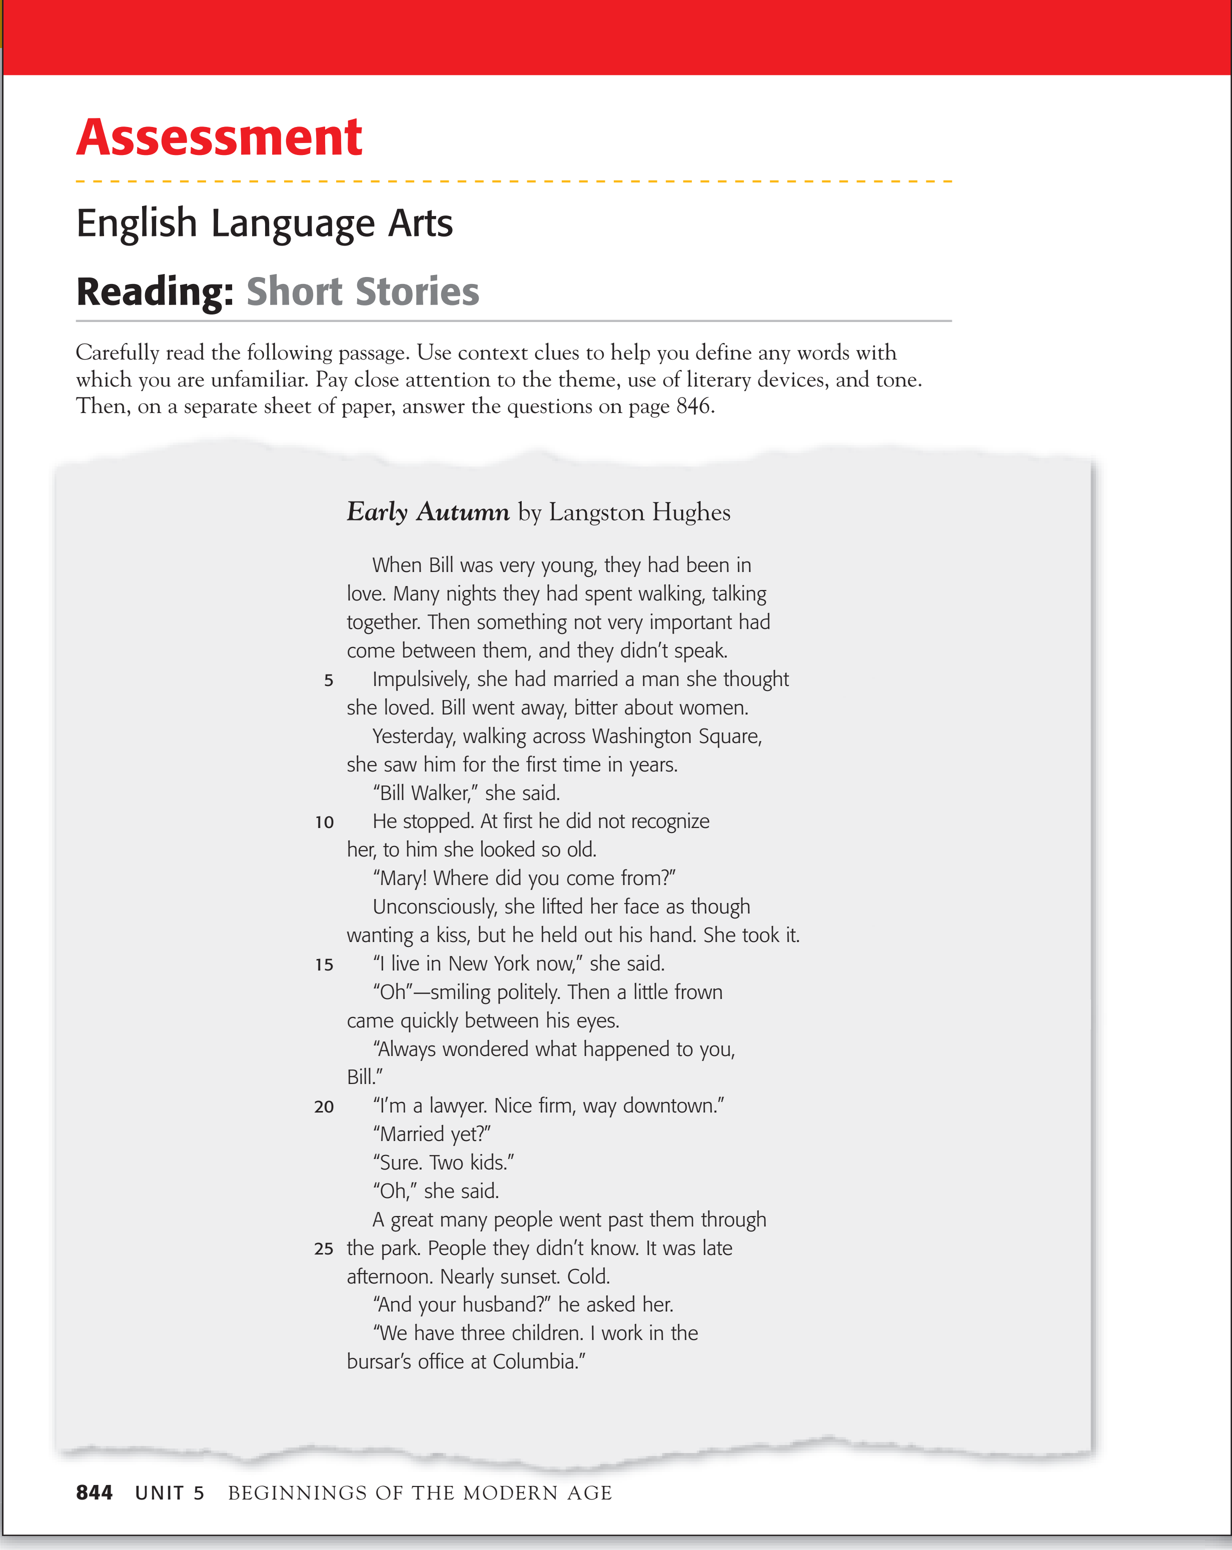
Focus

Bellringer

Point out that some test takers can save time and better concentrate on reading a passage if they first scan the questions below the passage, whereas others, already familiar with the kinds of questions on a particular test, do not scan the questions first. Say: Think about which approach will work for you.

Teach

Assessment Tell students that this assessment is intended to reinforce general test-taking strategies as well as to test the skills and vocabulary covered in the unit. They will read a passage and answer comprehension and inference questions about it. They will read another short passage and answer ten paragraph-improvement questions. Finally, they will be asked to write a short persuasive essay.



Assessment

English Language Arts

Reading: Short Stories

Carefully read the following passage. Use context clues to help you define any words with which you are unfamiliar. Pay close attention to the theme, use of literary devices, and tone. Then, on a separate sheet of paper, answer the questions on page 846.

Early Autumn by Langston Hughes

When Bill was very young, they had been in love. Many nights they had spent walking, talking together. Then something not very important had come between them, and they didn't speak.

Impulsively, she had married a man she thought she loved. Bill went away, bitter about women.

Yesterday, walking across Washington Square, she saw him for the first time in years.

"Bill Walker," she said.

He stopped. At first he did not recognize her, to him she looked so old.

"Mary! Where did you come from?"

Unconsciously, she lifted her face as though wanting a kiss, but he held out his hand. She took it.

"I live in New York now," she said.

"Oh"—smiling politely. Then a little frown came quickly between his eyes.

"Always wondered what happened to you, Bill."

"I'm a lawyer. Nice firm, way downtown."

"Married yet?"

"Sure. Two kids."

"Oh," she said.

A great many people went past them through the park. People they didn't know. It was late afternoon. Nearly sunset. Cold.

"And your husband?" he asked her.

"We have three children. I work in the bursar's office at Columbia."

Test Preparation Practice

Take Notes
Most reading tests ask questions about

- characters
- plot
- setting
- point of view
- theme

Students can prepare for such questions by tracking those elements while reading. Model how to take notes. Use the top half of a page for notes about characters, and divide the bottom half into four columns, one for each of the other elements. Direct students to take notes as they read "Early Autumn."

"You're looking very . . ." (he wanted to say old) ". . . well," he said.

She understood. Under the trees in Washington Square, she found herself desperately reaching back into the past. She had been older than he then in Ohio. Now she was not young at all. Bill was still young.

"We live on Central Park West," she said. "Come and see us sometime."

"Sure," he replied. "You and your husband must have dinner with my family some night. Any night. Lucille and I'd love to have you."

The leaves fell slowly from the trees in the Square. Fell without wind. Autumn dusk. She felt a little sick. ☆

"We'd love it," she answered.

"You ought to see my kids." He grinned.

Suddenly the lights came on up the whole length of Fifth Avenue, chains of misty brilliance in the blue air.

"There's my bus," she said.

He held out his hand, "Good-bye."

"When . . . " she wanted to say, but the bus was ready to pull off. The lights on the avenue blurred, twinkled, blurred. And she was afraid to open her mouth as she entered the bus. Afraid it would be impossible to utter a word.

Suddenly she shrieked very loudly, "Good-bye!" But the bus door had closed.

The bus started. People came between them outside, people crossing the street, people they didn't know. Space and people. She lost sight of Bill. Then she remembered she had forgotten to give him her address—or to ask him for his—or tell him that her youngest boy was named Bill, too. 1

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Annotation An alternative to taking notes in a chart during a test is marking up a selection. Advise students that they must not write on test pages unless granted permission to do so. Ask: If you could mark up the selection, what might you write next to the final line? (Possible responses: "She still loves him!" "Wow, I'm surprised." "How could she forget?")

Language History ☆

Fragments Acknowledge that professional writers of fiction and nonfiction do at times write sentence fragments—phrases that lack subjects, predicates, or both—like the two in line 43. Advertising copy is also full of sentence fragments. Caution students that most teachers and textbooks strongly advise against the use of sentence fragments in essays written for class.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established This piece of prose includes many short speeches by both characters. Tell students that authors use various devices to help readers keep track of who is speaking at each point in a back-and-forth conversation:

- They begin a new paragraph when a different character begins speaking.
- They use tags such as "she said" or "he replied."
- They have one character use another character's name, as in "Always wondered what happened to you, Bill."

Assessment

Teach

Reading

1. D is the correct answer because options A and B are effects, not causes, and C is unrelated to their relationship. DOK 1
2. A is the correct answer because Mary's love for Bill can be inferred from her actions, her disappointment at the end of the story, and because she named her youngest son Bill. DOK 4
3. B is the correct answer because the relationship ended prematurely. DOK 4
4. B is the correct answer because the paragraph describes the time, the temperature, and the strangers passing in the street. DOK 2
5. B is the correct answer because she understands that Bill is pretending not to notice her departed youth. DOK 2
6. A is the correct answer because the narrator says, "She had been older than he then in Ohio." DOK 1
7. C is the correct answer because the narrator makes a direct comparison between rows of lights and "chains of misty brilliance." DOK 2
8. D is the correct answer because brilliance in this context means "radiance, or great brightness." DOK 1
9. C is the correct answer because the blurred lights suggest that Mary's eyes have begun to fill with tears. DOK 4
10. C is the correct answer because shrieked strongly suggests hysterical emotion, while the other words are neutral. DOK 2
11. A is the correct answer because space and people (strangers) mirror Bill and Mary's alientation. DOK 4
12. D is the correct answer because the author reveals Mary's personality through her actions, words, and thoughts. DOK 2
13. C is the correct answer because the narrator knows what both characters think. DOK 2
14. A is the correct answer because the tone suits the theme of lost love. DOK 4

1. Why did Bill and Mary end their relationship?
   - A. She impulsively married another man.
   - B. They stopped speaking.
   - C. They both moved to New York.
   - D. Something came between them.

2. Why do you think Mary unconsciously lifts her face as though wanting a kiss?
   - A. She is still in love with Bill.
   - B. She is unhappy to see Bill in New York.
   - C. She has momentarily forgotten the past.
   - D. She hopes to make Bill less bitter.

3. Of what is the title of the story most symbolic?
   - A. changing weather in New York
   - B. the changing of a relationship
   - C. the ages of Bill and Mary
   - D. the time of the meeting

4. To what element of the story does the paragraph beginning in line 24 contribute?
   - A. characters
   - B. setting
   - C. plot
   - D. conflict

5. What does Mary "understand" in line 32?
   - A. that Bill has a better life than hers
   - B. that Bill has noticed her age
   - C. that Bill is wealthy
   - D. that Bill is unhappy

6. Where did Mary and Bill first meet?
   - A. in Ohio
   - B. in Washington Square
   - C. in New York City
   - D. in Central Park

7. What literary element is most evident in the sentence beginning in line 47?
   - A. allusion
   - B. imagery
   - C. metaphor
   - D. simile

8. What does the word brilliance in line 48 mean?
   - A. intelligence
   - B. sharpness
   - C. preciousness
   - D. brightness

9. Why do you think Mary is "afraid it would be impossible to utter a word"?
   - A. She knows Bill is bitter toward women.
   - B. She is aware that Bill sees her as old.
   - C. She senses that they can no longer really communicate.
   - D. She thinks Bill will ignore her.

10. In the paragraph beginning in line 57, which is an example of connotative language?
    - A. very
    - B. closed
    - C. shrieked
    - D. good-bye

11. Of what are the "space and people" in line 61 most symbolic?
    - A. the emotional distance between Bill and Mary
    - B. Bill's and Mary's children and spouses
    - C. Bill and Mary's youthful relationship
    - D. the movement of the bus as it pulls away

12. In this passage, how does Hughes reveal the personality of Mary?
    - A. metaphor
    - B. symbolism
    - C. direct characterization
    - D. indirect characterization

13. From what point of view is this passage written?
    - A. first person
    - B. second person
    - C. third-person omniscient
    - D. third-person limited

14. What is the overall tone of this passage?
    - A. serious
    - B. humorous
    - C. mischievous
    - D. furious

Vocabulary Skills: Sentence Completion

For each item in the Vocabulary Skills section, choose the best word or words to complete the sentence. Write your answers on a sheet of paper.

1. Ezra Pound believed that modern poetry should be built on the literature of the past and yet also _____.
   A. unique
   B. intimidated
   C. impeded
   D. haughty

2. Much of the U.S. public was ______ to the conflict in Europe until the United States entered the war.
   A. indifferent
   B. ingenious
   C. withered
   D. dutiful

3. Many critics were unimpressed by the bold declarations and ______ of some of the Modernist writers.
   A. piety
   B. hypocrisy
   C. brazenness
   D. snickers

4. The writers of the Harlem Renaissance refused to ______ themselves to second-class citizenship.
   A. jostle
   B. resign
   C. jilt
   D. exalt

5. In their writing, Imagists often tried to transform elements from the ______, everyday world into something remarkable.
   A. ominous
   B. mundane
   C. withered
   D. ingenious

6. With the spread of jazz came a great deal of ______ and disapproval among older people, who felt it was corrupting the youth.
   A. vanity
   B. piety
   C. patronage
   D. perturbation

7. The Jazz Age gradually eased, rather than ______, to a close as the Second World War approached.
   A. lurched
   B. exalted
   C. jilted
   D. jostled

8. There was a ______ on the face of many people in the United States on the day the stock market crashed.
   A. millennium
   B. snicker
   C. hemorrhage
   D. grimace

9. Many African Americans felt ______ and alienated from the mainstream culture in the United States.
   A. withered
   B. tactful
   C. dutiful
   D. detached

10. Many were impressed by E. E. Cummings's unusual and often ______ use of punctuation, grammar, and syntax.
    A. ominous
    B. withered
    C. scintillating
    D. tactful

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning The answers to some sentence-completion items are easier for students who have a good sense of which prepositions can idiomatically follow particular adjectives, nouns, and verbs. Give students practice in supplying the preposition that belongs in each blank:

admittance ____ the fair (to) capable _____ great evil (of) hinges _____ test results (on) marred _____ a gash (by) protest _____ authorities (against) repent _____ a crime (of) thrilled _____ the award (by)

Assess

Vocabulary Skills

1. A is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1
2. A is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense with "to the conflict." DOK 1
3. C is the correct answer because the context suggests a synonym of bold is needed. DOK 1
4. B is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1
5. B is the correct answer because the context suggests a synonym of everyday is needed. DOK 1
6. D is the correct answer because the context suggests a synonym of disapproval is needed. DOK 1
7. A is the correct answer because the context suggests an antonym of eased is needed. DOK 1
8. D is the correct answer because the stock market crash caused pain to many people. DOK 1
9. D is the correct answer because the context suggests a synonym of alienated is needed. DOK 1
10. C is the correct answer because it is the only option that makes sense in this context. DOK 1

Assess

Grammar and Writing Skills

1. C is the correct answer because it sets off the three predicate nominative phrases with commas and encloses the words from the poem in quotation marks. DOK 2
2. B is the correct answer because it is the only option that maintains consistency of verb tenses by using the present-tense verb is. DOK 1
3. A is the correct answer because the sentence incorrectly joins two independent clauses with a comma. DOK 2

Grammar and Writing Skills: Paragraph Improvement

Read carefully through the following passage from the first draft of a student's essay. Pay close attention to the verb tense, use of clauses, and commas. Then, on a separate sheet of paper, answer the questions below.

(1) The opening line immediately signals the reader that this poem will disclose something important. (2) That something—later revealed to be the wheelbarrow the white chickens, and rainwater—is supporting "so much." (3) The line stands out too, because it was the only line not dedicated to imagery. (4) Also, by never identifying what actually "depends," Williams creates a host of possible interpretations for his poem.

(5) Williams dedicates the next three stanzas almost entirely to the eye. (6) Each adds a detail to the poem's imagery, each drops another puzzle piece into place. (7) The wheelbarrow is presented first. (8) Williams described it outright, without embellishment. (9) However, he unexpectedly breaks the word wheelbarrow between two lines. (10) By breaking this compound noun into its composite parts, the poet draws the reader's attention to the word itself, more than to the word's meaning. (11) The wheelbarrow is simultaneously an actual physical thing and the words that are used to describe it.

(12) The next stanza, "which tells us that the wheelbarrow is glazed with rain / water," similarly breaks the word rainwater between lines. (13) This, even more than the last, creates a situation in which things, and the language used to describe those things, become confused. (14) Williams is aided by the closeness in meaning of the words rain and water. (15) One is a component of the other, rain itself can never really be separated from the water that makes it up.

(16) William Carlos Williams's "The Red Wheelbarrow" is a deceptively simple poem. (17) Deceptively simple in that, although it is succinct and its imagery plain and concrete, it expresses complex ideas. (18) Williams has written a very simple poem. (19) In eight lines Williams created a poem that shines a light on the underlying notions of language, literature, and representation.

1. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 2?
   - A. That something—later revealed to be the "wheelbarrow the white chickens and rainwater"—is supporting "so much."
   - B. That something—later revealed to be the wheelbarrow the white chickens and rainwater—is supporting so much.
   - C. That something—later revealed to be the wheelbarrow, the white chickens, and rainwater—is supporting "so much."
   - D. That something later revealed to be the wheelbarrow the white chickens and rainwater is supporting "so much."
2. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 3?
   - A. The line stands out too, because it was not dedicated to imagery.
   - B. The line stands out too, because it is the only line not dedicated to imagery.
   - C. These lines were the only lines not dedicated to the creation of the poem's central image.
   - D. This was the only line without imagery.
3. Which of the following errors appears in sentence 6?
   - A. run-on sentence
   - B. incorrect parallelism
   - C. sentence fragment
   - D. incorrect verb tense

Study Skills Practice

Paragraph Improvement Remind students that unless one of the choices offered in sentence-improvement questions is either "NO CHANGE," or is a repetition of the sentence as it was written in the text, they must decide what is wrong with the sentence or paragraph in question. Having a clear idea where the error lies will help them quickly eliminate the wrong answer choices.

4. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 8?
   - A. Williams describes it outright, without embellishment.
   - B. Outright, Williams described it, without embellishment.
   - C. Williams, describing it outright, without embellishment.
   - D. Williams is without embellishment.

5. Which of the following errors appears in sentence 17?
   - A. run-on sentence
   - B. incorrect parallelism
   - C. sentence fragment
   - D. incorrect verb tense

6. Which of the following sentences adds the least to the last paragraph?
   - A. 16
   - B. 17
   - C. 18
   - D. 19

7. Which of the following is the best revision of sentence 19?
   - A. Williams created a poem that shines a light on the underlying notions of language literature and representation.
   - B. In eight lines Williams created a poem that shines a light on the underlying notions of language, and literature, and representation.
   - C. Williams shines a light on the underlying notions of literature.
   - D. In eight lines, Williams created a poem that shines a light on the underlying notions of language, literature, and representation.

8. What is noticeably missing from this essay?
   - A. a concluding paragraph
   - B. an opening paragraph
   - C. evidence
   - D. a visual aid

Writing: Essay

Imagine discussing with a Modernist writer the use of traditional forms in poetry. Think about how traditional forms, such as rhyme and meter, or the absence of these forms, function in a poem and their effect. Write an essay in which you argue for or against the use of these forms in modern poetry.

LOG ON Literature Online

Assessment For additional test practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u5.

Assess

Grammar and Writing Skills

4. A is the correct answer because the present tense verb describes is necessary for consistency with the other verbs in the paragraph. DOK 1

5. C is the correct answer because the sentence lacks a subject and a predicate in the main clause. DOK 2

6. C is the correct answer because sentence 18 merely repeats the point made in the first two sentences of the paragraph. DOK 4

7. D is the correct answer because the introductory phrase needs to be set off by a comma. DOK 1

8. B is the correct answer because the passage does not include an introduction to the poem or a thesis statement. DOK 4

Writing

Make sure students know how much time they have for the writing task, and approximately how long the essay should be. Remind students that they should try to recall work by poets who do not use traditional forms, as well as some who do, so that they can use these writers as examples.

Essay

Evaluate essays for:

- clearly stated main ideas supported by good reasons and details
- effective voice, word choice, and sentence variety
- effective presentation with attention to grammar and spelling conventions

DOK 3

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Some students practicing for standardized exams with essay questions will benefit from reminders about this first stage of the writing process. Encourage them to jot down—in any order—thoughts that address the writing prompt, then to reread their thoughts, cross out those that are irrelevant or dead ends, and add supporting details to those that seem significant. Finally, they should use letters or numbers to indicate the order in which they will treat the ideas and details in their drafts. Refer students to the Writing Workshop for further tips on writing an essay about literature.

Skills Scope and Sequence

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 1: The New Regionalism and the City

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Unit Introduction pp. 850-864	Regionalism SE p. 858 Urban Literature SE p. 860
Short Story Breakfast, by John Steinbeck 6.7/52/950 pp. 866-872	Implied Theme SE p. 867 Tone (review) SE p. 871
Vocabulary Workshop p. 873
Short Story and Speech A Rose for Emily 5.9/60/1120 and Address upon Receiving the Nobel Prize in Literature 8.4/62/1170, by William Faulkner pp. 874-887	Foreshadowing SE p. 875 Flashback (review) SE p. 886
Short Story A Worn Path, by Eudora Welty 3.4/52/780 pp. 888-898	Description SE p. 889 Archetype (review) SE p. 897
Autobiography from Black Boy, by Richard Wright 5.6/57/970 pp. 899-908	Flash-forward SE p. 900 Autobiography (review) SE p. 907
Historical Perspective from You Have Seen Their Faces, by Erskine Caldwell and Margaret Bourke-White 11.7/63/1210 pp. 909-912
Short Story The Life You Save May Be Your Own, by Flannery O'Connor 6.1/54/970 pp. 913-926	Dialogue SE p. 914 Foreshadowing (review) SE p. 925
Grammar Workshop p. 927
Short Story The Second Tree from the Corner, by E. B. White 5.7/57/1110 pp. 928-936	Plot SE p. 929 Irony (review) SE p. 935
Poems The Bean Eaters and To Don at Salaam, by Gwendolyn Brooks pp. 937-941	Rhyme Scheme SE p. 938

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Use Graphic Information TE p. 852 Analyze Historical Context SE pp. 856, 862 Summarize TE p. 856		Write an Outline TE p. 860 Write a Research Report TE p. 862	Analyze Art SE p. 859 Musical Presentation SE p. 864 Photo Album SE p. 864
Connect to Personal Experience SE p. 867	Word Usage SE p. 872 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 872	Write a Narrative TE p. 868 Write a Report SE p. 872
	Word Parts SE p. 873
Identify Sequence SE p. 875 Make Inferences TE p. 878 Paraphrase TE p. 884	Denotation and Connotation SE p. 886 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 886	Adjectives TE p. 882 Write an Expository Essay SE p. 887	Oral Presentation TE p. 880 Analyze Art SE p. 881 Discussion SE p. 885
Visualize SE p. 889	Analogies SE p. 898 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 898	Create a Graphic Organizer TE p. 892 Write a Comparison-Contrast Essay TE p. 896 Apply Dialogue SE p. 898	Analyze Art SE p. 890 Readers Theater TE p. 894
Compare and Contrast Characters SE p. 900 Preview TE p. 900	Context Clues SE p. 908 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 908	Write a Letter TE p. 902 Write a Personal Essay TE p. 906	Analyze Art SE p. 903 Speech SE p. 908
Analyze the Purpose of Historical Texts and Photographs SE p. 909	Context Clues SE p. 910	Write a Summary SE p. 912	Analyze Art TE p. 911
Apply Background Knowledge SE p. 914 Visualize TE p. 916 Compare and Contrast TE p. 918 Analyze Irony TE p. 922	Double Negatives TE p. 914 Word Usage SE p. 925 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 925	Write a Scene TE p. 920 Write a Review TE p. 926	Analyze Art TE p. 921 Discussion SE p. 924
		Introductory Phrases and Clauses SE p. 927
Analyze Text Structure SE p. 929 Draw Conclusions TE p. 930 Analyze Humor TE p. 932	Word Parts SE p. 936 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 936	Pronoun Antecedents TE p. 934 Apply Irony SE p. 936
Evaluate Diction SE p. 938 Tone TE p. 940	Context Clues SE p. 941	Write a Personal Essay SE p. 941	Analyze Art TE p. 939

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 1: The New Regionalism and the City (continued)

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Short Story The Magic Barrel, by Bernard Malamud 6.3/62/1010 pp. 942-958	Dialect SE p. 943 Motivation (review) SE p. 957
Short Story The Rockpile, by James Baldwin 4.6/59/850 pp. 959-968	Foil SE p. 960

PART 2: The United States and the World

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Speech War Message to Congress, by Franklin Delano Roosevelt 8.9/66/1280 pp. 970-974	Author's Purpose SE p. 971
Vocabulary Workshop p. 975
Poem Death of the Ball Turret Gunner, by Randall Jarrell pp. 976-979	Imagery SE p. 977
Comparing Literature All Rivers Run to the Sea (memoir), by Elie Wiesel 6.1/53/860 from Kubota (memoir), by Garrett Hongo 9.0/63/1180 from Maus (graphic memoir), by Art Spiegelman pp. 980-1001	Narrator SE p. 982 Autobiography (review) SE p. 991
Essay from Hiroshima, by John Hersey 9.9/64/1260 pp. 1002-1016	Point of View SE p. 1003 Author's Purpose (review) SE p. 1015
Short Story The Portrait, by Tomas Rivera 4.5/47/760 pp. 1017-1023	Idiom SE p. 1018 Plot (review) SE p. 1022
Literary History Cultural Rebels: Writers of the Beat Generation pp. 1024-1025

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Analyze Characterization SE p. 943 Compare and Contrast TE p. 944 Analyze Foreshadowing TE p. 954 Analyze Plot TE p. 956	Word Roots TE p. 950 Word Origins SE p. 958 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 958	Write a Journal Entry TE p. 948 Write a Definition TE p. 952	Analyze Art TE p. 946 Debate SE p. 958
Make Generalizations About Characters SE p. 960 Analyze Sequence TE p. 962 Paraphrase TE p. 966	Analogies SE p. 968	Create a Graphic Organizer TE p. 960 Double Negatives TE p. 964 Write a Character Sketch SE p. 968	Analyze Art TE p. 965

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Distinguish Fact and Opinion SE p. 971 Analyze Speech TE p. 972	Denotation and Connotation SE p. 974	Write a Press Release SE p. 974
	Word Origins SE p. 975
Visualize SE p. 977	Context Clues SE p. 979	Write a Letter TE p. 978 Write a Journal Entry TE p. 979
Compare and Contrast SE p. 980 Activate Prior Knowledge SE p. 982 Monitor Comprehension TE p. 984 Draw Conclusions TE p. 990	Denotation and Connotation SE p. 992 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 992	Write a Biography TE p. 986 Write a Description TE p. 994 Write an Expository Essay SE p. 1001	Discussion TE pp. 988, 996, 1001 Oral Report SE p. 992 Performance TE p. 998 Collage SE p. 1001
Draw Conclusions About Author's Beliefs SE p. 1003 Analyze Text Structure TE p. 1006 Distinguish Fact and Opinion TE p. 1008 Skim and Scan TE p. 1012	Word Origins SE p. 1015 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 1015	Create a Graphic Organizer TE p. 1004 Write an Editorial TE p. 1010 Write an Expository Essay SE p. 1016 Underlining and Italics SE p. 1016	Discussion TE p. 1014
Respond to Plot and Characters SE p. 1018 Make Critical Judgments TE p. 1018	Context Clues SE p. 1023 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 1023	Write a Research Report SE p. 1023
Analyze Cultural Context SE p. 1024 Evaluate Literary Periods SE p. 1024 Evaluate Historical Influences SE p. 1025		Write a Research Report TE p. 1024

Readability Scores Key: Dale-Chall/DRP/Lexile

PART 2: The United States and the World (continued)

Selections and Features	Literary Elements
Drama The Crucible, Act I, by Arthur Miller pp. 1026-1050	Dialogue SE p. 1027 Setting TE p. 1030 Irony TE p. 1044
Drama The Crucible, Act II, by Arthur Miller pp. 1051-1072	Stage Directions SE p. 1051
Drama The Crucible, Act III, by Arthur Miller pp. 1073-1095	Plot SE p. 1073 Dialogue TE p. 1074 Irony TE pp. 1088, 1094
Drama The Crucible, Act IV, by Arthur Miller pp. 1096-1115	Tragedy SE p. 1096 Irony TE p. 1102 Motif TE p. 1108 Climax TE p. 1110 Conflict (review) SE p. 1114
Literary History Modern American Drama pp. 1116-1117	Drama SE p. 1116 Musical Theater SE p. 1117
Writing Workshop pp. 1118-1125	Sensory Details TE p. 1122
Speaking, Listening, and Viewing Workshop pp. 1126-1127
Independent Reading pp. 1128-1129
Assessment pp. 1130-1135

Reading Skills and Strategies	Vocabulary	Writing Grammar	Speaking, Listening, and Viewing
Draw Conclusions About Characters SE p. 1027 Recognize Logical Fallacies TE p. 1032 Analyze Conflict TE p. 1048	Word Parts SE p. 1050	Write a Summary TE p. 1034 Write a Scene TE p. 1038 Active and Passive Voice TE p. 1040 Write a Dialogue SE p. 1050	Oral Report TE p. 1028 Analyze Art TE p. 1036 Readers Theater TE p. 1046
Analyze Historical Context SE p. 1051 Recognize Logical Fallacies TE p. 1056 Monitor Comprehension SE p. 1058	Analogies SE p. 1072	Write a Research Report TE pp. 1052, 1066 Exclamation Points TE p. 1054 Write a Definition TE p. 1064 Capitalization TE p. 1070 Write Stage Directions SE p. 1072	Mock Newscast TE p. 1060 Debate TE p. 1062 Analyze Art SE p. 1068
Evaluate Argument SE p. 1073 Make Inferences About Characters TE p. 1078 Analyze Dramatic Irony TE p. 1080	Context Clues SE p. 1095	Write a Research Report TE p. 1076 Inverted Sentences TE p. 1082 Write a Character Analysis TE p. 1086 Write an Application Letter TE p. 1092 Write a Summary SE p. 1095	Analyze Art SE p. 1081 Dramatic Reading TE p. 1084
Analyze Theme SE p. 1096 Compare and Contrast Characters TE p. 1100 Evaluate Argument TE p. 1104	Word Origins TE p. 1098 Word Usage SE p. 1114 Academic Vocabulary SE p. 1114	Write an Editorial SE p. 1115 Comparative and Superlative Adjectives SE p. 1115	Analyze Art SE p. 1101
Analyze Cultural Context SE p. 1116 Analyze Literary Periods SE p. 1116 Evaluate Historical Influences SE p. 1116			Dramatic Reading TE p. 1116
		Prewrite SE p. 1121 Draft SE p. 1122 Revise SE p. 1124 Avoid Stilted Language SE p. 1124 Write an Autobiographical Narrative SE p. 1125
Analyze Images SE p. 1126			Photo Essay SE p. 1126
Respond to Experience TE p. 1128		Write an Advice Column SE p. 1129
		Write an Autobiographical Narrative SE p. 1135

UNIT SIX

Focus

Bellringer Options

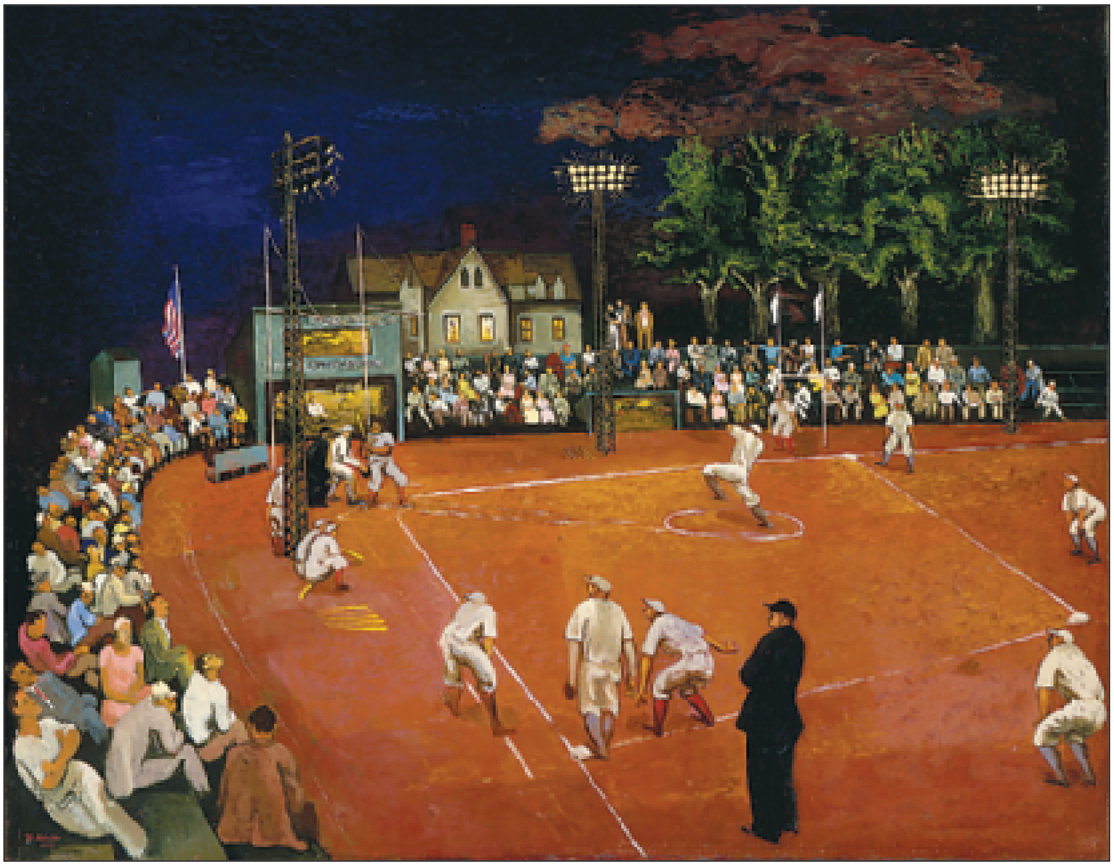
Literature Launcher
Pre-Reading Video: Unit 6

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 78

Or ask: What is an economic depression? (Students may say that it is a time when it is very difficult to find a job.) Say: The term depression refers to a period of economic decline characterized by decreasing business activity, falling prices, and increased unemployment. Ask: What comes to mind when you hear the term "Great Depression"?

For school-to-home activities, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 5–11.

For students who would profit from independent novel study, see Novel Companion pp. 251–294.



Baseball at Night, 1934. Morris Kantor. Oil on linen, 37 x 47¹/₄ in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC.

View the Art Kantor painted this work after making several sketches of early night baseball games. Why might the artist have chosen this subject to reflect American culture during the middle part of the twentieth century? ★

Unit Introduction Skills

From Depression to Cold War

Reading Skills
- Analyze Graphic Information (SE pp. 853, 855)
- Make Inferences (SE p. 859)
- Analyze Cause and Effect (SE pp. 861, 863;)
- Use Timelines (TE p. 852)
- Summarize (TE p. 856)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Presentation on Music (SE p. 864)
- Photograph Murals (SE p. 864)
- Analyze Art (TE pp. 851, 856, 859, 861, 863)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Graph Migration (TE p. 854)
- Organize and Support (TE p. 860)
- Present Research (TE p. 862)

Literary Elements
- Simile (TE p. 859)
- Rhyme Scheme (TE p. 861)

UNIT SIX

FROM DEPRESSION TO COLD WAR

1930s–1960s

Looking Ahead

During this period, the United States faced extraordinary challenges. In the 1930s, people in the United States struggled with the effects of the Great Depression, the worst economic crisis in U.S. history. U.S. entry into World War II in 1941 signaled the beginning of global responsibilities for the United States. The postwar world brought the United States an uneasy peace marked by anxiety about nuclear conflict.

Keep the following questions in mind as you read:

- How did the Depression encourage a revival of Regionalist literature?
- In what different ways did the writers of this period present urban life?
- How did the role of the United States in the world change as a result of World War II and the Cold War?

UNIT SIX

Focus

Summary

The introduction describes the historical, social, and cultural forces that led to three literary responses: the revival of Regionalism, an examination of urban life, and a reaction to World War II and the Cold War. Following the optimism of the 1920s, a period of economic and social upheaval changed the outlook of the United States. Summaries of these events highlight their impact on writers of the time.

View the Art ★

Answer: Baseball was one of the few signs of hope during the Great Depression. It was a form of entertainment known as the "American pastime."

At the age of 15, Morris Kantor (1896–1974) moved from his birthplace in Minsk, Russia, to the United States. He studied art in New York and painted Baseball at Night in 1934, in the middle of the Great Depression. Most towns had a baseball team, and the first lighted games were played by these small-town teams.

Unit Resources

Print Materials

- Unit 6 Teaching Resources, pp. 1–300
- Interactive Read and Write (On Level, Approaching, EL), pp. 213–254
- Novel Companion, pp. 251–294
- Bellringer Option Transparencies: Selection Focus 53–64; Daily Language Practice 78–95
- Assessment Resources, Selection Assessment, pp. 235–272

Technology

- TeacherWorks Plus CD
- StudentWorks Plus CD
- Literature Launchers: Pre-Reading Videos DVD, Unit 6
- Literature Online
- Visual Vocabulary CD-ROM
- Listening Library CD-ROM
- ExamView CD-ROM
- Skill Level Up! CD-ROM

For diagnostic and end-of-unit assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 41–48, 341–342.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

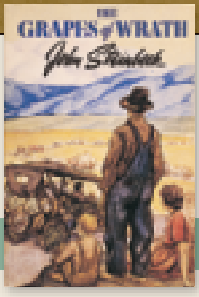
Connect Timeline Information Direct students to study the timeline to compare the literature of the time with the events happening in the United States and the world. Using a Reader's Encyclopedia, read aloud summaries of selected literary works found on the timeline. For each work, ask students to name a historical event that might have influenced the work.

Cultural History ☆

World War II Some historians call World War II the most significant episode in history. A total of 49 countries participated in the global conflict that resulted in more than $1 trillion in destruction and had long-lasting effects on people around the world. Popular novels based on the war include The Naked and the Dead (1948) by Norman Mailer and The Caine Mutiny (1951) by Herman Wouk. Individual soldiers' remembrances of the war filled magazines and books in the post-war years.

TIMELINE

1930s–1960s



1 AMERICAN LITERATURE

1930

1930
Sinclair Lewis becomes first U.S. citizen to win Nobel Prize for Literature

1936
Absalom, Absalom! by William Faulkner

1937
Their Eyes Were Watching God by Zora Neale Hurston

1938
Thornton Wilder stages Our Town

1939
The Grapes of Wrath by John Steinbeck

1940

1940
Native Son by Richard Wright

1943
Oklahoma! opens on Broadway

1945 Tennessee Williams stages The Glass Menagerie

1945
Black Boy by Richard Wright

1945
A Street in Bronzeville by Gwendolyn Brooks

1947
Tennessee Williams stages A Streetcar Named Desire

UNITED STATES EVENTS

1930

1930
Depression deepens; bank failures increase

1932
Franklin D. Roosevelt is elected president

1933
New Deal is launched

1934
Dust Bowl begins in the southern Great Plains

1935
Social Security Act is passed

1940

1941
Japan attacks Pearl Harbor; United States enters World War II ☆

1942
Internment of Americans of Japanese descent begins

1943
Race riots occur in Detroit; Zoot Suit Riots occur in Los Angeles

1944
D-Day invasion begins in northern France

1945
President Roosevelt dies; Vice President Harry S. Truman becomes president

1945
United States drops atomic bombs on Japan

Emblem required by Nazis to be worn by Jews

WORLD EVENTS

1930

1930
Mohandas Gandhi leads Salt March in India

1933
Adolf Hitler and Nazi party come to power in Germany

1935
Nazis deprive German Jews of citizenship

1939
Germany invades Poland; World War II begins

1940

1940
France surrenders to Germany

1940
Battle of Britain begins

1942
Nazi "final solution" establishes concentration and extermination camps for Jews

United Nations logo

1943
Soviets defeat Germans at Stalingrad

1945
Germany surrenders; Allied forces liberate Nazi death camps

LOG ON Literature Online

Literature and Reading To explore the Interactive Timeline, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Reading Practice

Use Timelines Have students collaborate to research and prepare a biographical timeline of a writer from this era. The timeline should include such entries as birth and death dates, geographical moves, travels, meetings and relationships with other literary figures, publications of works, and awards. Encourage students to enhance their timelines with illustrations and quotations. To assist students with organization, provide printed timeline formats.

Franklin D. Roosevelt button

HE SAVED AMERICA

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR
19 47
JACKIE ROBINSON

Jackie Robinson button

1950 1960

1949
Arthur Miller's Death of a Salesman is staged

1949 ▼
William Faulkner wins Nobel Prize in Literature

1952
Invisible Man by Ralph Ellison ☆

1955
A Good Man Is Hard to Find by Flannery O'Connor

1955
Notes of a Native Son by James Baldwin

1957
On the Road by Jack Kerouac

1959
Lorraine Hansberry's A Raisin in the Sun is staged

1960
To Kill a Mockingbird by Harper Lee

1961
Catch-22 by Joseph Heller

1950 1960

1946
First electronic digital computer begins operation

1947
Jackie Robinson is first African American to play Major League Baseball

1949
North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) is founded 1950

Senator McCarthy charges that Communists staff the U.S. State Department

1954
Supreme Court rules school segregation unconstitutional in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka

1955
Montgomery bus boycott begins

1962
Cuban Missile Crisis occurs

1963
President John F. Kennedy is assassinated; Vice President Lyndon Johnson becomes president

SHQIPERIA
LAIKA
1

1950 1960

1945
United Nations Charter

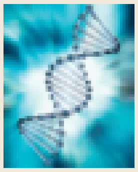
1945
Japan surrenders; World War II ends

1948
U.N. establishes Israel

1949
People's Republic of China established

1950
Korean War begins

1953 ▼
DNA code cracked



1957 ▲
Sputnik 1 and Sputnik 2

1959
Fidel Castro takes Cuba

1961
Soviets erect Berlin Wall to separate East Germany from the West

Reading Check

Analyze Graphic Information Which events on the timeline show the effects of Nazi racial policies?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: 1935—Nazis deprive German Jews of citizenship; 1942—Nazi "final solution" establishes concentration and extermination camps for Jews; 1945—Germany surrenders; Allied forces liberate Nazi death camps.

Literary History ☆

Ralph Waldo Ellison Ralph Ellison (1914–1994) shares part of his name with an American literary voice—Ralph Waldo Emerson—from the previous century. Ellison's reputation rests on his novel Invisible Man, the story of an African-American man's search for identity. Ellison published numerous short stories and essays, and taught at several colleges and universities.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Explain to students that reading and analyzing a timeline can help them make connections as they read the unit. Have students hold a ruler vertically along one column of dates to see all the events that happened in a certain period of time. For example, reading down the second column of the timeline, they will see the relationship between John Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath and the growth of the Dust Bowl. Have them hold the ruler horizontally across a section to see a certain category of events over time. For example, have students find the events in Franklin Delano Roosevelt's presidency on the timeline (United States Events rows, between 1932 and 1945). Ask: Where on the timeline would you add the names of books published in 1962? (In the American Literature section, in the 1960 column)

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Draw Conclusions Have students examine the diagram, which shows one cyclical effect of the Great Depression.

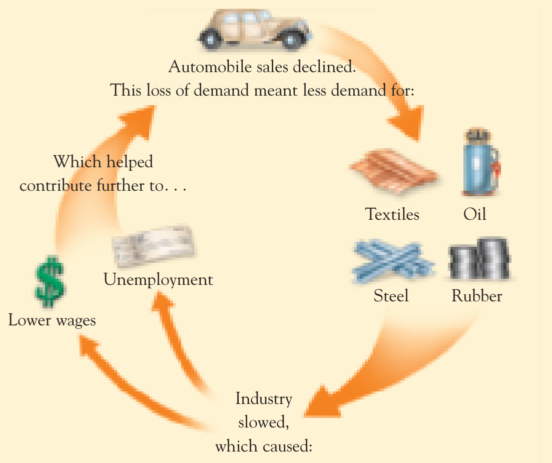
Ask: In this diagram, what slowed industry? (lower demand for materials, resulting from a decline in auto sales) Clarify that a decline in auto sales was just one factor that slowed industry. Then examine the graphs depicting auto and tank production. Ask: How does the drop in automobile production after 1941 relate to the increase in tanks? (Producing war materials required huge amounts of raw materials to be diverted from other industries. Automobile factories were converted into tank factories.)

BY THE NUMBERS

Stock Market Crash

On October 29, 1929, 16 million stock shares were sold. By mid-November, stock prices were cut in half, costing investors about $30 billion—a sum that was equal to the total wages of all Americans for 1929. Nearly 1.5 million investors had previously purchased stock, and many lost everything. By 1933, more than 12 million people were unemployed, and between 1929 and 1932 the average family income dropped from $2,300 to $1,600 a year.

CYCLICAL EFFECT OF THE GREAT DEPRESSION



Automobile sales declined.
This loss of demand meant less demand for:
Textiles
Oil Steel
Rubber
Industry slowed, which caused:
Unemployment
Lower wages
Which helped contribute further to. . .

1

THE DUST BOWL

- In 1933 and 1935, dry weather desertified parts of the Great Plains. 1934 saw 22 dust storms; 1937 saw 72.
- Between 1934 and 1939, nearly 350,000 Dust Bowl families migrated to California.
- In the 1930s, millions of tons of topsoil kill crops and livestock.

AUTO PRODUCTION 1941–1945

Source Historical Statistics of the United States: Colonial Times to 1970

TANK PRODUCTION 1941–1945

Source Historical Statistics of the United States: Colonial Times to 1970

THE SECOND GREAT MIGRATION

- The Depression slowed the Great Migration of rural African Americans from the South to the North.
- Production during World War II created new jobs, prompting a "Second Great Migration."
- Mechanization of Southern farming in the 1950s forced more rural Southern African Americans to move north seeking work.
- African American populations of big cities in the North and West grew dramatically; for example, in Chicago from 278,000 in 1940 to 813,000 in 1960.

Writing Practice

Graph Migration Tell students to read "The Second Great Migration." Discuss the causes of the migration of African Americans to the North. Point out to students that the North's African American population more than doubled in twenty years, while the South's black population grew slowly. Then have students create a line or bar graph using the following data showing the African American population:

Year	North (millions)	South (millions)
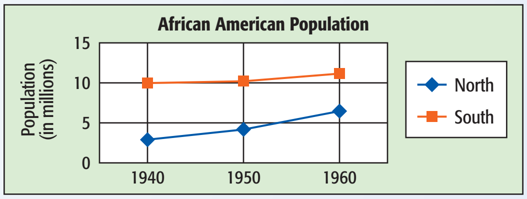
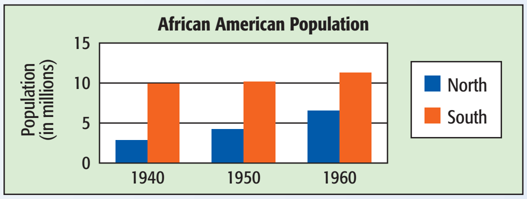
1940	2.8	9.9
1950	4.2	10.2
1960	6.5	11.3



African American Population



African American Population

BEING THERE

In the 1930s, American artists, like American writers, were divided between Regionalists, who depicted rural life in the Midwest and West, and Social Realists, who focused on American cities, particularly New York.

★

A Against Barbwire Fence, 1933. Arthur Rothstein. Black and white photograph.

B Bankrupt Investor Walter Thornton Selling Roadster After Stock Market Crash, 1929. Black and white photograph.

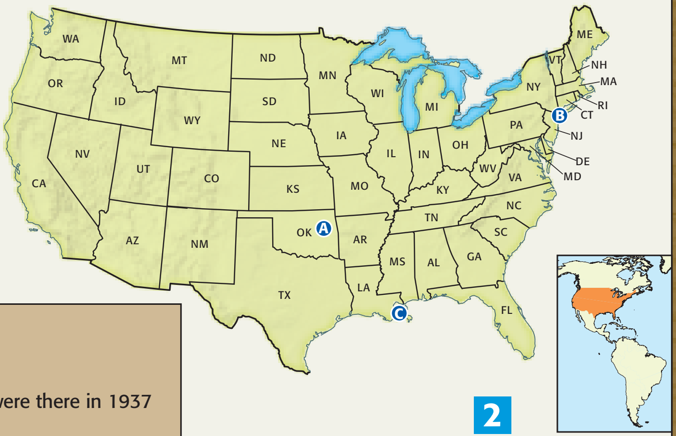
SHOES
RATIONING BOARD
WAR BOOK 2
WAR BOOK 1

C Line at Ration Board, 1943. John Vachon. Black and white photograph.



2

Reading Check

Analyze Graphic Information:

1. How many more dust storms were there in 1937 than in 1934?
2. In what year during World War II were the fewest automobiles and the most tanks produced?
3. What effect did unemployment and lower wages have on automobile sales? See diagram on p. 854.

LOG ON Literature Online

Literature and Reading For more about the history and literature of this period, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Teach

Reading Check

1. 50
2. 1943
3. Automobile sales continued to decline.

Reading Strategy 2

Use Maps Ask: What does this map reveal about the effects of the Great Depression and World War II? (Students may say that the effects were not confined to a single region, but affected the entire nation.)

View the Photograph ★

A. While working for the Federal Resettlement Administration, Arthur Rothstein became famous for his images of the Dust Bowl.

B. Speculation, the practice of engaging in risky stock market transactions, contributed to the stock market crash of 1929.

C. In order to fully supply the armed forces during WWII, the federal government used rationing to distribute scarce products to citizens at home. Coffee, sugar, shoes, and tires were rationed.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate With the class, brainstorm a list of economic terms, such as stock, investor, shares, and income. Have English learners create a two-column chart with the headers Term and Meaning. Have students list unfamiliar terms and consult a dictionary to find the meaning.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Connect Say: Some people who lived through the Great Depression were reluctant to spend money for years after it was over. Ask: Why do you think they felt this way? (They had seen rich people lose everything they had.)

Reading Strategy 2

Draw Conclusions Ask: Why did Franklin D. Roosevelt defeat President Herbert Hoover in the 1932 presidential election? (Students may say that Hoover lost because the economy was in such bad shape.)

View the Photograph ★

During World War I, many nations bought grain from U.S. farmers, who plowed more land to meet the increased demand. When the demand eased at the end of World War I, farmers with unpaid debts cultivated even more ground, leaving large areas stripped of ground cover. A severe drought and strong windstorms blew away millions of tons of topsoil.

Learning Objectives

For pages 856–864

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study:
Analyzing literary periods.
Evaluating historical influences.
Connecting to the literature.

FROM DEPRESSION TO COLD WAR

1930s–1960s

Historical, Social, and Cultural Forces

1 The Depression

The stock market crashed in 1929, taking with it the optimism and prosperity of the 1920s. The crash started a chain reaction that cost millions of people their jobs and homes. Banks failed when loans could not be repaid. People frantically removed their savings from banks, causing more banks to fail, which in turn caused factories and businesses to close. The popular song "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" captured the bleak spirit of the people of the United States, many of whom were now forced to sell their possessions, relinquish their homes, and stand in bread lines for food. When President Herbert Hoover ran for reelection in 2 1932, Franklin Delano Roosevelt defeated him soundly, carrying 42 of the 48 states. Soon programs and policies aimed at economic recovery and social reform, which Roosevelt called the New Deal, offered some relief to the beleaguered nation.

Man in a Dust Storm, c. 1930. Black and white photograph. ★

The New Deal

New Deal agencies employed people in public works programs, such as reforestation; improved the nation's roads and schools; and built sidewalks, dams, and bridges. It played a role in the arts as well, employing out-of-work artists, writers, actors, and musicians to decorate public buildings and produce plays and musicals. Even with the new agencies, some people—dependent mothers, children, and the elderly—were unemployable. In 1935, Congress passed the Social Security Act, which offered unemployment insurance and retirement benefits that were financed through payroll taxes paid by employers and workers.

Reading Practice

Summarize Say: When you are studying a time period, you may find it helpful to summarize the most important points so that the information is more manageable. Have students create a two-column chart with the headers Historical Events and Main Points. Beneath the first column, students should list the five headings given in the selection. Have students read each of the five sections, stopping at the end of each to note the most important points in the second column.

Persistent Racism

Prejudice against African Americans and other minority groups continued. The New Deal failed to enact programs that challenged racism. Some agencies refused to hire African Americans, and others segregated them and paid them less. Violence, including lynching, remained widespread.

> "Dust storms are bringing distress and death to 300,000 square miles."
>
> —Margaret Bourke-White

The Dust Bowl

A combination of drought and poor farming methods during the 1920s turned a large area of the Great Plains into what became known as the Dust Bowl. Topsoil blew as far as the Atlantic coast. Many families left their farms and headed west in search of work. Not everyone found work, however, and the Farm Security Administration (FSA) built camps to house migrants. Those who stayed on their farms got help from the Soil Conservation Service (SCS), which advocated contour plowing to help keep the soil from blowing away.

World War II and the Cold War

In the 1930s, Italy's Fascists, Germany's Nazis, and Japan's military rulers formed an alliance known as the Axis Powers. Aggression by these countries led to World War II in 1939. Early in the war, the Axis forces overwhelmed their enemies, until only Britain still resisted. The U.S. entered the war on Britain's side after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in December 1941. Nearly four years of global warfare followed, ending with the defeat of the Axis Powers in 1945. The end of the war left a world dominated by the U.S. and the Soviet Union. An intense political and economic rivalry developed between them, and the ensuing "Cold War" led to a massive buildup of armaments—including nuclear weapons. ☆

PREVIEW Big Ideas of the Era of the Depression and the Cold War

1 Return to Regionalism

The crisis of the Depression encouraged a revival of Regionalism in literature. Some writers saw the values of ordinary people in the United States as a source of strength in hard times. Other writers examined how characters' lives were shaped—and sometimes distorted—by the history and culture of their regions.

See pages 858–859.

2 Life in the City

During the first half of the twentieth century, the big cities of the United States were magnets for foreign-born immigrants and rural U.S. citizens, who came seeking better lives for themselves and their families. Responding to modern urban life, American writers portrayed both its richness and its problems.

See pages 860–861.

3 The United States and the World

In 1941 aggression by the Axis Powers forced the United States to enter World War II. The end of the war saw the development of the Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union. American writers examined both wartime struggles and postwar anxieties.

See pages 862–863.

Teach

Literary Element

Historical Narrative Point out to students that World War II produced many examples of historical narrative, a work of nonfiction that tells the story of events and developments. Winston Churchill, prime minister of Great Britain throughout the war, penned the six-volume History of the Second World War.

Ask: Why is a narrative written by a participant in a historical event an important source of information? (A narrative written by a participant may be more detailed than one written by someone who researched the event at a later time.)

Cultural History ☆

"Baby Boomers" The "baby boom" started in 1946—the year after World War II ended—as American soldiers returning from the war married and had families. The effect on the U.S. population was dramatic. In 1940, there were about 132 million Americans. By 1960, the population had grown to about 180 million people—an increase of nearly 40 percent.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To help students keep track of the three Big Ideas covered in this unit, have them make a chart similar to the one shown and use it to make notes as they read the rest of the introduction. An example of how students might use the chart is shown.

	Writers	Events	Ideas
Big Idea 1: Regionalism	Steinbeck	Dust Bowl	hardship, discrimination
Big Idea 2: City Life
Big Idea 3: The World

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Connect Explain to students that regionalist writers were interested in how circumstances influenced character. Ask: What aspects of your own personal "setting" or circumstances make you who you are or influence what you do?

Literary Element 2

Setting Have students read the section called "Steinbeck's Migrant Workers." Ask: What aspects of the setting influenced Steinbeck's characterizations in The Grapes of Wrath? (Steinbeck's characters were influenced by the dust storms in the Great Plains and by the difficulty of starting over in California.)

Literary History ☆

Ordinary Heroes John Steinbeck's fiction sympathetically portrays the working class. In 1962, he published Travels with Charley, about a cross-country trip he took with his pet poodle. This work glows with an appreciation of ordinary Americans.

Big Idea 1

Return to Regionalism

The word "America" means something different to each person in the United States. Among the many factors that shape its meaning are the communities that people come from—their histories, traditions, customs, and values. During the Great Depression, some American writers rediscovered Regionalism, the literary movement that places emphasis on the themes, characters, and settings of a particular geographical region. Unlike the local colorists of the late 1800s, the Regionalists of the mid-twentieth century were less concerned with peculiarities of local dialect or dress than with the deeper impact of setting on character. 1

2 Steinbeck's Migrant Workers

During the Depression, the morale of people in the U.S. weakened and many lost faith in national institutions. Some writers turned to regional traditions and the values of ordinary people as sources of continuity and strength. California writer John Steinbeck (see pages 866–872) found enduring humanity in the struggles of Dust Bowl migrants. His most famous novel, The Grapes of Wrath, describes the effects of the Depression and Dust Bowl on farmers from the southern Great Plains ☆ who traveled westward to seek work as migrant laborers. Their toughness and optimism in the face of hardship and discrimination reflects the spirit of the New Deal era and Steinbeck's belief in the ability of ordinary people to defeat despair and rebuild their lives through community.

Faulkner's Yoknapatawpha County

The richness of modern Southern writing has caused some literary historians to speak of the Southern Literary Renaissance in the twentieth century. Many of these writers focused on the South's relationship to its complex, often bitter history and on the interaction between Southern whites and blacks. The most famous of these Southern writers, William Faulkner (see pages 874–887), used carefully detailed regional settings and situations to present universal themes, such as the burden of the past, the complexity of human relationships, the nature of time and history, and the loneliness and alienation of modern life. In order to analyze the effects that Southern history had on its people, Faulkner created a fictional Mississippi region he called Yoknapatawpha County. He populated it with former slaves, poor white families, wealthy businessmen, and plantation owners. As the county begins to change and slowly absorb Northern influences, its citizens struggle to either resist or keep up with the outside world. In his brilliant experimental novel The Sound and the Fury, Faulkner used a series of interior monologues to portray the psychological deterioration and moral decay of a once proud aristocratic family, the Compsons, whose members cannot face the changing realities of race, class, culture, and economics in the modern South.

O'Connor's Southern Gothic

One category of modern writing is sometimes referred to as Southern Gothic. Southern Gothic literature has some of the same elements as the Gothic literature of the Romantic period. The characters are similar to those in Edgar Allan Poe's stories: sometimes weird, alienated, and prone to strange actions and bizarre thoughts. Yet the reader is meant to feel sympathy for these characters and to understand what has blighted their lives. Another Southern writer, Flannery O'Connor (see pages 913–926), sought to shock her readers through "distortions of modern life." Her characters often encounter a force that threatens to change their lives and beliefs forever. When critics claimed that her stories were grotesque, O'Connor responded, "I have found that anything that comes out of the South is going to be called grotesque by the Northern reader, unless it is grotesque, in which case it is going to be called realistic."

Study Skills Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Text Organizers To help students remember the information on this page, have them make a concept map entitled "Return to Regionalism." Students should link three concept circles to the heading, one for each of the three authors described. Then have them link the important points about the authors to their respective circles. For example, Steinbeck could have the following information linked to his circle:

- Grapes of Wrath
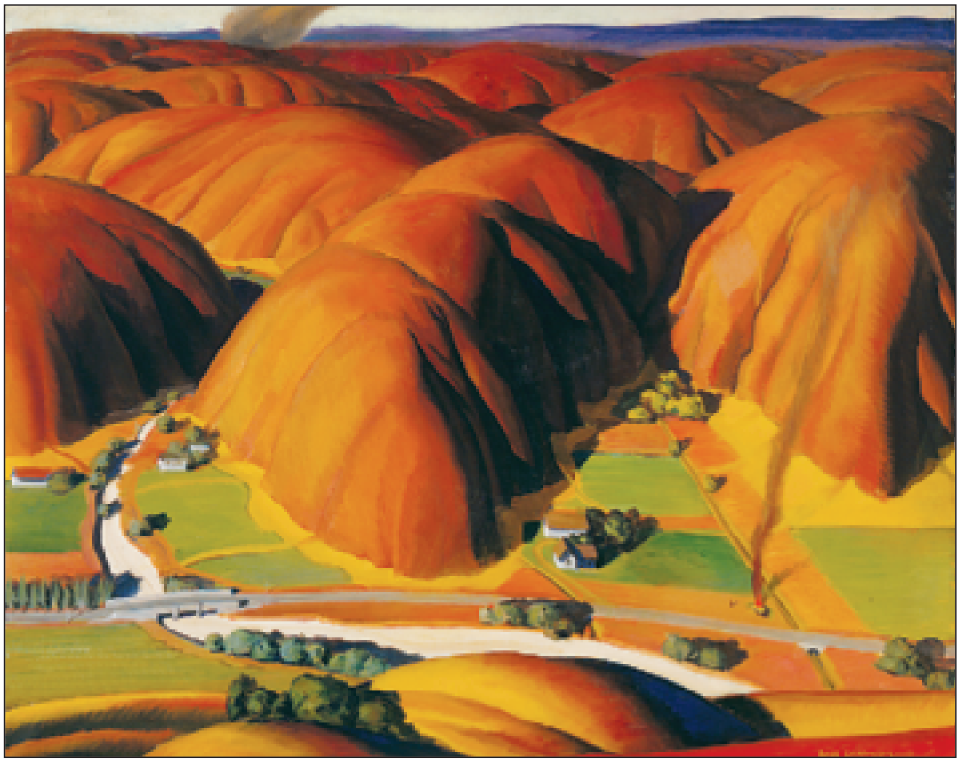
- Dust Bowl
- Ordinary people overcome hardship and discrimination.



Valley Farms, 1933–34. Ross Dickinson. Oil on canvas, 39½ x 49⅗ in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC. ★

from The Grapes of Wrath by John Steinbeck

And they were lonely and perplexed, because they had all come from a place of sadness and worry and defeat, and because they were all going to a new mysterious place, they huddled together; they talked together, they shared their lives, their food, and the things they hoped for in the new country. Thus it might be that one family camped near a spring, and another camped for the spring and for company, and a third because two families had pioneered the place and found it good. And when the sun went down, perhaps twenty families and twenty cars were there.

In the evening a strange thing happened: the twenty families became one family, the children were the children of all. The loss of home became one loss, and the golden time in the West was one dream. And it might be that a sick child threw despair into the hearts of twenty families, of a hundred people; that a birth there in a tent kept a hundred people quiet and awestruck through the night and filled a hundred people with the birth-joy in the morning. A family which the night before has been lost and fearful might search its goods to find a present for the new baby. In the evening, sitting about the fires, the twenty were one. 3

Reading Check

Make Inferences Why do you think a preoccupation with the past was a major characteristic of Southern Regionalist writing?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: Southern writers were reflecting on the burden of the bitter past. Relationships between blacks and whites were a common theme as Southern writers tried to understand their troubled past.

Literary Element 3

Figurative Language Explain to students that Steinbeck intersperses figurative language with literal language throughout the excerpt. Ask: In the excerpt from The Grapes of Wrath, what do the families literally share? (food, a spring, a place, goods) Ask: What do the families share figuratively or symbolically? (all the other aspects of life Steinbeck mentions: lives, hopes, one family, all the children, losses, dreams, despair, joy)

View the Art ★

A native of Southern California, Ross Dickinson (1903–1978) was an artist and a teacher. He contributed many murals to Southern California's public buildings. This painting provides an idea of the California setting for Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Explain to students that Steinbeck describes people moving westward. They are moving not only from one place to another, but also from the old to the new, and from despair to hope. Students who have difficulty with Steinbeck's writing can benefit from making a two-column chart with the headings "From" and "To" or "Old" and "New."

Give students examples of Steinbeck's words, such as those shown in the chart. Have students list other words or phrases that are associated with each heading.

From	To
side roads	great cross-country highway
place of sadness, worry, and defeat	new mysterious place

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Connect Ask: If ten students were asked to describe life in your school, what might account for the differences in the descriptions? (Possible answer: Different ages, genders, and backgrounds will result in different perceptions.)

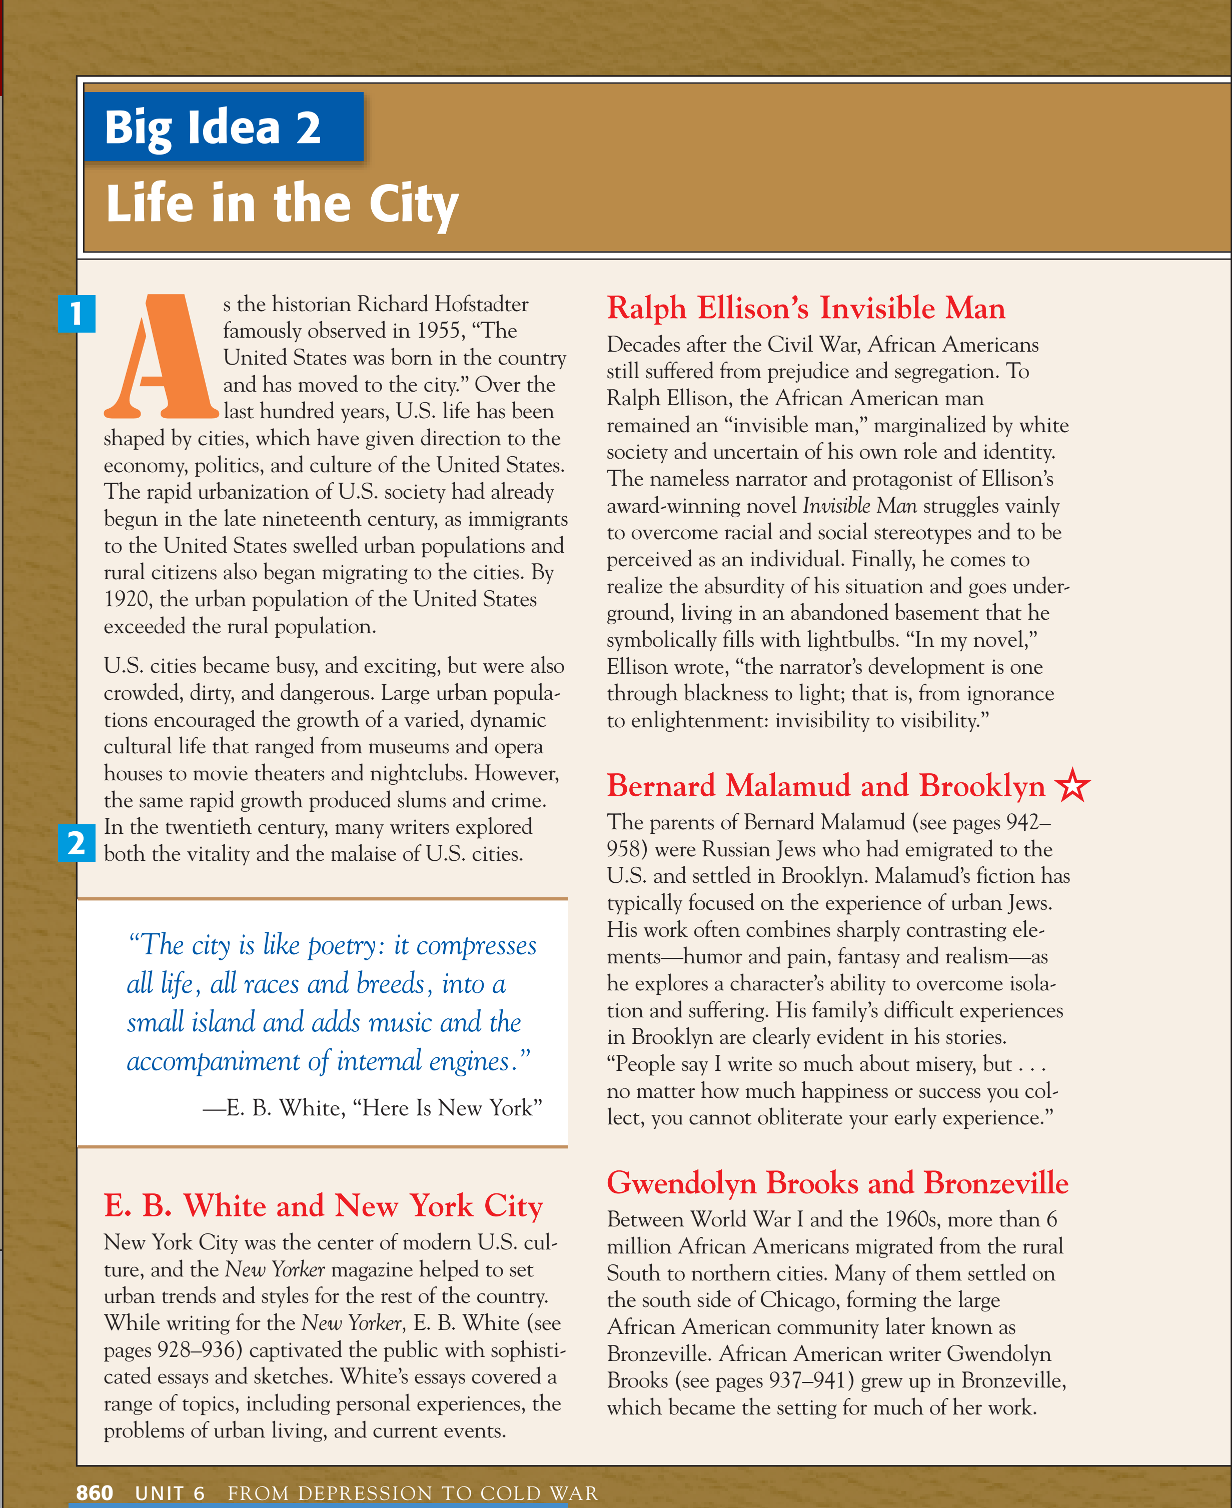
Reading Strategy 2

Compare and Contrast

Ask: What circumstances might account for the different viewpoints of these writers on urban life? (White, accepted in the mainstream culture, wrote from a perspective of relative security, while Ellison, Malamud, and Brooks—treated as outsiders—tried to find their way in more difficult circumstances.)

Cultural History ☆

Jewish Experience Bernard Malamud (1914–1986) was the son of Russian-Jewish immigrant parents. He worked 16 hours a day in their small grocery store on New York City's East Side. Malamud wrote about Jews because he knew their history, experiences, beliefs, and literature best.



Big Idea 2

Life in the City

1 As the historian Richard Hofstadter famously observed in 1955, "The United States was born in the country and has moved to the city." Over the last hundred years, U.S. life has been shaped by cities, which have given direction to the economy, politics, and culture of the United States. The rapid urbanization of U.S. society had already begun in the late nineteenth century, as immigrants to the United States swelled urban populations and rural citizens also began migrating to the cities. By 1920, the urban population of the United States exceeded the rural population.

U.S. cities became busy, and exciting, but were also crowded, dirty, and dangerous. Large urban populations encouraged the growth of a varied, dynamic cultural life that ranged from museums and opera houses to movie theaters and nightclubs. However, the same rapid growth produced slums and crime. In the twentieth century, many writers explored
2 both the vitality and the malaise of U.S. cities.

> "The city is like poetry: it compresses all life, all races and breeds, into a small island and adds music and the accompaniment of internal engines."
>
> —E. B. White, "Here Is New York"

E. B. White and New York City

New York City was the center of modern U.S. culture, and the New Yorker magazine helped to set urban trends and styles for the rest of the country. While writing for the New Yorker, E. B. White (see pages 928–936) captivated the public with sophisticated essays and sketches. White's essays covered a range of topics, including personal experiences, the problems of urban living, and current events.

Ralph Ellison's Invisible Man

Decades after the Civil War, African Americans still suffered from prejudice and segregation. To Ralph Ellison, the African American man remained an "invisible man," marginalized by white society and uncertain of his own role and identity. The nameless narrator and protagonist of Ellison's award-winning novel Invisible Man struggles vainly to overcome racial and social stereotypes and to be perceived as an individual. Finally, he comes to realize the absurdity of his situation and goes underground, living in an abandoned basement that he symbolically fills with lightbulbs. "In my novel," Ellison wrote, "the narrator's development is one through blackness to light; that is, from ignorance to enlightenment: invisibility to visibility."

Bernard Malamud and Brooklyn ☆

The parents of Bernard Malamud (see pages 942–958) were Russian Jews who had emigrated to the U.S. and settled in Brooklyn. Malamud's fiction has typically focused on the experience of urban Jews. His work often combines sharply contrasting elements—humor and pain, fantasy and realism—as he explores a character's ability to overcome isolation and suffering. His family's difficult experiences in Brooklyn are clearly evident in his stories. "People say I write so much about misery, but . . . no matter how much happiness or success you collect, you cannot obliterate your early experience."

Gwendolyn Brooks and Bronzeville

Between World War I and the 1960s, more than 6 million African Americans migrated from the rural South to northern cities. Many of them settled on the south side of Chicago, forming the large African American community later known as Bronzeville. African American writer Gwendolyn Brooks (see pages 937–941) grew up in Bronzeville, which became the setting for much of her work.

Writing Practice

Organize and Support Direct students to use an informal outline, such as the one below, to compare the urban experiences and themes of each writer.

1. E. B. White
  - The New Yorker
  - essays and sketches
  - personal experience, urban problems, current events

2. Ralph Ellison
  - Invisible Man
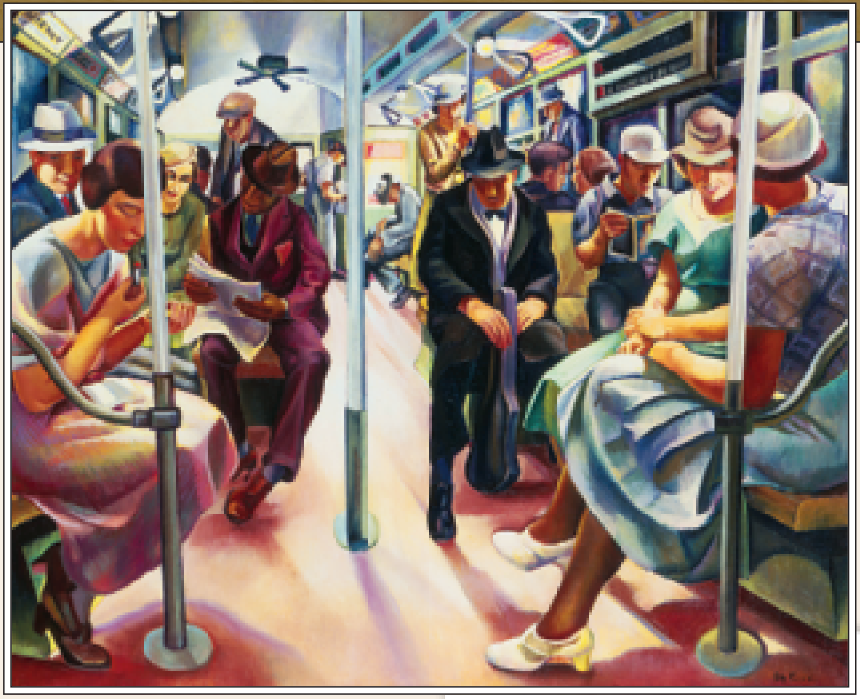
  - identity of African American man
  - racial/social stereotypes

Have students create outlines for Malamud and Brooks, and then choose one of the writers to outline.



Subway, c. 1934. Lily Furedi. Oil on canvas, 39 x 48½ in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC. ★

Her poetry and fiction are distinguished by a compassionate understanding of the lives of America's black urban poor, who struggle to survive both poverty and racism.

Suburbia

Despite the importance of cities in the development of the United States, a deep distrust of urban life also has been a part of the U.S. character. By 1900 U.S. cities were already ringed with suburbs. The growth of suburbia continued to accelerate throughout the twentieth century. For millions of people in the United States, a home in the suburbs came to symbolize the American dream. Nevertheless, some writers have depicted suburbia as a cultural wasteland inhabited by conformists. John Cheever and John Updike are two writers who have explored the culture of suburbs in the United States.

from A Street in Bronzeville by Gwendolyn Brooks

kitchenette building

We are things of dry hours and the involuntary plan,
Grayed in, and gray. "Dream" makes a giddy sound, not strong
Like "rent," "feeding a wife," "satisfying a man."

But could a dream send up through onion fumes
Its white and violet, fight with fried potatoes
And yesterday's garbage ripening in the hall,
Flutter, or sing an aria down these rooms

Even if we were willing to let it in,
Had time to warm it, keep it very clean,
Anticipate a message, let it begin?

We wonder. But not well! not for a minute!
Since Number Five is out of the bathroom now,
We think of lukewarm water, hope to get in it.

3

Reading Check

Analyze Cause and Effect How did cities affect the development of American literature in the mid-twentieth century?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: As the urban population surged, writers explored the vitality of cities, as well as their problems.

Literary Element 3

Rhyme Scheme Ask: What is the rhyme scheme for "kitchenette building"? Help students discern the scheme as follows:

- 1st stanza: aba
- 2nd stanza: cdec
- 3rd stanza: fgf
- 4th stanza: hih

APPROACHING Have students list the words that rhyme in each stanza. Explain how to assign a letter to each new word sound.

View the Art ★

Lily Furedi (1896–1969) was born in Hungary. This scene on a New York City subway is a snapshot of urban life during the Depression. Ask: How is this painting an effective portrayal of urban life in the 1930s? (There are a variety of people on the train; some are dressed for work and some are dressed for a night on the town. Some of the people are traveling alone; others are in pairs.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced To comprehend the text on these pages, students must understand difficult words, such as urbanization, malaise, segregation, and stereotype. Discuss these words, using roots and affixes to help them derive the meanings of the words.

Intermediate Have students use a dictionary to find the exact definitions of the four words listed in the Early Advanced section.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Connect Ask: What is a "flashbulb memory" for you (other than 9/11)? How did it change your life? (Answers will vary.)

Reading Strategy 2

Analyze Cause and Effect

Tell students to review the summaries of world events from "The Good War" through "The Cold War."

Ask: How did these periods affect life in the United States? (Possible answers: The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor changed Americans' attitudes toward the war; racial tensions grew as a result of the migration of African Americans to the North.)

Literary History ☆

Writers of the Holocaust

Much of what we know about the Nazi persecution of the Jews comes from writers who survived the Holocaust. Elie Wiesel (1928–) endured captivity at two Nazi concentration camps. Wiesel's book Night is an autobiographical account of his imprisonment. Anne Frank (1929–1945) wrote a diary of her family's two years in hiding, but died in a concentration camp.

Big Idea 3

The United States and the World

1 Can you remember where you were when you learned of the 9/11 terrorist attacks? Psychologists describe how a deeply felt or traumatic event can produce an intense "flashbulb memory." For millions in the U.S., the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, December 7, 1941, produced such a memory.

2 The Good War

World War II has become enshrined in American public memory as the "good war"—a heroic crusade against an evil enemy. However, most people in the U.S. were strongly opposed to military involvement following the outbreak of war in Europe in September 1939. This attitude changed abruptly after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, and the U.S. mobilized for war against the Axis powers. On the battlefront, U.S. forces turned the tide in Europe and the Pacific and played a crucial role in the victory of the Allies. At home, U.S. workers quickly transformed the U.S. economy into the most productive and efficient war machine in the world.

> "We are now in this war. We are all in it—all the way. Every single man, woman, and child is a partner in the most tremendous undertaking of our American history."
>
> —Franklin D. Roosevelt, wartime radio broadcast December 9, 1941

Tension on the Home Front

Wartime production helped restore prosperity to the United States after the long Depression. Minorities shared in this wartime prosperity, but racism and ethnic animosities persisted. After Pearl Harbor, the U.S. gathered 120,000 people of Japanese ancestry—77,000 of whom were U.S. citizens—and forced them into internment camps in early 1942. The renewed migration of African Americans from the South to big cities in the North and West sometimes resulted in racial violence, as in Detroit, where 25 African Americans and 9 whites were killed during riots in June, 1943. During that same month, riots in Los Angeles occurred after hundreds of U.S. soldiers and sailors attacked a group of young Mexican American men.

The Holocaust ☆

After seizing power in the 1930s, the Nazis began a brutal campaign of violence against Jews and other groups that they considered subhuman. During the early years of the war, Nazis rounded up and shot large numbers of Jews, Communists, Unitarians, Gypsies, and Slavs. Later, they expanded this program of genocide into the "final solution," a huge project of "ethnic cleansing" that involved a network of death camps in which millions of disabled persons, Jews, Poles, Russians, Gypsies, and other non-Aryans were systematically killed. In only a few years, Jewish communities in Europe that had existed for more than 1,000 years were obliterated in what has become known as the Holocaust.

The Cold War

The years after World War II brought changes to the U.S. Many began to challenge racial discrimination. Devastation in Europe allowed U.S. industries to dominate world markets, and the wartime economic boom continued through the 1950s. The U.S. and the Soviet Union, however—wartime allies against the Axis Powers—became tense rivals in a global power struggle between capitalism and communism. The two superpowers never went to war, but they developed and stockpiled nuclear weapons. An anxious world now lived under a new cloud—the mushroom cloud of the atomic age.

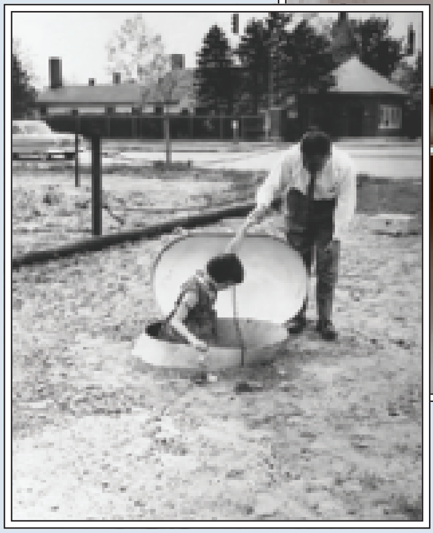
Writing Practice

Research To aid students' understanding of World War II and its aftermath, have students choose one of the subheads as a research topic. Tell students to use a variety of sources and include them in their reports:

- a bibliography of sources
- images of the time period with original captions
- a written summary of their research

Have students arrange their material on a large piece of poster board and make a presentation to the class.

Family in Bomb Shelter, 1955. Black and white photograph.



Father and Daughter Entering Bomb Shelter, 1955. Black and white photograph.

from "The Four Freedoms" by Franklin D. Roosevelt

In the future days, which we seek to make secure, we look forward to a world founded upon four essential human freedoms.

The first is freedom of speech and expression—everywhere in the world.

The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way everywhere in the world.

The third is freedom from want, which, translated into world terms, means economic understandings which will secure to every nation a healthy peacetime life for its inhabitants everywhere in the world.

The fourth is freedom from fear—which, translated into world terms, means a worldwide reduction of armaments to such a point and in such a thorough fashion that no nation will be in a position to commit an act of physical aggression against any neighbor—anywhere in the world.

That is no vision of a distant millennium. It is a definite basis for a kind of world attainable in our own time and generation. That kind of world is the very antithesis of the so-called new order of tyranny which the dictators seek to create with the crash of a bomb. 3

Reading Check

Analyze Cause and Effect How did World War II lead to the development of the United States as a superpower?

Teach

Reading Check

Answer: The United States became a superpower as a result of several factors: its crucial role in the victory of the Allies, its continued economic success after World War II, and its domination of world markets.

Literary Element 3

Structure The particular order or pattern a writer uses to present ideas is called structure. Depending on the writer's purpose and the genre, the structure may vary. Listing information or using cause and effect are two ways to present a topic. Ask: How does Roosevelt structure "The Four Freedoms" speech? (He lists the freedoms he believes the world has a right to enjoy.)

View the Photograph

Fear of nuclear war prompted some people to build underground bomb shelters. Civil defense plans were begun nationwide, and some high school students were required to monitor observation posts as part of an early warning system in case of an air attack.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Remind students that a good strategy to use when approaching a selection with unfamiliar elements is to vary reading rate. Instruct students to slow down to improve comprehension when the text is difficult and to read more quickly when the material contains familiar words and concepts. Ask students to make a note each time they encounter a difficult passage. After they have read the selection once, students should go back to the places they noted, carefully reading them again and paraphrasing to enhance comprehension.

Assess/Close

Legacy of the Period

Ask: In what ways does your own community affect your life and the lives of those around you? (Students may discuss how the values they were brought up with reflect the values in their community.)

Cultural and Literary Links

As students read the unit, suggest that they look for ways in which these authors have influenced today's writers.

Activities

1. Follow Up Have students discuss their answers with partners or in small groups. Each grouping can become experts on one question by returning to it throughout the unit and sharing their findings with the class.
2. Musical Periods Each member could focus on a specific artist or musical style. When presenting to the class, students should explain connections between the artist or musical style and the time period or geographic region.
3. Visual Literacy Students could create a slide show of their images. Students could also propose new art projects for their local community.
4. Take Notes Show students how to use the graphic organizer. Students could study their own community, report their findings, and propose a solution.

FOLDABLES® Study Organizer

Four-Tab Book Have students make and label the Four-Tab Book as shown. Then have them use it to organize information they learn about each literary genre.

WRAP-UP

Legacy of the Period

Beginning in the 1930s, Regionalism reasserted itself in the face of economic difficulties. Distrustful of big business and modern culture, some Regionalist writers found moral strength and universal significance in the lives and values of ordinary people in the United States. Other writers, particularly in the South, explored how their region's history and culture defined and distorted people's lives. Their focus on the macabre, which is often called Southern Gothic, had a significant influence on subsequent American literature.

The major global struggles of the period from the 1930s to the 1960s—World War II and the Cold War—shaped the contemporary world. The position of the United States as an economic and military superpower was established during this period and the nuclear arms race began. The Holocaust led to the founding of the State of Israel, which continues to be a source of tension and hostility in the Middle East.

Cultural and Literary Links

- John Steinbeck's Tom Joad, the main character of The Grapes of Wrath, was celebrated as a folk hero by American progressives such as Woody Guthrie, who wrote a ballad about him.
- The influence of William Faulkner on both American and foreign writers has been enormous. Among the most prominent world writers who have acknowledged his influence are the Colombian writer Gabriel García Márquez and the Indian writer R. K. Narayan.

LOG ON Literature Online

Unit Resources For additional skills practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Activities

Choose one of the following activities to explore and develop as you read this unit.

1. Follow Up Go back to the Looking Ahead on page 851 and answer the questions.
2. Contrast Musical Periods Work with a small group to research music from one of the decades from the 1930s to 1960s. Find connections among the social, cultural, and musical styles of the decade that you choose. For example, you might research the songs of Woody Guthrie about the Dust Bowl period. Present your findings to the class, and, if possible, play recordings of some of the music.
3. Build Visual Literacy One of the New Deal's enduring cultural programs was the decoration of public buildings (often post offices) throughout the United States with murals and sculptures. View and take photographs of examples in your area of the art produced by the Works Progress Administration (WPA). Assemble a photo album to present to the class.
4. Take Notes Use this graphic organizer to keep track of the four literary genres in this unit.

FOLDABLES Study Organizer FOUR-TAB BOOK

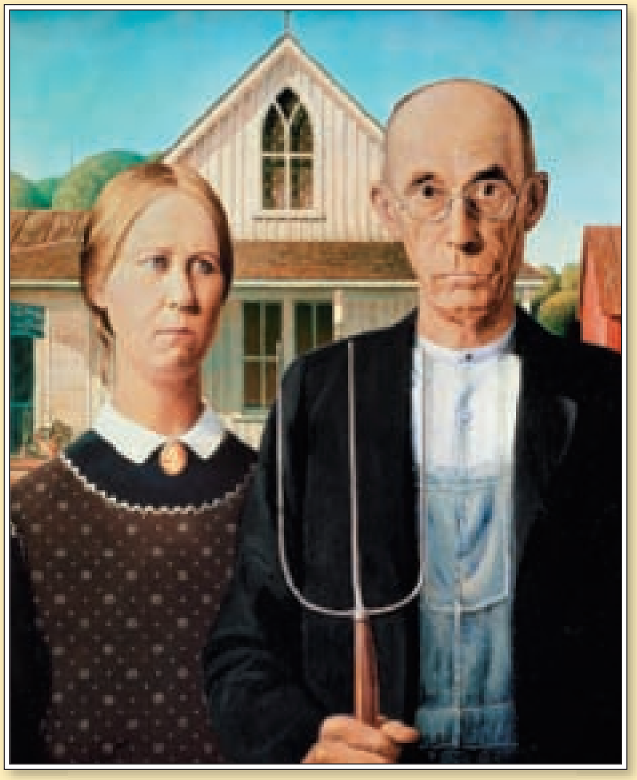
PART 1

The New Regionalism and the City



American Gothic, 1930. Grant Wood. Oil on beaverboard, 29 x 25 in. Art Institute of Chicago.

View the Art In this famous painting, Wood has chosen to portray his subjects as strong, restrained, and proud. How might these characteristics reflect the values of many Americans in urban and rural settings during the mid-twentieth century? ★

> "Not everything that is faced can be changed, > but nothing can be changed until it is faced." 1
>
> —James Baldwin

UNIT SIX

PART 1

Analyze and Extend

Reading Strategy 1

Evaluate Direct students to read the quotation from James Baldwin. Explain that in his writing Baldwin portrayed the economic and emotional devastation brought about by racial prejudice. Say: Explain Baldwin's meaning in your own words. (Baldwin says that people must face up to the need for change before change can take place.)

View the Art ★

Answer: Americans had to be strong and restrained to live through the Great Depression and they were proud of the values they had stood up for in World War II.

In American Gothic, Grant Wood portrayed his own region, the American midwest, in a style of painting he had learned in Europe.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Explain that the word gothic in the painting's title refers to a style of architecture. Here, the word style refers to certain shapes and materials used at different times in history. The gothic style started in the twelfth century in France. Huge, ornate cathedrals were built with tall, pointed arches in the walls, ceilings, and windows. In the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, this style was revived in Britain and United States. Wood's title refers to this style, which was used in the design of the farmhouse's upper window. Have students look for and name other long, narrow shapes in the painting that are reminders of the gothic style. (the farmer's faces, the pitchfork, the woman's brooch)

For additional support for English Learners, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 19.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 53

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 79

Or point out that some recollections are more vivid than others. Tell students that in this story, John Steinbeck uses sensory language to present a memory of the fictional narrator. Ask: What memories of people, places, or events are vivid in your mind? Why do you think particular memories remain strong?

Before You Read

Breakfast

Meet John Steinbeck
(1902–1968)

On October 25, 1962, during the Cuban missile crisis, John Steinbeck turned on his television set to see "if the world was still turning." He was greeted by a news flash announcing that he had just been awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature. Often during his long career, Steinbeck enjoyed both critical acclaim and enormous popularity.

> "The writer is delegated to declare and to celebrate man's proven capacity for greatness of heart and spirit—for gallantry in defeat, for courage, compassion, and love."
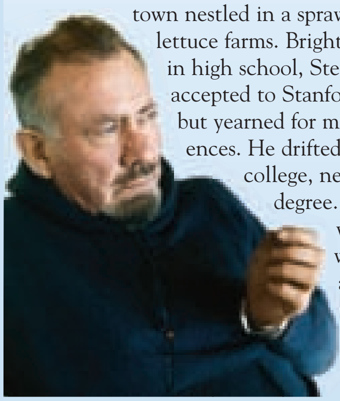
>
> —John Steinbeck
> from his Nobel Prize banquet speech

Crusader for Social Justice John Steinbeck was born and raised in Salinas, California, a small town nestled in a sprawling valley of lettuce farms. Bright and popular in high school, Steinbeck was accepted to Stanford University but yearned for more life experiences. He drifted in and out of college, never earning a degree. Instead he wrote and worked, taking an assortment of jobs that included ranch hand, fruit picker, factory worker, sales clerk, freelance newspaper writer, construction worker, and farm laborer.



These life experiences furnished Steinbeck with material for his novels and stories. His fourth work, the novel Tortilla Flat (1935), was his first to receive public acclaim. Set in his familiar Salinas Valley, it vividly and humorously depicted the joys and sorrows of a group of unemployed men. Several literary successes followed it: In Dubious Battle (1936), Of Mice and Men (1937), and Travels with Charley (1962).

Steinbeck's fiction offers a strong sense of social justice, a heightened sensitivity to the colors and textures of the U.S. landscape, and compelling plots. His characters often are society's forgotten people, struggling to survive and to preserve their humanity amid harrowing social and environmental conditions. Memorable and authentic, Steinbeck's characters seem to step right off the page.

Literary Distinction Steinbeck wrote his masterpiece, The Grapes of Wrath (1939), when the United States was recovering from the Great Depression of the 1930s. This 1940 Pulitzer Prize winner traces a dispossessed Oklahoma family's migration to California in search of a better life. There the family and others like it suffer tragically from injustice meted out by powerful landowners and corrupt officials. Today The Grapes of Wrath is universally respected for its depiction of the individual's quest for justice and dignity.

A little more than two decades after publishing The Grapes of Wrath, Steinbeck was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature. Six years after receiving this award, Steinbeck died in New York City. He remains one of the most popular and respected authors of the twentieth century.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about John Steinbeck, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Selection Skills

Breakfast

Literary Elements
- Implied Theme (SE pp. 867 870, 871; TE p. 869)
- Tone (SE p. 871)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Write a Report (SE p. 872)
- Historical Narrative (TE p. 868)
- Use Good and Well (TE p. 870)

Vocabulary Skills
- Word Usage (SE pp. 867, 872)
- Academic Vocabulary (SE p. 872)

Reading Skills
- Connect to Personal Experience (SE pp. 867-869, 872)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

When have you benefited from the kindness of strangers? Make a list of the five most significant experiences you can recall.

Build Background

This story is set in northern California in the 1930s. Steinbeck's odd jobs during the early 1920s gave him a firsthand look at the desperate working and living conditions forced upon most farm laborers. These observations helped Steinbeck develop the themes and plots of many of his major works. He wrote about the working person's quest for dignity and about the stark challenges presented by nature, society, and fate.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Return to Regionalism

As you read, ask yourself, What does Steinbeck reveal about the values of ordinary working people?

Literary Element Implied Theme

The theme of a piece of literature is a dominant idea—often a universal message about life—that the writer communicates to the reader. Authors rarely state a theme outright. Instead they use an implied theme, letting the main idea or message reveal itself through events, dialogue, or descriptions. As you read, ask yourself, What details suggest the author's message about life?

Reading Strategy Connect to Personal Experience

When you connect to personal experience, you link what you read to events in your own life or to other selections you've read. By connecting events, emotions, and characters to your own life, you create meaning in a selection and recall information and ideas better. To apply this strategy, ask yourself: Do I know someone like this? Have I ever felt this way? What else have I read that is like this selection?

Tip: Note Familiar Details Use a chart like the one below to record connections between your experiences and details in the story.

Story Details	My Experiences
encounter with a family camping out	Last summer I met other campers at a state park.

Learning Objectives

For pages 866–872

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing theme.

Reading: Connecting to personal experience.

Writing: Writing a report.

Vocabulary

scuffle (skuf´ əl) v. to move with a slow, heavy, shuffling gait; p. 868 The losing players lowered their eyes and scuffled down the ramp to the locker room.

dissipate (dis´ ə pāt´) v. to cause to scatter and gradually vanish; to break up and drive off; p. 868 As the fog slowly dissipated, more and more of the road ahead became visible.

avert (ə vurt´) v. to turn away or aside; p. 869 Terribly upset, the bystander averted her eyes from the car wreck.

Tip: Word Usage When you encounter new words, it might help you to answer a specific question about the word. Example: Name a situation where you might have to avert your eyes. You might have to avert your eyes if a bright light shines in your face.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Students may more readily visualize this breakfast scene if they are familiar with some of the gestures the narrator mentions. Preteach the following terms from the story:

"rubbed my hands"

"hunched my shoulders"

"scuffled my feet"

Have students demonstrate each gesture. Once students have grasped what each gesture looks like, ask the following questions to reinforce comprehension:

In what situations might a person rub his or her hands?

What can it mean when a person hunches his or her shoulders?

Why would people scuffle their feet?

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

"Breakfast" describes an early-morning encounter in northern California during the Great Depression. The narrator comes across a family of migrant workers. A young mother is fixing breakfast. With her are a baby, an older man, and a younger man. The younger man kindly offers to help the narrator find a job. The narrator remembers the encounter as one "of great beauty" that gives him a "rush of warmth."

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 20–25.

Vocabulary

Word Forms Point out that the three verbs in the vocabulary list have a noun form.

Ask: Which word is spelled the same as a noun and a verb? (scuffle) Which noun form ends in -tion? (dissipation)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask: Would you try to scuffle, dissipate, or avert an accident? (avert)

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Predict Ask: On the basis of the first paragraph, the use of the word curious, and the title, what can you predict about the story? (The tone will be pleasant, and the story will be a memory about a breakfast. The use of the word curious implies something special or unusual.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 27.

Reading Strategy 2

Connect to Personal Experience Answer: Students should provide specific details in recounting their pleasant memories.

Cultural History ☆

Homelessness The campsite in this story is, in fact, the family's home. During the Great Depression, many Americans were homeless and had to live in tents near wherever they could find work. They stayed as long as the work lasted and then moved on.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 6.7
DRP: 52
Lexile: 950

Breakfast

John Steinbeck

1 This thing fills me with pleasure. I don't know why, I can see it in the smallest detail. I find myself recalling it again and again, each time bringing more detail out of a sunken memory, remembering brings the curious warm pleasure.

It was very early in the morning. The eastern mountains were black-blue, but behind them the light stood up faintly colored at the mountain rims with a washed red, growing colder, grayer and darker as it went up and overhead until, at a place near the west, it merged with pure night.

And it was cold, not painfully so, but cold enough so that I rubbed my hands and shoved them deep into my pockets, and I hunched my shoulders up and scuffled my feet on the ground. Down in the valley where I was, the earth was that lavender gray of dawn. I walked along a country road and ahead of me I saw a tent that was only a little lighter gray than the ground. ☆ Beside the tent there was a flash of orange fire seeping out of the cracks of an old rusty iron stove. Gray smoke spurted up out of the stubby stovepipe, spurted up a long way before it spread out and dissipated.

2 Connect to Personal Experience What pleasant memories can you recall in great detail?

Vocabulary

scuffle (skuf´ əl) v. to move with a slow, heavy, shuffling gait dissipate (dis´ ə pāt´) v. to cause to scatter and gradually vanish; to break up and drive off

Writing Practice

Historical Context The camp in this story reflects the plight of migrant laborers during the Depression. Have students imagine that, over breakfast, one of the family members talks to the narrator about his or her life both in the camp and before arriving in the camp. Tell students to put themselves in the place of that character and write a brief narrative, explaining what happened that brought the person to this place. Students may address such questions as these: What made the person move from his or her original home? How did the person get to California? What does he or she expect now? Students may make inferences from details in the story; they may also refer to the unit introduction for background.

3 I saw a young woman beside the stove, really a girl. She was dressed in a faded cotton skirt and waist.[1] As I came close I saw that she carried a baby in a crooked arm and the baby was nursing, its head under her waist out of the cold. The mother moved about, poking the fire, shifting the rusty lids of the stove to make a greater draft, opening the oven door; and all the time the baby was nursing, but that didn't interfere with the mother's work, nor with the light quick gracefulness of her movements. There was something very precise and practiced in her movements. The orange fire flicked out of the cracks in the stove and threw dancing reflections on the tent.

> The orange fire flicked out of the cracks in the stove and threw dancing reflections on the tent.

I was close now and I could smell frying bacon and baking bread, the warmest, pleasantest odors I know. From the east the light grew swiftly. I came near to the stove and stretched my hands out to it and shivered all over when the warmth struck me. Then the tent flap jerked up and a young man came out and an older man followed him. They were dressed in new blue dungarees[2] and in new dungaree coats with the brass buttons shining. They were sharp-faced men, and they looked much alike.

The younger had a dark stubble beard and the older had a gray stubble beard. Their heads and faces were wet, their hair dripped with water, and water stood out on their stiff beards and their cheeks shone with water. Together they stood looking quietly at the lightening east; they yawned together and looked at the light on the hill rims. They turned and saw me.

"Morning," said the older man. His face was neither friendly nor unfriendly.

"Morning, sir," I said.

"Morning," said the young man.

The water was slowly drying on their faces. They came to the stove and warmed their hands at it.

The girl kept to her work, her face averted and her eyes on what she was doing. Her hair was tied back out of her eyes with a string and it hung down her back and swayed as she worked. She set tin cups on a big packing box, set tin plates and knives and forks out too. Then she scooped fried bacon out of the deep grease and laid it on a big tin platter, and the bacon cricked[3] and rustled as it grew crisp. She opened the rusty oven door and took out a square pan full of high big biscuits.

When the smell of that hot bread came out, both of the men inhaled deeply.

The elder man turned to me, "Had your breakfast?"

"No."

"Well, sit down with us, then."

That was the signal. We went to the packing case and squatted on the ground about it. The young man asked, "Picking cotton?"

"No."

"We had twelve days' work so far," the young man said.

---

1. Here, a waist is a blouse.
2. Dungarees are blue denim pants.
3. Here, cricked means "turned or twisted."

4 Connect to Personal Experience Why do odors leave a lasting impression in one's memory?

5 Return to Regionalism What does the young man's comment reveal about economic conditions for ordinary workers during the Great Depression?

Vocabulary

avert (ə vurt´) v. to turn away or aside

Teach

Literary Element 3

Implied Theme Point out that the theme of a work can be implied through details and descriptions. Here, Steinbeck paints an appealing picture of the campsite as a place of warmth and goodness. Ask: What are some of the ways Steinbeck establishes a theme? (The mother nursing a baby, the aroma of the breakfast, the illumination of the scene by the dawn, and the stove all convey warmth and comfort.)

Reading Strategy 4

Connect to Personal Experience Answer: Students may respond that odors are powerful sensory stimuli and therefore are connected strongly with particular experiences.

Big Idea 5

Return to Regionalism
Answer: It reveals that ordinary workers had difficulty finding steady work during the Great Depression.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging To help students identify an implied idea or theme, tell them that an idea that is implied is suggested or hinted at, not directly stated. Help students determine the message the author is suggesting by taking them through these steps:

1. Ask students to identify some of the words and phrases that appeal to the senses. Make a chart on the board to record the details:

Smells	Tastes	Feelings	Sights	Sounds

2. When students have listed several examples of each, ask: What is the general effect on the narrator of these details? (The narrator finds them enjoyable and satisfying.)
3. Ask students to summarize the way the family members behave toward the narrator. (They are friendly and generous.)
4. Then ask students to decide what message all of these details suggest or hint at. This is the implied theme. (People can be warm and giving despite their own plight.)

Teach

Big Idea 1

Return to Regionalism Answer: The family has struggled to earn enough money to buy food.

APPROACHING Ask students to identify the sentence that suggests they had not been eating well until recently. ("The young man said 'We been eating good for twelve days.'" This sentence suggests that before twelve days ago they did not eat well.)

Reading Strategy 2

Summarize Ask: What are some of the reasons the narrator's experience was pleasant? (The family was kind to the narrator; the family seemed happy even though they were poor; the breakfast was appetizing.)

Literary Element 3

Implied Theme Answer: It suggests that the family's kindness deeply affected the narrator.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 30.

The girl spoke from the stove. "They even got new clothes."

The two men looked down at their new dungarees and they both smiled a little.

The girl set out the platter of bacon, the brown high biscuits, a bowl of bacon gravy and a pot of coffee, and then she squatted down by the box too. The baby was still nursing, its head up under her waist out of the cold. I could hear the sucking noises it made.

We filled our plates, poured bacon gravy over our biscuits and sugared our coffee. The older man filled his mouth full and he chewed and chewed and swallowed. Then he said, "God Almighty, it's good," and he filled his mouth again.

The young man said, "We been eating good for twelve days." 1

We all ate quickly, frantically, and refilled our plates and ate quickly again until we were full and warm. The hot bitter coffee scalded our throats. We threw the last little bit with the grounds in it on the earth and refilled our cups.

There was color in the light now, a reddish gleam that made the air seem colder. The two men faced the east and their faces were lighted by the dawn, and I looked up for a moment and saw the image of the mountain and the light coming over it reflected in the older man's eyes.

Then the two men threw the grounds from their cups on the earth and they stood up together. "Got to get going," the older man said.

The younger turned to me. "'Fyou want to pick cotton, we could maybe get you on."

"No. I got to go along. Thanks for breakfast."

The older man waved his hand in a negative. "O.K. Glad to have you." They walked away together. The air was blazing with light at the eastern skyline. And I walked away down the country road.

That's all. I know, of course, some of the reasons why it was pleasant. But there was some element of great beauty there that makes the rush of warmth when I think of it. 2 3

1 Return to Regionalism What can you infer about the family's experiences until recently?

Implied Theme How does this detail provide a clue to the theme of the story? 3

Grammar Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW

Use Good and Well The words good and well pose a common usage challenge. Write the following sentence from "Breakfast" on the board: "We been eating good for twelve days." Focus attention on the misuse of the word good. Guide students to identify good as an adjective and not an adverb.

Then write the following sentences on the board and have students identify the correct word in each:

1. The child behaved (good, well). (well)
2. The coffee smelled (good, well). (good)
3. The new job paid (good, well). (well)

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. How did you react to the characters in this story? Explain.
2. (a)What are the first things the narrator describes? (b)What do these descriptions tell you about the narrator?
3. (a)What observations does the narrator make about the family of migrant workers? (b)What seems to be important to the family? Explain.
4. (a)What does the narrator say about his memory at the end of the story? (b)What might his attachment to this memory suggest about his life? What deeper understanding or awareness of life does he seem to gain?

Analyze and Evaluate

5. Steinbeck wrote about migrant workers who lived in small, supportive communities. In what ways does he portray the narrator as part of such a supportive community?
6. The reader never learns why the narrator is walking on a country road or where he is going. Why do you think Steinbeck chose not to reveal much about the narrator?

Connect

7. Big Idea Return to Regionalism Which values of migrant people does Steinbeck highlight in this story?
8. Connect to Today When do you think a group of people today might offer to share a meal with a stranger? Explain.

Literary Element Implied Theme

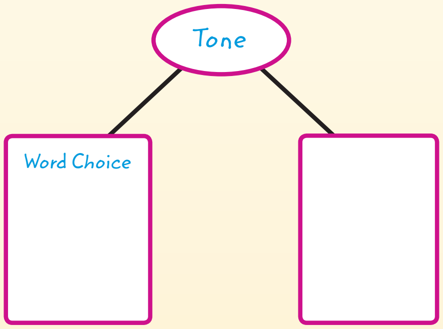
In "Breakfast," the implied theme is built around the narrator's warm recollection of an encounter with a family of migrant workers.

1. What is the implied theme, or message about life, in this selection?
2. What details and descriptions support this theme?

Review: Tone

As you learned on page 133, tone is a reflection of a writer's or a speaker's attitude toward the subject matter, as conveyed through elements such as word choice, punctuation, sentence structure, and figures of speech. A writer's tone might convey a variety of attitudes, such as sympathy, objectivity, or humor.

Partner Activity With a partner, examine the word choice and the dialogue in "Breakfast." Create a chart like the one started below, and fill it in with examples of effective word choice and dialogue. Then answer the following question: What tone is conveyed by the family's words and actions?



After You Read

Assess

1. Students may note that the characters are warm and generous; sharing their food with a stranger is impressive.
2. (a) The sunrise, the mountains, the temperature, and the family and its early-morning activities (b) He derives pleasure from simple sights.
3. (a) He notes their appearance, their demeanor, and their actions. (b) The family values work, basic needs, and food.
4. (a) The memory is pleasant and contains "some element of great beauty." (b) The narrator's life is hard; simple kindnesses are appreciated. He may realize that kindness gives life warmth.
5. The narrator does not hesitate to warm his hands at the fire. The family shares food and offers to help him find work.
6. The narrator becomes a universal figure who serves as the eyes and ears of the reader.
7. He highlights that they are hardworking, thankful, and generous. They willingly show hospitality to a stranger.
8. Some people would offer to share a meal or to give money if they saw a person was in need, but others might feel suspicious or cautious about the stranger's presence.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 235–236.

Review: Tone

The tone is pleasant, even optimistic, as the family enjoys and shares its meal and expresses thanks.

Progress Check

Can students identify an implied theme?

If No → See Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 26.

After You Read

Assess

Reading Strategy

1. Students may say that they related most strongly to the family's sharing their breakfast with a hungry stranger.
2. Students should mention specific insights about their personal experiences that have helped them understand the literary work and themselves better.

Vocabulary

1. I would walk slowly and heavily.
2. If a substance dissipated in water, it would scatter and disappear.
3. I would avert myself from a situation that would result in my punishment.

Academic Vocabulary

Trigonometry poses the greatest challenge to me, as I am not as capable in math as in other subjects.

For grammar practice, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 29.

To create custom assessments using software, use ExamView Assessment Suite.

Reading Strategy Connect to Personal Experience

Connecting to personal experience involves drawing parallels between the people, places, and events in the story and the people, places, and events in your own life. Review the chart you filled in as you read "Breakfast."

1. To which details in the story did you relate most strongly?
2. What new insights about your experiences did you discover by connecting them to people and events in this story?

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Word Usage Respond to these statements to help you explore the meanings of vocabulary words from the selection.

1. Explain how you would walk if you scuffled.
2. Describe how a substance would appear if it dissipated in water.
3. Give an example of a situation that you might want to avert.

Academic Vocabulary

John Steinbeck captures the challenge of surviving as a migrant worker in the Dust Bowl and the Great Depression.

Challenge is an academic word. In an educational setting, a teacher may say that it is a challenge to maintain order in a classroom with students who lack discipline.

To further explore the meaning of this word, answer the following question: Which subject poses the greatest challenge to you as a student, and why?

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Connect to Math

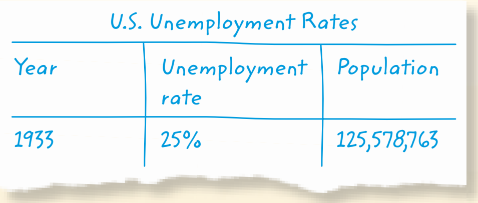
Write a Report

Assignment The Depression affected the economies of nations worldwide from 1929 to 1939. Millions were unemployed. Write a short report about the economic effects of the Depression in the U.S. Include a chart or graph with statistics on unemployment, wages, or homelessness during the 1930s. Compare these statistics to today.

Investigate Use more than one reliable source for statistics. Consult U.S. government Web sites, such as the Bureau of Labor Statistics or Census Bureau. Keep a bibliography of your sources.

Create Create a chart or graph of the statistics you discover. For example, place years on the x-axis and rates of unemployment or homelessness on the y-axis. If you create a chart, put years in one column and statistics in another. You may also want to include columns in your chart for the value of the dollar and the population during these years. Without considering inflation and population growth, your statistics may appear to be skewed. An example is provided below.



U.S. Unemployment Rates

Year	Unemployment rate	Population
1933	25%	125,578,763

Report If possible, use word-processing or spreadsheet software to make your chart look professional. Alongside your data, include a summary and analysis of the short-term and long-term effects of the Depression. Consider the impact it had on Americans' lives. Integrate any new math, historical, or sociological terms into your report.

Connect to Math

Evaluate students' reports based on these criteria:

- Does student provide statistics or estimates of unemployment, homelessness, or wages during the years of the Great Depression?
- Has the student researched reliable sources such as federal government Web sites or encyclopedias?
- Does the student's report include visual aids or media?

Vocabulary Workshop

Roots, Prefixes, and Suffixes

Learning Objectives

In this workshop, you will focus on the following objectives:

Vocabulary: Understanding word parts: roots, prefixes, and suffixes.

Literature Connection One way to determine the meaning of an unfamiliar word is to analyze its parts.

> "The girl kept to her work, her face averted and her eyes on what she was doing."
>
> —John Steinbeck, from "Breakfast"

The Latin root vert means "turn." It is a common root, found in the words averse, aversion, reverse, subvert, divert, and others. The prefix a- can mean "in the state or condition of"; and the suffix -ed shows past tense; so an averted face is turned away.

Recognizing some common Greek and Latin prefixes, suffixes, and word roots or base words will help you understand what you read.

Prefixes	Roots	Suffixes
geo- Earth	graph writing of	-ical having the nature of dis- the reverse of	place position	-ment the condition of being contra- against	dic(t) speak	-tion action or process of
in- within, into	spir breathe	-ed the past tense of a verb

Practice For each item below, refer to the prefixes, roots, and suffixes in the chart to help you select the best answer.

1. During the Great Depression, some authors wrote of particular geographical regions. Geographical regions are

a. particular times. b. beside the ocean. c. in the mountains. d. particular places on Earth.

2. John Steinbeck writes about the human cost of the Dust Bowl migrants' displacement from their homes. Displacement means

a. being moved away. b. being put in prison. c. being confused. d. being invited to stay.

3. Flannery O'Connor contradicted Northern critics who called her stories grotesque. O'Connor

a. agreed with her critics. b. disagreed with them. c. ignored them. d. complimented them.

4. Steinbeck drew inspiration from the migrants who shared their breakfast with him. The migrants

a. gave him more spirit. b. discouraged him. c. frightened him. d. did not impress him.

Affixes

A prefix is a word part that is inserted at the beginning of a word root or a base word to create a new meaning. A suffix is a combination of letters or a single letter added at the end of a base word or a word part. Prefixes and suffixes together are called affixes.

Tip

When you are asked for the meaning of a word that appears in a reading passage, check the word root, the prefix, and the suffix of the word. If you recognize the root, you can probably figure out what the word means.

Language Handbook

For more about prefixes and suffixes, see Language Handbook, p. R60.

Literature Online

Vocabulary For more vocabulary practice, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Vocabulary Workshop

Roots, Prefixes, and Suffixes

Focus

Point out to students that prefixes are included alphabetically among the word entries in most dictionaries. Have students look up the prefixes mis-, re-, and sub- in a dictionary and identify their meanings.

Teach

Word Parts Ask volunteers for examples of words that contain the prefixes in the left-hand column of the chart (geology, distract, contradict, inhabitant) and of words that contain the roots in the middle column. (graphic, placement, diction, respiration)

Assess

Practice

1. d
2. a
3. b
4. a

For additional vocabulary practice, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced Students may need to review the terms prefix, suffix, and word root. Help students remember the meaning of the word prefix by explaining that pre- means "before." Have students place the prefix pre- in front of these words: view, pay, arrange. Have volunteers explain how the meaning of the prefix changes the meaning of the word.

Explain that a root may occur at various places in a word. For example, the root scrib or script, meaning "to write," is in the words scribble, inscription, and describe. Have students brainstorm words that can be formed from the roots graph and spir. (photograph, graphic, inspire, spiritual)

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus Transparency 54

Daily Language Practice Transparency 80

Or ask: What does it mean to be eccentric? How do people in your community treat others they believe to be eccentric?

Have students discuss how a fictional character who was thought to be eccentric was treated by other people. Ask: How do you think eccentric people should be treated?

Before You Read

A Rose for Emily and Address upon Receiving the Nobel Prize in Literature

Meet William Faulkner

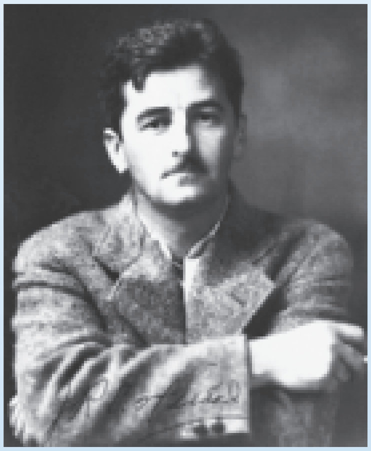
(1897–1962)

As a boy, William Faulkner did not seem destined for literary renown. He was both a high school and college dropout. His neighbors nicknamed him "Count No'count," and few guessed that this seemingly lazy youth was a literary genius who would capture the struggles of the human heart and immortalize a region of America.

Art Imitates Life Born in Albany, Mississippi, Faulkner moved when he was five with his family to Oxford, Mississippi, where his father could take advantage of his grandfather's connections.

Faulkner himself did not have the patience to deal with the monotony of steady work. One of his longest employments, almost three years, was as postmaster at the university in Oxford.

Although Faulkner read extensively, none of his reading concerned the history of the area where he lived. The flavor and settings of his stories were gleaned through word of mouth from the people around him.



Yoknapatawpha As a young man, Faulkner traveled abroad for some time and eventually landed in New Orleans, where he met Sherwood Anderson and other writers. It was here that he began to write seriously. His first book, a poetry collection entitled The Marble Faun, was less than successful. Anderson advised him to attempt fiction. Faulkner published his first novel, Soldier's Pay, in 1926, and his second novel, Mosquitoes, the following year.

> "I never read any history. I talked to people around who had lived through it, and I would pick it up—I was just saturated with it but never read about it."
>
> —William Faulkner

With his third novel, Sartoris, Faulkner found the formula that would place him among the greatest of American writers. He created the fictional world of Yoknapatawpha County, based on the region of northern Mississippi where he lived. Over the next thirty years, he explored the "history" of this county and its fictional inhabitants.

Faulkner's style can make his writing difficult to follow. He experimented with repetition, multiple points of view, and stream of consciousness. Because of the difficulty of his style, Faulkner was not widely read until The Portable Faulkner was published in 1946 and catapulted him to world fame. Three years later he won the Nobel Prize in Literature. Faulkner kept writing until his death.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about William Faulkner, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Selection Skills

A Rose for Emily and Address upon Receiving…

Literary Elements
- Foreshadowing (SE pp. 875, 877, 878, 880, 882, 886)
- Flashback (SE p. 886)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Expository Essay (SE p. 887)
- Degrees of Comparison (TE p. 876)
- Use Adjectives (TE p. 882)

Reading Skills
- Identify Sequence (SE pp. 875–877, 883, 886)
- Paraphrase (TE p. 884)

Vocabulary Skills
- Denotation and Connotation (SE pp. 875, 886)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (TE pp. 878, 881, 883)
- Oral Presentation (TE p. 880)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

How different can a person's public identity be from his or her private identity? Discuss this question with a small group. Consider why people might have several layers.

Build Background

Faulkner's writings draw upon his knowledge of genteel aristocrats, unsophisticated sharecroppers, and Native Americans, as well as African Americans who had endured first the dehumanization of slavery and then the discrimination of Jim Crow. The language in Faulkner's work reflects this context. Modern readers may be shocked or offended by his use of racial slurs in this selection. Faulkner, like Mark Twain, does not use this language to offend or shock. He uses it merely to reflect the language of the time and place he describes.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Return to Regionalism

As you read, ask yourself, How does Faulkner present details that describe a small southern town from one hundred years ago?

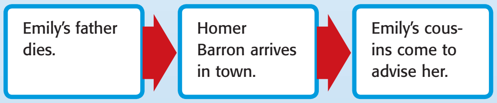
Literary Element Foreshadowing

Foreshadowing is the use of clues by the author to prepare readers for events that will happen later in the story. In "A Rose for Emily," for example, the bad smell coming from Miss Emily's house foreshadows death and decay. As you read, ask yourself, Which events might foreshadow important plot developments?

Reading Strategy Identify Sequence

Faulkner shifts time frames so often in "A Rose for Emily" that it can be difficult for readers to understand exactly when the events in the story take place. As you read, ask yourself, What is happening? To keep track of what happens, list the events as they occur in the narrative and then number them in the sequence they occur in Emily's life.

Tip: Make a Sequence Chart Use a sequence chart to help you keep track of events. Order the events as they occur in Emily's life. Use the list you wrote above to guide you.



Emily's father dies.
Homer Barron arrives in town.
Emily's cousins come to advise her.

Learning Objectives

For pages 875–886

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing foreshadowing.

Reading: Identifying sequence.

Vocabulary

sluggishly (slug´ ish lē) adv. slowly; without strength or energy; p. 877 The weary hiker crawled sluggishly into his tent.

vindicate (vin´ də kāt´) v. to justify; to prove correct in light of later circumstances; p. 879 Winning the competition vindicated her efforts.

haughty (hô´ tē) adj. conceited; arrogant; p. 880 The haughty king would never admit a mistake.

circumvent (sur´ kəm vent´) v. to get around or to avoid by clever maneuvering; p. 882 We had to circumvent the usual procedure in order to finish the job.

virulent (vir´ yə lənt) adj. extremely poisonous or harmful; p. 882 After World War I, a virulent strain of influenza killed millions.

Tip: Denotation and Connotation Words with the same dictionary definition can affect people differently. For example, sluggishly and slowly have similar meanings, but sluggishly has a stronger connotation.

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

After Miss Emily Grierson's death, flashbacks reveal details of her life. As a member of a prominent family, Emily has paid no taxes. A new generation of city officials unsuccessfully tries to collect them. After the death of her father, she had planned to marry a Yankee, but he disappeared. After her funeral, they find his remains in Emily's bed.

In his acceptance speech, Faulkner says that his award is not for him but for his work, which addresses the "universal truths" of the heart.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 32–37.

Vocabulary

Word Analysis Point out the prefix circum-, meaning "around," in circumvent. Students might recognize it in words from other subject areas. Ask: What math word describes the boundary of a circle? (circumference) What word from history would you use in discussing explorers? (circumnavigate)

APPROACHING Ask: Would you try to circumvent or circumnavigate a traffic jam? (circumvent)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 40.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Intermediate Faulkner's language and style are challenging. Present students with these words from the story:

decay; tarnished; vanquished; gross; insanity; despair; arsenic; acrid

Have them work in groups to determine meanings of the words using a dictionary. Then ask: Which words might be used in describing a setting for a story? (decay, tarnished, gross, acrid) Which words might refer to a character or a state of mind? (vanquished, gross, insanity, despair) Which word might suggest action? (vanquished)

Have them make predictions about the story, based on these words.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Visualize Have students carefully read the description of Miss Emily's house. Ask: What impression do you have of Miss Emily's house? How is it like her? (It is a decaying relic of a previous time, personified as "stubborn and coquettish.")

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 39.

Big Idea 2

Return to Regionalism
Answer: The town is small, and its citizens are interested in the affairs of their neighbors. There is still an apparent, though dwindling, respect for the upper class.

Reading Strategy 3

Identify Sequence Answer: The story begins with Emily's funeral; here the word alive and the use of the past perfect tense signal a shift to an earlier time.

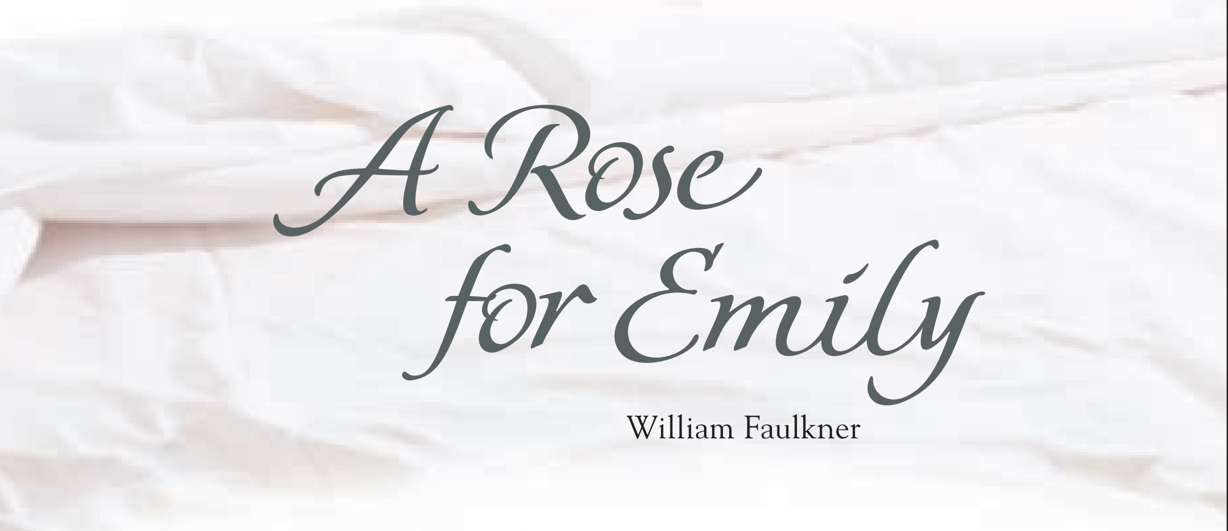
For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 5.9
DRP: 60
Lexile: 1120



A Rose for Emily

William Faulkner

When Miss Emily Grierson died, our whole town went to her funeral: the men through a sort of respectful affection for a fallen monument, the women mostly out of curiosity to see the inside of her house, which no one save an old man-servant—a combined gardener and cook—had seen in at least ten years. It was a big, squarish frame house that had once been white, decorated with cupolas[1] and spires and scrolled balconies in the heavily lightsome style of the seventies,[2] set on what had once been our most select street. But garages and cotton gins had encroached and obliterated 1 even the august[3] names of that neighborhood; only Miss Emily's house was left, lifting its stubborn and coquettish[4] decay above the cotton wagons and the gasoline pumps—an eyesore among eyesores. And now Miss Emily had gone to join the representatives of those august names where they lay in the cedar-bemused[5] cemetery among the ranked and anonymous graves of Union and Confederate soldiers who fell at the battle of Jefferson.

Alive, Miss Emily had been a tradition, a duty, and a care; a sort of hereditary obligation upon the town, dating from that day in 1894 when Colonel Sartoris, the mayor—he who fathered the edict that no Negro woman should appear on the streets without an apron—remitted her taxes, the dispensation dating from the death of her father on into perpetuity.[6] Not that Miss Emily would have accepted charity. Colonel Sartoris invented an involved tale to the effect that Miss Emily's father had loaned money to the town, which the town, as a matter of business, preferred this way of repaying. Only a man of Colonel Sartoris' generation and thought could have invented it, and only a woman could have believed it.

When the next generation, with its more modern ideas, became mayors and aldermen, this arrangement created some little dissatisfaction. On the first of the year they mailed her a tax notice. February came, and there was no

---

1. Cupolas are small, domed structures rising above a roof.
2. Lightsome means "light and graceful." Seventies refers to the 1870s.
3. August (ô gust') means "distinguished" or "prominent."
4. Coquettish (kō ket' ish) means "flirtatious."
5. Cedar-bemused means "lost among the cedar trees" (literally, "confused by cedars").
6. [remitted . . . perpetuity] This phrase means that Miss Emily was excused from paying taxes forever after her father's death.

2 Return to Regionalism What does the opening of "A Rose for Emily" tell you about the town and the type of people who live there?

Identify Sequence Which clues reveal that the narrator is moving into a flashback? 3

Grammar Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Degrees of Comparison Faulkner effectively uses adjectives and adverbs to create a striking picture of Emily's life. Remind students that the comparative and superlative forms of many modifiers are formed by adding -er and -est.

Create a chart on the board with columns headed "Positive," "Comparative," and "Superlative." Then ask volunteers to supply examples of modifiers from the selection. Refer to page R42 of the Language Handbook to review adjective types. Guide students in identifying the proper column for each modifier. Challenge them to provide the other two forms of each.

reply. They wrote her a formal letter, asking her to call at the sheriff's office at her convenience. A week later the mayor wrote her himself, offering to call or to send his car for her, and received in reply a note on paper of an archaic[7] shape, in a thin, flowing calligraphy[8] in faded ink, to the effect that she no longer went out at all. The tax notice was also enclosed, without comment.

They called a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen.[9] A deputation[10] waited upon her, knocked at the door through which no visitor had passed since she ceased giving china-painting lessons eight or ten years earlier. They were admitted by the old Negro into a dim hall from which a stairway mounted into still more shadow. It smelled of dust and disuse—a close, dank smell. The Negro led them into the parlor. It was furnished in heavy, leather-covered furniture. When the Negro opened the blinds of one window, they could see that the leather was cracked; and when they sat down, a faint dust rose sluggishly about their thighs, spinning with slow motes[11] in the single sun-ray. On a tarnished gilt[12] easel before the fireplace stood a crayon portrait of Miss Emily's father.

They rose when she entered—a small, fat woman in black, with a thin gold chain descending to her waist and vanishing into her belt, leaning on an ebony cane with a tarnished gold head. Her skeleton was small and spare; perhaps that was why what would have been merely plumpness in another was obesity in her. She looked bloated, like a body long submerged in motionless water, and of that pallid[13] hue. Her eyes, lost in the fatty ridges of her face, looked like two small pieces of coal pressed into a lump of dough as they moved from one face to another while the visitors stated their errand.

She did not ask them to sit. She just stood in the door and listened quietly until the spokesman came to a stumbling halt. Then they could hear the invisible watch ticking at the end of the gold chain.

Her voice was dry and cold. "I have no taxes in Jefferson. Colonel Sartoris explained it to me. Perhaps one of you can gain access to the city records and satisfy yourselves."

"But we have. We are the city authorities, Miss Emily. Didn't you get a notice from the sheriff, signed by him?"

"I received a paper, yes," Miss Emily said. "Perhaps he considers himself the sheriff . . . I have no taxes in Jefferson."

"But there is nothing on the books to show that, you see. We must go by the—"

"See Colonel Sartoris. I have no taxes in Jefferson."

"But, Miss Emily—"

"See Colonel Sartoris." (Colonel Sartoris had been dead almost ten years.) "I have no taxes in Jefferson. Tobe!" The Negro appeared. "Show these gentlemen out."

II

So she vanquished them, horse and foot, just as she had vanquished their fathers thirty years before about the smell. That was two years after her father's death and a short time after her sweetheart—the one we believed would marry her—had deserted her. After her father's death she went out very little; after her sweetheart went away, people hardly saw her at all. A few of the ladies had the temerity[14] to call,

---

[7] Here, archaic means "old-fashioned."

[8] Calligraphy is an elegant type of handwriting.

[9] The Board of Aldermen is the group formed by members of a city or town council.

[10] A deputation is a "a small group that represents a larger one."

[11] Motes are particles or specks, as of dust.

[12] Gilt means "covered with gold."

[13] Pallid means "lacking healthy color" or "pale."

[14] Temerity (tə mer′ ə tē) is excessive boldness.

4 Foreshadowing What might the painting foreshadow?

Vocabulary

sluggishly (slug′ ish lē) adv. slowly; without strength or energy

Identify Sequence By the time Emily had "vanquished" the town officials about the "smell," what significant events had already occurred in Emily's life? List them in order. 5

Teach

Literary Element 4

Foreshadowing Answer: The prominent display and the gold easel suggest the importance and authority of Emily's father. The painting may foreshadow her father's presence as a haunting, overprotective figure in her life.

Reading Strategy 5

Identify Sequence

Answer: Her father had died; then her sweetheart had left her.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging To help students grasp the sequence in this story, have them divide the events of the story into past and present, using a two-column chart, like the one shown. The starting event in the Present column is Miss Emily's funeral.

Past	Present
	Emily's funeral

Once students have identified the events that took place before Emily's funeral, they can go back through that list and number the events in order. Have students work in pairs or groups to complete this task. They can use their completed charts to develop a timeline for the story.

Teach

Literary Element 1

Foreshadowing Answer: The statement seems to anticipate more connections between Emily and "the gross, teeming world." Possibly, the story will reveal the reason for the smell.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask: Does reference to Emily's "high and mighty" family carry a positive or negative connotation? (negative) What might the townspeople's attitude foreshadow? (The townspeople would probably get satisfaction from something bad or unpleasant connected with the "high and mighty.")

Big Idea 2

Return to Regionalism

Ask: How does Judge Stevens's remark capture the flavor of the American South in the early 1900s? (The dialogue is passionate, yet also reflects the Southern emphasis on politeness.)

APPROACHING Have students find another example of dialogue that shows politeness and concern. ("I'd be the last one in the world to bother Miss Emily, but . . . ")

Language History ☆

Diction The use of an offensive word here is in keeping with the character and the specific historical time in which the story is set. It does not represent the author's own views or attitude.

Autumn Glory: The Old Mill, 1869. John Atkinson Grimshaw. Oil on canvas, 62.2 x 87.6 cm. Leeds Museums and Galleries, City Art Gallery, UK. ★

but were not received, and the only sign of life about the place was the Negro man—a young man then—going in and out with a market basket.

"Just as if a man—any man—could keep a kitchen properly," the ladies said; so they were not surprised when the smell developed. It was another link between the gross, teeming world and the high and mighty Griersons.

A neighbor, a woman, complained to the mayor, Judge Stevens, eighty years old.

"But what will you have me do about it, madam?" he said.

"Why, send her word to stop it," the woman said. "Isn't there a law?"

"I'm sure that won't be necessary," Judge Stevens said. "It's probably just a snake or a rat that nigger of hers killed in the yard. I'll speak ☆ to him about it."

The next day he received two more complaints, one from a man who came in diffident deprecation.[15] "We really must do something about it, Judge. I'd be the last one in the world to bother Miss Emily, but we've got to do something." That night the Board of Aldermen met—three graybeards and one younger man, a member of the rising generation.

"It's simple enough," he said. "Send her word to have her place cleaned up. Give her a certain time to do it in, and if she don't . . ."

"Dammit, sir," Judge Stevens said, "will you accuse a lady to her face of smelling bad?" 2

So the next night, after midnight, four men crossed Miss Emily's lawn and slunk about the house like burglars, sniffing along the base of the brickwork and at the cellar openings while

1 Foreshadowing What might this statement about the "smell" and Emily foreshadow?

---

[15] Diffident deprecation means "timid disapproval."

Reading Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Make Inferences In this story, characters as well as readers must make inferences. Judge Stevens infers that the smell coming from Miss Emily's house is caused by a dead animal. Ask: What leads him to make this inference? (The ladies think that Emily's manservant does not keep up the place very well. The judge assumes that Emily's servant killed a small animal in the yard and the animal is decaying.)

Ask: What further inference or prediction can you make, based on the foreshadowing hints and any other information you have? Have students support their inferences by citing information in the text.

one of them performed a regular sowing motion with his hand out of a sack slung from his shoulder. They broke open the cellar door and sprinkled lime there, and in all the outbuildings.[16] As they recrossed the lawn, a window that had been dark was lighted and Miss Emily sat in it, the light behind her, and her upright torso motionless as that of an idol. They crept quietly across the lawn and into the shadow of the locusts[17] that lined the street. After a week or two the smell went away.

That was when people had begun to feel really sorry for her. People in our town, remembering how old lady Wyatt, her great-aunt, had gone completely crazy at last, believed that the Griersons held themselves a little too high for what they really were. None of the young men were quite good enough for Miss Emily and such. We had long thought of them as a tableau,[18] Miss Emily a slender figure in white in the background, her father a spraddled[19] silhouette in the foreground, his back to her and clutching a horsewhip, the two of them framed by the backflung front door. So when she got to be thirty and was still single, we were not pleased exactly, but vindicated; even with insanity in the family she wouldn't have turned down all of her chances if they had really materialized.

When her father died, it got about that the house was all that was left to her; and in a way, people were glad. At last they could pity Miss Emily. Being left alone, and a pauper,[20] she had become humanized. Now she too would know the old thrill and the old despair of a penny more or less.

The day after his death all the ladies prepared to call at the house and offer condolence and aid, as is our custom. Miss Emily met them at the door, dressed as usual and with no trace of grief on her face. She told them that her father was not dead. She did that for three days, with the ministers calling on her, and the doctors, trying to persuade her to let them dispose of the body. Just as they were about to resort to law and force, she broke down, and they buried her father quickly.

We did not say she was crazy then. We believed she had to do that. We remembered all the young men her father had driven away, and we knew that with nothing left, she would have to cling to that which had robbed her, as people will.

III

She was sick for a long time. When we saw her again her hair was cut short, making her look like a girl, with a vague resemblance to those angels in colored church windows—sort of tragic and serene.

4 The town had just let the contracts for paving the sidewalks, and in the summer after her father's death they began the work. The construction company came with niggers and mules and machinery, and a foreman named Homer Barron, a Yankee—a big, dark, ready man, with a big voice and eyes lighter than his face. The little boys would follow in groups to hear him cuss the niggers, and the niggers singing in time to the rise and fall of picks. Pretty soon he knew everybody in town. Whenever you heard a lot of laughing anywhere about the square, Homer Barron would be in the center of the group. Presently we began to see him and Miss Emily on Sunday afternoons driving in the yellow-wheeled buggy and the matched team of bays from the livery stable.

---

[16] Outbuildings are separate buildings, such as a woodshed or barn, associated with a main building.

[17] Locusts are deciduous trees. Several varieties have thorns and fragrant flowers that hang down in clusters.

[18] A tableau (tab lō′) is a striking or artistic grouping of people or objects.

[19] Spraddled means "sprawled" or "spread wide apart."

[20] A pauper is a very poor person.

3 Return to Regionalism What does this passage reveal about the social and economic status of most people in the town as opposed to that of Miss Emily?

Vocabulary

vindicate (vin′ də kāt′) v. to justify; to prove correct in light of later circumstances

Teach

Big Idea 3

Return to Regionalism
Answer: The townspeople think that Emily holds too high an opinion of herself, so their economic status, and perhaps the social status of many, is probably not as high as hers.

Literary Element 4

Characterization Have students compare what they know about Emily with the way Homer Barron is characterized.

Ask: Do the two seem a likely match? (Possible response: Emily is characterized as reclusive; Barron is portrayed as remarkably outgoing. They seem an unlikely match.)

APPROACHING Have students cite specific behaviors or traits of each character and contrast them. (Emily doesn't accept visitors or respond to the townspeople; Homer enjoys being with groups of people and laughing a lot.)

View the Art ★

John Atkinson Grimshaw (1836–1883) was a British artist whose most famous works are his "moonlights," seascapes painted on the Yorkshire coast in northern England. Ask: What mood or atmosphere does this painting evoke? (Possible answers: mysterious, eerie, solemn)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Reading selected passages aloud will give students practice with reading fluency in English. Have students read paragraphs aloud with a partner. After each paragraph, have students stop and restate the paragraph in their own words.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Have students continue work on their sequence charts, incorporating the events following Emily's father's death, described on this page.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Return to Regionalism

Answer: Southern aristocrats normally would not associate with a Northerner, particularly a workman. Emily's action is considered shocking, even though she may be desperate for companionship.

ADVANCED Have students further explore the concept of noblesse oblige. Ask them to explain what it might mean in a social structure like Emily's and a society that values manners. (Emily would be expected to be courteous and respectful to those of other classes.)

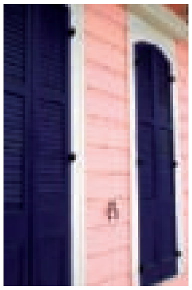
Literary Element 2

Irony

Ask: What is ironic about the label "For rats"? (Homer Barron, who has made Emily a "fallen" woman in the eyes of the town, might be considered a "rat.")

APPROACHING Remind students that irony is a contrast between what is stated or obvious and what the reader knows or thinks. Ask: Why might Homer be considered a "rat," and who might think of him this way? (A "rat" is someone who is disloyal or who has deceived someone. Emily or readers might see him this way.)

At first we were glad that Miss Emily would have an interest, because the ladies all said, "Of course a Grierson would not think seriously of a Northerner, a day laborer." But there were still others, older people, who said that even grief could not cause a real lady to forget noblesse oblige[21]—without calling it noblesse oblige. They just said, "Poor Emily. Her kinsfolk should come to her." She had some kin in Alabama; but years ago her father had fallen out with them over the estate of old lady Wyatt, the crazy woman, and there was no communication between the two families. They had not even been represented at the funeral.



Visual Vocabulary
Jalousies (jal′ ə sēz) are overlapping, adjustable slats that cover a door or window.

And as soon as the old people said, "Poor Emily," the whispering began. "Do you suppose it's really so?" they said to one another. "Of course it is. What else could . . ." This behind their hands; rustling of craned[22] silk and satin behind jalousies closed upon the sun of Sunday afternoon as the thin, swift clop-clop-clop of the matched team passed: "Poor Emily."

She carried her head high enough—even when we believed that she was fallen. It was as if she demanded more than ever the recognition of her dignity as the last Grierson; as if it had wanted that touch of earthiness to reaffirm her imperviousness. Like when she bought the rat poison, the arsenic. That was over a year after they had begun to say "Poor Emily," and while the two female cousins were visiting her.

"I want some poison," she said to the druggist. She was over thirty then, still a slight woman, though thinner than usual, with cold, haughty black eyes in a face the flesh of which was strained across the temples and about the eye-sockets as you imagine a lighthousekeeper's face ought to look. "I want some poison," she said.

"Yes, Miss Emily. What kind? For rats and such? I'd recom—"

"I want the best you have. I don't care what kind."

The druggist named several. "They'll kill anything up to an elephant. But what you want is—"

"Arsenic," Miss Emily said. "Is that a good one?"

"Is . . . arsenic? Yes, ma'am. But what you want—"

"I want arsenic."

The druggist looked down at her. She looked back at him, erect, her face like a strained flag. "Why, of course," the druggist said. "If that's what you want. But the law requires you to tell what you are going to use it for."

Miss Emily just stared at him, her head tilted back in order to look him eye for eye, until he looked away and went and got the arsenic and wrapped it up. The Negro delivery boy brought her the package; the druggist didn't come back. When she opened the package at home there was written on the box, under the skull and bones: "For rats." 2

IV

So the next day we all said, "She will kill herself"; and we said it would be the best thing. When she had first begun to be seen with Homer Barron, we had said, "She will marry him." Then we said, "She will persuade him yet," because Homer himself had remarked—

---

[21] The French expression noblesse oblige (nō bles′ ō blēzh′) suggests that those of high birth or rank have a responsibility to act kindly and honorably toward others.

[22] Craned means "stretched."

1 Return to Regionalism What does this comment suggest about the southern aristocratic attitude toward northerners? What does it imply about Emily's interest in Homer Barron?

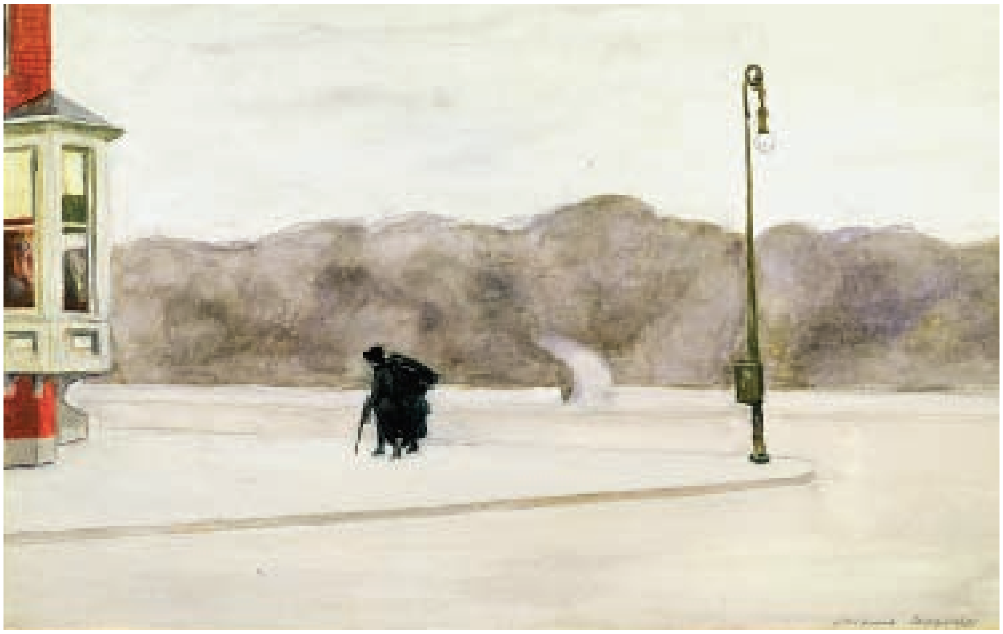
Vocabulary

haughty (hô′ tē) adj. conceited; arrogant

Speaking Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Oral Presentation The decaying Grierson family home is the centerpiece of the setting of "A Rose for Emily." In many communities across the country, similar Victorian-era mansions still stand. Many are in a state of disrepair, while others have been restored or remodeled.

Have students determine whether any such homes exist in their community or a nearby region. Then have students prepare and present oral reports on these houses, including visuals. Reports should answer the 5 Ws (who, what, where, when, why) about the houses and their history.



Day After the Funeral, 1925. Edward Hopper. Watercolor on paper. Private collection. James Goodman Gallery, NY. ★

he liked men, and it was known that he drank with the younger men in the Elks' Club—that he was not a marrying man. Later we said, "Poor Emily" behind the jalousies as they passed on Sunday afternoon in the glittering buggy, Miss Emily with her head high and Homer Barron with his hat cocked and a cigar in his teeth, reins and whip in a yellow glove.

Then some of the ladies began to say that it was a disgrace to the town and a bad example to the young people. The men did not want to interfere, but at last the ladies forced the Baptist minister—Miss Emily's people were Episcopal—to call upon her. He would never divulge what happened during that interview, but he refused to go back again. The next Sunday they again drove about the streets, and the following day the minister's wife wrote to Miss Emily's relations in Alabama.

So she had blood-kin under her roof again and we sat back to watch developments. At first nothing happened. Then we were sure that they were to be married. We learned that Miss Emily had been to the jeweler's and ordered a man's toilet set[23] in silver, with the letters H. B. on each piece. Two days later we learned that she had bought a complete outfit of men's clothing, including a nightshirt, and we said, "They are married." We were really glad. We were glad because the two female cousins were even more Grierson than Miss Emily had ever been.

So we were not surprised when Homer Barron—the streets had been finished some time since—was gone. We were a little disappointed that there was not a public blowing-off,[24] but we believed that he had 3 Return to Regionalism What does the town's involvement in Emily's affairs suggest about its morals and values? Why is Emily a threat?

---

[23] A toilet set is a set of articles used for personal grooming (hairbrush, comb, etc.).

[24] A blowing-off is a celebration.

Teach

Big Idea 3

Return to Regionalism
Answer: The town has conservative morals and values, and people are uncomfortable seeing a woman and a man together unless they intend to marry. Emily, by riding in public with Barron, sets a bad example and undermines the town's conservative beliefs.

View the Art ★

Edward Hopper (1882–1967) was the best-known American Realist of his time. During the 1920s and 1930s, he became famous for his stark portrayals of loneliness and alienation in American life.

Ask: What emotions do the figures in the painting suggest? (Possible answers: grief; loneliness)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Established Ask students to explain why the narrator and the townspeople thought Emily was married. (She is doing things a married woman would do for a husband, buying him clothes and the toilet set.) Then ask what these actions might foreshadow. (Emily will still be involved with Homer Barron in some serious way.)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Have students note the use of two terms on this page: people and blood-kin. Have them determine what these terms mean in this context. (These words refer to family members or relatives.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Foreshadowing Answer: The sentences reveal that Barron and Emily drop from sight at the same time. This might foreshadow that their relationship is not over, even though the townspeople do not see them together.

---

gone on to prepare for Miss Emily's coming, or to give her a chance to get rid of the cousins. (By that time it was a cabal,[25] and we were all Miss Emily's allies to help circumvent the cousins.) Sure enough, after another week they departed. And, as we had expected all along, within three days Homer Barron was back in town. A neighbor saw the Negro man admit him at the kitchen door at dusk one evening.

And that was the last we saw of Homer Barron. And of Miss Emily for some time. The Negro man went in and out with the market basket, but the front door remained closed. Now and then we would see her at a window for a moment, as the men did that night when they sprinkled the lime, but for almost six months she did not appear on the streets. Then we knew that this was to be expected too; as if that quality of her father which had thwarted her woman's life so many times had been too virulent and too furious to die.

When we next saw Miss Emily, she had grown fat and her hair was turning gray. During the next few years it grew grayer and grayer until it attained an even pepper-and-salt iron-gray, when it ceased turning. Up to the day of her death at seventy-four it was still that vigorous iron-gray, like the hair of an active man.

From that time on her front door remained closed, save for a period of six or seven years, when she was about forty, during which she gave lessons in china-painting. She fitted up a studio in one of the downstairs rooms, where the daughters and granddaughters of Colonel Sartoris' contemporaries were sent to her with the same regularity and in the same spirit that they were sent to church on Sundays with a twenty-five-cent piece for the collection plate. Meanwhile her taxes had been remitted.

Then the newer generation became the backbone and the spirit of the town, and the painting pupils grew up and fell away and did not send their children to her with boxes of color and tedious brushes and pictures cut from the ladies' magazines. The front door closed upon the last one and remained closed for good. When the town got free postal delivery, Miss Emily alone refused to let them fasten the metal numbers above her door and attach a mailbox to it. She would not listen to them.

Daily, monthly, yearly we watched the Negro grow grayer and more stooped, going in and out with the market basket. Each December we sent her a tax notice, which would be returned by the post office a week later, unclaimed. Now and then we would see her in one of the downstairs windows—she had evidently shut up the top floor of the house—like the carven torso of an idol in a niche,[26] looking or not looking at us, we could never tell which. Thus she passed from generation to generation—dear, inescapable, impervious, tranquil, and perverse.

And so she died. Fell ill in the house filled with dust and shadows, with only a doddering Negro man to wait on her. We did not even know she was sick; we had long since given up trying to get any information from the Negro. He talked to no one, probably not even to her, for his voice had grown harsh and rusty, as if from disuse.

She died in one of the downstairs rooms, in a heavy walnut bed with a curtain, her gray head propped on a pillow yellow and moldy with age and lack of sunlight.

V

The Negro met the first of the ladies at the front door and let them in, with their hushed, sibilant[27] voices and their quick, curious glances, and then he disappeared. He walked

---

[25] A cabal (kə bäl′) is a group united in a secret plot.

[26] A niche (nich) is a recessed area in a wall, sometimes used for displaying a statue.

[27] Sibilant (si′ bə lənt) means "making a hissing sound."

1 Foreshadowing What might the juxtaposition of these two sentences foreshadow about Emily and Homer Barron?

Vocabulary

circumvent (sur′ kəm vent′) v. to get around or to avoid by clever maneuvering virulent (vir′ yə lənt) adj. extremely poisonous or harmful

---

Writing Practice

Use Adjectives Draw students' attention to the list of adjectives describing Miss Emily in the right column of this page: dear, inescapable, impervious, tranquil, and perverse. Point out that two of these words have similar prefixes, in- and im-. Tell students that these have the same meaning.

Ask: What is the meaning? (not) Ask students to define inescapable and impervious with reference to Miss Emily. (She is inescapable, meaning that although she does not interact with the townspeople, they cannot escape her presence. She is impervious because she is not affected or influenced by anything in the town.) Have students list three words beginning with in- or im- that they would use to describe themselves. Then have them write a brief character sketch of themselves using each word.

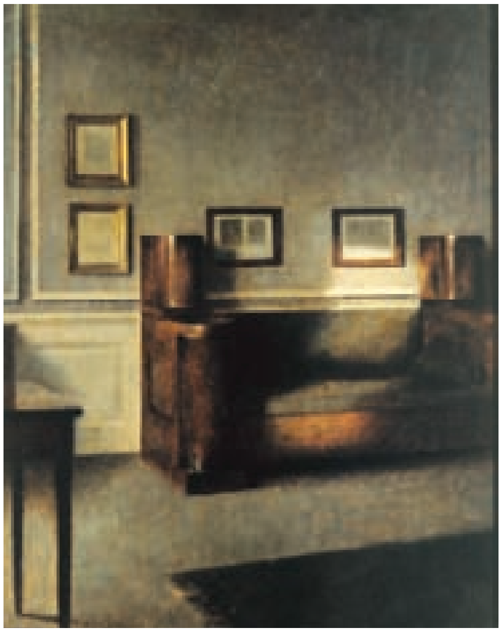
right through the house and out the back and was not seen again.

2 The two female cousins came at once. They held the funeral on the second day, with the town coming to look at Miss Emily beneath a mass of bought flowers, with the crayon face of her father musing profoundly above the bier[28] and the ladies sibilant and macabre;[29] and the very old men—some in their brushed Confederate uniforms—on the porch and the lawn, talking of Miss Emily as if she had been a contemporary of theirs, believing that they had danced with her and courted her perhaps, confusing time with its mathematical progression, as the old do, to whom all the past is not a diminishing road but, instead, a huge meadow which no winter ever quite touches, divided from them now by the narrow bottle-neck of the most recent decade of years.

Already we knew that there was one room in that region above stairs which no one had seen in forty years, and which would have to be forced. They waited until Miss Emily was decently in the ground before they opened it.

The violence of breaking down the door seemed to fill this room with pervading dust. A thin, acrid pall[30] as of the tomb seemed to lie everywhere upon this room decked and furnished as for a bridal:[31] upon the valance curtains of faded rose color, upon the rose-shaded lights, upon the dressing table, upon the delicate array of crystal and the man's toilet things backed with tarnished silver, silver so tarnished that the monogram was obscured. Among them lay a collar and tie, as if they had just been removed, which, lifted, left upon the surface a pale crescent in the dust. Upon a chair hung the suit, carefully folded; beneath it the two mute shoes and the discarded socks.

The man himself lay in the bed.



The Sunny Parlor, c. 1901. Wilhelm Hammershoi. Oil on canvas, 49.7 x 40 cm. Nationalgalerie, Staatliche Museen zu Berlin, Germany. ★

For a long while we just stood there, looking down at the profound and fleshless grin. The body had apparently once lain in the attitude of an embrace, but now the long sleep that outlasts love, that conquers even the grimace of love, had cuckolded[32] him. What was left of him, rotted beneath what was left of the nightshirt, had become inextricable from the bed in which he lay; and upon him and upon the pillow beside him lay that even coating of the patient and biding dust.

Then we noticed that in the second pillow was the indentation of a head. One of us lifted something from it, and leaning forward, that faint and invisible dust dry and acrid in the nostrils, we saw a long strand of iron-gray hair.

---

[28] A bier is a stand for a coffin.

[29] Macabre (mə kä′ brə) means "gruesome" or "suggesting the horror of death."

[30] An acrid pall is a bitter-smelling covering.

[31] Here, bridal means "wedding."

[32] Cuckolded means "betrayed," in the sense of a husband deceived by an unfaithful wife.

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Identify Sequence Ask: How do you think Faulkner's nonlinear sequence of events enhances the story about Emily? (Students may say that the nonlinear sequence of events reflects the townspeople's own confused memories of Emily. She has become an almost mythical presence in the town.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Point out the word line in nonlinear. Ask students to explain linear, based on the meaning of line. (in a straight line) Then have them define nonlinear, applying the meaning of the prefix non-. (not in a line or not in order)

View the Art ★

Ask: How does the scene in this painting contrast with the narrator's description of the scene in Miss Emily's bedroom? (The scene in the painting is well lit and decorous, whereas the grotesque scene the narrator describes resembles a tomb.)

Advanced Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Critics' Views "A Rose for Emily" has been extensively discussed by scholars and critics. Advanced students will benefit from reading some of the criticism. Have students conduct library and Internet research to locate criticism about the story. Then ask them to present a panel discussion of the question, "In what sense is Emily Grierson a villain, and in what sense is she a victim?" Students should meet as a group to share their research, organize their discussion, and appoint a moderator.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Return to Regionalism

Answer: At the core of "A Rose for Emily" is Emily's inner conflict caused by her sense of position in the town and her desire for love—a theme presented in a unique setting and circumstances.

Reading Strategy 2

Identify Sequence

Ask: How does the order in which Faulkner presents the ideas in his speech make the speech strong? (Faulkner gives the audience a chance to understand the problem as he sees it and then to recognize the value of his solution. The audience is left with a strong impression of the power and necessity of the writer's transformative voice.)

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 8.4
DRP: 62
Lexile: 1170

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 43.

Address upon Receiving the Nobel Prize in Literature

Stockholm, December 10, 1950

William Faulkner

I feel that this award was not made to me as a man, but to my work—a life's work in the agony and sweat of the human spirit, not for glory and least of all for profit, but to create out of the materials of the human spirit something which did not exist before. So this award is only mine in trust. It will not be difficult to find a dedication for the money part of it commensurate[1] with the purpose and significance of its origin. But I would like to do the same with the acclaim too, by using this moment as a pinnacle[2] from which I might be listened to by the young men and women already dedicated to the same anguish and travail,[3] among whom is already that one who will some day stand here where I am standing.

Our tragedy today is a general and universal physical fear so long sustained by now that we can even bear it. There are no longer problems of the spirit. There is only the question: When will I be blown up? Because of this, the young man or woman writing today has forgotten the problems of the human heart in conflict with itself which alone can make good writing because only that is worth writing about, worth the agony and the sweat.

He must learn them again. He must teach himself that the basest of all things is to be afraid; and, teaching himself that, forget it forever, leaving no room in his workshop for anything but the old verities and truths of the heart, the old universal truths lacking which any story is ephemeral[4] and doomed—love and honor and pity and pride and compassion and sacrifice. Until he does so, he labors under a curse. He writes not of love but of lust, of defeats in which nobody loses anything of value, of victories without hope and, worst of all, without pity or compassion. His griefs grieve on no universal bones, leaving no scars. He writes not of the heart but of the glands.

Until he relearns these things, he will write as though he stood among and watched the end of man. I decline to accept the end of man. It is easy enough to say that man is immortal simply because he will endure: that when the last ding-dong of doom has clanged and faded from the last worthless rock hanging tideless in the last red and dying evening, that even then there will still be one more sound: that of his puny inexhaustible voice, still talking. I refuse to accept this. I believe that man will not merely endure: he will prevail. He is immortal, not because he alone among creatures has an inexhaustible voice, but because he has a soul, a spirit capable of compassion and sacrifice and endurance. The poet's, the writer's, duty is to write about these things. It is his privilege to help man endure by lifting his heart, by reminding him of the courage and honor and hope and pride and compassion and pity and sacrifice which have been the glory of his past. The poet's voice need not merely be the record of man, it can be one of the props, the pillars to help him endure and prevail.

1 Return to Regionalism How might "A Rose for Emily" reflect Faulkner's desire to write about this problem?

---

1. Commensurate (kə men′ sər it) means "of equal measure."
2. Pinnacle (pin′ ə kəl) means "highest point" or "peak."
3. Travail (trə vāl′) is exhausting mental or physical work.
4. Ephemeral (i fem′ ər əl) means "lasting a very brief time" or "short-lived."

Reading Practice

Paraphrase Remind students that a paraphrase is a restatement of a written or spoken passage in different words, conveying the same basic meaning. Paraphrasing is a useful tool for reviewing a speech, since it serves as a check on comprehension and can lead to greater understanding of the speaker's meaning.

Have students write paraphrases of Faulkner's speech. Their paraphrases should capture the essential meaning of Faulkner's speech but be written in the students' own words. Students should read their paraphrases aloud to partners.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

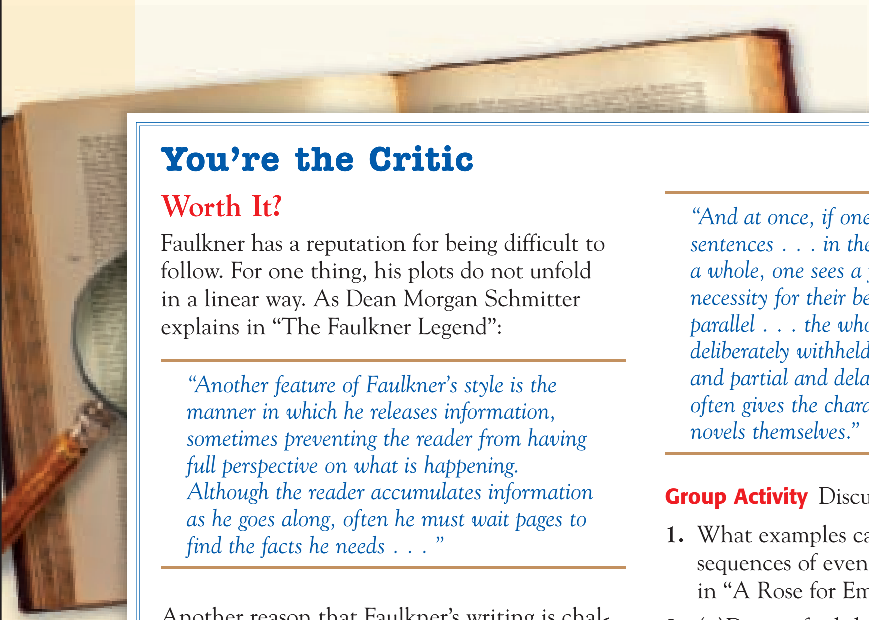
1. Did the end of the story surprise you? Explain.
2. (a)How does Emily respond when asked to pay taxes? (b)What does this reveal about her?
3. (a)How does Emily respond when her house begins to smell and when her father dies? (b)How does the town interpret her response?
4. (a)In his Nobel address, what does Faulkner say modern writers are concerned with? (b)Why is this problematic?
5. In the speech, what does Faulkner say is the only thing worth writing about? Why?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. (a)How would you characterize the narrator of "A Rose for Emily"? (b)What do you infer about the narrator's attitude toward Emily? Explain.
7. (a)In Faulkner's speech, what is his view of our future and of the writer's role in that future? (b)Do you agree with this view? Explain.

Connect

8. Big Idea Return to Regionalism How do local traditions and attitudes affect Miss Emily?
9. Connect to the Author What events of Faulkner's time likely influenced his speech?



You're the Critic

Worth It?

Faulkner has a reputation for being difficult to follow. For one thing, his plots do not unfold in a linear way. As Dean Morgan Schmitter explains in "The Faulkner Legend":

> "Another feature of Faulkner's style is the manner in which he releases information, sometimes preventing the reader from having full perspective on what is happening. Although the reader accumulates information as he goes along, often he must wait pages to find the facts he needs . . . "

Another reason that Faulkner's writing is challenging is that his sentences are often long and rambling. As Conrad Aiken writes,

> "And at once, if one considers these queer sentences . . . in their relation to the book as a whole, one sees a functional reason and necessity for their being as they are. They parallel . . . the whole elaborate method of deliberately withheld meaning, of progressive and partial and delayed disclosure, which so often gives the characteristic shape of the novels themselves."

Group Activity Discuss the following.

1. What examples can you find of confusing sequences of events and rambling sentences in "A Rose for Emily"?
2. (a)Do you find the story difficult to follow? (b)Are your efforts rewarded by the end of the story? Explain.

After You Read

Assess

1. Students may be shocked by some details, but they may have predicted Barron's death.
2. (a) She refuses to listen to their arguments. (b) She can be arrogant and stubborn.
3. (a) When her house smells, she does not seem to be bothered by it. When her father dies, she refuses to let anyone take care of his body for several days. (b) The townspeople think she has reasons for acting as she does.
4. (a) They are concerned with fear. (b) Fear is a base concern, disconnected from universal truths such as love, honor, and compassion.
5. The internal conflicts that people experience, since writing without such conflicts cannot endure
6. (a) The narrator uses the word we and speaks for the town. (b) The narrator thinks that her environment made Emily behave oddly.
7. (a) Human beings will prevail, and the writer reminds them of their past compassion, sacrifice, and endurance. (b) Students' answers will vary.
8. Emily can get away with things because of her status as a Grierson.
9. Students may note that the Cold War influenced the speech.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 237–238.

You're the Critic

1. Students' answers will vary. One example could be the visit of the city officials about Emily's taxes, which occurs 30 years after the main events of the story but appears at the beginning of the story. A possible example of a difficult, rambling sentence is the second one in the second paragraph of part V.
2. Students' answers will vary, but should be supported by evidence from the story.

After You Read

Assess

Literary Element

1. C is the correct answer because the smell foreshadows the discovery of Barron's body.
2. G is the correct answer because the foreshadowing gives all the details readers need to understand Barron's fate.

Review: Flashback

Section 1: After Emily's funeral, the first flashback is Colonel Sartoris's edict that she owes no taxes; the second when town officials try to make her pay taxes.
Section 2: When Emily is younger, a group of men tries to remedy the smell; a second flashback shows Emily's father scaring off young men.
Section 3: After her father's death, Emily begins to see Homer Barron; a year later, Emily buys arsenic.
Sections 4 and 5: The flashbacks end as the narration returns to Emily's death.

Progress Check

Can students interpret foreshadowing?

If No → See Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 38.

Reading Strategy

1. Students' responses will vary but should show a grasp of the order of events.
2. Students may recognize that the sequence helps convey the significance of the discovery the town makes after Emily's death.

Literary Element Foreshadowing

ACT Skills Practice

1. The first event in the narrative that foreshadows Homer Barron's fate is
   - A. Emily Grierson's funeral.
   - B. the death of Emily's father.
   - C. the smell coming from Emily's house.
   - D. Emily's buying arsenic from the druggist.
2. Faulkner's use of foreshadowing is effective because it
   - I. is evident only after Barron's body is found.
   - II. provides concrete clues to Barron's death.
   - III. protects Emily's reputation and good name.
   - F. I only
   - G. II only
   - H. I and II only
   - J. II and III only

Review: Flashback

A flashback is an interruption in a plot to portray an incident that happened in the past.

Partner Activity Meet with another classmate to discuss Faulkner's use of flashback in "A Rose for Emily." Use the five sections as numbered by the author to determine where the flashbacks are and at what point in Emily's life each one occurs.

Section	Flashback
1
2

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Reading Strategy Identify Sequence

Faulkner does not often take his readers on a chronological journey through his stories.

1. Use the list and the sequence chart that you made as you read the story to put the events in chronological order. Use sequencing words, such as first, next, then, and finally.
2. Explain how the convoluted sequence adds to or detracts from the story's meaning.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Denotation and Connotation
Denotation is the literal, or dictionary, meaning of a word. Connotation is the implied, or cultural, meaning of a word. For example, the words enthusiasm and gusto have a similar denotation, "great excitement," but they have different connotations:

Weaker	Stronger
enthusiasm	gusto

Each of the vocabulary words is listed with a word that has a similar denotation. Choose the word that has the stronger connotation.

1. sluggishly	inactively
2. circumvent	evade
3. harmful	virulent
4. avenge	vindicate
5. haughty	proud

Academic Vocabulary

Colonel Sartoris uses Emily's father's death as the justification to permit her to not pay taxes.

Justification is an academic word. If a student is caught cheating, he might use his desire to get into a good college as the justification for his mistake.

To further explore the meaning of this word, complete this sentence: His parents wanted an _______________, not a justification for his deception.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Vocabulary

1. sluggishly
2. evade
3. virulent
4. vindicate
5. haughty

Academic Vocabulary

His parents wanted an apology, not a justification for his deception.

Respond Through Writing

Expository Essay

Analyze Symbolism In addition to using foreshadowing and flashback, Faulkner employs symbolism to add complexity to this story. Write an essay in which you analyze Faulkner's use of symbolism in "A Rose for Emily." In your essay, discuss how the symbolism contributes to the meaning of the story.

Understand the Task Symbolism is the author's use of an object, person, place, or experience to represent something else, usually something abstract. To write a literary analysis means to dissect a work of literature to better understand what it means and to comment on how it works.

Prewrite Jot down a list of objects, people, or experiences in "A Rose for Emily" that you think might be symbolic. Then consult sources that discuss the culture of the South during the early 1900s to generate ideas of what the symbols in the story might represent. Draw particularly upon stories of aristocrats, sharecroppers, and African Americans.

Draft Make sure to use proper citations in your discussion. An example is provided below.

EXAMPLE:

Emily's house is a symbol of the Southern aristocracy that lost its prowess with the coming of the Civil War and Reconstruction. In the post-Civil War years, Southerners lost cropland (namely for cotton), livestock, and money in slave-related investments ("South, the." Encyclopaedia Britannica. 2007. Encyclopaedia Britannica Online. 16 July 2007). The "coquettish decay above the cotton wagons and gasoline pumps" of Emily's house mirrors this decline of the Southern aristocracy.

Revise Make sure you have used sources that help the reader better understand the meaning behind the symbolism in this story. Then evaluate your essay using the checklist on p. 624.

Edit and Proofread Proofread your essay, correcting any errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Use the Grammar Tip in the side column to help you use paragraphing correctly.

Learning Objectives

In this assignment, you will focus on the following objective:

Writing: Writing an expository essay.

Grammar Tip

Paragraphing

To enhance your writing, try to bring one idea into focus with each paragraph. All of the sentences in your paragraph should relate to that one main idea. Some paragraphing tips include the following:

- Write a concise topic sentence that forms that paragraph's most important idea.
- Elaborate on the topic sentence with supporting details.
- Use transitions to link thoughts.
- Include a conclusion statement to reiterate your main point.

After You Read

Assess

Writing

Evaluate students' essays based on the following criteria:

- Does the essay relate ideas from multiple sources and include proper citations to those sources?
- Does the essay support its thesis with evidence?
- Did the student use a rubric to evaluate and revise his or her essay?

For grammar practice, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 42.

Scoring Guide	4	3	2	1
Grasp of text	thoughtful and comprehensive	comprehensive	limited	minimal
Support of thesis	specific	general	little or none	none
Understanding of complexities	clear	general	limited	minimal
Language	varied, precise, descriptive	varied, somewhat descriptive	predictable, basic	not varied, limited
Convention errors	few or none	several	many	serious
Awareness of literary devices	clearly demonstrated	demonstrated	may be demonstrated	not demonstrated

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus Transparency 55

Daily Language Practice Transparency 81

Or ask: How far would you go to help someone else? Would you walk many miles through rough terrain? Would you go without food? Would you give up part of your home?

Have students discuss why people sometimes make great sacrifices for others.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 45–50.

Before You Read

A Worn Path

Meet Eudora Welty

(1909–2001)

Eudora Welty admitted to living a sheltered life. Born and raised in Jackson, Mississippi, she lived in her family's house there until her death at age ninety-two. Welty maintained, though, that "a sheltered life can be a daring life as well. For all serious daring starts from within."

Pleasant Childhood Welty's parents filled their house with books and loved to read on their own and to their children. Once she learned to read herself, Welty read everything she could get her hands on. Her mother, however, put one restriction on her reading. She told the town librarian that Eudora could read anything in the library except the then-popular novel Elsie Dinsmore. When Eudora asked why, her mother explained that the main character fainted and fell off her piano stool after being made to practice for a long time. Her mother told Eudora that she was too impressionable: "You'd read that and the very first thing you'd do, you'd fall off the piano stool." Thereafter, Welty could never hear the word impressionable without calling up the image of falling off a piano stool.

> "Writing a story is one way of discovering sequence in experience, of stumbling upon cause and effect in the happenings of a writer's own life. This has been the case with me. Connections slowly emerge."
>
> —Eudora Welty

Work with the WPA Welty's love of reading and her lively imagination inspired her decision to become a writer for the Works Progress Administration (WPA). This government agency, founded during the Great Depression, gave people work on public projects, such as constructing roads and buildings, clearing trails in parks, and painting murals. Welty traveled around Mississippi and wrote articles about WPA projects in the state.

Successful Writing Career Welty had her first short story published when she was twenty-seven. Five years later, she published A Curtain of Green, a collection of short stories in which "A Worn Path" first appeared. In her thirties, she published her first novels, The Robber Bridegroom (1942) and Delta Wedding (1946). Welty went on to write award-winning fiction for many years, until severe arthritis forced her to give up writing at age eighty-five.

Southern Charm At Welty's funeral, her agent, Timothy Seldes, told a revealing story about Welty's last words. He said that when her doctor leaned over her bed and asked if there was anything he could do for her, she replied, "No, but thank you for inviting me to the party." This polite response illustrates Welty's southern charm and gracious warmth—qualities that Welty brought to her writing. Her compassionate portrayals of people living in the deep South powerfully illuminate their shared values and complicated history.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Eudora Welty, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Selection Skills

A Worn Path

Literary Elements
- Description (SE pp. 889, 891–894, 896, 897)
- Archetype (SE p. 897)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Dialogue (SE p. 898)
- Verb Usage (TE p. 890)
- Extended Metaphor (TE p. 892)

Reading Skills
- Visualize (SE pp. 889–891, 893, 895, 896, 898)

Vocabulary Skills
- Analogies (SE p. 898)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE pp. 892, 895)
- Readers Theater (TE p. 894)

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

What would you do for someone you love? Write a journal entry in which you describe what you would do to help if someone you loved were sick.

Build Background

"A Worn Path" is set near the city of Natchez (nach′ iz), Mississippi, around 1930. The Natchez Trace was an old trail that led from the Native American villages along the banks of the lower Mississippi River northeastward six hundred miles to settlements along the Cumberland River, in what is now Tennessee. Travelers who boated down the Mississippi had to walk or ride the Natchez Trace to return to locations upstream. Around the turn of the nineteenth century, the Natchez Trace was one of the most well-traveled trails in the United States. However, new, powerful steamships that could travel against the Mississippi's strong current were introduced and allowed river travelers to make their way upstream by boat. As a result, the Natchez Trace fell into disuse around 1820.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Return to Regionalism

As you read, ask yourself, How have the lives of the characters been shaped by the history and culture of the South?

Literary Element Description

Description is writing that captures the physical sensations of a place or of an experience. As you read, ask yourself, What details does Welty include to help readers imagine that they can see, hear, smell, taste, and feel what she is describing?

Reading Strategy Visualize

Visualizing is picturing a writer's ideas or descriptions in the mind's eye. Visualizing is one of the best ways to help you understand and remember information in a story. As you read, ask yourself, What do I see when I read each scene of this story?

Tip: Sketch On a separate sheet of paper, make quick sketches showing how you visualize each important scene that you read.

Learning Objectives

For pages 888–898

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing description.

Reading: Visualizing.

Writing: Applying dialogue.

Vocabulary

grave (grāv) adj. dignified and gloomy; somber; p. 890 Mark delivered the eulogy with a grave look.

vigorously (vig′ ər əs lē) adv. with power, energy, and strength; p. 893 Katie vigorously shook the rug to get the dust out.

ceremonial (ser′ ə mo′ nē əl) adj. formal; p. 894 The graduates wore ceremonial robes.

solemn (sol′ əm) adj. serious; somber; p. 895 With a solemn face, the child tended her sick dog.

comprehension (kom′ pri hen′ shən) n. the act of grasping mentally; understanding; p. 896 Mia's comprehension of math is excellent.

Tip: Analogies Comparisons that reveal the relationship between two words are analogies. When you identify the relationship in the first pair of words, you can apply that relationship to complete the second pair. If the first pair are synonymous, you can assume that the second pair will be the same.

EXAMPLE:

solemn : serious :: joyful : happy

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

"A Worn Path" tells of an elderly African American woman's journey from her home in the woods to the city of Natchez, Mississippi. Phoenix Jackson makes the difficult walk whenever she needs more medicine for her grandson, her only companion, whose throat was injured from accidentally swallowing lye. The walk is a metaphor for her life's journey, filled with hardships and triumphs.

Vocabulary

Suffixes Have students identify three suffixes in this vocabulary list. (-ly, -al, -sion) Ask: Which of these suffixes can you apply to two other words on the list? (-ly) To which two words can you apply it? (grave, solemn) How does this suffix change those words? (The suffix changes the words from adjectives to adverbs.)

ENGLISH LEARNERS Ask: Which word is correct in the following sentence: The principal spoke (solemn, solemnly) to the students' parents. (solemnly)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 53.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Explain that dialect is a specific form of language spoken by people in a region or group. A dialect may vary from standard English in vocabulary, pronunciation, and grammar. Give students this example from the story: "I in the thorny bush." Ask them to identify what is distinctive about this sentence. (It omits the verb.) Then ask them to restate the sentence in standard English. (I am in the thorny bush.) Guide them in translating these examples into standard English: "The time getting all gone here." "Who you watching?" "Ghost, who you be the ghost of?" "I the oldest people I ever know."

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Visualize Answer: Students' perceptions will vary but should be based on details in the text.

APPROACHING Guide students in locating details that describe Phoenix. Tell students to locate details about her clothing and the cane. Then, they should look for details about her facial features and the way she is walking.

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 52.

View the Photograph ★

A skilled photographer, Eudora Welty worked for the WPA for three years during the Great Depression. She traveled across Mississippi, taking photographs of the poor to document their terrible living conditions. Ask: What might this elderly woman be feeling at "day's end"? (Possible answers: fatigue; relief)

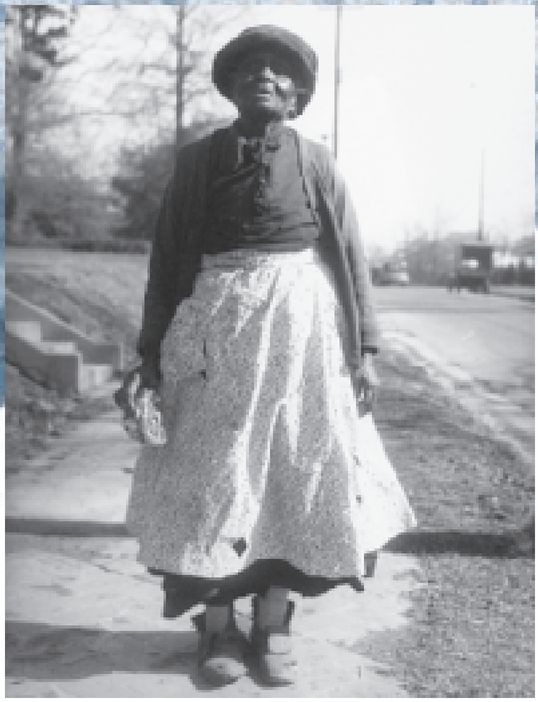
For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 3.4
DRP: 52
Lexile: 780

A Worn Path

Eudora Welty



Day's End, Jackson, 1930s. Eudora Welty. Photograph. Mississippi Department of Archives and History, Jackson, MS. Eudora Welty Collection. ★

It was December—a bright frozen day in the early morning. Far out in the country there was an old Negro woman with her head tied in a red rag, coming along a path through the pinewoods. Her name was Phoenix Jackson. She was very old and small and she walked slowly in the dark pine shadows, moving a little from side to side in her steps, with the balanced heaviness and lightness of a pendulum in a grandfather clock. She carried a thin, small cane made from an umbrella, and with this she kept tapping the frozen earth in front of her. This made a grave and persistent noise in the still air, that seemed meditative like the chirping of a solitary little bird.

She wore a dark striped dress reaching down to her shoe tops, and an equally long apron of bleached sugar sacks, with a full pocket: all neat and tidy, but every time she took a step she might have fallen over her shoelaces, which dragged from her unlaced shoes. She looked straight ahead. Her eyes were blue with age. Her skin had a pattern all its own of numberless branching wrinkles and as though a whole little tree stood in the middle of her forehead, but a golden color ran underneath, and the two knobs of her cheeks were illumined by a yellow burning under the dark. Under the red rag her hair came down on her neck in the frailest of ringlets, still black, and with an odor like copper.

Vocabulary

grave (grāv) adj. dignified and gloomy; somber

Visualize Ask yourself what Phoenix Jackson looks like. Form a mental image of Phoenix based on the details you have read so far. 1

Grammar Practice

Verb Usage In "A Worn Path," Phoenix Jackson's dialect includes many nonstandard usages, particularly verb usage. Many of these are mistakes in agreement, as when she says, "I doesn't mind asking a nice lady to tie up my shoe." Another of her errors is lack of an auxiliary verb, as when she says "I going to the store."

Tell students to scan the story for her dialogue and identify examples of incorrect verb usage. Have them rewrite these sentences in standard English. Have students read her words aloud to help them recognize errors when they hear them.

2 Now and then there was a quivering in the thicket. Old Phoenix said, "Out of my way, all you foxes, owls, beetles, jack rabbits, coons and wild animals! . . . Keep out from under these feet, little bob-whites[1]. . . . Keep the big wild hogs out of my path. Don't let none of those come running my direction. I got a long way." Under her small black-freckled hand her cane, limber as a buggy whip, would switch at the brush as if to rouse up any hiding things.

On she went. The woods were deep and still. The sun made the pine needles almost too bright to look at, up where the wind rocked. The cones dropped as light as feathers. Down in the hollow[2] was the mourning dove—it was not too late for him.

The path ran up a hill. "Seem like there is chains about my feet, time I get this far," she said, in the voice of argument old people keep to use with themselves. "Something always take a hold of me on this hill—pleads I should stay."

After she got to the top she turned and gave a full, severe look behind her where she had come. "Up through pines," she said at length. "Now down through oaks."

Her eyes opened their widest, and she started down gently. But before she got to the bottom of the hill a bush caught her dress.

Her fingers were busy and intent, but her skirts were full and long, so that before she could pull them free in one place they were caught in another. It was not possible to allow the dress to tear. "I in the thorny bush," she said. "Thorns, you doing your appointed[3] work. Never want to let folks pass, no sir. Old eyes thought you was a pretty little green bush."

Finally, trembling all over, she stood free, and after a moment dared to stoop for her cane.

"Sun so high!" she cried, leaning back and looking, while the thick tears went over her eyes. "The time getting all gone here."

At the foot of this hill was a place where a log was laid across the creek.

"Now comes the trial," said Phoenix.

Putting her right foot out, she mounted the log and shut her eyes. Lifting her skirt, leveling her cane fiercely before her, like a festival figure in some parade, she began to march across. Then she opened her eyes and she was safe on the other side.

"I wasn't as old as I thought," she said.

But she sat down to rest. She spread her skirts on the bank around her and folded her hands over her knees. Up above her was a tree in a pearly cloud of mistletoe. She did not dare to close her eyes, and when a little boy brought her a plate with a slice of marble-cake on it she spoke to him. "That would be acceptable," she said. But when she went to take it there was just her own hand in the air.

So she left that tree, and had to go through a barbed-wire fence. There she had to creep and crawl, spreading her knees and stretching her fingers like a baby trying to climb the steps. But she talked loudly to herself: she could not let her dress be torn now, so late in the day, and she could not pay for having her arm or her leg sawed off if she got caught fast where she was.

At last she was safe through the fence and risen up out in the clearing. Big dead trees, like black men with one arm, were standing in the purple stalks of the withered cotton field. There sat a buzzard.

"Who you watching?"

---

[1] Bob-whites, also called quails or partridges, are birds with mottled brown plumage and white markings.

[2] A hollow is a small valley.

[3] Appointed means "assigned" or "designated."

3 Description Why does the author include details about the animals in the woods as well as about the silence and sunlight there?

Return to Regionalism From what you have read so far, what do you infer about Phoenix Jackson's background as well as about her present life? 4

Visualize How do you imagine Phoenix Jackson looks and sounds as she goes through the fence? 5

Teach

Literary Element 2

Characterization Ask: What can you infer about Phoenix's character from this paragraph? (Her diction and grammar reveal her to be a rural Southerner with little education. Her words indicate a determination to proceed no matter what.)

Literary Element 3

Description Answer: Students may say that these details make the scene seem vivid and real.

Big Idea 4

Return to Regionalism Answer: Students may infer that Phoenix has lived in the South all her life and is deeply steeped in its ways. Though elderly, she is alone on a difficult errand, which may suggest poverty and a difficult life.

Reading Strategy 5

Visualize Answer: Students' answers will vary but should be supported with details from the story .

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Some students may have difficulty distinguishing between the details that describe Phoenix Jackson's actual physical journey and the details her mind creates. Have students create a two-column chart listing the real details in one column and the imagined details in the other.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced Point out the statement "Now comes the trial." Explain that trial has multiple meanings. Ask students to list the definitions they know and look up other meanings of trial and determine Phoenix's meaning here. (being tried or tested as she has to cross the log across the creek)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Symbolism Ask: How might a field of corn with no path represent Phoenix's life? How might a maze be a symbol of a person's life? (There was no one to guide Phoenix through life, so she had to find her own path. In life, as in a maze, people have to make their own choices and choose their paths.)

Literary Element 2

Description Answer: These details help to evoke the Southern countryside. They may also contribute to the story's motifs of poverty and old age.

View the Photograph ★

Answer: The path in the photograph is old, sunken, and tree lined, like part of the path that Phoenix travels.

Road Between High Banks, Hinds County, 1940s. Eudora Welty. Photograph. Mississippi Department of Archives and History, Jackson, MS. Eudora Welty Collection.

View the Photograph During the Great Depression, much of the country suffered from severe droughts that led to erosion, crop failure, and many other problems. In what ways is the path in the photograph similar to or different from the path in the story? ★

In the furrow[4] she made her way along.

"Glad this not the season for bulls," she said, looking sideways, "and the good Lord made his snakes to curl up and sleep in the winter. A pleasure I don't see no two-headed snake coming around that tree, where it come once. It took a while to get by him, back in the summer."

She passed through the old cotton and went into a field of dead corn. It whispered and shook and was taller than her head.

"Through the maze now," she said, for there was no path. 1

Then there was something tall, black, and skinny there, moving before her.

At first she took it for a man. It could have been a man dancing in the field. But she stood still and listened, and it did not make a sound. It was as silent as a ghost.

"Ghost," she said sharply, "who be you the ghost of? For I have heard of nary[5] death close by."

But there was no answer—only the ragged dancing in the wind.

She shut her eyes, reached out her hand, and touched a sleeve. She found a coat and inside that an emptiness, cold as ice.

"You scarecrow," she said. Her face lighted. "I ought to be shut up for good," she said with laughter. "My senses is gone. I too old. I the oldest people I ever know. Dance, old scarecrow," she said, "while I dancing with you."

She kicked her foot over the furrow, and with mouth drawn down, shook her head once or twice in a little strutting way. Some husks blew down and whirled in streamers about her skirts.

Then she went on, parting her way from side to side with the cane, through the whispering field. At last she came to the end, to a wagon track where the silver grass blew between the red ruts. The quail were walking around like pullets,[6] seeming all dainty and unseen.

"Walk pretty," she said. "This the easy place. This the easy going."

She followed the track, swaying through the quiet bare fields, through the little strings of trees silver in their dead leaves, past cabins silver from weather, with the doors and windows boarded shut, all like old women under a spell

---

[4] A furrow is a long, narrow channel in the ground made by a plow.

[5] Nary means "not one."

[6] Pullets are young hens.

Description Why does the author include details of the scene such as "old cotton," "dead corn," and "ragged dancing in the wind"? 2

Writing Practice

Extended Metaphor Review with students that Phoenix's journey can be viewed as a metaphor for her own and others' passage through life. Have students write a paragraph explaining how Phoenix's journey represents the journey of life. Have them start by creating a three-column chart like the one shown here to identify and organize the details of the metaphor.

Event	Meaning for Phoenix	General Meaning
A thorny bush catches Phoenix's dress and she must free the dress without tearing it.	She keeps the bush from making her ragged, which would take away her dignity.	Even entangled in difficulties, one can patiently work one's way out with dignity.

The first column identifies the places or events of Phoenix's journey to town. The second column identifies the metaphorical meaning that each event or place might have in Phoenix's life. The third column lists general conclusions about life or human nature. Students can then use the details from the chart in the body of their papers.

sitting there. "I walking in their sleep," she said, nodding her head vigorously.

3 In a ravine[7] she went where a spring was silently flowing through a hollow log. Old Phoenix bent and drank. "Sweet-gum[8] makes the water sweet," she said, and drank more. "Nobody know who made this well, for it was here when I was born."

The track crossed a swampy part where the moss hung as white as lace from every limb. "Sleep on, alligators, and blow your bubbles." Then the track went into the road.

Deep, deep the road went down between the high green-colored banks. Overhead the live-oaks met, and it was as dark as a cave.

A black dog with a lolling tongue came up out of the weeds by the ditch. She was meditating, and not ready, and when he came at her she only hit him a little with her cane. Over she went in the ditch, like a little puff of milkweed.[9]

Down there, her senses drifted away. A dream visited her, and she reached her hand up, but nothing reached down and gave her a pull. So she lay there and presently went to talking. "Old woman," she said to herself, "that black dog come up out of the weeds to stall you off, and now there he sitting on his fine tail, smiling at you."

A white man finally came along and found her—a hunter, a young man, with his dog on a chain.

"Well, Granny!" he laughed. "What are you doing there?"

"Lying on my back like a June-bug waiting to be turned over, mister," she said, reaching up her hand.

He lifted her up, gave her a swing in the air, and set her down. "Anything broken, Granny?"

"No sir, them old dead weeds is springy enough," said Phoenix, when she had got her breath. "I thank you for your trouble."

"Where do you live, Granny?" he asked, while the two dogs were growling at each other.

"Away back yonder, sir, behind the ridge. You can't even see it from here."

"On your way home?"

"No sir, I going to town."

"Why, that's too far! That's as far as I walk when I come out myself, and I get something for my trouble." He patted the stuffed bag he carried, and there hung down a little closed claw. It was one of the bob-whites, with its beak hooked bitterly to show it was dead. "Now you go on home, Granny!"

"I bound to go to town, mister," said Phoenix. "The time come around."

He gave another laugh, filling the whole landscape. "I know you old colored people! Wouldn't miss going to town to see Santa Claus!"

But something held old Phoenix very still. The deep lines in her face went into a fierce and different radiation.[10] Without warning, she had seen with her own eyes a flashing nickel fall out of the man's pocket onto the ground.

"How old are you, Granny?" he was saying.

"There is no telling, mister," she said, "no telling."

Then she gave a little cry and clapped her hands and said, "Git on away from here, dog! Look! Look at that dog!" She laughed as if in admiration. "He ain't scared of nobody. He a big black dog." She whispered, "Sic him!"

"Watch me get rid of that cur," said the man. "Sic him, Pete! Sic him!"

---

[7] A ravine is a deep, narrow valley, especially one eroded by running water.

[8] The sweet-gum tree discharges a fragrant gum through cracks and crevices in its trunk.

[9] The pods of a milkweed plant split open and release seeds with puffs of white, silky down.

[10] Here, radiation means "a pattern of rays or waves."

Vocabulary

vigorously (vig′ ər əs lē) adv. with power, energy, and strength

Visualize Picture the scene as the man helps Phoenix. 4

Description What does the description of Phoenix suggest about her thoughts as she spies the nickel? 5

Teach

Literary Element 3

Symbolism Ask: What might the spring symbolize? How can you interpret Phoenix's statement in light of this symbolism? (The spring might symbolize life, since all living things need water. Phoenix's statement that the spring was there before she was born may suggest the continuity of life; individuals are born and die, but life itself continues.)

Reading Strategy 4

Visualize Answer: Students should describe their mental images of the scene.

Literary Element 5

Description Answer: Details such as "her face went into a fierce and different radiation" suggest that the appearance of the nickel is a notable event for Phoenix. She ignores the man's condescending remarks as she registers the presence of the nickel and secretly plots to take it.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Emerging Some learners may better understand the progress of the story by creating a map of Phoenix's journey. Have pairs of students work together to look through the story for clues and details that describe the terrain, distance, and directions. They should also indicate on the map where each event takes place and write down details of each event.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Return to Regionalism Answer: Students may say that this exchange suggests a paternalistic relationship. The white man is kind to Phoenix, but his kindness is tinged by condescension, and he lies to her about how much money he has in order to avoid helping her. Phoenix is outwardly deferential, but the story suggests that she behaves this way in order to survive.

Literary Element 2

Characterization Ask: Why does Phoenix ask the woman to tie her shoe? What does the request reveal about her character? (Phoenix doesn't want to be seen as a country woman, with her shoelaces untied. This indicates that although Phoenix generally seems humble, she also has pride.)

Literary Element 3

Description Answer: Students may point to the smell of the wood-smoke and the river around the cabins being in contrast to the electric lights that crisscrossed the paved city.

Phoenix heard the dogs fighting, and heard the man running and throwing sticks. She even heard a gunshot. But she was slowly bending forward by that time, further and further forward, the lids stretched down over her eyes, as if she were doing this in her sleep. Her chin was lowered almost to her knees. The yellow palm of her hand came out from the fold of her apron. Her fingers slid down and along the ground under the piece of money with the grace and care they would have in lifting an egg from under a setting hen. Then she slowly straightened up, she stood erect, and the nickel was in her apron pocket. A bird flew by. Her lips moved. "God watching me the whole time. I come to stealing."

The man came back, and his own dog panted about them. "Well, I scared him off that time," he said, and then he laughed and lifted his gun and pointed it at Phoenix.

She stood straight and faced him.

"Doesn't the gun scare you?" he said, still pointing it.

"No, sir, I seen plenty go off closer by, in my day, and for less than what I done," she said, holding utterly still.

He smiled, and shouldered the gun. "Well, Granny," he said, "you must be a hundred years old, and scared of nothing. I'd give you a dime if I had any money with me. But you take my advice and stay home, and nothing will happen to you."

"I bound to go on my way, mister," said Phoenix. She inclined her head in the red rag. Then they went in different directions, but she could hear the gun shooting again and again over the hill.

She walked on. The shadows hung from the oak trees to the road like curtains. Then she smelled wood-smoke, and smelled the river, and she saw a steeple and the cabins on their steep steps. Dozens of little black children whirled around her. There ahead was Natchez shining. Bells were ringing. She walked on.

In the paved city it was Christmas time. There were red and green electric lights strung and crisscrossed everywhere, and all turned on in the daytime. Old Phoenix would have been lost if she had not distrusted her eyesight and depended on her feet to know where to take her.

She paused quietly on the sidewalk where people were passing by. A lady came along in the crowd, carrying an armful of red-, green- and silver-wrapped presents; she gave off perfume like the red roses in hot summer, and Phoenix stopped her.

"Please, missy, will you lace up my shoe?" She held up her foot.

"What do you want, Grandma?"

"See my shoe," said Phoenix. "Do all right for out in the country, but wouldn't look right to go in a big building." 2

"Stand still then, Grandma," said the lady. She put her packages down on the sidewalk beside her and laced and tied both shoes tightly.

"Can't lace 'em with a cane," said Phoenix. "Thank you, missy. I doesn't mind asking a nice lady to tie up my shoe, when I gets out on the street."

Moving slowly and from side to side, she went into the big building, and into a tower of steps, where she walked up and around and around until her feet knew to stop.

She entered a door, and there she saw nailed up on the wall the document that had been stamped with the gold seal and framed in the gold frame, which matched the dream that was hung up in her head.

"Here I be," she said. There was a fixed and ceremonial stiffness over her body.

1 Return to Regionalism What does this exchange suggest about the way whites and African Americans in the town behaved toward each other?

Description Which details evoke the contrast between the cabins near the river and the paved city? 3

Vocabulary

ceremonial (ser´ ə mō´ nē əl) adj. formal

Speaking Practice

SMALL GROUP

Readers Theater Readers Theater is a cross between oral reading and dramatic presentation. Students assume the roles of characters and read passages in character, as if from a script. Assign students to work in groups of two or three to present the interaction between Phoenix and the hunter or the encounter at the doctor's office. Encourage students to stay in character during the presentation and to read their lines as realistically as possible.

School Children, Jackson, 1930s. Eudora Welty. Photograph. Mississippi Department of Archives and History, Jackson, MS. Eudora Welty Collection.

View the Photograph Many of Welty's stories are rooted in her experiences—and photographs—of Mississippi life during the Great Depression. Do you think Eudora Welty might have had her story "A Worn Path" in mind when she took this picture? Explain. ★

"A charity case, I suppose," said an attendant who sat at the desk before her.

But Phoenix only looked above her head. There was sweat on her face, the wrinkles in her skin shone like a bright net.

"Speak up, Grandma," the woman said. "What's your name? We must have your history, you know. Have you been here before? What seems to be the trouble with you?"

Old Phoenix only gave a twitch to her face as if a fly were bothering her.

"Are you deaf?" cried the attendant.

But then the nurse came in.

"Oh, that's just old Aunt Phoenix," she said. "She doesn't come for herself—she has a little grandson. She makes these trips just as regular as clockwork. She lives away back off the Old Natchez Trace." She bent down. "Well, Aunt Phoenix, why don't you just take a seat? We won't keep you standing after your long trip." She pointed.

The old woman sat down, bolt upright in the chair.

"Now, how is the boy?" asked the nurse.

Old Phoenix did not speak.

"I said, how is the boy?"

But Phoenix only waited and stared straight ahead, her face very solemn and withdrawn into rigidity.

"Is his throat any better?" asked the nurse. "Aunt Phoenix, don't you hear me? Is your grandson's throat any better since the last time you came for the medicine?"

With her hands on her knees, the old woman waited, silent, erect and motionless, just as if she were in armor.

"You mustn't take up our time this way, Aunt Phoenix," the nurse said. "Tell us quickly

Visualize Visualize the exchanges between Phoenix, the attendant, and the nurse. What attitudes toward Phoenix do the attendant and the nurse express? 4

Vocabulary

solemn (sol´ əm) adj. serious; somber

Teach

Reading Strategy 4

Visualize Answer: The attendant expresses impatience. The nurse expresses both condescension and kindness.

APPROACHING Ask: In what ways does the attendant express her impatience? (She asks Phoenix a lot of questions at once without waiting for an answer. She cries out "Are you deaf?" when Phoenix does not say anything.) How does the nurse's behavior contrast with the attendant's behavior? (The nurse invites Phoenix to sit. Instead of shouting at Phoenix like the attendant does, she patiently repeats her question when she receives no answer from Phoenix.)

View the Photograph ★

Answer: Students' answers will vary but should refer to details in the story.

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Advanced Have students note that the people Phoenix Jackson encounters call her "Granny" or "Grandma" or "Aunt Phoenix." Students from other cultures may find this a common practice to refer to older people. Ask: What do the terms mean? Is the usage respectful or not? Why do the people in the story refer to Phoenix Jackson in this way? (These are usually terms used in a friendly way, as is the case here.)

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

SMALL GROUP

Established Ask students to select one image, or passage to which they connected. Have them share their choice with a small group explaining why they liked that image or passage and what it meant to them.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Return to Regionalism Answer: Students may infer that Phoenix and her grandson are penniless and isolated.

Reading Strategy 2

Visualize Answer: Students may have the impression of a pitifully sick, but probably hopeful, boy. Phoenix's statement that she could "tell him from all the others in creation" conveys profound love for the boy.

Literary Element 3

Description Answer: The details suggest Phoenix's pride, dignity, and compassion.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 56.

about your grandson, and get it over. He isn't dead, is he?"

At last there came a flicker and then a flame of comprehension across her face, and she spoke.

"My grandson. It was my memory had left me. There I sat and forgot why I made my long trip."

"Forgot?" The nurse frowned. "After you came so far?"

Then Phoenix was like an old woman begging a dignified forgiveness for waking up frightened in the night. "I never did go to school, I was too old at the Surrender,"[11] she said in a soft voice. "I'm an old woman without an education. It was my memory fail me. My little grandson, he is just the same, and I forgot it in the coming."

"Throat never heals, does it?" said the nurse, speaking in a loud, sure voice to old Phoenix. By now she had a card with something written on it, a little list. "Yes. Swallowed lye. When was it?—January—two-three years ago—"

Phoenix spoke unasked now. "No, missy, he not dead, he just the same. Every little while his throat begin to close up again, and he not able to swallow. He not get his breath. He not able to help himself. So the time come around, and I go on another trip for the soothing medicine."

"All right. The doctor said as long as you came to get it, you could have it," said the nurse. "But it's an obstinate case."

"My little grandson, he sit up there in the house all wrapped up, waiting by himself," Phoenix went on. "We is the only two left in the world. He suffer and it don't seem to put him back at all. He got a sweet look. He going to last. He wear a little patch quilt and peep out holding his mouth open like a little bird. I remembers so plain now. I not going to forget him again, no, the whole enduring time. I could tell him from all the others in creation."

"All right." The nurse was trying to hush her now. She brought her a bottle of medicine. "Charity," she said, making a check mark in a book.

Old Phoenix held the bottle close to her eyes, and then carefully put it into her pocket.

"I thank you," she said.

"It's Christmas time, Grandma," said the attendant. "Could I give you a few pennies out of my purse?"

"Five pennies is a nickel," said Phoenix stiffly.

"Here's a nickel," said the attendant.

Phoenix rose carefully and held out her hand. She received the nickel and then fished the other nickel out of her pocket and laid it beside the new one. She stared at her palm closely, with her head on one side.

Then she gave a tap with her cane on the floor.

"This is what come to me to do," she said. "I going to the store and buy my child a little windmill they sells, made out of paper. He going to find it hard to believe there such a thing in the world. I'll march myself back where he waiting, holding it straight up in this hand."

She lifted her free hand, gave a little nod, turned around, and walked out of the doctor's office. Then her slow step began on the stairs, going down. ❧

---

[11] The Surrender of Robert E. Lee to Ulysses S. Grant in 1865 ended the Civil War.

1 Return to Regionalism What do you infer about the situation of Phoenix and her grandson?

Vocabulary

comprehension (kom´ pri hen´ shən) n. the act of grasping mentally; understanding

Visualize After rereading the details of the grandson's appearance, picture him in your mind. What impressions do you have of the boy and of Phoenix's feelings about him? 2

Description Notice the descriptions of Phoenix Jackson's manners, bearing, and plans she has for her money. What do these details suggest about her character? 3

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Compare and Contrast Characters Point out that Phoenix Jackson encounters a number of people on her journey and when she arrives in town. Tell students to write an essay comparing and contrasting the secondary characters in the story. They should answer these questions in their essays: How does each character treat Phoenix Jackson? What do the encounters reveal about the personalities of Phoenix and the secondary characters? Why might the secondary characters treat Phoenix in the way they do?

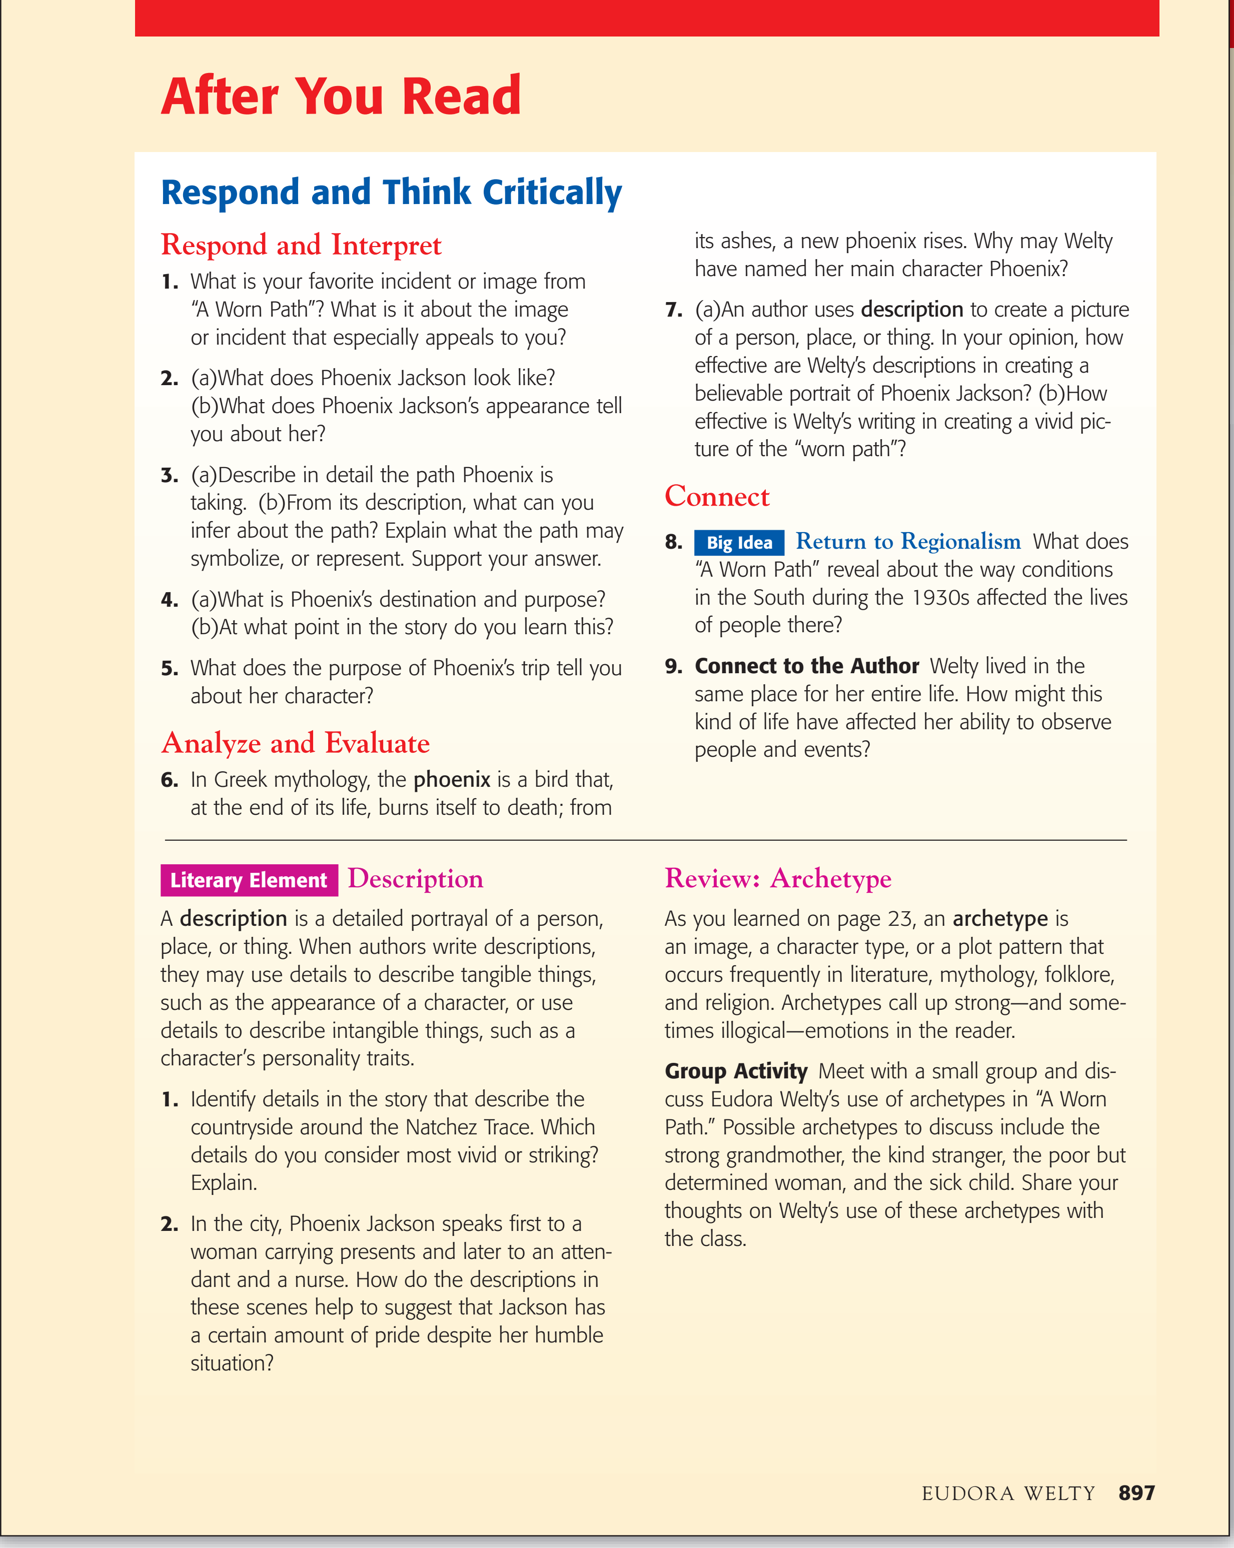
Remind students that before they start writing, they should reread the passages describing Phoenix's encounters carefully and find details and examples to support their arguments in their essays. After students have completed their writing assignment, have volunteers read their essays to the class.



After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What is your favorite incident or image from "A Worn Path"? What is it about the image or incident that especially appeals to you?
2. (a)What does Phoenix Jackson look like? (b)What does Phoenix Jackson's appearance tell you about her?
3. (a)Describe in detail the path Phoenix is taking. (b)From its description, what can you infer about the path? Explain what the path may symbolize, or represent. Support your answer.
4. (a)What is Phoenix's destination and purpose? (b)At what point in the story do you learn this?
5. What does the purpose of Phoenix's trip tell you about her character?

Analyze and Evaluate

6. In Greek mythology, the phoenix is a bird that, at the end of its life, burns itself to death; from its ashes, a new phoenix rises. Why may Welty have named her main character Phoenix?
7. (a)An author uses description to create a picture of a person, place, or thing. In your opinion, how effective are Welty's descriptions in creating a believable portrait of Phoenix Jackson? (b)How effective is Welty's writing in creating a vivid picture of the "worn path"?

Connect

8. Big Idea Return to Regionalism What does "A Worn Path" reveal about the way conditions in the South during the 1930s affected the lives of people there?
9. Connect to the Author Welty lived in the same place for her entire life. How might this kind of life have affected her ability to observe people and events?

Literary Element Description

A description is a detailed portrayal of a person, place, or thing. When authors write descriptions, they may use details to describe tangible things, such as the appearance of a character, or use details to describe intangible things, such as a character's personality traits.

1. Identify details in the story that describe the countryside around the Natchez Trace. Which details do you consider most vivid or striking? Explain.
2. In the city, Phoenix Jackson speaks first to a woman carrying presents and later to an attendant and a nurse. How do the descriptions in these scenes help to suggest that Jackson has a certain amount of pride despite her humble situation?

Review: Archetype

As you learned on page 23, an archetype is an image, a character type, or a plot pattern that occurs frequently in literature, mythology, folklore, and religion. Archetypes call up strong—and sometimes illogical—emotions in the reader.

Group Activity Meet with a small group and discuss Eudora Welty's use of archetypes in "A Worn Path." Possible archetypes to discuss include the strong grandmother, the kind stranger, the poor but determined woman, and the sick child. Share your thoughts on Welty's use of these archetypes with the class.

Assess

1. Students' answers will vary.
2. (a) She is a small, elderly African American woman whose hair is tied in a rag. Her eyes are blue and her skin is wrinkled. (b) She is old and poor.
3. (a) The path leads her through woods, over a creek, through a barbed-wire fence, through fields, past a spring, through a swampy area, and under trees to Natchez. (b) Students may infer that the path is one that Phoenix makes for herself, not a path laid out by someone else. It symbolizes Phoenix's difficult journey through life.
4. (a) A doctor's office, to obtain medicine for her grandson (b) Near the end
5. She is kind, self-sacrificing, and decent.
6. The name symbolizes her triumph over obstacles.
7. (a) Students will find the descriptions of Phoenix effective. (b) Students should describe the effectiveness of specific images in their answers.
8. The rural environment and poverty had a major impact on people's lives. For example, Phoenix Jackson has to walk far to obtain basic medical necessities.
9. Her observations were probably limited by the people she met and the areas she saw.

Literary Element

1. Students' answers will vary. They may cite the ominous "big, dead trees . . . standing in the purple stalks of the withered cotton field."
2. Even though she has less than these people, she interacts with them and asks for their help. When doing so, she is polite and acts in a dignified manner.

Review: Archetype

Other examples of archetypal characters might be the rugged outdoorsman and the helpful nurse. An archetypal plot pattern is the difficult journey, and an archetypal image is the person carrying Christmas packages.

Progress Check

Can students analyze description?

If No → See Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 51.

After You Read

Assess

Reading Strategy

The attendant is probably smiling and leaning toward Phoenix in a friendly way. Phoenix staring hard at the nickel and tilting her head to one side may indicate that she is thinking hard about how to spend the nickel.

Vocabulary

1. b 2. a 3. c 4. a 5. c

Academic Vocabulary

Possible answer: In this sense, interactions refers to a mutual relationship between two separate entities.

Write with Style

Use these criteria when evaluating students' writing:

- Does the student indirectly reveal character through dialogue?
- Does the student establish distinct, realistic characters?

Reading Strategy Visualize

Reread page 896, beginning, "Here's a nickel," and ending, "her head on one side." Visualize the facial expressions and body language of the characters.

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Analogies Choose the word that best completes each analogy.

1. practice : competence :: study :
   a. books c. mathematics
   b. comprehension
2. party : festive :: funeral :
   a. solemn c. ceremony
   b. sermon
3. serious : trivial :: informal :
   a. tuxedo c. ceremonial
   b. gathering
4. weakly : feebly :: forcefully :
   a. vigorously c. reluctantly
   b. eagerly
5. lighthearted : cheerful :: somber :
   a. brokenhearted c. grave
   b. expressionless

Academic Vocabulary

Old Phoenix comes across as stubborn and independent in her interactions with people.

Interaction is an academic word. People might say that they meet new friends through social interactions. The word interaction is also used in the subjects of chemistry and biology. Using context clues, figure out the meaning of interaction in this sentence: *The immune system's defenses depend on cell-to-cell interactions.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Write with Style

Apply Dialogue

Assignment Welty breathes life into her characters through description and dialogue. Write a dialogue of your own that indirectly characterizes two people.

Get Ideas Decide who your characters are and what they are like. Think about real people you know or stories you have read to generate ideas. Then decide upon a scenario in which your characters will interact. To help you in your indirect characterization, create a chart like the one below.

Characteristic	How to describe through dialogue
friendly	initiates conversation, asks questions, listens attentively
smart	uses sophisticated language
new in town	refers to old house, old friends, old school, etc.
compassionate	notices an older woman and asks if she needs help crossing the street

Give It Structure As you write, refer back to your chart. Reveal character to your audience through what the characters say and how they say it.

Look at Language After you are done writing, have someone else read your work and discuss his or her impression of your characters. If they did not perceive your characters as you intended, revise your diction, tone, and sentence structure to more clearly establish your characterization.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Writing Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Dialogue Point out to students that writing a dialogue is like writing a skit—students have to create characters, setting, and a plot. In their charts about the characters, students should also jot down notes about where the characters meet, the circumstances in which they meet, whether the characters meet by chance or not, and whether the characters knew each other before they started talking. Tell students that once they have made notes on the characters and the setting, they should brainstorm possible topics of conversation between the characters based on their notes. For example, if their characters are strangers and they started a conversation because they are sitting next to each other on a train, the characters might make comments about the train and the train ride. Remind students that they should carefully pick the words they use in their dialogues to reflect the background and personalities of their characters.

Before You Read

from Black Boy

> "It's strong, it's raw—but it's life as I see and lived it."
>
> —Richard Wright

Meet Richard Wright
(1908–1960)

As a writer, Richard Wright wanted to "wage a war with words," and he succeeded, becoming one of the first major African American literary figures. His books are raw and forceful—whether they are portraying life in the urban ghettos of the North or the oppression of African Americans in the South.

Wright's first book, Uncle Tom's Children, was praised by critics, and Malcolm Cowley of the New Republic claimed it was "heartening, as evidence of a vigorous new talent, and terrifying as the expression of a racial hatred that has never ceased to grow and gets no chance to die." However, Wright was dissatisfied with the book, because he felt that it did not adequately portray the reality of racism and violence in the United States. His next work was Native Son—a book that would change U.S. culture forever through its portrayal of a man who has suffered the injustices of racism, poverty, and despair.

Literature from Life In the opinion of many, Black Boy is Wright's most important work because it was not only his autobiography but a social documentary of the hardships caused by racism. Ralph Ellison, who was strongly influenced by Wright, claimed that "In Black Boy Wright has used his own life to probe what qualities of will, imagination, and intellect are required of a Southern Negro in order to possess the meaning of his life in the United States."

Born in 1908 in Mississippi, Wright experienced fear and oppression early. He first witnessed racial violence at the age of eight when his uncle was lynched by a group of white men. Throughout his life, Wright repeatedly saw members of his race degraded by whites, yet he refused to believe that African Americans were inferior. He began reading and educating himself, and at nineteen he left for the North, mistakenly believing that he could live a life without discrimination there.

Outspoken Expatriate Realizing that social conditions for African Americans were not changing for the better, Wright moved his family to Paris, France, in 1947. He published no books for seven years but instead wrote articles on politics. While in France, he became friends with the writers Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, and André Gide. Their existential views influenced his later work.

Wright's reputation and literary influence declined during the 1950s, as young African American writers such as James Baldwin and Ralph Ellison emerged. Amid the Black Arts movement of the 1960s, however, Wright's work was rediscovered, inspiring and influencing a new generation of African Americans. Unfortunately, Wright died before he could take part in this emerging black unity and pride and the fight for equality that he yearned for.

Literature Online

Author Search For more about Richard Wright, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Before You Read

Focus

Bellringer Options

Selection Focus
Transparency 56

Daily Language Practice
Transparency 82

Or explain that poverty and hunger permeate this excerpt from Black Boy. Ask: How do you think your personality and relationships with others would be affected if you were hungry all the time?

For additional context, see Glencoe Interactive Vocabulary CD-ROM.

Selection Skills

from Black Boy

Literary Elements
- Flash-forward (SE pp. 900, 906, 907)
- Autobiography (SE p. 907)

Writing Skills/Grammar
- Speech (SE p. 908)
- Letter (TE p. 902)
- Connect (TE p. 906)

Reading Skills
- Compare and Contrast Characters (SE pp. 900–902, 905, 908)
- Visualize (SE p. 901)
- Preview (TE p. 900)

Vocabulary Skills
- Context Clues (SE pp. 900, 908)

Listening/Speaking/Viewing Skills
- Analyze Art (SE p. 905)

Study Skills/Research/Assessment
- Short-Answer Questions (TE p. 904)

Before You Read

Focus

Summary

This excerpt begins as Richard Wright's mother asks a judge to order her husband to provide financial support. The family faces extreme poverty. Wright's mother surrenders Richard and his brother to an orphan home. Richard runs away but is returned. Soon afterward, Richard's mother gets him to ask his father for support. Richard refuses the nickel that is offered. The tale flashes forward 25 years, when Richard next sees his father, by then a poor sharecropper.

For summaries in languages other than English, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 58–63.

Vocabulary

Adjectives Remind students that adjectives can describe people, things, actions, and feelings. Using an adjective correctly requires understanding what it can modify. Ask: Which word in this selection's vocabulary would not be used to describe a person? (futile)

APPROACHING Adjectives that are associated with strong feelings are often used to describe people and their actions. Ask: Which two words can describe either a person or an action? (hostile, vindictive)

For additional vocabulary practice, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 66.

Literature and Reading Preview

Connect to the Story

How do you think your childhood will affect what you do later in life? List several events from your childhood and explain how they helped shape your beliefs or actions.

Build Background

Wright's father was a sharecropper near Natchez, Mississippi. He received a small cabin and some income from the cotton crop but had a difficult time making ends meet. Eventually he abandoned the family when Wright was six. Wright, his mother, and his brother were left with little income and a life marked by hunger and fear. Their struggles and the events following their abandonment are detailed in this excerpt from Black Boy.

Set Purposes for Reading

Big Idea Life in the City

As you read, ask yourself, How does Wright examine the impact of segregation and racism on his life?

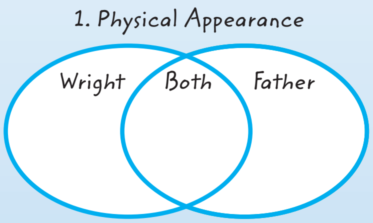
Literary Element Flash-forward

A flash-forward is an interruption in the chronological sequence of a narrative to leap forward in time. A writer may signal a flash-forward with a new paragraph or with a description of a new setting. As you read, ask yourself, How does Wright use flash-forward to signal future events?

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Characters

When you compare and contrast characters, you note the similarities and differences between them. Comparing and contrasting can help you to better understand who the characters are and why they act in certain ways.

Tip: Venn Diagrams As you read, ask yourself, How are the characters similar and different? Use a Venn diagram to record your comparisons.



Learning Objectives

For pages 899–908

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Literary Study: Analyzing sequence.

Reading: Comparing and contrasting characters.

Speaking and Listening: Delivering a speech.

Vocabulary

futile (fū´ til) adj. serving no practical purpose; useless; worthless; p. 902 Trying to lift the chair was futile because it was nailed to the floor.

hostile (host´ əl) adj. feeling or showing hatred; antagonistic; p. 902 The woman became hostile when the salesclerk refused to answer her questions.

vindictive (vin dik´ tiv) adj. desiring revenge; p. 902 He was known for displaying vindictive behavior when he felt betrayed.

poised (poizd) adj. having a calm, controlled, and dignified manner; composed; p. 906 Though angry, she remained poised when her boss questioned her about her work.

alien (ā´ lē ən) adj. strange; unfamiliar; foreign; p. 906 The alien surroundings of her new town made her uncomfortable.

Tip: Context Clues To learn a word's meaning, look at the other words in the sentence for clues.

Reading Practice

Preview Explain that this selection deals with the challenges of poverty—and especially the ways that poverty affects family relationships. Write the following connecting questions on the board for students to answer:

- Do you know of any other characters in literature or a movie who suffer from extreme poverty?
- How does the character's financial situation affect his or her family relationships?

Ask students to note the effects of poverty on Wright's relationship with his parents as they read the selection.

from Black Boy

Richard Wright

1 When I awakened one morning my mother told me that we were going to see a judge who would make my father support me and my brother. An hour later all three of us were sitting in a huge crowded room. I was overwhelmed by the many faces and the voices which I could not understand. High above me was a white face which my mother told me was the face of the judge. Across the huge room sat my father, smiling confidently, looking at us. My mother warned me not to be fooled by my father's friendly manner; she told me that the judge might ask me questions, and if he did I must tell him the truth. I agreed, yet I hoped that the judge would not ask me anything.

For some reason the entire thing struck me as being useless; I felt that if my father were going to feed me, then he would have done so regardless of what a judge said to him. And I did not want my father to feed me; I was hungry, but my thoughts of food did not now center about him. I waited, growing restless, hungry. My mother gave me a dry sandwich and I munched and stared, longing to go home. Finally I heard my mother's name called; she rose and began weeping so copiously[1] that she could not talk for a few moments; at last she managed to say that her husband had deserted her and her two children, that her children were hungry, that they stayed hungry, that she worked, that she was trying to raise them alone. Then my father was called; he came forward jauntily, smiling. He tried to kiss my mother, but she turned away from him. I only heard one sentence of what he said.

"I'm doing all I can, Your Honor," he mumbled, grinning.

It had been painful to sit and watch my mother crying and my father laughing and I was glad when we were outside in the sunny streets. Back at home my mother wept again and talked complainingly about the unfairness of the judge who had accepted my father's word. After the court scene, I tried to forget my father; I did not hate him; I simply did not want to think of him. Often when we were hungry my mother would beg me to go to my father's job and ask him for a dollar, a dime, a nickel . . . But I would never consent to go. I did not want to see him.

My mother fell ill and the problem of food became an acute, daily agony. Hunger was with us always. Sometimes the neighbors would feed us or a dollar bill would come in the mail from my grandmother. It was winter and I would buy a dime's worth of coal each morning from the corner coalyard and lug it home in paper bags. For a time I remained out of school to wait upon my mother, then Granny came to visit us and I returned to school.

At night there were long, halting discussions about our going to live with Granny, but nothing came of it. Perhaps there was not enough money for railroad fare. Angered by having been hauled into court, my father now spurned us completely. I heard long, angrily whispered conversations between my mother and grandmother to the effect that "that woman ought to be killed for breaking up a home." What irked me was the ceaseless talk and no action. If someone had suggested that my father be killed, I would perhaps have become interested; if someone had suggested that his name never be mentioned, I would no

---

[1] Copiously means "in great quantity."

2 Compare and Contrast Characters How does Wright react to his parents' differences in court?

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Visualize The first sentence provides no sensory imagery, but it still creates a vivid picture. Ask: How do you visualize this scene? (Students' images of the mother, the boy, and their interaction will vary.)

For additional practice using the reading skill or strategy, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 65.

Reading Strategy 2

Compare and Contrast Characters Answer: He finds it painful to see his father laughing while his mother cries. He is embarrassed for his mother and angry at his father.

For an audio recording of this selection, use Listening Library Audio CD-ROM.

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 5.6
DRP: 57
Lexile: 970

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Intermediate Students may benefit from a review of the term flashback. Flashbacks are sometimes written as if they are happening in the present. The reader experiences the memory just as fully as if it were part of the main story. Display the following sentences: 1. As he ran along the beach, he remembered his father's advice about running. 2. He ran along the beach. "Run to the beat of the waves," he could hear his father say. Point out to students that the second description helps the reader experience the memory.

Like a flashback, a flash-forward is separated by time from the main story. This technique is especially useful when writers want to capture the voice of both a child and an adult. Explain to students that most of Wright's story takes place in his childhood. When he uses a flash-forward, he is able to describe his adult feelings.

As students read, have them add sticky notes to passages where they notice a change from a child's to an adult's point of view.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Life in the City Answer: He might think that another city would not have the same problems—his father, an unfair judge, the cost of coal, and so on.

APPROACHING Ask students for examples of sentences that show that the narrator is unhappy living in this city.

Reading Strategy 2

Compare and Contrast Characters Answer: He is always hungry, just like the other children, but his fear contrasts with their hostility and anger.

Reading Strategy 3

Compare and Contrast Characters Answer: Wright is fearful of being abandoned. When his mother stops coming, he assumes that she has left him, just as his father did.

doubt have agreed; if someone had suggested that we move to another city, I would have been glad. But there was only endless talk that led nowhere and I began to keep away from home as much as possible, preferring the simplicity of the streets to the worried, futile talk at home.

Finally we could no longer pay the rent for our dingy flat;[2] the few dollars that Granny had left us before she went home were gone. Half sick and in despair, my mother made the rounds of the charitable institutions, seeking help. She found an orphan home that agreed to assume the guidance of me and my brother provided my mother worked and made small payments. My mother hated to be separated from us, but she had no choice.

The orphan home was a two-story frame building set amid trees in a wide, green field. My mother ushered me and my brother one morning into the building and into the presence of a tall, gaunt, mulatto[3] woman who called herself Miss Simon. At once she took a fancy to me and I was frightened speechless; I was afraid of her the moment I saw her and my fear lasted during my entire stay in the home.

The house was crowded with children and there was always a storm of noise. The daily routine was blurred to me and I never quite grasped it. The most abiding feeling I had each day was hunger and fear. The meals were skimpy and there were only two of them. Just before we went to bed each night we were given a slice of bread smeared with molasses. The children were silent, hostile, vindictive, continuously complaining of hunger. There was an overall atmosphere of nervousness and intrigue, of children telling tales upon others, of children being deprived of food to punish them.

The home did not have the money to check the growth of the wide stretches of grass by having it mown, so it had to be pulled by hand. Each morning after we had eaten a breakfast that seemed like no breakfast at all, an older child would lead a herd of us to the vast lawn and we would get to our knees and wrench the grass loose from the dirt with our fingers. At intervals Miss Simon would make a tour of inspection, examining the pile of pulled grass beside each child, scolding or praising according to the size of the pile. Many mornings I was too weak from hunger to pull the grass; I would grow dizzy and my mind would become blank and I would find myself, after an interval of unconsciousness, upon my hands and knees, my head whirling, my eyes staring in bleak astonishment at the green grass, wondering where I was, feeling that I was emerging from a dream . . .

During the first days my mother came each night to visit me and my brother, then her visits stopped. I began to wonder if she, too, like my father, had disappeared into the unknown. I was rapidly learning to distrust everything and everybody. When my mother did come, I asked her why had she remained away so long and she told me that Miss Simon had forbidden her to visit us, that Miss Simon had said that she was

---

[2] A flat is an apartment.

[3] Mulatto, a word seldom used today, describes a biracial person, one of mixed African American and white ancestry.

1 Life in the City Why, as a boy, would the narrator have been glad to move to another city?

Vocabulary

futile (fū´ til) adj. serving no practical purpose; useless; worthless

Compare and Contrast Characters How do Wright's feelings in the house compare with the feelings of the other children there? 2

Compare and Contrast Characters Why does Wright immediately compare his mother's actions to those of his father? 3

Vocabulary

hostile (host´ əl) adj. feeling or showing hatred; antagonistic vindictive (vin dik´ tiv) adj. desiring revenge

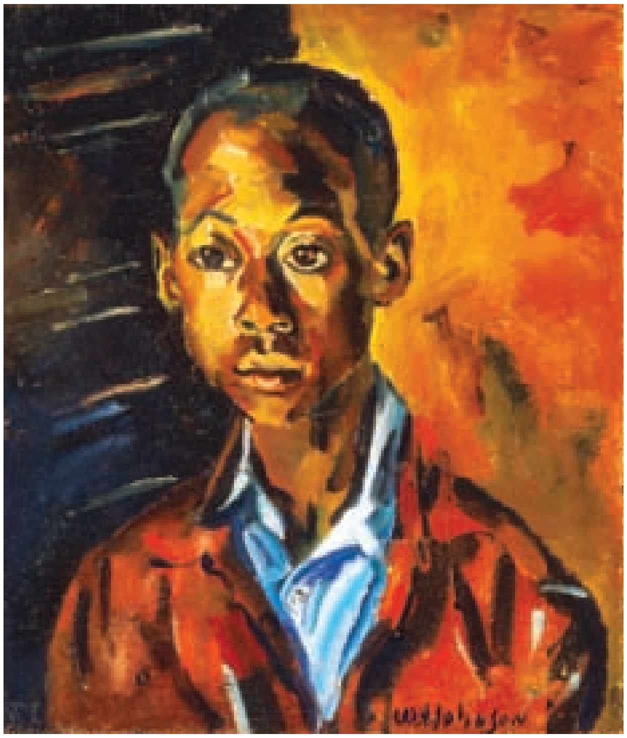
Writing Practice

Letter Have students imagine that they are Wright living in the orphanage. Say: Write a letter to your mother, describing the conditions, your feelings about being there, and your hopes for how things will change. Tell students to use the story as a guide for descriptions and characterization. You may wish to extend the activity by having students write a response from Wright's mother.

spoiling us with too much attention. I begged my mother to take me away; she wept and told me to wait, that soon she would take us to Arkansas. She left and my heart sank.

Miss Simon tried to win my confidence; she asked me if I would like to be adopted by her if my mother consented and I said no. She would take me into her apartment and talk to me, but her words had no effect. Dread and distrust had already become a daily part of my being and my memory grew sharp, my senses more impressionable; I began to be aware of myself as a distinct personality striving against others. I held myself in, afraid to act or speak until I was sure of my surroundings, feeling most of the time that I was suspended over a void. My imagination soared; I dreamed of running away. Each morning I vowed that I would leave the next morning, but the next morning always found me afraid.



Jim, 1930. William H. Johnson. Oil on canvas, 21$\frac{5}{8}$ x 18$\frac{1}{4}$ in. Smithsonian American Art Museum, Washington, DC. ★

One day Miss Simon told me that thereafter I was to help her in the office. I ate lunch with her and, strangely, when I sat facing her at the table, my hunger vanished. The woman killed something in me. Next she called me to her desk where she sat addressing envelopes.

"Step up close to the desk," she said. "Don't be afraid."

I went and stood at her elbow. There was a wart on her chin and I stared at it.

"Now, take a blotter from over there and blot each envelope after I'm through writing on it," she instructed me, pointing to a blotter that stood about a foot from my hand.

I stared and did not move or answer.

"Take the blotter," she said.

I wanted to reach for the blotter and succeeded only in twitching my arm.

"Here," she said sharply, reaching for the blotter and shoving it into my fingers.

She wrote in ink on an envelope and pushed it toward me. Holding the blotter in my hand, I stared at the envelope and could not move.

"Blot it," she said.

I could not lift my hand. I knew what she had said; I knew what she wanted me to do; and I had heard her correctly. I wanted to look at her and say something, tell her why I could not move; but my eyes were fixed upon the floor. I could not summon enough courage while she sat there looking at me to reach over the yawning space of twelve inches and blot the wet ink on the envelope.

"Blot it!" she spoke sharply.

4 Life in the City Why might Wright be afraid to run away from the orphan home?

Teach

Big Idea 4

Life in the City Answer: He has nowhere to go, and he knows that he could get into trouble or be hurt.

View the Art ★

William H. Johnson (1901–1970), born in South Carolina, did not receive widespread recognition until after his death. He is now regarded as one of the major African American artists of the twentieth century. Ask: What emotions are evoked by this picture of a young boy? (Possible answers: sadness; loneliness; rejection; despair)

English Learners

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Beginning Have English learners discuss Wright's use of precise adjectives. Ask how the underlined adjectives enrich phrases on pages 902 and 903: tall, gaunt, mulatto woman; skimpy meals; bleak astonishment; sharp memory. Allow students to use a dictionary to look up any unfamiliar words.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Approaching level students may find it difficult to understand things that are implied, not stated, in the selection. Have students write questions that start with the word "Why" as they read, such as "Why do the boys have to go to the orphan home?" and "Why is Wright afraid of Miss Simon?" Help them make inferences to answer the questions.

Teach

Big Idea 1

Life in the City Answer: When he sees the white police officer, he fears that he will be beaten. He has seen and heard of violence toward African Americans and is certain that the same could happen to him.

Reading Strategy 2

Make Inferences Wright says "Again I was faced with choices I did not like . . ." Ask: What were the undesirable choices that Wright described before? Which option did he pick? (Wright could either stay at the orphanage and be miserable or run away from the orphanage despite having nowhere to go. He chose to run away.) What choices does Wright have now and why does he not like his choices? (Wright could either stay in the orphanage or go to his father and ask for money to get to Arkansas. Wright hates staying in the orphanage, but he dislikes his father for abandoning him and for making his mother miserable, so he does not want to go see his father.)

Still I could not move or answer.

"Look at me!"

I could not lift my eyes. She reached her hand to my face and I twisted away.

"What's wrong with you?" she demanded.

I began to cry and she drove me from the room. I decided that as soon as night came I would run away. The dinner bell rang and I did not go to the table, but hid in a corner of the hallway. When I heard the dishes rattling at the table, I opened the door and ran down the walk to the street. Dusk was falling. Doubt made me stop. Ought I go back? No; hunger was back there, and fear. I went on, coming to concrete sidewalks. People passed me. Where was I going? I did not know. The farther I walked the more frantic I became. In a confused and vague way I knew that I was doing more running away from than running toward something. I stopped. The streets seemed dangerous. The buildings were massive and dark. The moon shone and the trees loomed frighteningly. No, I could not go on. I would go back. But I had walked so far and had turned too many corners and had not kept track of the direction. Which way led back to the orphan home? I did not know. I was lost.

I stood in the middle of the sidewalk and cried. A "white" policeman came to me and I wondered if he was going to beat me. He asked me what was the matter and I told him that I was trying to find my mother. His "white" face created a new fear in me. I was remembering the tale of the "white" man who had beaten the "black" boy. A crowd gathered and I was urged to tell where I lived. Curiously, I was too full of fear to cry now. I wanted to tell the "white" face that I had run off from an orphan home and that Miss Simon ran it, but I was afraid. Finally I was taken to the police station where I was fed. I felt better. I sat in a big chair where I was surrounded by "white" policemen, but they seemed to ignore me. Through the window I could see that night had completely fallen and that lights now gleamed in the streets. I grew sleepy and dozed. My shoulder was shaken gently and I opened my eyes and looked into a "white" face of another policeman who was sitting beside me. He asked me questions in a quiet, confidential tone, and quite before I knew it he was not "white" any more. I told him that I had run away from an orphan home and that Miss Simon ran it.

It was but a matter of minutes before I was walking alongside a policeman, heading toward the home. The policeman led me to the front gate and I saw Miss Simon waiting for me on the steps. She identified me and I was left in her charge. I begged her not to beat me, but she yanked me upstairs into an empty room and lashed me thoroughly. Sobbing, I slunk off to bed, resolved to run away again. But I was watched closely after that.

My mother was informed upon her next visit that I had tried to run away and she was terribly upset.

"Why did you do it?" she asked.

"I don't want to stay here," I told her.

"But you must," she said. "How can I work if I'm to worry about you? You must remember that you have no father. I'm doing all I can."

"I don't want to stay here," I repeated.

"Then, if I take you to your father . . ."

"I don't want to stay with him either," I said.

"But I want you to ask him for enough money for us to go to my sister's in Arkansas," she said.

2 Again I was faced with choices I did not like, but I finally agreed. After all, my hate for my father was not so great and urgent as my hate for the orphan home. My mother held to her idea and one night a week or so later I found myself standing in a room in a frame house. My father and a strange woman were sitting before a bright fire that blazed in a grate. My mother and I were standing about six feet away, as though we were afraid to approach them any closer.

"It's not for me," my mother was saying. "It's for your children that I'm asking you for money."

"I ain't got nothing," my father said, laughing.

"Come here, boy," the strange woman called to me.

---

1 Life in the City Why might Wright think of this tale when he is lost?

Assessment Practice

SPIRAL REVIEW Short-Answer Questions Remind students that responses to short-answer questions are evaluated on their insight and use of evidence from a text. Ask: How does race play a role in "Black Boy"? Have students scan the text and look for answers to this question. Then tell them to write their responses to the question. After they have finished writing, they should scan their answers to make sure their answers make sense and to check for any grammatical errors. Encourage volunteers to share their answers with the class. (Students should note the title, the fear of running away, the story about the "white" police officer, and Wright's fear that he would be beaten because he was "black.")

Negro Cabin, Sedalia, North Carolina (No. 1), 1930. Loïs Mailou Jones. Watercolor on paper, 14$^{1}/_{8}$ x 19$^{1}/_{8}$ in. Collection of the artist.

View the Art In 1930, the number of African-American sharecroppers in the south—many of them trapped in a cycle of debt—peaked at nearly 400,000. Does this painting capture the aspects of the father's shack that caused Wright to pity him? Explain. ★

I looked at her and did not move.

"Give him a nickel," the woman said. "He's cute."

"Come here, Richard," my father said, stretching out his hand.

I backed away, shaking my head, keeping my eyes on the fire.

"He is a cute child," the strange woman said.

"You ought to be ashamed," my mother said to the strange woman. "You're starving my children."

"Now, don't you-all fight," my father said, laughing.

"I'll take that poker and hit you!" I blurted at my father.

He looked at my mother and laughed louder.

"You told him to say that," he said.

"Don't say such things, Richard," my mother said.

"You ought to be dead," I said to the strange woman.

The woman laughed and threw her arms about my father's neck. I grew ashamed and wanted to leave.

"How can you starve your children?" my mother asked.

"Let Richard stay with me," my father said.

"Do you want to stay with your father, Richard?" my mother asked.

"No," I said.

"You'll get plenty to eat," he said.

"I'm hungry now," I told him. "But I won't stay with you."

"Aw, give the boy a nickel," the woman said.

My father ran his hand into his pocket and pulled out a nickel.

"Here, Richard," he said.

2 Compare and Contrast Characters How does Wright compare his father's girlfriend with his mother?

Teach

Reading Strategy 2

Compare and Contrast Characters Answer: Wright realizes that unlike his mother, the strange woman does not care about him or about what is right or wrong. His mother tries to protect her children, whereas the woman cares only about herself and having fun.

ENGLISH LEARNERS Check to make sure that students understand which two characters they are to compare: the first character is the strange woman who is sitting at the fire with his father (the girlfriend of the narrator's father). The second character is the mother of the narrator.

View the Art ★

Answer: Students may say that the small, ramshackle cabin accurately reflects the poverty that Wright pities.

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Help students understand how recounting a memory can reveal that a character has changed. Wright reacts in different ways when he first sees his father and the strange woman and when he remembers the scene. In both cases, his description of the fire is a key to his reaction. Have students compare the descriptions and explore what they may reveal about the changes in Wright. (In the first scene, the fire is a dangerous, frightening barrier between Wright and his father. In the memory, the "dancing" fire draws him in. He is no longer afraid, but feels as if he can reach out and touch it.)

Teach

Literary Element 1

Flash-forward Answer: Wright tells the reader about the future because it shows the lasting impact of his father's lack of concern. The description of an image that came to him many times as he grew older leads into the flash-forward that follows.

Literary Element 2

Flash-forward Answer: Wright remembers being afraid of his father, but now he sees that his father is not someone he should have feared or continued to think about for years.

Big Idea 3

Life in the City Answer: As an uneducated African American, Wright's father had few choices. His father's imprisonment in ignorance and poverty has led Wright to escape those bonds.

To check students' understanding of the selection, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 69.

"Don't take it," my mother said.

"Don't teach him to be a fool," my father said. "Here, Richard, take it."

I looked at my mother, at the strange woman, at my father, then into the fire. I wanted to take the nickel, but I did not want to take it from my father.

"You ought to be ashamed," my mother said, weeping. "Giving your son a nickel when he's hungry. If there's a God, He'll pay you back."

"That's all I got," my father said, laughing again and returning the nickel to his pocket.

We left. I had the feeling that I had had to do with something unclean. Many times in the years after that the image of my father and the strange woman, their faces lit by the dancing flames, would surge up in my imagination so vivid and strong that I felt I could reach out and touch it; I would stare at it, feeling that it possessed some vital meaning which always eluded me.

A quarter of a century was to elapse between the time when I saw my father sitting with the strange woman and the time when I was to see him again, standing alone upon the red clay of a Mississippi plantation, a sharecropper, clad in ragged overalls, holding a muddy hoe in his gnarled, veined hands—a quarter of a century during which my mind and consciousness had become so greatly and violently altered that when I tried to talk to him I realized that, though ties of blood made us kin, though I could see a shadow of my face in his face, though there was an echo of my voice in his voice, we were forever strangers, speaking a different language, living on vastly distant planes of reality. That day a quarter of a century later when I visited him on the plantation—he was standing against the sky, smiling toothlessly, his hair whitened, his body bent, his eyes glazed with dim recollection, his fearsome aspect of twenty-five years ago gone forever from him—I was overwhelmed to realize that he could never understand me or the scalding experiences that had swept me beyond his life and into an area of living that he could never know. I stood before him, poised, my mind aching as it embraced the simple nakedness of his life, feeling how completely his soul was imprisoned by the slow flow of the seasons, by wind and rain and sun, how fastened were his memories to a crude and raw past, how chained were his actions and emotions to the direct, animalistic impulses of his withering body . . .

From the white landowners above him there had not been handed to him a chance to learn the meaning of loyalty, of sentiment, of tradition. Joy was as unknown to him as was despair. As a creature of the earth, he endured, hearty, whole, seemingly indestructible, with no regrets and no hope. He asked easy, drawling questions about me, his other son, his wife, and he laughed, amused, when I informed him of their destinies. I forgave him and pitied him as my eyes looked past him to the unpainted wooden shack. From far beyond the horizons that bound this bleak plantation there had come to me through my living the knowledge that my father was a black peasant who had gone to the city seeking life, but who had failed in the city; a black peasant whose life had been hopelessly snarled in the city, and who had at last fled the city—that same city which had lifted me in its burning arms and borne me toward alien and undreamed-of shores of knowing.

1 Flash-forward Why does Wright tell the reader that he continued to think about his father and that night for years?

Flash-forward Why does Wright describe his father this way? 2

Life in the City How did life in the South affect the choices of Wright's father and Wright's future? 3

Vocabulary

poised (poizd) adj. having a calm, controlled, and dignified manner; composed alien (ā´ lē ən) adj. strange; unfamiliar; foreign

Writing Practice

Connect Explain to students that a good way to relate a work of literature to their own lives is to put themselves in the writer's shoes. Have students think of an example where their impression or opinion of a person, place, object, or event changed as they have grown older. Ask: Why did your impression or opinion change? Why did Wright's impression and opinion of his father change over the years? Are there any similarities and differences between your experience and Wright's experience? Have students write a short essay describing and evaluating their experiences. Tell them to also include a comparison between their experiences and Wright's experiences in their essays.

After You Read

Respond and Think Critically

Respond and Interpret

1. What was your reaction to the events of Wright's life? Explain.
2. (a)Why do Wright and his brother go to the orphan home? (b)How is the orphan home different from and similar to his old home?
3. (a)Why does Wright run away? (b)What do you learn about Wright's attitudes and perceptions about race from this incident?
4. (a)What does Wright's mother promise as she takes him out of the orphan home? (b)What do you learn about Wright's character from his interactions with his father just after leaving the home?
5. (a)What ultimately happens to Wright's father? (b)What does Wright's visit with his elderly father reveal about Wright's values? Explain, using details from the selection.

Analyze and Evaluate

6. Does Wright's father become more or less sympathetic as the story progresses? Explain.
7. (a)What is the tone of the selection? (b)How effective is the tone in expressing the author's main point?

Connect

8. Big Idea Life in the City How are Wright's attitudes and perceptions about race shaped by his time and place?
9. Connect to the Author (a)How does knowing that this selection is from an autobiography affect your reaction? (b)Would you react differently if it were fiction? Explain.

Literary Element Flash-forward

Although most stories are told in the order in which the events occur, sometimes writers interrupt the chronological flow. An author can use a technique called a flashback to explain an event that happened before the action in the story. This technique provides essential information about the character or prior events so that the reader can better understand the character's motivations. An interruption in events to leap forward in time is a flash-forward. Wright uses this device to show how his views had changed since the events in the excerpt had taken place.

1. Where is the flash-forward in this selection?
2. How does Wright signal that he is skipping ahead?
3. (a)What effect does this flash-forward create in Wright's narrative? (b)Does it strengthen or weaken the narrative? Explain.

Review: Autobiography

An autobiography is the story of a person's life written by that person. Unlike a memoir, which tends to focus on specific events or parts of the author's life, an autobiography usually encompasses most of the author's life.

Activity Complete the chart below by finding descriptions from the story about Wright's life, his parents, and the South during his childhood. Determine how each of these affected him and his choices.

	Description	Effects on Wright
His life
Mother
Father
The South

After You Read

Assess

1. Most students will feel sympathy for Wright.
2. (a) Their mother is poor and must work, so she cannot stay home to care for them. (b) In the orphanage, he is surrounded by strangers. It is similar in that he is hungry and unhappy there.
3. (a) To escape his miserable life at the orphan home (b) Wright is at first keenly aware that the policemen are white. When one policeman is kind to him, he sees him as a person and not as a member of a race.
4. (a) She offers to take him out of the home if he will ask his father for money. (b) Wright is strong-willed and has a strong sense of right and wrong.
5. (a) He becomes a poor sharecropper. (b) Wright values the human experience—loyalty, joy, tradition, despair—unlike his father, whom Wright sees as "a creature of the earth."
6. Students may feel that he becomes more sympathetic after his circumstances are explained.
7. (a) Matter-of-fact, with an undercurrent of bitterness (b) It is effective in showing the fear Wright lived with as a child.
8. Wright sees African Americans treated with disrespect, so he becomes distrustful of whites.
9. (a) The events have a greater impact because they are true. (b) Reactions to fiction may be less personal.

Literary Element

1. The flash-forward begins in the middle of the first column of page 906.
2. He signals it with "A quarter of a century was to elapse."
3. (a) The flash-forward breaks the narrative; it provides a view of the mature Wright. (b) Students may say that the flash-forward helps them understand the meaning of the selection better.

Review: Autobiography

Have students copy the chart onto a piece of paper and complete all sections.

Progress Check

Can students recognize a flash forward?

If No → See Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 64.

After You Read

Assess

Reading Strategy

1. D is the correct answer because only the narrator's mother expressed true emotion and love and concern for her children, and only his father abandoned them.

Vocabulary

1. Based on the context, I can infer the meaning of futile is "useless," or "without practical purpose."
2. Based on the clues of "bad" and "defiant," hostile means "antagonistic."
3. Based on the context that Alice is "spreading rumors about her former friend," it can be inferred that vindictive means "seeking revenge."
4. The definition of poised, or "calm and controlled," is in the sentence.
5. The contrast of familiar surroundings, or Germany, to the American high school implies that alien means "foreign" or "unfamiliar."

Academic Vocabulary

Transformation in this biological context means that the genetic makeup of a bacterium changes, or transforms, due to the presence of a foreign body, or DNA.

For additional assessment, see Assessment Resources, pp. 241–242.

Reading Strategy Compare and Contrast Characters

ACT Skills Practice

1. Which character traits differentiate the narrator's father and mother?

I. Ability to express true emotion
II. Concern and love for their children
III. Abandonment of the narrator and his brother

A. I only
B. II only
C. I and III only
D. I, II, and III only

Vocabulary Practice

Practice with Context Clues Identify the context clues in these sentences that help you infer the meaning of each vocabulary word.

1. Studying seemed like a futile task because he had already been accepted to college.
2. Tom's mother reacted to the bad news by becoming hostile and defiant.
3. Alice demonstrated her vindictive nature by spreading rumors about her ex-friend.
4. The cellist was not only a brilliant musician but also poised, or calm and controlled.
5. Raised in Germany, John felt that his new American high school was an alien place.

Academic Vocabulary

Transformation is an academic word. It is also used in the subjects of biology, chemistry, and physics. Using context clues, figure out the meaning of transformation in this sentence: A caterpillar undergoes a transformation to become a butterfly.

For more on academic vocabulary, see pages 53–54.

Speaking and Listening

Speech

Assignment As Wright's autobiography shows, a parent's abandonment can have a great effect on a child, both emotionally and financially. Research, write, and deliver a persuasive speech stating your views on the issue of child abandonment today. Incorporate visual aids in your speech and conclude with a call to action.

Prepare Determine what aspect of the issue of child abandonment you want to address in your speech. For example, you might confine your speech to the financial challenges for a single-parent family. Clarify your opinion on the issue. Outline your speech to give a logical organization to the evidence you present in support of your opinion. In drafting your speech, defend your reasons with precise and accurate evidence, such as facts, expert opinions, statistics, and examples. Make sure you use reliable sources and keep a bibliography. Conclude your speech with a call for action (proposal for change).

As you gather the research for your speech, think about how you might present it visually in a way that will effectively support the points you are trying to make. For example, you might create a graph showing the relation between the increase in single-parent families and the increase in the number of children living in poverty.

Deliver Once you have drafted your speech, review it for clarity and logic. Deliver your speech in a confident, animated tone. Use vocal emphasis to stress important words and ideas. Make eye contact with your audience to show conviction.

Evaluate Write a paragraph evaluating your delivery. Use the checklist on page 154 for help in your evaluation.

Literature Online

Selection Resources For Selection Quizzes, eFlashcards, and Reading-Writing Connection activities, go to glencoe.com and enter QuickPass code GLA9800u6.

Speaking and Listening

Use these criteria when evaluating students' persuasive speeches:

- Did the student logically defend a position in the speech?
- Did the student effectively use visual aids in delivering the speech?.
- Did the student effectively use verbal and nonverbal techniques in delivering the speech?

For grammar practice, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, p. 68.

Historical Perspective
on Black Boy

from

You Have Seen Their Faces

Erskine Caldwell and
Margaret Bourke-White

O. Henry Prize Winner

Iron Mountain, Tennessee, 1937. Margaret Bourke-White. Silver gelatin print. Time & Life Pictures.

Learning Objectives

For pages 909–912

In studying this text, you will focus on the following objectives:

Reading:
Making connections across literature.
Analyzing historical texts and photographs.
Analyzing informational text.

Set a Purpose for Reading

Read to learn about the sharecropping system.

Build Background

Photojournalist Margaret Bourke-White documented some of the most important events of the twentieth century, including the liberation of Nazi concentration camps and the Korean War. In 1937 she and her future husband, novelist Erskine Caldwell, collaborated on You Have Seen Their Faces. This book powerfully depicts the plight that southern sharecroppers faced.

1 Reading Strategy Analyze the Purpose of Historical Texts and Photographs

Analyzing the purpose of historical texts and photographs involves examining the ideas and culture presented by texts and images. As you read, ask yourself, What do the writers want their readers to do or think? Use a chart to take notes about the selection and the photographs in order to determine their purpose.

Text Passage and Purpose	Photograph and Purpose

The Mississippi Valley Delta and the Black Belt[1] of Alabama are two sections of the South that still produce cotton in abundance. It grows, matures, and yields without fertilizer and without effort. The soil there will be deep, fertile, and productive for a long time to come. Elsewhere the sub-soil, both sand and clay, is being plowed up to be mixed with the little top-soil that remains in an effort to make plants grow. There is no fertility in sub-soil, but when brought to the surface it gives the appearance of fertility and, when mixed with fertilizer, will produce enough cotton, providing that the rains and sun are not extreme, to pay for the fertilizer in normal times. Farming in sand or clay is a back-breaking, spirit-crushing existence. ★

There are reasons for this impoverishment[2] of the soil that go deep into the economic life of the South. The successful cotton-raisers have always been plantation-owners. The plantations were large, generally from five hundred to five thousand acres of land in size. The owners for the most part had one main concern,

---

1. The Black Belt is a strip of land with black, fertile soil across central Alabama and Mississippi.
2. Impoverishment means "the state of being drained of essential nutrients."

Approaching Level

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION

Emerging Have visual learners look again at each photo after they read the text. Tell students that the text may explain the photo, add information, or set a mood. After they have read the text on each page, have students write a phrase or sentence that describes what the photo shows. (p. 909, impoverished soil; p. 911, poverty passed on to a new generation; p. 912, a lifetime of poverty)

Historical Perspective
on Black Boy

Focus

Summary

This excerpt from You Have Seen Their Faces focuses on the historical roots and detrimental effects of the sharecropping system in the South.

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Analyze the Purpose of Historical Texts and Photographs Before students begin reading the excerpt, have them look at the three photos in this essay. Have students describe their responses to the photos. Ask them to predict the tone of the article they are about to read. (Students may say that the article is likely to criticize the system that made the land and the people so poor. The land looks barren; the walls where the boy stands are papered by newsprint; the boy's and the elderly women's faces look sad and strained.)

View the Art ★

Ask: What can this photograph teach you that text alone cannot? (It provides an evocative image of the harshness and burden of sharecropping.)

Readability Scores

Dale-Chall: 11.7
DRP: 63
Lexile: 1210

Historical Perspective
on Black Boy

Teach

Reading Strategy 1

Identify Cause and Effect

Ask: What effect did the plantation system have on the soil? (It impoverished the soil.) What did this effect cause plantation-owners to do? (They withdrew to cities, where they became absentee landlords.)

ADVANCED Students may create a graphic organizer or write a paragraph that extends the cause-and-effect process described here. Have students include at least three events.

Literary Element 2

Tone Ask: What is the author's tone in his references to the plantation owners? (The tone is sarcastic and bitter.) What is the effect of the author's use of the image of kings? (It emphasizes that the landlords had absolute power and could take advantage of their "subjects.")

For activities related to this selection, see Unit 6 Teaching Resources Book, pp. 71–79.

and that was to make as much money as they could as quickly as they could.

Nothing made money like cotton. Nothing else grew like cotton. Cotton was king.

Now the day of the plantation is over, except in the Delta country and in the Black Belt, and cotton is not king any longer.

The plantation system pauperized[3] the soil to such a great degree that raising cotton became a means of making a living rather than a method of making a fortune. The plantation-owner, when he became aware of what had happened to the soil, withdrew to the nearest city to live the remainder of his life on his accumulated wealth.

1 What he left behind was eroded, depleted, unprofitable land. His tenants still had to work for a living, even if he did not, and out of their desperation grew a new system. The owner became an absentee-landlord. The plantation was divided into one-man farms and rented to the tenants. The rent was paid either in half of the cotton produced or in an agreed upon number of bales, or on a basis combining the two methods. The plantation system was traded for the sharecropping system, and the South to its sorrow was the victim of the deal.

Before he knew it, the landlord had a new source of income that was larger than his previous one had been. And, besides, in the old days he had had to take his own chances with his crop of cotton, losing money when it rained too much or too little, dipping into profits from preceding years when expenditures were larger than income. In the new era he had a source of income and profit that was as certain and secure as the seasons themselves.

2 Rent was paid to him for the use of the land on a sharing basis, and he saw to it that the tenant raised a maximum number of bales. When a hundred tenants produced six bales each, the landlord received three hundred bales, the individual tenant three bales. Cotton was not king any longer, but the institution of sharecropping was making a few men richer than kings, and much better enthroned.[4] They did not have to concern themselves about the welfare of their subjects.

The tenant who set out to farm his portion of the plantation discovered that the land required fertilizer. Without fertilizer he could not grow enough cotton to provide himself with a living, and to pay rent. The rent came first. The landlord generally saw to it that the tenant paid his three or four bales for rent before the sharing began. If there was nothing left to share after the rent had been paid, there was nothing the tenant could do about it. He could only look forward to the coming year, hoping he would be able to make more than the minimum number of bales the rent required. If the following year was a good one for him, he paid off the chattel mortgage[5] he had given in payment for fertilizer he had bought in an effort to produce the rent-cotton.

It is difficult to find a good word to say about such an agricultural system. The sharecropping system was born of the plantation system, and the new was anything but an improvement over the old. The old produced numerous families of wealth who developed a culture that was questionable. The new has concentrated wealth in the hands of a few families who are determined that no culture shall exist.

Much can be said about the detrimental effects of such an agricultural system, more especially when there are ten million persons now living under its yoke.[6] They live in this cotton country on tenant farms which, in many cases, are little more than sand dunes and clay stacks. They are either already worn out physically and spiritually, or are in the act of wearing themselves out. They are grouped in families of man and wife and from one to sixteen children. They are farming, for the most part, soil that has been

---

[3] Pauperized means "depleted or drained."

[4] Enthroned means "installed as king" and implies that the landlords were distanced from the sharecroppers just as a king might be removed from his subjects.

[5] A chattel mortgage is a mortgage on personal property that is used as a guarantee for a debt.

[6] Here, yoke refers to "something that causes servitude or bondage."

Vocabulary Practice

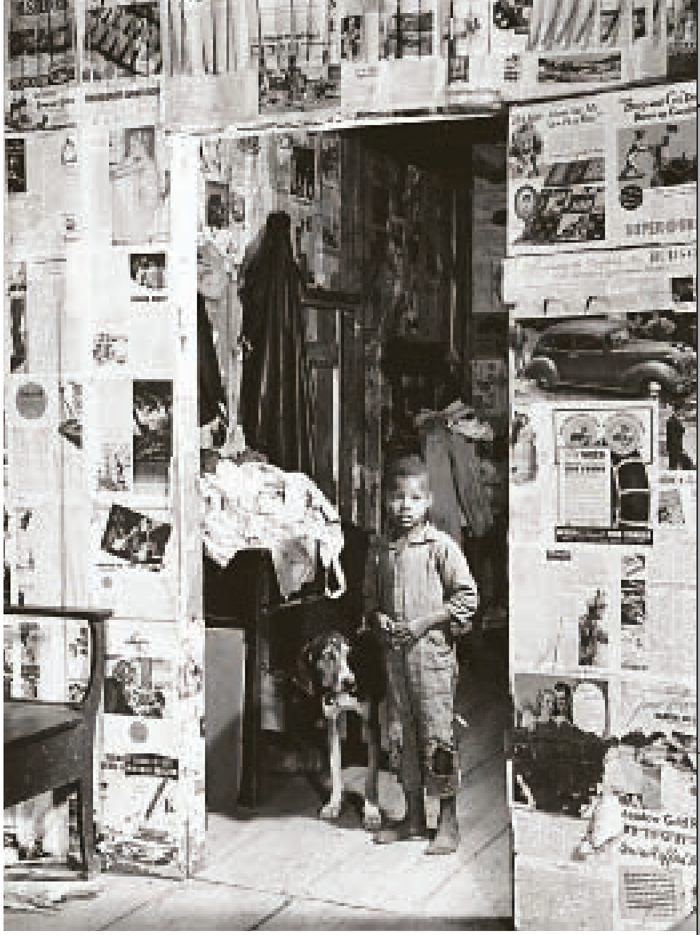
Use Context Clues Remind students that context clues offer hints about the meanings of unfamiliar words. Write these sentences on the board, and ask students to identify the meanings of the underlined words, along with the context clues that suggest the meanings:

1. The circumstance grows more acute as cotton land erodes.
2. Sharecropping has deprived millions of persons of what the rest of America considers the necessities of life.
3. The tenant farmer in the South is holding onto a spinning world until he is enabled to grip onto a better way of life.

yielding diminishing returns for fifty and a hundred years. No matter if they get up an hour earlier to work by lantern light, no matter if half a dozen more children are begotten[7] to supply additional hands in the field, they will continue to fall steadily behind as long as they live on land that produces less and less each time a new crop of cotton is planted.

This is nothing new. It is not a situation that has suddenly come about overnight. But it is a circumstance that becomes more acute day by day as the exhaustion and erosion of cotton land progresses. Fertilizer will increase the yield of cotton, but fertilizer costs money and requires credit that the tenant farmer does not have. A larger farm will produce more cotton, but there is a physical limit to the number of acres a man and his family can cultivate.

The sharecropping system has in recent years branched out into several forms, none of them any more economically sound than the source from which they sprang, and most of them working greater hardships on human lives than the plantation system ever did. Sharecropping has deprived millions of persons of what the rest of America considers the necessities of life.



Child of sharecropper family, Louisiana, 1936. Margaret Bourke-White. Silver gelatin print. Time & Life Pictures. ★

It deprives children of adequate education because many of them have to work either part of the school year or all of it on their fathers' farms so that enough cotton can be raised to pay rent and buy fertilizer and to get food and clothing. It forces families to live in buildings that are detrimental to health, and it forces them to exist on food that is insufficient. Worse still, it continues in operation year after year, wringing dry the bodies and souls of men, women, and children; dragging down to its own level from higher economic planes new numbers to take the places of those crushed and thrown aside; breeding families of eight, ten, twelve, fourteen, sixteen, and more, in order to furnish an ever-increasing number of persons necessary to supply the rent-cotton for the landlord. 3

It is foolish to ask a tenant farmer why he remains where he is. He does move from farm to farm from time to time, but only rarely can he improve his status. Such a question is usually asked with the purpose of covering up an

---

[7] Begotten means "conceived."

Historical Perspective

on Black Boy

Teach

Reading Strategy 3

Analyze the Purpose of Historical Texts and Photographs Ask: How would you describe the author's purpose in this excerpt? (The author wants to expose the evils of the sharecropping system, probably with the hope of reforming the system or promoting collective action by the tenant farmers.)

View the Photograph ★

